I was told by some Treasury official that a study of all excise taxes included in the pending measure is now being made with a view of making recommendations to the Congress for a reduction in some cases and elimination of certain of these taxes in other cases. I am very hopeful that the Committee on Finance will also make a study of this problem and come back to the Senate with a revision of this entire excise-tax schedule to the end that the tax on fur and on many other necessities of life may be repealed.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. OVERTON. I understand the Senator would favor an amendment which would exempt from taxation any coat trimmed with fur or made wholly of fur which retails at, say, $300 or less?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not see why the pending amendment is not amended so as to conform to that suggestion.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator has been a Member of the Senate now for more than 12 years, and he knows what would happen to such an amendment if it met the opposition of the chairman of the Finance Committee and also the opposition of the Treasury Department. I do not have much doubt that such an amendment would not be adopted. As a matter of fact, I have tried, as I stated earlier, for the past 3 or 4 weeks to obtain help from certain members of the Committee on Finance, and I have also tried to obtain help from the Treasury Department in attempting to draft an amendment that would exempt a fur coat, made entirely out of fur, whose value is between $250 and $300. My pleas fell on deaf ears. The pending amendment, I agree, will not do much good to the fur trade as a whole. It will aid in channeling some of the large fur reserves that we now have on hand.

Mr. OVERTON. I know that what the Senator says is correct, because I offered such an amendment several years ago to a pending revenue bill, and it was defeated. I sought to exempt all fur coats, whether they were made entirely of fur or were merely trimmed with fur, retailing, I think it was, at $200 or less. The amendment was defeated.

But it seems to me that is a logical basis on which to place an amendment of this kind or a provision of this kind in the law. What we want to do is to bring fur coats and fur-trimmed coats within the purchasing power of those who enjoy a very small income, rather than simply to say we will not exempt a fur coat, but that we will exempt a coat that is trimmed with fur.

Why not exempt the whole coat, whether trimmed with fur or made entirely of fur? It is easier of application, if it retails at $300 or less, which is customary.

Mr. McCARTHY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCARTHY. I heartily concur with the Senator from Louisiana on that score. The whole question of fur-coat taxes should be completely examined. I believe at this time, however, we should merely clarify the law and attempt to have the Treasury Department do what Congress originally intended they should do.

The reason I say this is that in many States, fur farming constitutes a very important segment of agriculture. The fur farmers borrowed money during the war years. The banks loaned them the money on the assumption that some day the excise charge would be removed, and that there would be a market for furs. They have been loaned as much as $10 and $15 per pelt for example.

The interpretation by the Treasury Department, to which reference has been made, absolutely prohibits the use of certain furs. The fur-trim market of America has dropped off to the point where it is now almost nonexistent. As a result a large number of our fur farmers will become completely bankrupt. For that reason I think we must take action now.

Mr. OVERTON. I am entirely familiar with the provision and its effect. This amendment may be of service to those who raise fur in the Senator's own section. I do not know that it would be of any benefit at all to the muskrat trappers of Louisiana. I doubt seriously that it would be of any benefit to them at all.

I think that the makers of fur coats must make tremendous profits. They use the tax as an excuse, and I am very happy to see their market fall. It ought to have fallen long ago. It has been too high. They will get the benefit of this.

The farmer and the trapper who raise furs out in the woods and in the swamps and marshes, I apprehend, will get no benefit. Very little benefit comes to the poor working girl who is trying to get a coat to protect her from the wintry winds. She will benefit very little from this proposal. If she wants to get a fur coat, she does not get any benefit at all.

Mr. ELLENDER. I will repeat to my distinguished colleagues that I realize this amendment will not be of tremendous help to the fur industry, but it will afford an outlet through which much of the fur that is now stored all over the country can be moved. I understand that in the city of New York today there is a whole year's supply of muskrat on hand, aside from this year's catch.

This amendment is going to make it possible for a great deal of that fur to be used in trimming coats, upon which no tax will be imposed. It will afford an outlet, in other words, so that much of the large amount of fur that is now on hand may be used.

Mr. President, I could discuss the subject to greater length, but I understand that it is the desire of the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill for an early vote. I also realize that a further discussion of the subject would not affect the vote on the pending amendment so I will content myself for the time being in asking unanimous consent to have printed following my remarks, a statement which shows the kind of fur used in coats, the average cost to the manufacturer of the fur included in coats made from the different hides, and also the manufacturer's selling price. This statement shows the difference between the manufacturing cost and the cost of the furs that go into the making of each coat. From that statement, one can easily figure the retail price of each coat and then determine the tax on each coat.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Kind of fur	Average cost to manufacturer of fur for 1 coat in the raw state	Manufacturer's selling price (including cost of dressing, dye, labor, finishing, overhead and profit
Mouton	$12- $15	$40- $90
Raccoon	20- 26	100- 150

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I also ask consent to have printed at this point a letter addressed to me under date of February 10, 1947, by Steinberg & Co., importers and exporters of raw furs, New Orleans, La. This letter bears out my argument that the tax on fur coats costing less than $300 should be repealed. It also gives interesting data on the subject.

There being no objection, the portions of the letter referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 10, 1947.

Hon. ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ELLENDER: I am writing in response to your suggestion that we send you such further information as we think may be helpful to you in pressing passage of an amendment for relief from excise taxes for certain furs.

I note that Senator BUTLER, of Nebraska, has introduced an amendment which would take furs entirely out of the excise-tax coverage; however, from all I read in the papers, I assume this will not likely pass. I can say at the outset that the formula mentioned in your first wire, to the effect that an amendment may call for removal of taxes where cost of fur is 50 percent less than entire cost of fur coat, is a most reasonable one. I say this for the reason that it would appear to exempt low-priced cost-of-living fur coats and continue the tax on expensive luxury furs such as mink, sables, Persian lambs, etc.

Illustration of the proof of such a formula to that effect is given in a list which I append hereto, showing the cost of raw fur to the manufacturer and his selling price. In all cases of expensive furs (including even the cheapest mink which is the Louisiana mink) the cost of the raw fur to the manufacturer will appear to exceed 50 percent of his selling price. Wherever low-priced fur coats are involved your formula would seem to exempt the coat from tax.

The situation presented by a tax on lower-priced fur coats now seems both ludicrous and discriminatory. Good cloth coats cannot be purchased today by the consumer for less than $100 and range to $200. Higher quality coats sell over $200. These coats go tax free. On the other hand, some volume-selling fur coats sell below these prices and are taxed 20 percent. The incongruity is further emphasized by the fact that the average fur coat lasts about 4 years—outwearing the cloth coat about two to one and offers far greater utility by giving many times the warmth to the wearer. It should be conclusive that the lower-priced fur garment costing up to $300, both on the basis of utility and money's worth over a period of years is no less of a luxury than the average cloth coat and no more a luxury than a pair of shoes or any other item of clothing. Therefore, adding a tax to the average consumer's cost for this type of fur coat is discrimination against the average American wage earner as well as against the American trapper.

You will recall that the OPA strenuous argument to the contrary notwithstanding, successfully maintained until its last effective days that muskrat, mouton, kidskin, Bombay and Lincoln lamb, marmot, opossum, skunk, pony, and raccoon coats were for practical purposes 100 percent bought by the average American wage earner whose income is $50 to $60 per week—not by rich people or even middle-class people. The OPA and the Bureau of Labor Statistics found that the American housewife and the office stenographer and clerk buy such a fur coat because, at its price today, it is a necessity in almost every one of the 48 States. Incidentally, all these garments are today selling 10 to 20 percent under ceiling prices.

Is it reasonable to require a $50-a-week wage earner, who buys his wife a fur coat for $200, which he expects to last her 4 or 5 years, to pay almost a whole week's salary in excise tax on such a utility garment?

As to the tax return to the Government, I am sure the Treasury can verify that, in dollar volume, 60 percent of the furs sold in the United State are imported; that practically all these furs are upper-bracket furs which would be excluded from exemption by the 50-percent plan to which you refer; that of the domestic furs at least half of the dollar sales to the American consumer is derived from mink and other expensive furs, so that we estimate that at most 20 to 25 percent of the total tax would be lost if the furs contemplated in such an amendment were made tax-free. At present market valuation this would probably mean a loss to the Government of about $20,000,000 at most. I believe total tax last year came to about ninety millions.

A graphic illustration of why this works out this way in practice is shown by calculating the tax on one $12,000 mink coat. The tax on this one coat brings the Treasury $2,400—80 times the tax derived from the sale of a muskrat coat, 150 times the tax from the sale of a mouton coat, and 200 times the tax derived from the sale of an opossum coat.

Very truly yours,

STEINBERG & CO.,
MORRIS STEINBERG.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska for himself and other Senators.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. LANGER. There is lying on the desk an amendment which was intended to be proposed by my distinguished colleague the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] and myself. The amendment, however, will not be proposed to the pending bill, but we now serve notice that it will be proposed to the general tax bill, which will come up within 3 or 4 weeks from this time.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have one amendment which I am suggesting that the chairman of the Committee on Finance take to conference, not as irrevocably binding upon the Senate, but to take it to conference because of a position taken by the State Department. It relates to the tax on transportation sold within the United States but for travel in foreign countries. The Department says it has a very vital interest, of course, in protecting our flag carriers abroad, as well as in the many benefits which flow from an expanding intercourse between other countries and our own. I think it is very generally known that we probably have to make up in certain instances whatever losses may be incurred. I am therefore suggesting that there be taken to conference an amendment as follows:

At the end of the bill add a new section reading as follows:

SEC. —. (a) Section 3469 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking out "or without."

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall apply to amounts paid within the United States on and after the effective date of this act for transportation without the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MILLIKIN. We shall be very glad to take that amendment to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in connection with the amendment which has just been agreed to a letter from Mr. William L. Clayton, Under Secretary of State.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington.

The Honorable WALTER F. GEORGE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR GEORGE: I am taking the liberty of writing you in connection with one of the provisions of H. R. 1030 which, I understand, is now under your consideration. I understand that it is provided in this bill that the 15-percent tax upon the amount paid within the United States for the transportation of persons within or without the United States is extended indefinitely beyond July 1.

This provision, insofar as it would be applicable to international traffic, has the effect of discouraging such traffic and placing our own carriers at a competitive disadvantage with certain foreign carriers. The Department of State has an important interest in the protection of our flag carriers abroad as well as in the many benefits which flow from an expanding intercourse between other countries and our own.

I urge, therefore, on behalf of the Department of State, that your committee give serious consideration to the possibility of eliminating from H. R. 1030 the provision which imposes a 15-percent tax on transportation sold within this country for foreign travel. In this connection I might add that the full application of this tax would be difficult in that it encourages on the part of travelers the purchase of one-way transportation at home and the purchase of return passage, very possibly on a foreign carrier, in the foreign country. I should think it would also inevitably encourage in general the purchase of transportation on foreign carriers.

I am sending a similar letter to Senator MILLIKIN.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM L. CLAYTON,
Under Secretary for Economic Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. MILLIKIN, Mr. TAFT, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. GEORGE, and Mr. BARKLEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET—PERMISSION TO FILE MINORITY VIEWS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it may be desirable on the part of some of those who do not agree to the action of the Joint Committee on the President's Budget to file minority views. I therefore ask unanimous consent that those who wish to file or to join in filing minority views may be permitted to do so between now and the hour of meeting of the Senate on Wednesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] I ask permission, on behalf of the Senate members of the Joint Budget Committee, to file the majority report of that committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I suggest that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] obtained unanimous consent lask week to file the majority report referred to at any time prior to midnight on Saturday? Under that order I assumed it had been filed.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Saturday of last week?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the report was filed Saturday.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I did not know that. I was merely trying to protect the interest of the Senator from New Hampshire in his absence.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. In view of the fact that the report of the Joint Committee on the Budget was not filed until Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock and that the Senate concurrent resolution accompanying the report does not appear on the calendar today, I wish to ask whether the concurrent resolution is as a matter of fact on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be on the printed calendar in the morning. It was received after the calendar had been printed.

Mr. TAFT. May I say for the information of the majority members of the joint committee that a conference of the majority will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2:30, of which Senators will receive due notice.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I may say that at the close of the last session of Congress, in view of the fact that I had been a member of the Appropriations Committee during the years involved, I requested this table to be prepared for my information. I may further say in connection with the President's Budget and the talk we hear of decreased taxes and decreased appropriations, that considering the present status of world affairs, it is my belief that our armed forces certainly should not be further reduced. There may be room for economy within the armed forces; I hope such economy may be possible to achieve, but I believe that any savings which may be had within the armed services themselves can well be spent on the Fleet Reserve, on the National Guard and on the Reserve components of the Army, the Coast Guard, and the Navy, and I shall insist that this be done.

Mr. President, I may also say that as a member of the Appropriations Committee in the years gone by, believing as I do in economy, it was my privilege on many occasions to vote for reduced expenditures. While there may be some economy possible this year, and I hope that we may be able to reduce some of the expenditures outside the armed forces, I earnestly hope that whatever reductions we may be able to make will be applied toward redeeming the terminal-leave bonds now owned by the GI's. This will reduce our debt and reduce our interest payments in the future. The officers, of course, were paid in cash. During the last Congress, it was proposed to pay the enlisted men in cash, and nearly every one agreed to the proposal, but because of lack of funds and the recommendations of the Treasury Department, and also because of fear of a Presidential veto, that was not done.

I hope we may be able to economize. I for one will certainly vote for all possible economies, outside the armed forces. I hope such economy will be sufficient to redeem the bonds of the enlisted personnel of the armed forces, who so bravely offered their lives and gave their services for us in time of trouble, with but little remuneration.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks certain estimates for 1948 compared with appropriations for the fiscal year 1947.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

	Estimate, fiscal year 1948	Appropriated, fiscal year 1947	Reduction fiscal year 1948 under fiscal year 1947 (−)

BUSINESS TRANSACTED IN FIRST MONTH OF THE EIGHTIETH CONGRESS—LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement for the general information of Senators. It has to do with the work accomplished during the first month of this Congress.

The volume of Senate business transacted in the first month of the Eightieth Congress compares favorably with accomplishments in corresponding periods of past Congresses.

The record is in truth noteworthy when it is realized that the present Congress had to deal with several problems not presented to previous Congresses. First, there was the change in political control. There had been no such change in late years. With this Congress, the minority of the last 14 years became the majority. In these circumstances and because of the passage of the reorganization bill, the organization and functioning of Congress presented new and difficult problems. It involved important changes in the organization of Congress, in the membership and staffing of committees, in the allocation of rooms to Senators and committees, and in the arrangement of party machinery. Changes such as these are not easy to make, and considerable time was needed to work them out. Yet, the change-over was achieved by both parties with commendable speed and smoothness.

Second, the Senate faced a challenge to the credentials of one of its Members even before it could form and organize itself. Several days passed before the issue could be brought to a temporary settlement, and no business could be transacted until that was done.

Third, this Congress had to vitalize all of the innovations prescribed by the new Reorganization Act. Those who are not acquainted with the difficult problem of determining chairmanships and assigning Senators to committees cannot appreciate the enormous task faced during January by both parties, and especially by the majority. Thirty-three committees had to be reduced to 15, eliminating 18 former chairmanships and making exceptionally difficult the problem of naming men to head the new committees; but Members on both sides of the aisle are well aware how long and hard has been the labor in setting up the committee machinery so important to our work here. The majority was organized and ready to go at the start of the session. Our friends of the minority met like difficulties without undue delay.

In addition to forming the committees themselves was the obligation to make a start on planning the new staffing of committees, an experiment designed to strengthen Congress and speed its work. This meant the finding of professional experts, competent administrators, and enlarged clerical personnel. It meant the meeting of an enlarged demand for rooms in which to locate the increased staffs. Not all of these problems are settled even now, but they are well along toward settlement and committees are already started on their work.

Fourth, in keeping with the recommendation of the La Follette-Monroney report on the organization of Congress, it was decided to experiment with a new time schedule for the transaction of congressional business. The law itself recommended but did not compel this, although the overwhelming opinion of informed persons supported the need for better time scheduling in the interest of congressional efficiency. With this in view, the floor sessions were reduced to 3 days each week to permit greater uninterrupted time for Members to attend committee meetings and to perform their office work, both important parts of congressional service. I am persuaded that legislative efficiency will be gained in the long run through this division of time, even though the number of floor sessions for the transaction of legislative business has been reduced.

But notwithstanding the problems facing the new Senate, Mr. President, the record of business handled by the Senate in this 1 month is substantial compared with previous Congresses.

In the first month of the present session, the Senate received the unprecedented number of 8,177 Executive nominations. The whole first session of the Seventy-ninth Congress, covering an entire year, had only 11,056 Executive nominations compared with this 8,177 in the first month of the Eightieth Congress.

Compared with the first month of the Seventy-ninth Congress, the volume of nominations in the Eightieth Congress and the dispatch in their consideration was unusual. There were 456 such nominations in the first month of the Seventy-ninth and only 1,359 in the corresponding first month of the Seventy-eighth. Of the 8,177 in the present session, none has been rejected; none has been withdrawn by the President; 3,316 were confirmed, and 4,861 awaited action at the end of the month. Considering the vast number of total nominations received and acted upon, this record of performance far exceeds that of the two previous Congresses mentioned.

When we turn to the legislative activity of our first month here, the record is equally imposing.

In the month of January lately ended, 472 Senate bills were introduced and referred to committees. In the main, these are public bills, because the Reorganization Act sets up a new procedure outside of Congress for handling private bills. These 472 bills compare with 426 bills in the corresponding period of the Seventy-ninth Congress and 591 in the first month of the Seventy-eighth Congress. Both of these previous first sessions of the Senate included private bills in their totals, and if such bills were excluded as is now the case, the opening work load of the present session far exceeds that in January of 1945 and 1943. Few bills are passed in the opening days of each Congress because committees have to hold hearings, report, and otherwise lay the foundation for work and consideration and disposition of matters here on the floor. Even in this respect, the present performance is equal to that of these previous sessions I have mentioned, because we passed three bills during the month of January, which is the same amount passed by the Seventy-ninth and Seventy-eighth Congresses in corresponding periods of time.

The Senate received 50 joint resolutions as against 22 in the comparable time in the opening month of the Seventy-ninth and 29 in the Seventy-eighth Congresses. We passed 5 out of these 50 joint resolutions, as against none passed in the same time in the previous 2 Senate sessions.

The number of simple Senate resolutions introduced to date is 77, as against 66 in the Seventy-ninth, and 87 in the same time in the Seventy-eighth Congresses. Of the 77 Senate resolutions, the Senate has passed 33, while the Seventy-ninth passed 40, and the Seventy-eighth passed 58 in comparable periods of time.

Mr. President, the current session of the Eightieth Congress in its first month of activity stands high in comparison with other sessions in recent years. Officers and Members on this side of the aisle could not have handled the public business with such excellent results without the cooperation of Members on the other side of the aisle. For this we are gratified, because it shows that partisan interests need not be and are not inconsistent with efficient dispatch of the public business.

Mr. President, I have two tables showing the work done in the first month of the Seventy-eighth, Seventy-ninth, and Eightieth Congresses, and I ask that as a part of my remarks these two tables be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I understand that what the Senator is trying to do is to compare the result of the work of the Senate thus far this session with that of the first month of the sessions of the last two Congresses. Do I correctly understand that he compares the work done by the Eightieth Congress, in the first month, favorably with the work done by the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses during that same time? Is it on a par with it, or greater or less; or just what is the Senator trying to explain?

Mr. WHITE. In my opinion, thus far, there has been a greater volume of work in the organization of the Senate, the organization of committees, the introduction of legislation, and the results of committee work in the Eightieth Congress than there was in the Seventy-eighth or Seventy-ninth Congresses. Of course, different interpretations may be put on the figures, but I am giving the Senator my own interpretation.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not think the figures prove anything at all, I say to my friend; and I do not quite understand why this defense is being made at this particular time.

Mr. WHITE. I am frank to tell the Senator that I have done it because there have been some suggestions that we were laggard in our organization and in the work which we had to do. I think the material I have now put into the RECORD puts us at least on a par with previous Congresses. I think it is, on the whole, a little better record.

Mr. LUCAS. I would with due respect dispute that, of course.

Mr. WHITE. I would expect the Senator from Illinois to do so.

Mr. LUCAS. I would do so without knowing any facts on which to base my statement in view of the futile defense which is being made. But I understand that what the Senator says is that the Republican majority has been charged with being laggard in doing its duty, as compared with all the promises made last fall as to what the Republicans would do if they came into power. Now the Senator is trying to defend his party and explain the situation.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator is wrong when he says I am replying to charges made against the Republican majority. I am replying to a charge made against the Senate as a whole.

In the brief remarks I have made, I have tried—and I hope I have succeeded—to indicate the character of work and the amount of work which has been done in the first month; and I am glad to include the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate what the Senator says; but I do not think he is defending the Senate as a whole as much as he is defending the Republican majority that now has the responsibility for action. If I understand the Senator's remarks correctly, he is trying to show what the Senate has done in the Eightieth Congress as compared with what was done in the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses.

Mr. WHITE. I did not mean to go quite that far; but if the Senator presses me, I shall say that I think the first month of the Eightieth Congress shows an amount of work done that is in excess, in volume and character, of that done in a corresponding length of time by previous Congresses.

Mr. LUCAS. I would expect the Senator to say that.

Mr. WHITE. Of course the Senator would.

Mr. LUCAS. I repeat that, in my judgment, the reason the Senator is doing it is because of what has been said throughout the country as to the complete failure of the majority party to do anything constructive during the first 7 weeks of the present Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. A part of the credit side of this picture as drawn by the Senator from Maine consists of the reorganization of the Congress, which of course would have taken place no matter which party was in the majority, because it had to be done. The Reorganization Act was passed in the Seventy-ninth Congress, when the Democrats were in the majority; and I suppose they should be entitled to some credit on that score.

Mr. WHITE. I thought I gave them credit.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Democrats had continued in power, they would have had to do the very thing that has been done by reason of the change in majority; that is, they would have had to reorganize the whole Congress after that act was passed. It had to be done. I do not wish in any way to detract from the credit to which anybody is entitled for the efficient manner in which Congress undertook to reintegrate the Reorganization Act with the work of the new Congress.

So far as legislation is concerned, I think we may, without very much exaggeration, say that the only legislation of any importance has been that which has been passed here today. The Senate has passed the extension of the tax bill, and also the GI insurance bill. Up until now, there has been no very important legislation before the Senate. I am not saying that in order to detract from what has been done. It is a little unusual, this early in a session, to begin to brag about what has been accomplished. Heretofore we have waited until the end of the session to recapitulate what has been done in the entire session.

Are we to expect that every month we are to have a progress report from the majority leader on what has taken place during the previous month, as well as a recapitulation of what has happened from the beginning of the session?

Mr. WHITE. I think that depends a great deal on what cooperation we receive from Senators on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator has no complaint on that score.

Mr. WHITE. I would not complain against the Senator from Kentucky, even if I had reason to.

Mr. BARKLEY. We cooperated on the tax bill which has been passed today, and we did the same with the GI bill and on the Butler bill, which has also been passed. So, thus far no Senator has any right to complain about the amount of cooperation which has been given to the majority.

Mr. WHITE. I think the Senator will agree that I did not complain about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think the Senator did.

Mr. WHITE. The Senators on the other side of the aisle seem to be disturbed by a recital of the facts.

Mr. BARKLEY. In his reply to me the Senator rather intimated that the report upon the degree of progress made might in future depend upon the amount of cooperation given him. I do not know whether he intended to imply that we are verging upon a noncooperative period, but if that is what the Senator had in mind, I do not think it is justified by the facts.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. So far as the committees of which I am a member are concerned, there seems to be cooperation between all the members. Nevertheless, not much action has been taken. The reason for that is that the committees extend to the executive departments the courtesy of looking over the bills in order to give their opinions as to how they may be improved. From the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments 12 or 15 bills have been referred to the various departments, and a report has been received on only one of them. We should wait a reasonable length of time to give the executive departments an opportunity to express an opinion on the bills. The one report which has come back was received since last Friday, and we are holding a hearing on the bill the coming Friday, which is about as fast as we can work. I also realize that when several hundred bills are sent to the executive departments, they cannot have their attorneys go over them and submit reports at once.

It does not seem to me that either the law, the committees, or anybody else are really to blame for the slow speed with which we are passing legislation. I think from now on we are going to pick up rapidly.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The able Senator is a member of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. Have all the labor bills which have been introduced been sent to the Department of Labor?

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know about that, but every bill has been sent to the executive department the day it was received.

Mr. LUCAS. I understand that. I had in mind specifically bills referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. It seems to me that the most important thing now before the Congress and the country is labor legislation. I am wondering what progress is being made toward presenting to the Congress at an early time some constructive labor legislation.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. TAFT. The work of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare is proceeding exactly according to schedule. I think that committee began hearings earlier than any other committee. We have held hearings for 3 weeks, steadily, on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, and have heard from employers. Tomorrow morning, Mr. William Green will appear, and on the next day Mr. Philip Murray, and this week and next week will be entirely devoted to labor testimony. So many requests have come in that I think we may have to extend the hearings for 1 week, or until March 8. I expect to be able to report a bill by March 15. That is the schedule which was announced some 6 weeks ago, and I think we are adhering closely to it. I do not think that legislation of such tremendous importance and complication should be rushed any faster than that. In order to conform to that schedule we will have to refuse to hear many people who have asked to be heard. We shall have to say to many of them, "You have to file written statements."

The Committee on Labor and Public Welfare is making speed just as fast as it can properly do so, and I think we shall be able to present a definite proposal to the Senate on or about the 15th of March.

Let me read to the Senate what might be called the tentative calendar, as we see it today.

The budget resolution will come up on Wednesday.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection let me inquire whether it is certain to come up on Wednesday. I have heard rumors floating around that it will be put over until next week.

Mr. TAFT. No; it will come up on Wednesday. I have received some requests that votes on the resolution might be postponed. It may be that the votes will not occur on Wednesday, inasmuch as we shall meet on Wednesday and Friday. But the resolution will come up on Wednesday.

After the budget resolution, we hope to have before us next week the portal-to-portal pay bill and the resolution providing for two 4-year terms for the President of the United States. After that, it is likely that we shall have before us the bill providing for extension of the Merchant Marine Act, which must be taken care of before a certain date in March.

By that time, we think, the question of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal will be before the Senate, and then the bill dealing with sugar control, the bill dealing with rubber control, and perhaps bills dealing with the control of other scarce articles, possibly including wool; and there will be some other matters which will have to be taken care of before the 30th of March, when the Second War Powers Act expires.

Then there probably will be a bill dealing with succession to the Presidency; and, finally, we shall have the bill dealing with the National Science Foundation. That is the tentative list which I handed to the press this morning.

I think from now on the Senate should meet not only on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, but also possibly, after a week or two, on other days. It may be necessary to ask the Senate to sit either on Monday and Wednesday evenings or to hold sessions on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Ohio that there also is a Foreign Relations Committee, and there will be some peace treaties on the floor of the Senate rather shortly.

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. President, I may say that the list I have just stated is a partial one, and it will suggest to the chairmen of other committees that they had better become active and had better report to the Senate the measures in which they are interested. But perhaps this list will give the Senator from Illinois something to think of for the time being. The labor bill will certainly take us to the 15th of March, or until the time when the major labor bill will be reported.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am grateful to the Senator from Ohio for the statement he has made; but I should like to ask a question with respect to labor legislation, which it seems to me is of tremendous importance to the country. Whether true or not, let me say that a rumor is floating around that after March 31 Mr. Lewis will call for a new contract. This would be in keeping with his previous course. If the contract is not agreed upon, another strike is in the making. I wonder whether the Labor Committee is considering at this time any proposed legislation which might affect that particular contingency in the event it should arise.

Mr. TAFT. I think some of the bills certainly deal with that question. But we have not considered it to be our duty to report a special bill to deal with a particular strike which may or may not occur on the 1st of April. I cannot say that we have done that, but we have some 50 bills before us now, I think; and several features of them would have a material effect on that strike.

Mr. LUCAS. I agree with that. I am somewhat familiar with the bills which have been referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. But assuming that my hypothesis is correct, does not the Senator from Ohio agree with me that there is nothing more important before the Senate today than finding some legislative way to meet an emergency such as the one Mr. Lewis has the power to create?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, let me say that personally I have been opposed to a law which would prohibit a strike at the expiration of a contract. Of course, a number of things could be done to discourage it. But if the Senator is suggesting that we must have a compulsory arbitration bill or a seizure bill, I say we have not yet reached that point.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not suggesting either one.

Mr. TAFT. However, the seizure remedy has rather fallen flat, because the Government has already seized the mines and is now in possession of them.

I doubt whether I personally would be in favor of a bill to prohibit a strike when all proper time had been taken and collective bargaining had proceeded and had finally broken down. Regardless of whether in a particular emergency Congress might provide special authorization for the Government to seize plants, put people in jail, call for volunteers, or any other remedy the Senator can think of, certainly the committee is considering that question, as well as any other. But in the ultimate analysis I personally see no satisfactory remedy based on Government seizure.

If the Senator has another suggestion besides compulsory arbitration and Government seizure, I should be glad to consider it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator from Ohio has said about the complications which are involved in respect to all proposals for labor legislation. However, I cannot escape the fact that the most important thing for the Senate to be considering at the present time, and especially for the Committee on Labor to be considering, is a measure of some kind or character which will aid the Government and the country in preventing a Nation-wide strike which would paralyze the economy of the Nation, as a strike called by John L. Lewis could do.

Mr. TAFT. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. I think the question of secondary boycotts, jurisdictional strikes, and all other questions which are constantly popping up around the country, so far as the Committee on Labor is concerned, are of secondary importance and are merely peanuts, as compared with the big problem which involves a paralysis of the economy of the Nation—a paralysis which a man like John L. Lewis could bring about under present conditions.

Mr. TAFT. I can only say that the committee is exploring every remedy for the problem, as well as remedies for other problems, and that before that time comes, as I have said, there will be a bill before the Senate. At that time if the Senator from Illinois thinks the remedies we have suggested are ineffective, he will then be free to suggest other remedies; and I personally will consider them with the utmost interest.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator. I am glad to have the Senator's statement on that question. Nevertheless, it does not satisfy the Senator from Illinois with regard to what the Labor Committee is doing at the present time with this one fundamental issue which seems to me to be the most important question the Labor Committee could consider. It is vital. As I view the situation it should be the No. 1 issue insofar as the Committee on Labor is concerned.

Mr. TAFT. I suggest that if the Senator from Illinois, after looking over the bills our committee is now considering, does not find one which he thinks hits the nail on the head, then let him prepare one. He prepared one or worked on one last year, so he is familiar with the subject. I suggest that he prepare another one, and we shall give the utmost consideration to it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Ohio has made that request and suggestion. I recall very well that last year we had a certain bipartisan group which met from time to time and considered matters dealing with labor. So far as I am concerned, I have not yet seen such cooperation this year with respect to that problem.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Illinois that there has been great cooperation in the Labor Committee. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] has been more constant in his attendance on the committee meetings than almost any other member of the committee, even including the Republican members; and both Republican and Democratic members of the committee will participate in all proceedings of the committee. It seems to me that under the La Follette-Monroney Act, Senators should confine their activities to the committees on which they serve, and should not complicate the work of other Senators by inviting them to participate in the work of committees to which they are not assigned.

Mr. LUCAS. I would expect the Senator from Louisiana, who is a member of the committee, to be present, but I recall that last year the Senator from Ohio and other Senators who were vitally interested in the labor question called in Members of the Senate who were not members of the Committee on Education and Labor to try to work out a harmonious program.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, in connection with the discussion which has just been proceeding, as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands I should like to say that this morning we had in our regular meeting 105 bills on our agenda. Reports from the various departments of the Government on all of them are not necessary, of course, but reports are required on most of them. I have personally called the departments, and I have had the assurance, and I am very confident the information is correct, that it is physically impossible to get the reports back as rapidly as the departments would like to submit them with the flood of bills now being passed. Only one report has been received to date. I assure Senators that as soon as the material is available the subcommittees of the Committee on Public Lands will start turning in reports on at least 105 measures which are before the committee at this time.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be excused from the session of the Senate on Wednesday so that I may attend the unveiling of a portrait of the former Secretary of State, Hon. James F. Byrnes, at Columbia, S. C.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the leave is granted, and the excuse is excellent.

THE FERTILIZER SHORTAGE

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I hope every Member of the Senate will find the opportunity to read the short report by the subcommittee on fertilizer of the House Agriculture Committee entitled "1947 Fertilizer Supplies," issued February 10, 1947. I believe this report should be required reading for everyone interested in helping to meet the critical shortage in fertilizer so desperately needed by our farmers. It is evident that the House committee has done a very thorough job of analyzing the problem, and I want to associate myself with the conclusions and recommendations of that report.

One of the recommendations to which I should like to draw particular attention is that which recommends that the Army immediately repay quantities of fertilizer borrowed from the civilian supply last year, and that such fertilizer be made available to our farmers.

By way of background, the Army last year decided on a program of shipping fertilizer to occupied countries, and laid plans to restore to production some of the plants which had been manufacturing nitrogen for munitions during the war. Until the time when these plants could be gotten into operation, the Army "borrowed" a certain tonnage of nitrogen from the civilian supply, with the understanding that production from the Army plants would be used to restore this quantity to civilian use just as soon as possible after the War Department plants got into production. The production program was a little slow in getting started, but the Army hopes for an output of about 65,000 tons a month very soon. A part of that production will be shipped to occupied countries. The rest is supposedly set aside for civilian use. However, it now appears that even those quantities which are to be restored to the civilian supply will not go to our farmers. On the contrary, it also will be shipped overseas to meet our export commitments in countries outside the occupied areas. In other words, the needs of the American farmer will not be taken care of until after our export commitments are filled.

Mr. President, Nebraska farmers realize that fertilizer needed in March will do them little or no good if they get it in April. I see no reason why they should have to accept a schedule that will give them fertilizer just too late to do them any good. It seems very reasonable to me that the Army might repay its debt to civilian needs, if not immediately, then as fast as Army plants turn out the material. Furthermore, it seems reasonable to me that such repayments should go directly to the American farmer rather than to the export commitments first. This is primarily a question of timing, and no proof was given that overseas needs would suffer from a slight deferment in receiving the quantities that they have been promised.

One other point that seems worth mentioning is the terrific handicap which has been placed in our way by the shortage of boxcars, and particularly high-pressure tank cars. The Senator from Kansas has, of course, had that over-all proposition under consideration for some little time. I am very hopeful that constructive results will be seen from the study of his subcommittee. To me, it is positively shocking that today there are fewer cars on the railroads than there were 1 year ago or 2 years ago. I shall not attempt to assess the blame for that condition at this time. Apparently, the attitude has been that if we wait patiently enough, the railroads, along with other industries, will complete reconversion and rebuilding the production plant in due course. Now we see that just the opposite has been happening. Instead of reconverting, the position of the railroads has been deteriorating. On this point, I am hopeful that the subcommittee headed by the Senator from Kansas will have some helpful suggestions.

PREVENTION OF MONOPOLISTIC MERGERS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, my excuse for trespassing upon the time of the Senate this afternoon briefly is that tomorrow some of the members of the Committees on Public Lands of the Senate and of the House, in an effort to fulfill their responsibilities with respect to the Federal Territories, are leaving to visit the island of Puerto Rico. During the absence of that delegation a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate will be giving consideration to a bill which I introduced at the beginning of the present session to amend the Clayton Act. The bill is similar to one which I introduced at the last session of the Congress, a companion bill to which was introduced in the House by Representative KEFAUVER, of Tennessee. The House Committee on the Judiciary held hearings upon the measure, and in March filed a favorable report recommending its passage.

The senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] is chairman of the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary which now has this bill before it for consideration. I have had several conferences with the Senator from North Dakota, and I know that the matter is being given careful consideration. It is a problem of such importance, however, that it seems to be desirable that some of the details of the bill and some explanation of its history, of its purposes, and of the need for it, should appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Everybody talks about free enterprise, but precious few do anything about it. Everybody talks about competition and the desirability of maintaining it, but few of us seem to do anything substantial about it. Everybody agrees that the concentration of economic power is a menace to what we popularly call the American way of life, but the concentration of economic power proceeds year by year, month by month, and even day by day. There are appalling facts before us for consideration; yet they seem to make no ripple upon the surface of public attention.

For example, the figures available in the Internal Revenue Bureau, Treasury Department, show that 455 corporations, which constitute less than one-eighth of 1 percent of the total number of corporations in the United States, own 51 percent of the assets of all corporations in the United States.

Mr. President, when that single fact is grasped it becomes clear immediately why cities and States are turning to Washington for Government action. We have permitted to grow up in the United States a condition because of which the States and local communities have practically completely lost all economic independence. They are dependent upon the activities of the few corporations which dominate the economic scene, and as a result they turn to Government for relief, because the State governments seem to be unable to do anything, and, of course, no State government would act with respect to the affairs of a great corporation engaged in interstate and foreign commerce. When the State governments do not act, the result is inevitable that the people turn to the Government at Washington, and it makes no difference what we may be thinking about in terms of idealistic objectives, we do the practical thing, though it may be completely contrary to every principle which we have announced.

There was an example upon the floor of the Senate today, when the Senate passed the bill authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to expend money to fight the foot-and-mouth disease in Mexico. The whole Senate was for it; there was no objection to it; and yet it was an authorization from the Senate of the United States to the Department of Agriculture to spend money for which there has never been a Budget estimate.

We do it—Republicans do it, Democrats do it—yet on Wednesday next we are going to begin to talk about a measure limiting the expenditures of the Federal Government, cutting down the President's budget by $6,000,000,000, and placing a ceiling upon appropriations. How perfectly absurd, Mr. President, it is to talk about such limitations and such ceilings, when the hard facts of life are continually driving the Federal Government to spend money and driving the Congress of the United States to pass laws giving to the central government more and more power over the affairs of the people.

The Clayton Act, Mr. President, which my bill seeks to amend, was passed in 1914 upon the theory that it should be the purpose of the Federal Government to prevent economic concentration, by making monopolistic mergers illegal. The purpose of that bill was to prevent monopoly rather than merely to punish it after it had taken place. The sad fact, is that if we permit monopoly to establish itself, then all the punishment in the world does no good, because there can be no effective punishment. The jury, it has been commonly said, will not convict a man who appears in the prisoner's box in a Hart, Shaffner and Marx suit; it simply is not done, and when those who are accused of violating the antitrust laws are persons who have at their command great economic means, capable of hiring vast batteries of lawyers, they merely go through the forms. Prosecution after prosecution is made in civil suits, but the result frequently is that great fines are assessed and paid, after which the operation goes on exactly as though nothing ever had happened. It goes on because we are in the grip of forces which are seemingly beyond our control .

The Clayton Act prohibited the acquisition by one company of the stock of a competing company, in the event the Federal Trade Commission found that the merger so to be brought about by the acquisition of such capital stock would substantially lessen competition, or would effect a restraint of trade. That seemed to be a perfectly clear statement of purpose, a statement of purpose that would be difficult to misunderstand, and yet it was misunderstood. This prohibition was contained in what is known as section 7 of the Clayton Act.

Section 11 provided that if stock had been so purchased in violation of the law, then the Federal Trade Commission might order divestiture of the stock. A case arose in which the promoters who were guiding the merger looked at the law and saw that the prohibition ran against the acquisition of stock. The result was that the merger was accomplished, not by the purchase of the stock but by the purchase of the assets. Of course, in effect the real objective was obtained.

There were two very famous cases which rendered the Clayton Act ineffective. They were cases which were decided by 5-to-4 decisions. The first was rendered while the distinguished father of one of the most able Members of this body was Chief Justice of the United States, the Honorable Mr. Chief Justice William Howard Taft. Mr. Justice Taft was one of the four minority members who dissented from that judgment.

A few years later, in 1935, there was another 5-to-4 decision which completed the emasculation of the Clayton Act. In that decision the then Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Charles Evans Hughes, was one of the four dissenting.

The bill which I have introduced and which is pending before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, of which the senior Senator from North Dakota is chairman, is intended to correct this defect, pointed out by the Supreme Court, in the Clayton Act, by inserting, in effect, the words "assets as well as stock," so as to close the loophole by which mergers have been going on at a perfectly tremendous rate.

To make the story clear, I think it might be well to recall a bit of history. As we all know, when the Congress passed the Sherman Antitrust Act, it was tried in section 2 of that statute to prohibit monopoly. The Supreme Court, in the Northern Securities case (193 U. S.), in 1904, ruled that the power of a holding company to suppress competition between two competing railroads was sufficient ground for its dissolution without the necessity of showing abuse of such power.

The remedy of dissolution was again applied by the Supreme Court in 1911, notably in the Standard Oil and the American Tobacco cases.

When Congress passed the Clayton Act of 1914, it accordingly prohibited, in section 7, corporate stock acquisitions, not only where the effect may be to substantially lessen competition in any line of commerce, or tend to create monopoly, but also where the effect "may be to substantially lessen competition between the corporation whose stock is acquired and the corporation making the acquisition."

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION POWERLESS

This in effect meant that if consolidations were consummated by transactions not involving a transfer of "stock or other share capital" a violation of sections 7 could not providently be charged. Thus despite the enormous wave of mergers that occurred after World War I, the Federal Trade Commission was powerless to direct divestiture by an acquiring corporation of the physical property and assets of the acquired corporation. Where it was feasible to lessen or eliminate competition by merely acquiring assets or property, the statute afforded no remedy.

Consequently the Commission proceeded only against firms which sought to lessen competition by purchase of stock. But here, too, by a five-to-four decision of the Supreme Court in 1926, the Commission found itself without power to act.

I desire to call the attention of the Members of the Senate and those who may read the RECORD to these two decisions. They may be found in Two Hundred and Seventy-second United States Reports, pages 559 to 562, and Two Hundred and Ninety-first United States Reports, pages 587 to 608. With Chief Justice Taft and Justices Brandeis, Holmes, and Stone dissenting, the Court ruled (Swift & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (272 U. S. 561–562 (1926)); Federal Trade Commission v. Western Meat Co. (272 U. S. 559, 560); and Thatcher Manufacturing Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (272 U. S. 554, 561)) that the Commission was without authority to require one who has secured actual title and possession of physical property before proceedings were begun against it, to dispose of the same, although secured through an unlawful purchase of stock.

In 1934 in the Arrow-Hart and Hegeman Electric Co. v. Federal Trade Commission case (291 U. S. 587–608), with Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Stone, Brandeis, and Cardozo dissenting, the Supreme Court, in effect, declared that the Commission must not only issue its complaint before the stock-acquiring corporation shall have used its voting power to acquire the assets of the acquired corporation—as previously held—but that the Commission in addition must have finished the process of causing the case to be tried, briefed, signed, and decided and must have actually issued its order of divestiture before the stock-acquiring corporation has used its voting power—if the order is not to be improvident.

Little wonder it is that the Federal Trade Commission since 1927 has consistenty recommended in its annual and special reports to Congress the amendment of section 7 of the Clayton Act. In its annual reports for recent years, the Commission has again and again called attention to the unanimous endorsement of such recommendations by the Temporary National Economic Committee in its final report. That report was filed in March 1941. The war was hastening on; it sort of rang down the curtain, and nothing was done. The recommendation contained in that report was made after a public hearing at which the Federal Trade Commission appeared with its suggestion, and was subject to cross-examination by the members of the committee, which constituted not only members of the executive departments but also three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House. The recommendation was approved without objection on the part of any member.

TNEC RECOMMENDATIONS

The TNEC recommendations grew out of extensive hearings during which extensive figures were analyzed, compiled by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, indicating the extent to which concentration had proceeded. As early as 1935, as shown by the Bureau's records, of all corporations reporting throughout the country, one-tenth of 1 percent of them owned 52 percent of the assets of all of them; less than 5 percent of all reporting corporations owned 87 percent of the assets of all of them; of all reporting corporations, one-tenth of 1 percent of them earned 50 percent of the net income of all of them; and of all manufacturing corporations reporting, less than 4 percent received 84 percent of the net profits of all of them. From 1919 to 1939, inclusive, 95,020 corporations have gone out of industry and commerce by the route of merger. This is at the average rate of more than 450 annually.

Since the report of the TNEC was written the increase in acquisitions has been marked. The rate of acquisitions has increased until at the present time it is nearly five times the prewar figure and higher than at any time since 1931.

Moreover, the favored form of merger is by acquisition of assets. This is clearly shown by a Department of Commerce survey of some 1,800 recorded corporate acquisitions during the period January 1, 1940, to December 31, 1946. This survey limited solely to the field of manufacturing and mining, does not cover the retail or wholesale trades, service enterprises and other areas where chain stores, supermarkets, and the like have admittedly grown with startling rapidity. Nor does it include the mergers even in manufacturing and mining which for one reason or another failed to be noticed in the press or recorded in standard investment manuals—because relatively small or because their stocks and bonds, if existent, were not traded on the various securities' exchanges. Nevertheless in the reduced sample thus far scrutinized, nearly two-thirds of the mergers were effected by purchase of assets.

LITTLE BUSINESS DISAPPEARING

The characteristic feature of these 1,800 cases was the absorption of little firms by big ones. Indeed, one third were bought out by firms with assets in excess of $50,000,000 and another 40 percent by firms with assets ranging from five million to forty-nine million dollars.

About three-fifths or 60 percent of the acquired firms were engaged in the production of identical articles or products nearly identical and competitive with those of the large concern which gobbled them up. Such instances may be called horizontal mergers.

Some 15 percent were vertical mergers, representing acquisition of assets of firms at an earlier or later stage in the manufacturing process. Such acquisitions, as for example, the swallowing up of 85 percent of the tight cooperage capacity of the country by the Big Four in the liquor industry, often serve to deprive competitors of strategic supplies except at a monopoly price. Such mergers when carried forward to the fabrication of finished products, as for example the absorption in recent years of 87 percent of the steel drum and barrel manufacturing capacity of the country by the seven large basic steel producers, often narrow or deprive competitors of their market, compelling them to dispose of their product at prices monopolistically depressed.

UNRELATED MERGERS

Nearly 25 percent of the 1,800 cases of corporate acquisition represented conglomerate mergers, firms buying apparently unrelated companies, as for example, the Universal Match Co.'s purchase of a number of candy manufacturing companies. Such widespread entry into unrelated lines of manufacture is in part a result of the extraordinary accumulations of liquid capital in corporate treasuries as a result of operations during the war.

The rate at which corporations are being swallowed up in 1946 marks an all-time high during the last 15 years. It is five times that recorded in 1939, the last prewar year. Indeed, the rate of mergers has easily doubled since VJ-day. According to the records now being studied in the Department of Commerce, there were 49 mergers in the first quarter of 1945, 51 in the second, 78 in the third, and 142 in the fourth quarter of 1945. During the first quarter of 1946 there were 95; in the second, 132; in the third, 113; and so far reported in the last 3 months of 1946, a total of 83 mergers. In 1939, by contrast, the number of recorded mergers never exceeded 25 in any 3-month period. In the 2-year period some $4,100,000,000, or close to 5 percent, of a total of $95,000,000,000 of capacity was merged or absorbed.

THE RESULT: MONOPOLY

As a result the monopoly problem in American industry is today more serious and widespread than at any time since the passage of the Sherman Act in 1890. Then mergers were so unusual that each one attracted widespread attention and aroused great public apprehension. Today they have become so commonplace that more than half even fail to be noticed or recorded.

By such mergers, control is achieved over available sources of raw materials, the fructifying flow of technology, research, and know-how is congealed; channels and methods of distribution are restricted; and freedom of enterprise abolished. A handful of dominant firms determine who may enter the market, what shall be produced, how markets shall be divided, and what quantities of products may be bought or sold, to whom, and on what terms.

Among the primary aims of such powerful mergers is the control of dynamic sectors of technology, thereby preventing the emergence of competitive enterprise in such important areas as chemistry, electronics, light metals, pharmaceutical products, and other industries which hold great promise for the creation of new products, new services, and new types of employment and investment.

Mr. President, in the view of these incidents it is perfectly futile to think that there can be any support of little business by Government loans. We turn to the RFC, we turn to the Department of Agriculture, we turn to Government agencies and we try to make these agencies, through dipping into the Federal Treasury, support little business. They support them only for a time, until the money is spent, and then monopoly comes in, the concentration proceeds, and Members of the Senate and Members of the House elected to represent States and districts, find the trade and commerce of their States and districts falling under the control of huge national enterprises which have grown up by virtue of monopolistic merger and which now hold much more than one-half of all the economic assets of the Nation. It is perfectly futile, Mr. President, to think of preserving free enterprise without stopping the cause which is continually undermining free enterprise.

With the relaxation of war price controls the monopoly problem becomes even more accentuated. The antitrust laws are the principal check against unwarranted price increases imposed by monopoly groups. Larger members of many important industries have recently announced simultaneously very substantial price increases. These price rises in many cases are the result of concerted action among the dominant producers. Even in normal times prices are not flexible but are high and inelastic, and the impact of low profits during depressions falls most heavily on small businessmen and wage earners who are least able to withstand a depression.

ANTITHESIS OF FREE ENTERPRISE

Thus concentration is the very antithesis of the free-enterprise system. It leads inevitably to the elimination of small business, the disappearance of competition, the fixing of prices, the restriction of production, and the creation of unemployment. It causes an uneconomic allocation of productive resources and prevents the full utilization of productive capacity. It obstructs adjustment to economic change and contributes to general industrial instability. Concentration blocks the possibility of improving the standard of living by failing fully to develop technological innovations. It attempts to control and limit technical experimentation and to withhold the benefits of increased production from workers and consumers, thus aggravating inequalities in the distribution of income.

THE REMEDY—ENACT S. 104

S. 104 is designed to prevent monopoly by preventing corporate mergers before they occur and before they reach the stage at which the public interest suffers. The public interest obviously suffers through the creation of consolidations of dominant power even before such power shall have been abused because—

First. After the formation of the corporation has been permitted, it is often too late to dissolve it for subsequent misconduct, or if this is still possible it is fraught with very great difficulty.

Second. The very existence of the power to dominate and oppress is generally a sufficient reason for practically helpless competitors to refrain from offering active competition.

Hence the remedy proposed by the bill is one of prevention rather than cure for corporate consolidation.

As already pointed out, the principle of prevention, as distinguished from cure, was originally designed to be the controlling principle in section 7. This was recognized by the Circuit Court of Appeals in Swift & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission (8 Fed. (2d) 595 (1925)). The Court there said that Congress need not wait to act "only when the child has grown to the stature of a giant," that it may act to "anticipate or prevent any unfortunate situation as well as deal with one that existed," that the section "sought by means which the Congress deemed expedient and effective to prevent a condition which the Sherman law was designed to overcome when once it existed," and that the means adopted were appropriate because "if competing corporations may not consolidate, it naturally follows that it will be difficult for one corporation ever to monopolize an industry." The proposed bill would be only a return to the principles thus judicially enunciated.

The only protection the public has against unreasonable price increases for industrial commodities is the impersonal regulative effect of competition. When that is gone the next logical step is control of such prices by administrative action—when that happens, free private enterprise will have disappeared. It is, therefore, imperative to preserve whatever competition now exists. S. 104 will help toward that end.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks the dissenting opinion which was written by Mr. Justice Brandeis in the case of Federal Trade Commission against Western Meat Co., in which Chief Justice Taft concurred.

There being no objection, the opinion was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Justice Brandeis, dissenting in part:

"In my opinion, the purpose of paragraph 7 of the Clayton Act was not, as stated by the Court, merely 'to prevent continued holding of the stock and the peculiar evils incident thereto.' It was also to prevent the peculiar evils resulting therefrom. The institution of a proceeding before the Commission under paragraph 7 does not operate, like an injunction, to restrain a company from acquiring the assets of the controlled corporation by means of the stock held in violation of that section. If, in spite of the commencement of such a proceeding, the company took a transfer of the assets, the Commission could, I assume, require a retransfer of the assets, so as to render effective the order of divestiture of the stock. I see no reason why it should not, likewise, do this although the company succeeded in securing the assets of the controlled corporation before the Commission instituted a proceeding. Support for this conclusion may be found in paragraph 11, which provides for action by the Commission whenever it 'shall have reason to believe that any person is violating or has violated any of the provisions of the earlier sections.'

"I think that the decrees in Nos. 213 and 231 should be affirmed."

The Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Holmes, and Mr. Justice Stone join in this dissent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD the text of Senate bill 104 as it has been amended.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 104) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 7 and 11 of an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (U. S. C. Annotated, title 15, sec. 18), are hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where the effect of such acquisition may be (1) to substantially lessen competition between the corporation whose stock is, or whose assets are, so acquired and the corporation making the acquisition, or (2) to restrain such commerce in any section or community, or (3) to tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce.

"No corporation shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital, or shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of one or more corporations engaged in commerce, where the effect of such acquisition, of such stocks or assets, or of the use of such stock by the voting or granting of proxies or otherwise, may be (1) to substantially lessen competition (a) between such corporation or corporations or any of them, whose stock or other share capital or assets are so acquired, and any other corporation, engaged in commerce, owned or controlled by the acquiring corporation, or (b) between any two or more of the corporations whose stock or assets are so acquired; or (2) to restrain such commerce in any section or community; or (3) to tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce.

"This section shall not apply to corporations purchasing such stock solely for investment and not using the same by voting or otherwise to bring about, or in attempting to bring about, the substantial lessening of competition. Nor shall anything contained in this section prevent a corporation engaged in commerce from causing the formation of subsidiary corporations for the actual carrying on of their immediate lawful business, or the natural and legitimate branches or extensions thereof, or from owning and holding all or a part of the stock of such subsidiary corporations, when the effect of such formation is not to substantially lessen competition.

"Nor shall anything herein contained be construed to prohibit any common carrier subject to the laws to regulate commerce from aiding in the construction of branches or short lines so located as to become feeders to the main line of the company so aiding in such construction or from acquiring or owning all or any part of the stock of such branch lines, nor to prevent any such common carrier from acquiring and owning all or any part of the stock of a branch or short line constructed by an independent company where there is no substantial competition between the company owning the branch line so constructed and the company owning the main line acquiring the property or an interest therein, nor to prevent such common carrier from extending any of its lines through the medium of the acquisition of stock or otherwise of any other common carrier where there is no substantial competition between the company extending its lines and the company whose stock, property, or an interest therein is so acquired.

"Nothing contained in this section shall be held to affect or impair any right heretofore legally acquired: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be held or construed to authorize or make lawful anything heretofore prohibited or made illegal by the antitrust laws, nor to exempt any person from the penal provisions thereof or the civil remedies therein provided.

"Nothing contained in this section shall apply to transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by the Congress to the Civil Aeronautics Authority, Federal Communications Commission, Federal Power Commission, Federal Reserve Board, Interstate Commerce Commission, or the Securities and Exchange Commission.

"SEC. 11. That authority to enforce compliance with sections 2, 3, 7, and 8 of this act by the persons respectively subject thereto is hereby vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission where applicable to common carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; in the Federal Communications Commission where applicable to common carriers engaged in wire or radio communication or radio transmission of energy; in the Civil Aeronautics Authority where applicable to air carriers and foreign air carriers subject to the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938; in the Federal Reserve Board where applicable to banks, banking associations, and trust companies; and in the Federal Trade Commission where applicable to all other character of commerce to be exercised as follows:

"Whenever the commission, authority, or board vested with jurisdiction thereof shall have reason to believe that any person is violating or has violated any of the provisions of sections 2, 3, 7, and 8 of this act, it shall issue and serve upon such person a complaint stating its charges in that respect, and containing a notice of a hearing upon a day and at a place therein fixed at least 30 days after service of said complaint. The person so complained of shall have the right to appear at the place and time so fixed and show cause why an order should not be entered by the commission, authority, or board requiring such person to cease and desist from the violation of the law so charged in said complaint. Any person may make application, and upon good cause shown may be allowed by the commission, authority, or board, to intervene and appear in said proceeding by counsel or in person. The testimony in any such proceeding shall be reduced to writing and filed in the office of the commission, authority, or board. If upon such hearing the commission, authority, or board, as the case may be, shall be of the opinion that any of the provisions of said sections have been or are being violated, it shall make a report in writing in which it shall state its findings as to the facts, and shall issue and cause to be served on such person an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such violations, and divest itself of the stock, or other share capital, or assets held, or rid itself of the directors chosen contrary to the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of this act, if any there be, in the manner and within the time fixed by said order. Until a transcript of the record in such hearing shall have been filed in a circuit court of appeals of the United States, as hereinafter provided, the commission, authority, or board may at any time, upon such notice, and in such manner as it shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any report or any order made or issued by it under this section.

"If such person fails or neglects to obey such order of the commission, authority, or board while the same is in effect, the commission, authority, or board may apply to the circuit court of appeals of the United States, within any circuit where the violation complained of was or is being committed or where such person resides or carries on business, for the enforcement of its order, and shall certify and file with its application a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, including all the testimony taken and the report and order of the commission, authority, or board. Upon such filing of the application and transcript the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such person, and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the commission, authority, or board. The findings of the commission, authority, or board as to the facts, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the commission, authority, or board, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the commission, authority, or board and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The commission, authority, or board may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order, with the return of such additional evidence. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code.

"Any party required by such order of the commission, authority, or board to cease and desist from a violation charged may obtain a review of such order in said circuit court of appeals by filing in the court a written petition praying that the order of the commission, authority, or board be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the commission, authority, or board, and thereupon the commission, authority, or board forthwith shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record as hereinbefore provided. Upon the filing of the transcript the court shall have the same jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify the order of the commission, authority, or board as in the case of an application by the commission, authority, or board for the enforcement of its order, and the findings of the commission, authority, or board as to the facts, if supported by testimony, shall in like manner be conclusive.

"The jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals of the United States to enforce, set aside, or modify orders of the commission, authority, or board shall be exclusive.

"Such proceedings in the circuit court of appeals shall be given precedence over other cases pending therein, and shall be in every way expedited. No order of the commission, authority, or board or the judgment of the court to enforce the same shall in anywise relieve or absolve any person from any liability under the antitrust acts.

"Complaints, orders, and other processes of the commission, authority, or board under this section may be served by anyone duly authorized by the commission, authority, or board, either (a) by delivering a copy thereof to the person to be served or to a member of the partnership to be served, or to the president, secretary, or other executive officer or a director of the corporation to be served; or (b) by leaving a copy thereof at the principal office or place of business of such person; or (c) by registering and mailing a copy thereof addressed to such person at his principal office or place of business. The verified return by the person so serving said complaint, order, or other process setting forth the manner of said service shall be proof of the same, and the return post-office receipt for said complaint, order, or other process registered and mailed as aforesaid shall be proof of the service of the same."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Frank W. Sommer, of Minnesota, to be United States Marshal for the District of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Herbert E. Arnold to be collector of internal revenue for the second district of Texas.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I am obliged again to ask that that nomination be passed over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I express the hope that this nomination may be considered and disposed of at the next executive session. The nomination was unanimously reported by the Committee on Finance. As I recall, no one appeared before the full committee or the subcommittee in opposition to the nomination. If it is to be delayed any longer, it seems to me that some legitimate reason should be given for the delay. I hope that when we have another executive session we may dispose of the nomination.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have much sympathy with what the Senator from Kentucky has said. The nomination has been passed over several times. I agree with him that it ought to be brought to a conclusion at some time in the near future, and I shall cooperate in such ways as I can to bring about that result.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

PHILIPPINE WAR DAMAGE COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John A. O'Donnell to be a member of the Philippine War Damage Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have been requested to ask that the nomination of Mr. Herman B. Baruch be again passed over, and I make that request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make the same observations in connection with this nomination that I made in regard to the nomination of Herbert E. Arnold to be collector of internal revenue for the second district of Texas. Continual postponement of action by the Senate on this nomination tends to raise doubt in the minds of the people as to what the reason is. I certainly hope that this nomination will not be delayed any longer than the next session when executive business is transacted.

Mr. WHITE. I share the views expressed by the Senator from Kentucky with respect to the nomination. I hope it will be disposed of at the next session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there is a substantial number of appointments in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service. I ask unanimous consent that the remaining nominations under that heading be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the remaining nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service are confirmed en bloc.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William T. McCarthy to be United States attorney for the district of Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert E. Shelton to be United States attorney for the western district of Oklahoma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of J. Charles Dennis to be United States attorney for the western district of Washington.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the United States Public Health Service.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there is a substantial number of what I take to be routine nominations in the Public Health Service. I ask unanimous consent that they be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the United States Public Health Service are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the President be immediately notified of the action of the Senate with respect to nominations confirmed today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

That completes the calendar.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what was done with the nomination of Mr. Herman B. Baruch.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination was passed over.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Was there any agreement as to when it would be considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was no such agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that I made the observation, when the nomination was called and it went over by request, that it should not be postponed any longer than the next executive session. The majority leader, the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] expressed sympathy with that viewpoint. I hope it may be disposed of at the next session.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I certainly join the Senator from Kentucky. Mr. Baruch is a native of South Carolina, and I hope the nomination will be taken up at the next executive session.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate adjourn until Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, February 19, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble, therefore will we not fear. O Shepherd of Israel who dost neither slumber nor sleep, we praise Thee that we are Thy people. Be Thou our strength and shield beside the still waters, through pastures green, and in the valley where deep shadows lie.

God of our fathers, that we may escape error, enable us to find our shelter in Thy firm and changeless truth that will bear us through the surges of debate. Bestow upon us the confidence of reason and understanding, clinging to that faith which gladdens the solution of our problems. Armed with new hope and courage, unbroken and undivided, sustain our wills and make our hands and feet swift to work and to walk in Thy ways.

Thou who didst say "I will never leave nor forsake thee," we lift our hearts to Thee in gratitude for the dear mother of our President, whose love and faith make light of pain and loss. May she be blest with great comfort, rest of mind and body, and with early recovery. In our Redeemer's name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 13, 1947, was read and approved.

CONSENT CALENDAR

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on the Consent Calendar today be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 101) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, provided for by section 5 of Public Law 115, Seventy-eighth Congress, shall consist of two members of the Committee on House Administration to be appointed by the Speaker.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 101, Eightieth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers the following Members of the House: Mr. BISHOP, of Illinois, and Mrs. NORTON, of New Jersey.

THE LATE FRANK H. FOSS

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret to have to announce to the House the passing at his home in Fitchburg, Mass., on Saturday, February 15, of the Honorable Frank H. Foss, a former distinguished, outstanding, and beloved Member of this body. Undoubtedly there are many Members who recall his service in the Congress between the years of 1924 and 1935.

Congressman Foss, who was 81 years of age at the time of his death, enjoyed a long and successful career in private business and public life.

Congressman Foss was born in Augusta, Maine, on September 20, 1865, and his illustrious career has paralleled the tremendous growth and development of our Nation since the Civil War. In 1884 he joined with his father in the contracting business of O. F. Foss & Son, and subsequently his firm, under his own management and direction, successfully completed a large number of industrial and public buildings in his adopted city of Fitchburg and other parts of Worcester County. Because of the high esteem and trust in which he was held by his fellow citizens, he was selected for and served as director and trustee of several financial institutions. His fraternal affiliations were numerous, and he achieved high posts of honor and dignity in several of our leading Massachusetts organizations of fraternal, athletic, and civil character.

My respected predecessor as representative of the people of the Third Massachusetts District served in public office for over 28 years, successively holding membership in the Fitchburg City Council, the board of aldermen, board of city water commissioners, and ultimately mayor of Fitchburg. He later served with distinction as chairman of the Massachusetts Republican State Committee and in that capacity was closely associated with our own most esteemed present Speaker of the House. He was a close friend, confidant, and trusted adviser of a great son of Massachusetts, the late President Calvin Coolidge.

Elected to Congress to represent the Third Congressional District in 1924, he served for five full terms, demonstrating throughout his tenure great ability, industry, devotion to duty, and zeal for the public interest.

He was a man of determined convictions and he never permitted himself to be swayed in his judgments by public clamor or expediency. He rendered loyal and faithful service to all his constituents regardless of race, color, or creed; he was friendly and approachable, democratic in his ways, generous in his impulses, and always willing to assist the worthy and the needy in time of trouble and strife. He was beloved by all those who knew him and by his colleagues who served with him in this body. He was a man of character and resolution who served his city, State, and Nation with marked devotion to duty.

His loving and gracious wife, a son, and two daughters survive him and we all join them in mourning the loss of a faithful public servant, a loving husband, and a devoted father. As the one who now is privileged to represent the district which Congressman Foss so ably represented for so many years, moved by a sense of profound regret at his passing, I take this occasion to express my sincere and most heartfelt sympathy—a sympathy shared by all of us in this body—to his family and close friends for the great and irreparable loss which they have suffered. May they find true consolation in his long life and good works and may he, with God's grace, find rest and peace in his heavenly reward.

I ask unanimously consent to include as part of my remarks an excerpt from the Worcester Telegram containing the sorrowful news of his death and a detailed account of his life.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

FRANK H. FOSS DIES SUDDENLY IN FITCHBURG—EX-CONGRESSMAN AND FORMER CHAIRMAN OF GOP STATE COMMITTEE

FITCHBURG, Sunday.—Frank H. Foss, 81, of 68 Arlington Street, former Congressman from the Third Massachusetts District, former chairman of the Republican State Committee and a member of Wiley & Foss, building contractors for 54 years, died suddenly last night in his home.

Mr. Foss served in public office for 28 years, retiring from public life on January 1, 1935, when he was succeeded as Congressman by Joseph E. Casey, of Clinton. He was a member of the Fitchburg City Council in 1906–8 and of the board of aldermen from 1909 to 1912.

He served as city water commissioner in 1914 to 1916 in which year he was elected mayor, defeating John Moran. He was reelected in 1918 over the late Peter F. Ward.

GOP CHAIRMAN

During the 4 years following his terms as mayor, he was chairman of the Republican State Committee. He was first elected to Congress in 1924 and took office the following year. He served five consecutive 2-year terms in that office.

As a Congressman he started the practice of meeting his constituents in their respective cities and towns at least once every year. In addition to that he furnished thousands of pamphlets on farming subjects through the Department of Agriculture.

The former Congressman was highly successful as a builder throughout New England and especially in Worcester County. He first became affiliated with Wiley & Foss in the late 1800's.

In 1884 he became associated with his father in business under the company name of O. F. Foss & Son, masons and contractors. This enterprise continued for 8 years, after which both father and son were induced to locate in Medfield. The former Congressman became foreman for Darling Bros., leading contractors of Worcester and Medfield at that time. The late Walter K. Wiley, who with Mr. Foss headed Wiley & Foss, died 12 years ago.

Among the larger buildings erected by Wiley & Foss were Fitchburg Paper Co. mill No. 1; Crocker Burbank & Co. Association mills Nos. 1 and 8; Shirreff's Worsted Co. weave shed; nurses home at Burbank Hospital; Fidelity Cooperative Bank; Safety Fund National Bank; Worcester County Tuberculosis Hospital at West Boylston; Simonds Manufacturing Co.; Worcester County National Bank here; Leominster Public Library; Doyle works of the DuPont Co. at Leominster; F. A. Whitney Carriage Co., at Leominster, the residence of Bernard W. Doyle in Leominster; and Winchendon Electric Light Co.

Mr. Foss was the son of the late Lorrin F. and Hannah H. Foss. He was born in Augusta, Maine, on September 20, 1865. He obtained his education in the public schools of Maine and at Kents Hill Seminary.

He was a director of the Fidelity Cooperative Bank, and a trustee and a member of the board of investment of the Fitchburg Savings Bank.

AFFILIATIONS

Fraternally he was a member of Aurora Lodge, A. F. and A. M.; Thomas Chapter, R. A. M.; a past commander of Jerusalem Commandery, K. T.; Massachusetts Consistory, Ancient Scottish Rite, in which he held the thirty-second degree; and Aleppo Temple of Shriners in Boston. He also was a member of the former Masonic Club, Fitchburg Lodge of Elks, Boston Athletic Association, Fay Club, Oak Hill Country Club, and was a past noble grand of the Odd Fellows at Livermore Falls, Maine. He attended the First Parish (Universalist-Unitarian) Church.

SURVIVORS

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Sibyl S. (Alden) Foss; a son, Ray A. Foss, of Andover; and two daughters, Mrs. Ruth H. Rieger, of New York City, and Mrs. Dorothy S. Ringquist, of Needham.

Funeral arrangements, in charge of H. L. Sawyer Co., are incomplete.

THE LATE ALLEN T. TREADWAY

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow that I announce to the House the death of a former Member of this body, Hon. Allen T. Treadway, of Stockbridge, Mass. He died at his home here early yesterday afternoon.

For 16 consecutive terms, Mr. Treadway represented the district I now have the honor of representing, the First Congressional District of Massachusetts. I know that all who had the privilege of serving with him here have learned of his passing with sincere sorrow.

Mr. Treadway was born in Stockbridge, Mass., on September 16, 1867. He was a graduate of Amherst College in the class of 1886, and received an honorary degree of doctor of laws from Amherst in 1934.

On October 25, 1893, he married Sylvia Shares, who died on May 22, 1943.

He was a member of both the House of Representatives and of the Senate in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and was president of the senate in 1909, 1910, and 1911.

He was first elected in 1912 to the Sixty-third Congress.

In 1944, during his sixteenth term in this body, he announced that he would not be a candidate for reelection.

Mr. Treadway served with great distinction as a member of the Ways and Means Committee and, at the time of his retirement, he was the ranking minority member of that committee.

He was a loved and respected citizen of Massachusetts. His service to his district, his State, and his Nation marked him as one of Massachusetts' truly great and honored sons. A host of friends mourn his passing.

He is survived by a son, Heaton I. Treadway. I know that this House wishes to express its profound sympathy to him and to join with all Mr. Treadway's friends in this brief tribute to his memory.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that Allen Treadway and I entered the House of Representatives together in the Sixty-third Congress. He was the type of man whom you could trust and whom you could be a friend to. He was in the full sense of the word a gentleman. I deeply mourn his passing, as I always looked upon him as an old, revered, and trusted friend.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I cannot let the occasion pass without commenting on the passing of two of my old and dear friends. I am now the dean of the Massachusetts delegation. Congressman Allen T. Treadway was dean of our delegation for many years. He served for more than 30 years. I was here with him for some 20 years. The memory of both these men from Massachusetts will long remain with me as a cherished memory. Many of you here present must recall Allen Treadway. How big and strong he was. He strode among us confident and unafraid. He won and merited the esteem of the membership on both sides of the aisle. May the sunset of his life be the beckoning of a glorious dawn.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I always regret keenly the news of the death of a former Member who has served in this body. It is seldom that Members inform the House on the same day of the death of two former Members, and still more rare is the occasion when Members rise to inform the House of the death of two former Members coming from the same State.

Over the week end, our late colleagues, Frank Foss and Allen Treadway, both of Massachusetts, passed on. I served with both of them. Both were outstanding citizens of Massachusetts, and both were great Americans. I served 10 years on the Committee on Ways and Means with my late beloved friend, Allen Treadway, a man of sincerity, a man noble in character, and of honest, determined convictions, who quickly made and held friends despite honest disagreement between him and others on public questions and legislative matters. Frank Foss was one of the sweetest men I ever met. He was humble, sincere, conscientious, and devoted to his duties. This is a sad day for Massachusetts when in this body there is announced the loss of two such distinguished sons and citizens who, in their day, served so well in this body and who left their imprint upon the legislative pages of our country—an imprint of such favorable nature that it will last forever.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a very sad day for Massachusetts. In fact, for the entire Congress, to have lost two men of such sterling character; men who have been an inspiration for so many years, not only to Members of Congress but to the State and to the Nation.

There are many of us in the House who served with Allen Treadway and with Frank Foss. Their passing is a personal loss. My memory of Allen Treadway goes back to 1912 when he was elected to the Congress of the United States. He and my late husband were elected to the Congress the same year. They were very close and very dear friends. To my husband and to me, he was a wise counselor. He was a great fighter for our State, a great fighter for our Nation. Untiring in his efforts to protect the workers and the industries, they owe much of their progress to him. I never knew of a finer friend anywhere in the world. He was a devoted husband through his wife's long and serious illness. Those of us who served with Mr. Treadway remember his wordy battles with the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]. They were strong fights, each fighting for his own belief, but always good-natured and friendly. They were very firm friends.

Allen Treadway, kind, generous, he was a splendid host, a great statesman, a great patriot, and a great churchman. What more can one say of anyone?

As for Frank Foss, everybody loved him. He represented every person in his district, from the humblest to the highest. He came to Congress in the Sixty-ninth Congress. He had done countless favors for persons as chairman of the Republican State Committee. He was unfailingly courteous and cooperative. He was a great Republican and a great American.

Massachusetts and the Nation have lost two splendid, loyal citizens.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, all America joins with the great State of Massachusetts today in mourning the passing of two great Americans, Allen T. Treadway and Frank Foss, former Members of this body.

I perhaps knew Mr. Treadway the better because of having served with him on the Ways and Means Committee for 10 years. I might say, parenthetically, that no man has ever served on that committee so long without becoming chairman, but it was altogether due to the natural processes of promotion as they exist in this body. He was in every way equipped for that position. Indeed, he would have made an outstanding presiding officer.

Mr. Treadway was an outstanding American. I like to think of him as being down in the well of the House fighting with that indomitable spirit for the cause in which he was enlisted, in which he always believed. It was a mental treat to the Members of this House when the chairman of the committee, that other great American, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr DOUGHTON] and Mr. Treadway were on opposing sides. I like to think of them as standing up, man to man, each unafraid, each thoroughly convinced of the justice of his cause, neither giving an inch. To me those contests were always inspiring; and I may say that although they had many a hard battle together they remained to the very end the closest of friends. Great men are that way, they do not carry pettiness and grudges.

It is regretted that no member of the Ways and Means Committee will be able to leave his duties here to attend the last services of that great American to be held on Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 at his home in Stockbridge, but the legislative program being what it is we must remain here. I do, however, wish to take this occasion to assure the survivors of both Mr. Treadway and Mr. Foss that we grieve with them in this sad hour and that we shall always cherish the memory of those two great Americans with whom it was a privilege to have served.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, a giant oak has fallen. Hon. Allen T. Treadway, a former Member of this House, has passed to his reward. He died yesterday at his home in this city.

It was my privilege to serve with this great man and true American for more than a quarter of a century in the House of Representatives.

No man ever served his constituents and his country in a legislative body with greater fidelity than did Allen Treadway.

He was loved by his colleagues on both sides of the aisle because he was a lovable man. The affection in which he was held in his congressional district was an inspiration to all who ever attended one of the great annual meetings in his district.

Allen Treadway sprang from forebears who not only believed in the fundamentals of liberty but from earliest times fought to maintain these principles.

I want to illustrate the courageous character of the forebears of the congressional district which Allen T. Treadway represented for more than 32 years. It was strikingly demonstrated the extent to which these solid old New England farmers in the early days insisted upon their rights. It was in Berkshire County, where the early residents—farmers chiefly comprising then the whole western part of Massachusetts—would not permit the courts to sit in that county until the people of the State should adopt a constitution prescribing a bill of rights which the courts might enforce. This was the period from 1775 to 1780.

Here is the resolution adopted at that time by the citizens of Pittsfield:

> Every man, by nature, has the seeds of tyranny deeply implanted within him.

Said the memorial of the town of Pittsfield:

> Knowing the strong bias of human nature to tyranny and despotism, we have nothing else in view but to provide for posterity against the wanton exercise of power, which cannot otherwise be done than by the formation of a fundamental constitution. Let it not be said by future posterity that in this great, this noble, this glorious contest, we made no provision against tyranny among ourselves.

Whenever I think of my good friend, Allen Treadway, and his service to his country, I shall recall these words:

> That which raises a country, that which strengthens a country, and that which dignifies a country—that which spreads her power, creates her moral influence, and makes her respected and submitted to, bends the hearts of millions, and bows down the pride of nations to her—the instrument of obedience, the fountain of supremacy, the true throne, crown, and scepter of a nation is not an aristocracy of blood, not an aristocracy of fashion, not an aristocracy of talent only; it is an aristocracy of character. This is the true heraldry of man.

I extend my heartfelt sympathy to his son and his other surviving relatives.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, if I were to live a thousand years I would never forget Allen Treadway. Someone has said that "an honest man is the noblest work of God." I saw Allen Treadway put to the test in a matter in which I was deeply interested.

As you know, I have led the fight for rural electrification for the last 12 years. I would like to leave as my monument cheap electricity in every farm home in America.

In 1938 we were lagging behind practically every other civilized country in the world in rural electrification. Japan had 90 percent of her farms electrified; we had about 10 percent. Germany had 90 percent. Italy and France had 94 percent of their farm homes electrified.

We were passing what we called a spending bill, or relief bill, amounting to billions of dollars, keeping people on the Federal pay roll, many of whom had never even sworn allegiance to this country. Points of order had been waived. I offered an amendment for the first $100,000,000 for rural electrification. Immediately there was terrific opposition from sources I was supprised at. I appealed to Allen Treadway to support me, and he did, although it affected his district very little, if any. When he walked down the line through the tellers he led many members of his own party, some of whom are looking at me now. We won by only 6 votes. If we had lost, rural electrification would have been practically dead.

There are 2,000,000 farm homes throughout the country that tonight will be lighted with electricity that would not have been so lighted, in all probability, if we had lost that crucial fight.

As the gentleman from New York has expressed it, what Allen Treadway took to be right he supported regardless of consequences. I lived to tell him many times of my gratitude. When I saw this morning an account of his passing I said, "There has gone a great American, and I thought of the words of William Cullen Bryant when he said:

> Thou'rt gone, the abyss of heaven
> Hath swallowed up thy form; yet, on my heart

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a sad occasion for those of us who have the privilege of representing the State of Massachusetts in this House. I am sure it is a sad occasion also for those Members of the House who have had the privilege of serving in the years gone by with our beloved former colleagues who have departed.

Two great public servants, two great Americans, two great friends have left us on the same afternoon and gone to their just reward.

Allen Treadway gave 38 years of his life to the public service, 32 of them here on the floor of the House and as a member of the great Ways and Means Committee. He was a forceful speaker, an able legislator, and a man with human qualities which endeared him to friends on both sides of the aisle.

Frank Foss gave 29 years of his life to the public service, 10 of them here on the floor of this House and as a member of the great Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. He was a man of experience and wisdom in public affairs, of sound judgment, and beloved by his wide circle of friends.

All those who served with these former colleagues here will recall their high character, their fine ability, and the splendid service which both of them rendered throughout the years to State and Nation.

Both of them were very close friends of mine. I shall miss each of them deeply.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, this occasion should not pass without an expression of tributes that rise today from every heart to the stricken State of Massachusetts and its sorrowing delegation. Ever since the Boston Tea Party America has looked to Massachusetts for leadership and has uniformly found it.

Two of such leaders, who served so long and so well in this body, we mourn upon this occasion because of their passing to higher service. We join those two bereaved families in their tears, tinged with pride and gratitude because these two great Americans kept the faith. Thank God we looked to them, and not in vain. Thank God that the proud tradition of leadership and ability and dedication to the public service still obtains. So, we from every other State, joining our worthy colleagues from Massachusetts, bow to pay tribute to both past and present of Massachusetts.

Speaking as a humble Member of this House to the present distinguished Speaker of this body, until recently the minority leader, and to the distinguished minority whip now, formerly the majority leader, we remember again, as we did through the years when they were protagonists in leadership, par excellence, that whenever a Member of the House referred to either he said: "The gentleman from Massachusetts." With those gentlemen from Massachusetts, the distinguished dean of the Massachusetts delegation who is just now presiding, and with every other Member from that great State, all of us join in paying this tribute of love, admiration, and respect to the memory of these two great servants of mankind, and of their great State, and of this great Nation.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I can add nothing to what has been said other than to pay my tribute of love and respect to the life and character of these two distinguished men. I knew them both well as my colleagues. I knew Mr. Treadway better. He was not only my colleague, he was more, he was my friend. He was at all times dependable. He was ever courteous. He never yielded when a principle was involved. He was a good Republican, but he had as many good Democratic friends as he had Republican friends. The reason, he was tolerant, fair, and respected the honest views of others. A polished gentleman of the old school he was a credit to the Congress. His passing is the country's loss.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. It was my privilege to know Allen Treadway very well, both in this legislative body and outside. I admired, respected, and loved him. I believe he was one of the greatest orators we ever had on the floor of this House. He was one of the most effective and most efficient legislators. His passing grieved me beyond measure, but we can all be glad that such a fine citizen gave such a fruitful life to his country.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it was my high privilege and honor to serve with both these splendid gentlemen. I knew Frank Foss well ever since he was in the House, and I served with Allen Treadway throughout all the 32 years he honored this House with his presence. They were both outstanding Americans, gentlemen, and scholars. They were Republicans, yes, but they were fair-minded, broad-minded, liberal-minded men, and always had the interest of their country at heart. Frequently, because of their fairness, I have regretted that they did not sit on this side of the aisle. Especially have I known Allen Treadway very well; he was a classmate of our late former Speaker, Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois, and in that way I came into close contact with him and learned to know him intimately. In the passing of these two Massachusetts legislators who have served so well their State and their Nation, not only the people of Massachusetts but of all our country have lost two faithful and outstanding servants, and I join other Members in expressing to their families our profound sympathy. I regret their passing exceedingly, and I hope that every Member will try to emulate their splendid record in this House, in the interest of their State and in the interest of their country that they served so well.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HERTER. I should like to join my colleagues in the very sincere and deep tribute to the memory of two very distinguished and able gentlemen from Massachusetts. Over the last 25 years it has been my privilege to have known both Congressman Frank Foss and Congressman Allen Treadway. I am proud to say that I considered them close personal friends. In the history of Massachusetts many men have given devoted and far-reaching service to the Nation. These two gentlemen stand high in the roster. Both the State of Massachusetts and the Nation owe them a deep debt of gratitude, and their survivors may well feel an intense pride in their memory.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HESELTON. I yield to the Speaker.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Words cannot adequately express my sorrow at the death of these two outstanding citizens of Massachusetts. When I returned yesterday from a few days' absence from the city, it was a tremendous shock to see two telegrams lying one upon the other, indicating the death of two of my warmest personal friends; two men who had much to do with the shaping of my own political career; two men who through the years had gained my respect and admiration. When I had served 3 years in the Massachusetts Legislature and 3 years in the State senate, I reached a determination to retire from politics and devote my efforts to a business career. For 4 years I was happy in business life. One morning I received a letter from our distinguished former colleague, Mr. Foss, who was then the chairman of the Republican State Committee. He asked me to come down to Boston and call upon him. I did not get around to it, and then 2 months later he telephoned and said, "I wish you would come down at the earliest possible date." At that time I had never seen Mr. Foss. I went to Boston, and he persuaded me to become the director of what was the rather difficult campaign of 1922. I tried to refuse but finally yielded when it was stated that the several factions in Massachusetts were all agreed upon my election.

The interview began a friendship which was never broken. Later we came to Congress together. We shared adjoining suites at the club and for 10 years he was to me like a big brother. He was one of the finest men who ever lived; a man of high integrity and fine character. He never made a promise that he did not keep. His word was as good as his bond. He was a real American in every sense of the word. His passing is a loss not only to Massachusetts, but to our country.

I first came to know Allen Treadway when I came to Congress in 1925. A warm personal friendship developed between us and it extended through the years. He was an able statesman, a student of fiscal affairs, and an expert on tariff and taxes. I have always cherished his loyalty as evidenced by his making the nominating speech when I was elected Republican leader. One cannot think of Allen Treadway without recalling his devotion to his invalid wife. Here his character as a kindly gentleman was remarkably revealed. His wife was for many years an invalid and he was always so tender and solicitous about her as to make a lasting impression. He was never too tired after a hard day's work to take Mrs. Treadway for a little automobile ride. He canceled many worth-while engagements so that he could bring a little comfort and sunshine to her life. Her death several years ago was really the breaking of a strong physique. America needs men like Mr. Treadway and Mr. Foss. They were the type of men who were responsible for the building of this Nation. We do well to pause for a few moments to pay a simple tribute to two great Americans, two splendid former Members of Congress, two men for whom the world is better for their having lived.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, to few men in public life have come so many high honors as were bestowed upon former Congressman Allen Towner Treadway, of Stockbridge, Mass.

At the age of 19, he was graduated from Amherst College as the youngest member of his class of 1886. While in college, he engaged in athletic sports while maintaining high standing scholastically. His father was engaged in the management of hotels and it was natural that the son should join him in that business. Over a period of many years, Congressman Treadway operated successfully two of the best-known hotels in western Massachusetts. In the family tradition, these hotels are now operated by his only son, Heaton Treadway. To those of us who were fortunate enough to attend one of the many gatherings sponsored by Republican groups, and held more often at Heaton Hall, the memory of Allen Treadway as a wonderful host will always be with us.

He served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 1904 and in the Massachusetts Senate from 1908 to 1911. During the last 3 years he was President of the Senate. He was followed to that high office by Calvin Coolidge, later President of the United States. One of the cherished possessions of Congressman Treadway was an autographed photograph from Mr. Coolidge, expressing the hope that he would carry on the duties of that high office of President of the Massachusetts Senate in as able a manner as they were conducted by Mr. Treadway.

Congressman Treadway was elected 16 times and served for 32 years as a Member of Congress. He became ranking minority member of the House Committee on Ways and Means. A man of sound judgment, wide experience and financial background, his speeches on the floor of this House at all times received the closest attention of our Members. To those of us who recall his powerful build and strong, vibrant voice, it is difficult to believe that he has passed away. During the years he served on this great committee, he contributed greatly to the successful conduct of its affairs and to the betterment of our Federal Government.

In private life, he was greatly beloved by all who knew him. He was a thirty-third degree Mason, and a member of many other fraternal and social organizations. His judgment was not only respected in Washington but in his home communities where he was a trustee of the Lee Savings Bank and a director in several insurance companies.

While he gained a high position in the councils of our Nation, he was even better known to the people of his district, the largest by far, in area, in Massachusetts. He was a friendly man. This was brought home to me particularly during a day spent with him campaigning in the Berkshire Hills. We started early in the morning by automobile, carrying a bountifully supplied lunch basket with us. We covered many towns during that day. In each town, we stopped not only at the stores but at the farmhouses. Invariably, the Congressman would call the men and women by their first names and they all addressed him as "Allen." I know of nothing which indicates more clearly the friendliness of Allen Treadway than the host of men and women in his home communities who knew him personally.

Through his death the Nation has lost one of its finest and ablest elder statesmen; Massachusetts, one of its great leaders; and western Massachusetts, its leading citizen.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, in the death of Allen T. Treadway the country and particularly the great State of Massachusetts, has lost one of its outstanding and most beloved citizens.

The First Congressional District of the State of Massachusetts chose well when they elected Allen Treadway to represent them in the Congress of the United States. His service in this House, dating from March 4, 1913, and for the next succeeding 15 Congresses, speaks more eloquently as to the character of Mr. Treadway than feeble words of mine can express.

He came to Congress 2 years after I became a Member of this House, and when he voluntarily declined renomination to the Seventy-ninth Congress, there remained in the House of Representatives only two who outranked him in length of service, the gentleman from Illinois, the dean of the House, our beloved colleague ADOLPH J. SABATH, and myself. Allen Treadway, in my opinion, had his health permitted, could have continued serving his country, and the First Congressional District of Massachusetts as long as he had desired to do so, and would today be presiding as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means upon which he served for more than 27 years. Prior to his selection as a member of that committee on December 15, 1917, Mr. Treadway served on the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and also on the Committee on Education.

During his more than 27 years' service as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. Treadway participated in and helped formulate more legislation affecting the fiscal affairs of our Government and its citizens than any other public servant in the history of our Government. During this period that committee was called upon to furnish the finances for the prosecution of two World Wars. While Mr. Treadway's service on the committee during the war periods was as a minority member, his intellect, industry, and broad vision contributed immeasurably to the fulfillment of the stupendous task, and his wise counsel was in no small degree responsible for its successful accomplishment.

I became a member of the Committee on Ways and Means on January 7, 1925, nearly 7 years after my friend Allen Treadway, and during my many years' service on that committee and during my long service as chairman, I learned to know Allen Treadway's true worth. While we did not always agree on matters of legislation, such disagreements never marred our friendship in the slightest. Mr. Treadway was one of my most cherished friends and he was most helpful to me in many ways. He was a perfect gentleman at all times; his integrity was unsurpassed by any man, and his industry knew no bounds.

His passing is a loss of a true friend, an able statesman, a great American, and one of the most lovable characters I have ever had the privilege to number among the many friendships I have acquired during my long service. It was a great privilege to have known Allen Treadway and a much greater privilege to have enjoyed his friendship.

His passing takes from us a man who was loved, admired, and respected by all, and one whose distinguished public career will ever be an inspiration for those who knew his true worth and greatness.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, many warm and generous words have been spoken in this Chamber today about our departed former colleague, Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts. No one could deserve the praise more than this great public servant, whose dignity and devotion to duty brought him the admiration of the entire House. It was my privilege to know him during the last two terms he served in this body and to inherit from him his seat on the Library Committee. In so doing I found that I not only took the chair he vacated, but the assurance that at any time I might need asistance with any measure coming before the Committee on the Library, he would be delighted to impart what knowledge he had. Time and time again I found myself drawing upon his experience, and at all times he was most courteous and helpful, not only about Library affairs, but also in other legislative matters that may have been occupying our attention at the time. This House lost a valuable Member when Mr. Treadway decided not to return to the Seventy-ninth Congress on account of ill health, and yesterday the Nation lost one of the most competent officers it has known, but the fruit of his labors will continue throughout the coming ages. As my farewell tribute to him—my friend—I give in the words spoken of a great hero in the days gone by: "This was a man." He is alive, not only in the hearts of his family, his friends, and his colleagues, but his influence will ever live in this great America.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have learned with deep regret of the death of Hon. Frank H. Foss, who served in the Sixty-ninth Congress to the Seventy-third Congress, inclusively, as a Representative from the Third District of the State of Massachusetts.

I have always regarded Frank Foss as an exemplary man, typical of the type of legislator usually chosen by the citizens of the State of Massachusetts to represent them.

There is nothing that could show the ability of this man much more conclusively than the many types of enterprises in which he was engaged prior to his coming to Congress.

He brought all of his vast experience gained from his many business activities to bear on legislative problems in the House of Representatives. He was familiar with the contracting business; a student of banking, he had a thorough knowledge of the insurance business; and had a broad experience in municipal affairs.

I recall distinctly the effectiveness of his speeches bearing on many intricate business problems.

I regret the passing of my good friend, and I extend my heartfelt sympathy to the members of his family who have survived him.

THE NATIONAL SCHOOL HEALTH SERVICES BILL

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the House on the National School Health Services bill which I introduced today.

The National School Health Services bill would establish a national policy under which American children should not be permitted to grow up with physical or mental defects which could be prevented or corrected in childhood. With this long-run objective in view, the bill would assist the States to better the health of school children according to individual State requirements.

This bill calls for a Federal grants-in-aid program to assist the 48 States and the Territories to extend and improve their health services to school children between the ages of 5 and 17.

One-half of an initial Federal appropriation—$12,000,000—would be matched by State funds, dollar for dollar. The other half of the Federal funds would be allocated to the States according to their need, to provide pilot programs or demonstrations, training of personnel, and related activities. These funds need not be matched by the States. After the first year the Federal contribution would be increased to $18,000,000. Both Federal and State contributions would be spent to develop services for the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of physical and mental defects among school children.

Federal funds earmarked for each State would:

First. Provide more thorough health examinations for school children. These examinations would determine whether the individual child is gaining weight and would discover defects of the eyes, teeth, ears, heart, lungs, throat, and posture.

Second. Provide children with follow-up medical care to correct defects discovered in such health examinations. Recognizing that not enough money can be made available to correct the health defects of all school children at once, however, the bill would have remedial work begun first in rural areas and areas of severe economic distress, where the need is greatest.

Third. Apply to improvement of the Nation's present inadequate school health services the same general pattern of Federal-State cooperation embodied in title V of the Social Security Act. This has been successful in bettering maternal and child health, services to crippled children, and public child-welfare programs throughout the country.

States providing school health examinations or corrective work or both would be expected to undertake equitable service without regard to race, color, or creed. In developing their services, States would be expected to integrate programs with health activities already under way, and with the health and medical facilities presently available in the communities.

Fourth. Provide for administration of Federal funds by the Federal Security Administration, under a School Health Services Board. This Board would comprise the Chief of the Children's Bureau as Chairman, the United States Commissioner of Education, and the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service.

Fifth. Would establish both State and National advisory boards on which would serve representatives of health, education, child welfare, and the public at large.

Sixth. Provide for joint State planning for school health services by both State health and education authorities, but for administration of the plans by both or either or whatever State agency the State deemed appropriate. There would be no Federal interference whatsoever with the educational systems of the States.

The national school health services program already has a large measure of public support from nationally known organizations headed by Parents' magazine. This is a monthly publication with a circulation of more than 1,000,000, devoted to the welfare of children and their problems.

The publisher of Parents' magazine, George J. Hecht, is serving as chairman of a volunteer committee of public-spirited citizens working for the enactment of the national school health services bill. Members of this committee, representing their organizations, include Leonard W. Mayo, chairman, National Commission on Children and Youth, and president of the Child Welfare League of America; Dr. A. O. DeWeese, executive secretary of the American School Health Association; Nelson H. Cruikshank, director of social insurance activities for the American Federation of Labor; Nathan Cowan, legislative director of the Congress of Industrial Organizations; Russell Smith, legislative secretary, National Farmers Union; Miss Hazel Corbin, R. N., general director, Maternity Center Association; Lester B. Granger, executive secretary, National Urban League; Mrs. Theodore Oxholm, chairman, Spokesman for Children, Inc.; Kenneth D. Widdemer, acting executive director, Health Council of Greater New York; Mrs. Gertrude Folks Zimand, general secretary, National Child Labor Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that as this bill is brought to the attention of the American public, as it deserves to be, and now that it is introduced, the proposed national school-health-services program will win the approval of every parent in the United States, and of every organization that is interested in American school children.

Services such as proposed in this bill are long overdue. Approximately 30 percent of the young men, 18 through 37 years of age, examined for military service in the recent war, were rejected for physical or mental defects which made them unfit to serve their country. These were the findings of the Selective Service System made public in December 1946.

The percentage of draft rejections in this war perhaps indicates no real deterioration in the health of our adult male population since the last war. Then approximately 29.6 percent of the draftees were rejected. Differences in standards and policies of draft examinations make it difficult to compare the two periods precisely.

Yet, while there may have been no real deterioration in health, neither can we say, as we ought to be able to, that the health of our young men has improved since the last war, in a country wealthier and more advanced than any other in the world.

Many of the defects which disqualified millions of young men for military service could have been detected and corrected when the men were boys in school. But this preventive work was not done. Although we knew what ought to be done, as a Nation, we failed to take steps to do the job.

A definitive study of the close tie-up between draft rejections and the health of school children was made by the United States Public Health Service in Hagerstown, Md., in 1941. In their analysis the Public Health experts found that relatively large numbers of Hagerstown young men rejected in the draft had given evidence during their childhood at school-health examinations of the very same defects which, uncorrected, 15 years later made them IV-F's in the draft.

Bad teeth, for example, were allowed to grow worse. Men with teeth so poor that they caused rejection in the draft, when boys of 10, already had double the number of decayed, missing, or filled permanent teeth as had the 10-year-olds who 15 years later went into the services instead of into class IV-F.

According to the United States Children's Bureau, which has the most reliable information now available on children's health, at least three-quarters of America's 30,000,000 school children need dental care. Approximately one-third need medical care. Ten million children have defective vision. One million have hearing defects. Half a million children have orthopedic defects or defects which could be corrected by plastic surgery. Approximately 175,000 children have active tuberculosis.

In our schools something can be done to correct most of these defects, and a whole lot can be done to correct many of them. The schools are a good place to begin. For under our laws the schools have contact with more children for longer periods than any other public agency.

Nevertheless, not even half of the school-age children and young people in the United States receive even a health examination, let alone corrective care. Only 1 out of every 10 high-school students receives a physical check-up. Where examinations are given there is rarely any provision for follow-up remedial work. Some States spend as little as 2 cents per child per year for school health services. Only 10 States report school health expenditures of more than $1 per year per pupil, according to the latest available figures of the United States Office of Education.

The national school health services bill which I have introduced today is addressed to this problem. It should not be confused with the large issue of providing health insurance for the whole population, with which my bill has nothing whatever to do. The national school health services bill would go straight to the heart of the Nation's health problem. It would make a modest beginning to start our school children off on the path to health.

The program which this bill would make possible represents the kind of economy which in the long run is a real economy. It would spend a relatively small sum today so that larger sums would not be needed later.

Federal expenditures for the health needs of children have always been small in comparison with appropriations for other purposes, improving the health of farm animals, for example. Nobody ever proposed an atomic-bomb-size Federal fund for children. Yet in the desperate necessity of war the Congress put $2,000,000,000 during a comparatively short period into atomic research.

If we want to have a healthy nation we must start with the children. Physically fit and productive adult citizens are the best investment a nation can have. That is the future dividend to be realized by investing now in the health of America's school children.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the legislative program, if any, and any other special orders, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE] may address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the legislative business and any other special orders today, I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

SILLY PROTEST FROM RUSSIA—DEAN ACHESON EMINENTLY CORRECT

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, Dean Acheson, Under Secretary of State, before the Senate committee the other day said and said truly that the Russian foreign policy is "an aggressive and expanding one." Apparently that has wounded the sensitivity of some Russians in power, and they have sent a note of protest to the State Department. I believe that note should be thrown into the wastebasket. Only a nonsensical sensitivity could have prompted such a note.

It was probably sent to raise a dust storm pending meeting of foreign ministers at Moscow and to prejudice the cause of the United States. Very likely the note was penned by foolish knaves of knavish fools at the Kremlin. The Politburo politicians changed the word "expanding" that Mr. Acheson used to the word "expansionist" and have complained thereof. I am not an expert on semantics but to my mind those two words mean exactly the same thing; and, indeed, the Russian policy has been expansive: Witness the fact that they have swallowed up the three republics of Esthonia, Lithuania, and Latvia. I believe that Dean Acheson was eminently sound and proper in his criticism. If Russian foreign policy is not expansive and aggressive in Poland, in the Baltic, in the Balkans, I do not know what those words mean. The Governments of Poland, Bulgaria, Rumania, Yugoslavia are mere Russian puppets and are the result of Russian aggression and expansion.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CARROLL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter addressed to the President of the United States by a constituent.

Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and in each to include an editorial.

Mr. TRIMBLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a report from the AAA.

Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two speeches by the Chief of the Army Engineers, one at the Wallace Lake Dam dedication and the other before the Red River Valley Improvement Association at its annual meeting just held.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on Wednesday, February 19, following the legislative business of the day and such special orders as may have already been entered for that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes on Tuesday, February 18, 1947, following the special orders heretofore entered for that date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

ENLARGEMENT OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill which would extend the coverage of the Social Security Act so as to include employees in the nonprofit field. These are not included in either the old-age and survivors' insurance plans or the unemployment compensation plans. It is in the form of amendments which would eliminate from the statute those subsections which specifically exclude this type of employee from the benefits of the act. My bill would not affect employees of State-supported educational institutions nor employees of any governmental unit such as municipal firemen, policemen, or any other municipal employee.

There are approximately 1,000,000 employees of nonprofit organizations in the United States which are operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, and it is universally recognized that these employees are among the poorest paid in our country, despite the recognized social value of the work they perform. Their exclusion from social-security benefits is a great moral wrong and definitely tends to weaken the effectiveness of the social agencies and the religious and educational organizations for whom they work.

This type of employees are greatly concerned over their exclusion, and many of them feel, with some justification, that they are being treated as second-class Americans. Appearing before the Ways and Means Committee of the House last year, the following organizations supported the proposition of including their employees in the Social Security Act: The American Council on Education, the American Association of Social Workers, the American Public Welfare Association, the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Church, the National Council of Jewish Women, and the American Hospital Association.

ALASKA'S PLACE IN THE DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, with all the vigor at my command I desire to warn this House that false notions of economy should not, and, indeed, must not, be allowed to stand in the way of the Alaska defense program. Now as perhaps never before it is essential for us to build in Alaska a mighty fortress capable of withstanding any onslaught which might be made against it. Only in that manner, Mr. Speaker, can we be reasonably sure that the United States can be protected from the horrors of war as it will be in the future.

Last week the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES] warned this Nation that we must not neglect Alaska from the military standpoint. His compelling analysis of the situation ought to be read by every American. Alaska can either be the region furnishing protection for our Nation or it can be the region from which an enemy can reach us. The choice is ours. With respect to Alaska we simply cannot be put in the position of saving a few dollars where that saving would result in peril to this country.

Not long since the very able commander of the Alaskan Department, Major General Craig, said that the Territory would be militarily indefensible unless there is a strong civilian economy to back up the Army. So it is necessary that we do more than station troops and warships and build bases there. We must build up industries. We must establish farmers on the soil. We must do these things not at some far-off future time but now. We must build roads. We must improve and at once the Alaska Railroad. We must expand civil aviation and see to it that there is a strong merchant marine.

Few Americans realize what tremendous strides have been made in Soviet Asia in the way of settlement and industrial expansion. Those advances have been made in a country having great similarity to Alaska, and certainly having no greater resources, square mile for square mile, than has Alaska. There are seven cities in the six Soviet Republics in Asia which have populations greater than 100,000. Any one of these cities contains more people than does the entire Territory of Alaska. One of them had in 1944 over 600,000 inhabitants. The rate of population increase during the war years was simply tremendous. In 1929, it is said, this whole area had a population of 8,000,000 people. By 1944 that population had increased to 20,000,000, and the projection for 1994 is 45,000,000 people. We cannot afford to sit idly by and see our northern outpost remaining undeveloped, either militarily or economically. Over the week end I received a radiogram from the Anchorage Chamber of Commerce pointing out the inadvisability of any cut in War Department appropriations for Alaska.

Alaskan defenses are in a sorry plight considering their strategic location—and a full-scale defense program is absolutely necessary for the protection of American residents and investments in Alaska. The important position of Alaska in case of attack by unfriendly powers must be realized. An excellent defense program has apparently been outlined by the War Department for the defense of Alaska and a slash in appropriations, as considered, could threaten the well-being of the entire country by weakened defense in Alaska.

I subscribe to that statement without reservation. I join with the gentleman from Florida in urging, even imploring, that we expand, not contract, our military program in the Territory of Alaska.

LITHUANIAN ANNIVERSARY

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, the Lithuanians all over this country and throughout the world remember that February 16, 1918, Lithuania was proclaimed free and independent. Many tragic things have happened in these nearly 30 years. Our Lithuanian friends want us to be aware at all times of the injustices done them during these years, but at this particular moment Americans of Lithuanian background ask that we turn our attention for a moment to a form of suffering in which we seem to be playing an unfortunate part. They ask that we familiarize ourselves with the problems created by the methods used in our American zone in Germany for the screening of displaced Lithuanians and other Baltic peoples to determine if they qualify for DP rating with the consequent aid and privileges. They feel justified in asking us to rectify these injustices.

To bring this matter to you I am including in my remarks a letter written to the president of the American Friends of Lithuania, Mr. P. J. Zuris, which gives something of the picture and which I hope you will read. This letter is as follows:

BALTIC DP CAMP, AUGSBURG, HOCHFELD,
SECTION 5, USFET HEADQUARTERS,
Frankfurt, January 10, 1947.

On the basis of your permission to solicit your help in the case that the UNRRA Team 1062 should launch a new political screening, we beg to inform you of the following acts: On January 8, the UNRRA Area Team 1062 has started a new screening at the Baltic DP Camp Hochfeld, in Augsburg. The following facts show that it is not a reexamination of the data supplied by the recent Army screening, but a new screening with far-reaching implications:

1. New questionnaires are being used. These when printed comprise six pages and contain questions that are entirely different from those used in the Army screening.

2. The questions are much more detailed than in any Army questionnaire. The date of entry into American zone (question 32) is asked for, although this cannot have any bearing on the DP status. Addresses of relatives in home countries must be given, although such information, if it leaks out, may endanger such relatives. Some questions (e. g., No. 24: "When were you taken war prisoner by the Germans?") seem to refer to Russian nationals and instill fear in our people. The question, "When did you enter territory occupied by the Germans?" is incomprehensible.

3. All inmates of DP camp over 15 years of age must appear at the screenings. Children are interrogated in the absence of parents about events that took place when they were 8 to 10 years of age. Individual questionings last about 2 hours. We are compelled to undress so that they could examine our naked bodies. How rigid the questioning is can be seen from the fact that for the first 4 days only 35 persons have been examined of each nationality that received summons.

Moreover, we beg to draw your attention to the fact that the screening technicalities are such that no fair nor reliable results can be assured. The questionnaires are filled out not by the party concerned, but by a staff of various nationals, some of whom are ignorant of the Baltic language. Thus a Baltic national must answer questions in Russian, German, or English language—a language he may know superficially or not at all—and the answers thus given are entered in English by writers whose knowledge of English is obviously imperfect. The written answers are not read to them or by the persons under examinations so that no assurance is given that the answers are entered as given. There is a tendency on the part of examiners to favor certain answers, and in several cases it was noted that the answers were entered just the opposite to those given. In general, the entire procedure is such that misstatements and eventual eligibility decisions are subject to grave errors.

The UNRRA Area Team 1062 claims that this eligibility screening has been organized for the purpose of resettlement and emigration. Yet most of the questions asked can have no possible connection with resettlement and emigration. At the same time, the questionnaire used is remarkable for its absence of such questions that would be unavoidable if resettlement or emigration were contemplated—for instance, questions about foreign languages.

In our former writing we pointed out that the "perpetual screening" which now lasted for nearly a year has been a source of mental cruelty. Even the Germans are entrusted with their own denazification, but the Baltic nationals, citizens of neutral countries, are being screened by people who are ignorant of our history and our psychology. The present screening carried out by the UNRRA is such that it fills our people with apprehension.

In view of the above noted conditions, we beseech you, in the name of Christianity and American democracy, the Atlantic Charter, which promises us freedom from fear, to take the necessary steps so that these new screenings would cease immediately. Should the facts herein noted be insufficient for such a step, we beg you to appoint a commission or to come personally to Augsburg and examine the situation. Trusting that in the American sense of justice, we remain,

Respectfully yours.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, many Members are very much interested in finding out just what day the so-called budget matter will be before the House.

Mr. HALLECK. My present information about that is that it will be brought up on Thursday.

Mr. RAYBURN. Not before Thursday?

Mr. HALLECK. That is my understanding. We bring it up on Thursday.

Mr. RAYBURN. May I ask the gentleman another question, and if he does not think he can answer it he may so indicate. What kind of a rule does the gentleman think this resolution will be considered under?

Mr. HALLECK. I cannot say about that at the moment.

Mr. RAYBURN. But the matter will not be brought up before Thursday?

Mr. HALLECK. That is my understanding. The Rules Committee will meet in the morning on the matter.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

AMERICAN CORRESPONDENTS TO MOSCOW CONFERENCE

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include a letter from a constituent and an editorial from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to utter a word of protest against the decision of the Soviet Union to limit to 20 the number of American correspondents who will be permitted to report the forthcoming Moscow Conference. Seventy-three have sought leave to go. The agreement to hold this Conference in Moscow was expressly conditioned upon receiving assurances of adequate news coverage. The Russians made no reservation to the effect that they, rather than the countries concerned, would be the judges of such adequacy.

It is to be hoped that our Department of State, with which I understand formal protest has been lodged, will insist upon either the fulfillment of this express commitment or the convening of this conference of such transcendent international interest and importance in a city which will welcome rather than shun the spotlight of world press coverage.

Under unanimous consent, I include the following letter and editorial:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., February 13, 1947.

HON. KENNETH B. KEATING.

DEAR SIR: May I respectfully ask that you do everything in your power to see that we have adequate news coverage in Russian-occupied countries. Russian newsmen are in this country in great numbers and I feel that we should have the same number of newsmen in their countries.

After all, it is little to ask that they grant us what we are willing to give them. Therefore, I will go so far as to suggest that if they continue to ban our newsmen from Russian-controlled soil, that we revoke all passports or visas of Russian news gatherers in our country.

We cannot control disarmament and atomic science in a world of locked doors. Thus, as a strong weapon of peace I urge you to insist on equal news coverage between ourselves and Russia.

Respectfully yours,

RITA A. TROST
(Miss Rita Trost).

[From the New York Times]

NEWS FROM MOSCOW

Representatives of the principal newspaper, radio, and periodical correspondents' associations in Washington have reported to Secretary of State Marshall that they regard Russia's proposals for American news coverage of the forthcoming Moscow Conference as shockingly inadequate. These are the right words. Because it will deal with the pivotal question of peace with Germany, the Moscow Conference will be by far the most important of all the treaty conferences. Seventy-three American correspondents had sought permission to go. As it now stands, the Russian Government will admit only 20.

The reason given for this is the acute housing shortage now prevailing in Moscow. There is no doubt that living quarters there are as scarce as are all other goods and services. But there is also no doubt, in our own judgment, that makeshift accommodations (Quonset huts, if necessary) could be found for 53 additional American correspondents if the Russian Government really wished to find them, and there is, furthermore, no doubt in our mind that the real reason for the sharp limitation of correspondents is the old familiar Russian wish to keep the iron curtain as tight as possible.

The present decision of the Russian Government could have been foreseen, and was foreseen. Nearly 2 months ago, when the decision to meet in Moscow was first announced, this newspaper urged either that explicit guaranties of absolutely free and unrestricted news coverage be demanded of, and received from, Russia, or that a conference of such great importance to the peace and security of the world be shifted somewhere else. We renew that suggestion now.

REDUCE DEBTS FIRST, THEN CUT TAXES

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and to include therein Senate Concurrent Resolution 1 of the South Dakota Legislature.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, from the emphatically Republican State of South Dakota there has come some wise counsel to the aid of Congress in connection with its fiscal policy. I shall insert as a part of my remarks Senate Concurrent Resolution 1, passed by the Senate of South Dakota, which is 100 percent Republican and concurred in by the house of representatives, in which there are only four Democrats.

I might mention also that South Dakota is a pioneer State. Its people are largely pioneers or the sons and daughters of pioneers, and it is preponderantly an agricultural State. The people of South Dakota, consequently, know that you have to till the land before you plant a crop; you have to plant a crop before you can harvest it; you have to harvest it before you can sell it; and you have to sell the crop before you can pay your debts. South Dakotans know that there must be a logical order to financial and economic transactions if they are to be effective.

Consistent with that policy and program, the State Legislature of South Dakota has memorialized the Congress of the United States, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 1

Whereas the national budget has long been unbalanced and the debt has increased the past 14 years to very great proportions; and

Whereas it seems that national Republican leaders have already applied themselves to the task of making plans to correct fiscal maladministration: Be it therefore

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House concurring), That we commend national Republican leaders in advocating a program of debt and expense reduction in advance of tax reduction; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be dispatched to United States Senators CHAN GURNEY and HARLAN J. BUSHFIELD; Congressmen FRANCIS CASE and KARL E. MUNDT; and to United States Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, President pro tempore of the Senate; and Congressman JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIOUX K. GRIGSBY,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

NIELS P. JENSEN,
Secretary of the Senate.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, South Dakota joins Indiana in counseling Congress to practice wisely the three R's of a sound fiscal policy: First, reduce expenditures; second, reduce debts; third, reduce taxes. The order in which we proceed is significant if our results are to be successful.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of Kansas asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mallory Browne that appeared in the New York Times yesterday with reference to the situation of the British Empire.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

LABOR-INDUSTRIAL AGREEMENT

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, when the attention of the Congress and the people of the United States is focused upon industrial relations, it is interesting and encouraging to know that efforts are being made in a constructive manner to improve employer-employee relationships in some parts of the country.

I am glad to call the attention of the House of Representatives to a recently completed annual wage agreement made between the Tobin Packing Co., of Fort Dodge and Estherville, Iowa, and the United Packing House Workers of America, Local 31, and Local 79.

Like every labor-industrial agreement there are many details about which it is not necessary to take the time of the House of Representatives. Suffice it to say that the company is guaranteeing to its employees a minimum of 2,080 hours of work per year. This provision thus at one stroke enables the workingman to rely upon a minimum weekly income in each of the 52 weeks of the year, and in return for this encourage the worker to give the employer cooperation and full production within the terms of the agreement.

It may be that the detailed provisions of this agreement are not entirely satisfactory to either the union or to the management—nevertheless, it seems to be a constructive forward step to bring about peace in the troubled and disordered sphere of industrial relations.

I commend both the Tobin Packing Co. and the United Packing House Workers, Local 31 and Local 79, for their farsightedness and for their industrial statesmanship.

FREE PRESS, COMMUNISM, AND FEPC

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I agree with what the gentleman said about a free press throughout the world. It is about time that some of our diplomats stopped licking the boots of Joe Stalin and begin to stand up for an American free press to tell the world what is really happening behind the "iron curtain." The sooner they do that the better it is going to satisfy the people of the United States.

But, I rose to call your attention to another matter. On last Thursday I took up the so-called Fair Employment Practice Committee bill, known as the FEPC, analyzed it and showed that it was put on the ballot in California in the last election and defeated in every single individual county in that State.

Those remarks will be found in the Appendix of the RECORD in the morning. I have gone over them carefully, and I want you Members who represent real Americans to take those facts that are in there contained, together with interruptions, and see just what this communistic FEPC program would do to the American people in every State of this Union.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. TABER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 1968) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiences in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 36) which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CANNON reserved all points of order on the bill.

SALARIES OF CERTAIN SENATE EMPLOYEES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4) relating to the salaries of certain Senate employees.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CANNON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, opportunity will be afforded for discussion of the joint resolution?

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the joint resolution read so that we may see what is in it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) in the case of any position under the Senate for which additional compensation is provided for in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1947, "so long as the position is held by the present incumbent," the salary provided in such act, including such additional compensation, shall be payable to any incumbent thereof without regard to the above-quoted limitation, in addition to any other compensation authorized by law for such position.

(b) The salaries referred to in the foregoing subsection shall be payable from January 3, 1947.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution simply provides for the continuation for the present employees of the Senate of those salaries that were fixed for the then incumbents in the last Congress, in the Legislative Appropriation Act of 1947. It has been found that many of these people who have taken over from minority positions would otherwise suffer a decrease in salary. The Senate desires that this resolution be adopted, permitting them to receive the same salaries that were in effect last year.

JOHN C. PUGH

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this is a notable bill in that it is the first bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations since the retirement of the head of our committee staff, John C. Pugh.

Mr. Pugh served under the Government for just a few years short of half a century, the last 26 years on the staff of the Committee on Appropriations. He came to the committee simultaneously with the adoption of the budget system. When the budget system was established in 1920, after several years of consideration and debate, it was found necessary to secure an especially experienced and able man to carry on important phases of the work. The immortal and illustrious Marc Sheild, after a consultation with the members of the committee, Budget officers, and department heads, asked John Pugh to accept the position.

Mr. Pugh, in collaboration with Marc Sheild, established the routine and procedure under which the Committee on Appropriations has discharged its duties in the administration of the budget system with such gratifying success in this last quarter of a century.

Few men have rendered such outstanding service to the Government as that rendered by John Pugh in these 25 years, especially during the last 5 or 6 years, a span of years which might well be termed the most critical period in American history, the Second World War. He was the ranking authority on the fiscal affairs and budgets of the Navy long before the First World War, and Assistant Secretary of the Navy Franklin D. Roosevelt always brought him to all congressional hearings. His comprehensive knowledge of the War and Navy Departments and his long and intimate association with Army and Navy personnel rendered him indispensable when the stupendous task of expanding the Army to wartime strength and creating a two-ocean Navy started on its breath-taking race against time in the Second World War.

While serving as chief of the committee staff, he was really the liaison man between the two Departments and the Congress. In that capacity he harbored more explosive military secrets than any other man on the Hill and perhaps any other man in the Government outside of the departmental chiefs and the President. He was not merely the repository of confidential information and programs but he was the spark plug through whom resources were mobilized and funds were provided—and plans of strategy were translated into victorious action.

He was especially effective in the fiscal negotiations supplying funds for the development of the new weapons which won the war. Mr. Speaker, supplementing the matchless valor of our men and the incomparable strategy of our commanders, it was the accomplishments of our scientists in the development of secret appliances such as radar, the proximity fuze, the atomic bomb, and many similar developments, which brought the war to a close long before the time it would otherwise have been concluded. We not only outfought the enemy in both theaters of the war; we not only outgeneraled and outmaneuvered the enemy, but we outthought them. America not only led the world in production, in courage and valor, in military power and strategy, but America led the world in the arts and sciences—and if anyone entertains any doubt on that score they have but to consult the high command of Germany and Japan who are in a position to testify eloquently on that point—if they are in a position to testify at all.

In the provision of funds for these critical projects John Pugh not only handled the hearings and private understandings but he supplied the confidence without which members of the committee would have hesitated to venture out upon these uncharted seas.

That was especially true of the provisions for the atomic bomb. As has been often said, only seven men in the House and four in the Senate, besides John Pugh, had any information on the development of the atomic bomb before it was dropped on Hiroshima. In the 3 years it was under experiment no member of the Military Affairs or Naval Affairs Committees of either House had any inkling of the epoch-making project until they read of it in the newspapers. In the meantime the five men from the Committee on Appropriations took the extraordinary responsibility of authorizing for the project the expenditure of a sum of money in excess of the assessed valuation of some of the States of the Union.

John Pugh was the go-between. He supplied data, conducted the conversations, arranged for the transportation of the subcommittee to Oak Ridge, where the members personally inspected the plant, and on their return took the responsibility of authorizing the expenditure of the last of the funds required. The astronomic appropriations for the purpose had been passed through Congress disguised in other funds, and if the bomb had proved a failure, as most of us had come to believe it would, the denouement, when the inevitable revelation came, would have blown all five out of Congress under a stigma they could never have lived down. In those harrowing days, while the result was being awaited, John Pugh was the only man we dared to counsel with and was a constant source of encouragement and reassurance. When the final history of the war is written there is no man who is entitled to a brighter page in the record of that eventful era than John Pugh.

There are men whose breasts are covered with medals and ribbons won by deeds of heroism written imperishably in blood on crimson battlefields. We delight to do them honor and we express to them on every possible occasion our heartfelt appreciation and gratitude. But, Mr. Speaker—and I say it considerately—there are few men back from the war more entitled to the thanks and gratitude of the Nation, for services nobly performed, than John Pugh, who, working quietly, self-effacingly, unobtrusively, and indefatigably behind the scenes, was, in my opinion, the greatest factor on the Hill in providing the sinews with which we won the war—supplies for our men where needed and when needed, and the certainty every American felt when he went into combat that he was as well or better armed than the enemy in front of him.

But we who know John Pugh are not thinking so much today of what he did as a budget technician. We are thinking of the man, for John Pugh, along with his efficiency and his service to the committee and the country, is a knightly, golden-hearted gentleman. His personality, his courtesy, his never-failing equanimity on all occasions, his devotion to duty, to the committee, and to his friends, are outstanding and will always be remembered and treasured by those who had the privilege of being associated with him here in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain all Members of the House join with me in acknowledgment of the great service John Pugh has rendered the Congress and the Nation, and in wishing for him the reward to which he is so richly entitled, many happy sunny years of continued health, happiness, and contentment. In the language of Joe Jefferson's Rip Van Winkle, "May he live long and prosper."

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, may I say a word in appreciation of the work of John Pugh, who is retiring as clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations. I measure my words when I say that I know of no more faithful and efficient servant in the United States Government.

The title, "Clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations," does not sound impressive or important. The name of the holder of the job is rarely mentioned on the House floor or in the press. The American people do not know it, but it is true that the clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations is one of the important individuals in our democracy. The job, if capably filled and properly handled, is truly comparable to one of the top positions in our Government.

John Pugh filled that place admirably and well. He had a knack for detail and a capacity for understanding of Government policy and program which often amazed those who have served here in this Capitol Building with him. The top secrets of the Government have been entrusted to him on numerous occasions and he has never betrayed his trust or failed to measure up to his assignment, regardless of difficulties confronting him. His work brought him into frequent contact with Cabinet officers and department heads. John Pugh has been the confidant, adviser, and assistant to a long list of Members of the House Committee on Appropriations through the years. He himself is perhaps unaware of the major part which he has played in shaping many important Government policies.

I am honored to have the privilege of paying this little tribute to him, and as he takes leave of his official service here, I join with my colleagues in wishing him every success and happiness in the coming days.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STAFF ORGANIZATION OF STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 24, providing for a more effective staff organization for standing committees of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 202 of the Reorganization Act of 1946, the clerical staffs of standing committees of the Senate shall be organized and compensated in the manner hereinafter provided.

The annual rates of compensation for the clerical staff of each standing committee of the Senate (other than the Appropriations Committee) shall be $2,000 to $8,000 for one chief clerk and one assistant chief clerk; and $2,000 to $3,720 for not to exceed four other clerical assistants.

The annual rates of compensation for the clerical staff of the Appropriations Committee shall be as follows: One chief clerk and one assistant chief clerk at $5,600 to $8,000; such assistant clerks as may be necessary at $3,820 to $5,600; and such other clerical assistants as may be necessary at $2,000 to $3,720.

Such compensation shall be fixed by the chairman of each such committee.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the resolution?

Mr. TABER. Yes. At this time, Mr. Speaker, the Senate has asked us to consider this resolution. The provisions with reference to staffs in the reorganization bill are so open that the Senate felt the staff should be restricted as far as possible to those who had heretofore been designated. As I understand it, this is the object of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, because it may be assumed that the adoption of this resolution will involve the expenditure of money and because it is reported from the Appropriations Committee, I deem it entirely proper to say a word at this time with respect to the concurrent resolution which, it is expected, will be brought before the Congress on Thursday next.

I take this time because it is very apparent to me that there is a tremendous amount of misinformation abroad concerning what this resolution and its adoption may mean.

It seems to me that the people of America ought to know the facts and the truth and that we should not start our first important legislative action under a cloud of political implications. Let me state clearly what I mean by that. The so-called Reorganization Act contained a provision for the establishment of the Legislative Budget and it is proposed to bring before the Congress a concurrent resolution in compliance with the provisions of that section, section 138, I believe it is, of the legislative reorganization bill.

What does it mean? I have before me the text of that resolution. It reads:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the judgment of the Congress based upon presently available information that revenues during the period of the fiscal year 1948 will approximate $39,100,000,000, and that the expenditures during such fiscal year should not exceed $31,500,000,000, of which latter amount not more than $25,100,000,000 would be in consequence of appropriations hereafter made available for obligation in such fiscal year.

What does that mean? The people of America have been told that if the Congress adopts such a resolution, by that act they are destroying the Navy and destroying the Army; in fact, the Secretary of the Navy, in a news release, stated that if Congress adopts this resolution the fleet will be immobilized and will not be able to cruise. We are told that dire results will take place if the Congress adopts this sort of resolution.

I have not heard a single commentator make, nor have I read in a single newspaper, what I conceive to be the correct statement as to the effect of the passage of this resolution. I addressed myself to that subject in the committee at some length and found complete agreement that what I stated at that time was in truth and fact the purport and the intent of the passage of this resolution, namely, this resolution expresses a hope to the American people that after an examination of the Budget it may be possible to cut that Budget of expenditures by $6,000,000,000. The American people for the first time are looking to the Congress to carry out that purpose of cutting the Budget.

Does it mean that the Appropriations Committee and its subcommittees are bound to any specific sum?

Does this resolution say that the Army shall be cut $1,400,000,000 and the Navy $1,000,000,000 or any other sum?

The best that can be said toward this whole situation is that the Congress has expressed a determination that every Budget estimate submitted, whether it be for the Army, the Navy, or any other department of government, shall be scanned and examined as it never has been in the last 14 years.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. It means that the Congress has expressed its determination that every single nonessential activity of Government shall be eliminated in the hope that when the committees have finished their work it will result in a gross reduction of public expenditures in the next fiscal year of $6,000,000,000.

Now, then, as to the Army and Navy, how does the appropriation machinery work? Mr. ENGEL's Subcommittee on Appropriations is starting hearings this afternoon on the Army budget. The witnesses are coming before that committee. The members are going to examine every item in that budget exactly as they have done before. The same is true of the Navy budget, the same is true of every other budget estimate submitted by every department—Interior, Post Office, Labor, Federal Security, and so on. The members of that subcommittee are going to examine those estimates with the idea of providing for necessary public services, nothing more; they are going to examine them with the intent and purpose of providing for the Army and Navy the funds that are necessary to provide for adequate national defense, nothing more. People who say that the Army and Navy are so sacred that you should not even examine their budget estimates and you should accept those submitted by the Budget and the President without question just simply do not know the appropriation process.

There is real opportunity for saving, and it is the purpose of the committee and the Congress in passing this resolution not to tie the hands of the committee, nor does the passage of this resolution tie anyone's hands. It simply says, "We are going to work as never before to appropriate the sums that are necessary and only those sums, and we hope from what we can see now that the savings will approximate $6,000,000,000." If they do not approximate $6,000,000,000 and it appears that more money is necessary, this Congress will provide that money when it examines each appropriation item.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. There seems to be an impression around that the Budget Committee reached up in the air and took out the figure 31.5. My friend from Wisconsin will recall that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] explained to the full committee exactly how that figure was arrived at. May I ask the able gentleman from Wisconsin to inform the House about that?

Mr. KEEFE. I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota that it is not a figure picked out of the air. I can say to the gentleman, if you will read the resolution that accompanies the proposed draft of the concurrent resolution, you will see there set forth exactly what was done and the examination that was made. Certainly this committee could not hold detailed budget hearings in the time available for the entire establishment of the Government. That is the duty and objective of the subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee. They are doing that now, and I want this Congress to know that the political smoke screen that has been raised in an attempt to inject politics into this situation is going to fail because the American people are determined that those expenditures of Government will have to come down. They are not going to think too well of those men on the Appropriations Committee and Ways and Means Committee who have for pure political purposes and no other reason tried to give the impression that this $6,000,000,000 is an item picked out of thin air and binds the Congress of the United States, even though it will not ultimately, perhaps, be possible upon further examination of these budgets to actually cut down that figure.

I say to the people of America and to the press that want to tell the people the facts, let us get the truth abroad. There is not a man or woman on either side of this House who intends to cripple either the Army or the Navy, the Coast Guard, the Air Corps, or the Marine Corps. There is not a man or woman on either side of this House but what intends to see to it, when the appropriation estimates for the Army and the Navy come here, that they will adequately provide for national defense. But on the Republican side, at least, we are going to see to it—and I mean see to it—that there is not going to be $1 appropriated that is not essential and necessary in the public interest.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting to listen to the gentleman from Wisconson, and if I interpret his remarks correctly—and if not, I hope he will correct me—but if I interpret his remarks correctly he told us, in substance, during his speech, that while the $6,000,000,000 cut is made, while he is going to vote for it, that it means nothing so far as the actual effect is concerned; that on Thursday next there will be a $6,000,000,000 cut, but it means nothing at all so far as future appropriation bills are concerned; that on one hand Congress will be telling the people that if the House adopts it that we are going to cut the various appropriation bills $6,000,000,000 and then on the other hand we are going to tell them that it has no meaning or effect at all; that it is only a joke.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. If the gentleman is attempting to quote me——

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, please! I am placing my interpretation on the gentleman's statement, and I said that if I am incorrect I hope the gentleman will correct me.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to the gentleman that when he uses language and attempts to interpret my remarks as meaning that the action of the Congress is nothing but a joke, the gentleman from Massachusetts well knows, if he has read the proposed concurrent resolution, that such a statement as that coming from him is entirely unjustified, and is not in accord with anything I said.

Mr. McCORMACK. I repeat, if I understood the gentleman's statement correctly, that on Thursday they will vote a $6,000,000,000 reduction, and then in the next breath he says it is not binding upon us; that the Members here are not going to cut the various appropriation bills $6,000,000,000; that so far as the people of the country are concerned, that that position is a legislative joke, and I maintain that position.

Now the gentleman says it is nothing but a hope. I read in yesterdays paper he said it was "a pious hope, a target to shoot at, and nothing more than a pious hope that the Federal appropriations for fiscal year 1948 can be held to a $31,500,000,000 level." The fact is that the Army and the Navy and the armed forces are in fear of this drastic cut, and that that fear is entirely justified.

Knowing the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] as I do—and I respect him very much; he is a great legislator; I disagree with the gentleman on occasions, but I respect him—he apparently is rising anticipating asking me to yield, and I will.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield 1 second?

Mr. McCORMACK. But if I know the gentleman well enough——

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to the distinguished gentleman that I cannot remain to hear the rest of his very distinguished statement, because I have got to go to attend a committee hearing to try and make some of these cuts that you will hear about when we file the report.

Mr. McCORMACK. I wonder how you are going to vote for a $6,000,000,000 cut and then later vote for less than six? Then they will catch up with you.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Now just wait a while. I was referring to another distinguished gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know, but the gentleman referred to me as distinguished.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is one of the leaders of the Republican Party.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; no.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is cne of the leaders

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am just on the outskirts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I will come to the gentleman directly.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do not make it too long; I have to go to a committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But the gentleman cannot keep it.

Mr. McCORMACK. But I have it during the remainder of the 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How about a quorum?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, the gentleman can make all the points of order he wants to, but he will not right now. I say to my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], when this is adopted, unless I misunderstand him, I can see him sitting with the Republican members of the Committee on Appropriations and saying the House has adopted the $6,000,000,000 cut; that you have got to keep within that $6,000,000,000. I can see the gentleman doing that right after the House acts, and if the gentleman did not do it, he would not be living up to the opinion that I have about him.

Now does the gentleman from New York want me to yield to him?

Mr. TABER. I think I should like to have the gentleman yield, for just a moment, if he will. Here is the picture.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman going to ask a question or make a speech?

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. It is just a flat statement. I think I should make it, under the circumstances. I recognize that legally the $6,000,000,000 cut, if the Congress may be so fortunate as to adopt it, will not be binding upon the Appropriations Committee. On the other hand, it is an expression by the Congress of what the Congress, in advance of the hearings, thinks should be cut. That figure has not been pulled out of the air nor has it been arrived at with any idea of depriving the Army or the Navy of anything they need. But I wonder if folks do not want those things that they do not need taken away from them so that they may be able to operate more efficiently and effectively, and provide better national defense.

Mr. McCORMACK. Just as I said, the gentleman from New York always gives an honest answer. Whether or not you agree with him, you have to respect him. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] says that when $6,000,000,000 is cut on Thursday next, it is more than a hope, he is going to try to see that the Appropriations Committee cuts it $6,000,000,000. I ask my distinguished friend from New York if my statement is not correct, that he takes the position that this is the intent of the House and, when finally agreed upon by both branches, whatever the ceiling is, he intends to have appropriations cut to keep within the ceiling.

Mr. TABER. There is no question but what that will be my aim.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. I want to give credit where credit is due. The gentleman from New York always speaks his mind, and the gentleman's statement is not consistent with what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] said just a few minutes ago. I admire the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] because he takes his position and maintains it. You cannot help but have great respect for men like that, even in disagreement.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. May I say to the gentleman that some of us here have watched the operation of government under which tremendous sums of money have been spent on government by his party. We on our side have recognized in the country a demand that the cost of government be cut, and we propose to respond to that demand and to cut the cost of government. If the gentleman from Massachusetts does not want to join with us in that effort, then he will have to take the consequences.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts always takes his consequences. The gentleman from Massachusetts took his consequences before Pearl Harbor, when we had legislation before this body the passage of which was necessary to save our country. The gentleman from Massachusetts was down in this well fighting for the passage of that legislation on many occasions when those who talk now about the Budget were vigorously opposing the passage of that legislation. I remember the one-vote victory on the extension of the selective service. I remember that there were only 21 Republican votes for it.

I remember other legislation when we had very few Republican votes, only 12 to 21 votes, and when we were staggering through legislation necessary to save our country. I assume my responsibility and take the consequences on these and on all of the appropriation bills that were passed during the war and which the gentleman from Indiana himself voted for. Our present debt was incurred to save our country, to win the war. Is the gentleman criticizing by his remarks the very bills that he voted for which were passed during the war to appropriate money necessary to help our country win the war?

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, I voted for appropriations for national defense before Pearl Harbor.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, you did.

Mr. HALLECK. But it was not my fault that what happened to us did happen at Pearl Harbor.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; but did you vote for the extension of selective service? My time being up, I am sorry I do not have time so I can yield to my friend from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts boasts of his votes for appropriation bills; he criticizes some of us because some of us did not vote for all the measures which he advocated. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that perhaps more on the then minority side would have voted for some of those bills had you told us that the President was already engaged in a fighting war long before Pearl Harbor, at a time when he was talking peace while carrying on war. We did not know that. We believed the President might be right when he said that he knew more about foreign affairs than we did and that if we left our dealings with other nations to him, he would keep us out of war. He said our men would not be sent to fight on foreign soil. While he was making that statement about his ability to handle the foreign questions he already had us in a war. He had our ships in the war, but we in Congress did not know it. So do not blame us because some were misled and deceived. Others who opposed his policies were not deceived, and we tried to keep this Nation out of war. With reference to these appropriations for the Army and Navy, as I interpreted the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], while he hopes he can, and expects to, do everything he can to cut appropriations at least $6,000,000,000, if deficiency bills or other bills come in and it is necessary to appropriate more money for guns and ships and for implements of war for our national defense, he would, of course, appropriate that money, as I think all of us on this side would, but we are through, at least, so far as I am concerned, anyway, with making appropriations for things that we have been told are necessary for war but which turn out to be cocktail bars, polo grounds, swimming pools, and places of recreation for officers. We are all through with those fancy things which do not have anything to do with national defense but which just mean spending the people's money for luxuries, amusement, entertainment, and things that the officers want, not for war but to make life in the Army luxurious. Brother, we are through with—at this time—making appropriations for purchasing or making those things which are but extravagance and waste, if we can catch them as they come up. When you hear what my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] has to say about requests for unnecessary expenditures, you will find there is plenty of room to cut the requests of the War Department and of the Navy Department without hurting anyone, without hurting the service, and without hurting our national defense. Yes; we will vote for national defense—I will, and the Members on the minority side, I am sure, will—but we are not going to be stampeded into voting for any of this Harry Hopkins funny business, whether it is in the Army or the Navy. You never did frighten some of us, you and the pro-British press will frighten fewer of us. We have the people's verdict of November 5 behind us, and we do not scare worth a darn every time you yell either "wolf" or "Stalin."

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. Are we not fast approaching the time when we will have to stand up and be counted on whether or not we want to do anything about cutting the cost of the Federal Government?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Certainly we are. We made certain promises, just as did Mr. Roosevelt in 1932. He got away with disregarding those promises for a long time, but we better not try the same line.

INTERNAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, as one of the men who voted to extend the draft rather than disband our forces in the face of danger, as one who did everything possible to get our leaders to pursue a course which I thought would keep our country, as well as France and England out of the recent war, as one who tried to save Gen. Billy Mitchell from crucifixion when he was trying to give us an air force that would have prevented the Pearl Harbor disaster, if it had not prevented the war entirely, as one who has led the fight for veterans' legislation, and for adequate pay for the men in the rank and file of our armed forces, as one who has led the fight for the development of our internal waterways, and for rural electrification, I want to caution the Members of this House against cutting down on expenses that are necessary to keep America strong and great.

You have but to look at Great Britain today—a country without gas, oil, or water power—and see the tragic situation there, to realize how foolish it would be for America to stop the great program that we have in the development of our internal waterways.

If it had not been for the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Columbia River development, the chances are this war would have lasted a year or probably 2 years longer, and cost the lives of a million more of our young men.

We have 230,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity running to waste in our navigable streams and their tributaries every year. When it passes it is gone for all time. You cannot recall it. Do you know what that amounts to? One kilowatt-hour of electricity is equal to one man working 10 hours. That 230,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours is equal to 600,000,000 men working 10 hours a day, 300 days a year.

It is enough to fully electrify and heat every home in this country. It is the greatest wealth in America outside of the soil from which we live.

We cannot afford to lag behind other nations in such developments. That money will come back not only with interest, but multiplied many times in the enrichment of our country.

I know some of you will say that we wasted money on the Tennessee Valley Authority. We never spent money more wisely in all the history of the country. As I have said before, the TVA is the greatest development of ancient or modern times.

They will tell you we wasted money on the development of the Columbia River. We never spent money more wisely than it was spent in the development of that great wealth of water power that was formerly going to waste.

I am willing to cut out unnecessary spending, but I am not willing to help paralyze the development of my country, the development of its internal resources, the conservation of its soil, and the building up of the homes throughout the Nation and making it possible for a human being to live on any quarter section of land in the Nation and enjoy the benefits of America's greatest natural resource, outside of her soil, the water power of the Nation.

I shall continue that fight as long as I am in Congress. Just as surely as the sun shines, the American people are going to demand that our internal waterways not only be made navigable, their floods controlled, and our soil conserved, but they are going to demand that we develop the water power of the Nation, extend it to every farm home, and see that the American people are permitted to use it at rates based upon cost of generation, transmission, and distribution.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised to see the eminent naval authority, "Admiral" KEEFE, from the international seaport of Oshkosh, Wis., set Admiral Nimitz right on the immobilization of the fleet, but I am a little surprised to see him leading this precipitous retreat.

One of the difficulties of the present situation is that men who never saw a battleship want to dictate the disposition of the Navy. And men who do not know how many effectives it takes to make up a regiment want to overrule General Eisenhower on military strategy. Then, Mr. Speaker, this vociferous statement that we are going to cut expenses of the Federal Government. Why, you would think it was a new discovery on which they expect to take out a patent, something that had never been thought of before. Mr. Speaker, we have been cutting the expenses of the Federal Government ever since the war. There was not a bill in the last Congress that was not cut below the Budget estimates.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. In just a minute. If the gentleman will permit.

In those items in which the House overran the report of the committee against the expenditure of money in the last Congress gentlemen on that side of the aisle led the fight against the committee and for higher appropriations.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will permit.

We have been cutting expenses of the Federal Government and we have been consistently reducing the money available for expenditure and commitment since the war—$64,000,000,000 in the last Congress. Shoot at that mark! And we propose in continuation of that program to cut this year as deep as can be justified. But we would like to know what you propose to cut, where you propose to cut, and how much you propose to cut. You say your total is based on a well-considered estimate but you have given us no opportunity to judge whether the estimate is well considered or not. Let us have the items on which the estimate was founded and the testimony.

The committee will report here tomorrow a bill in which they carry out the recommendation of the President for further rescissions. It is in continuation of the program of rescission and retrenchment which we established in the last Congress.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will permit me to continue—there is evidently a stampede under way in both Houses to get away from the over-all figure to be taken up in the House on Thursday. The irrelevant speech of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], one of the outstanding leaders in both the committee and the House, was evidently carefully timed to hold in line sober-minded colleagues who do not want to imperil the national defense at this critical time. He assures them that they can vote to cut the Army and Navy and then put it back. The vote to cut is evidently merely tentative—and can be disregarded when the bill is taken up for consideration. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the chairman of the committee, in what is evidently good team play, backs up the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] by further reassuring defense-minded colleagues that the over-all figure is not binding. In other words, it is merely for the day. And tomorrow when the subject is really under consideration, no one is bound by what is done on the resolution reported by the Joint Budgetary Committee. Mr. Speaker, the situation is too obvious to require comment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the bill before us, we have here merely another bill amending the Reorganization Act. No one seems to be interested. There is no demand for time for debate. Apparently amendment of the Reorganization Act has become so commonplace as to cause no ripple of interest when another amendment is proposed.

As a matter of fact we are amending the Reorganization Act twice today; we just amended it a minute ago when we authorized another committee and we propose to amend it a second time by the bill now before the House. Any amendment of the Reorganization Act would, of course, be considered in the nature of an improvement.

Mr. Speaker, as no one else seems to object to changing the act I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may have two additional minutes in order that I may ask him a question.

Mr. CANNON. If I am to have more time, Mr. Speaker, I would like 5 minutes.

Mr. JENSEN. I so modify my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa that the gentleman from Missouri may proceed for five additional minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. What I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri—and he should be able to answer in half a minute—is for him to name the departments of government which have reduced their expenditures since the war which was not forced by Republican demand and Republican votes? I would like to have the gentleman please point out to the House and to the country the departments and agencies of government which have reduced their expenditures since the war which reduction was not forced by the Republican minority in the last Congress and the one before.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman is not insisting that the minority was in control of the last Congress. We cut millions of dollars from all the war activities, and it was done by an economy-minded Democratic Congress.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman knows that the Department of Labor, the Department of Commerce, the Department of the Interior, and no other regular department of government reduced their expenditures since the war.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman wish to convey the idea that these reductions were made in response to Republican demands?

Mr. JENSEN. I said that those that were made were made because the Republicans stood up and forced the majority party, the party in power at that time, to make the reductions.

Mr. CANNON. It is a peculiar idea that the minority runs the House. It was a Democratic Congress and all the retrenchments were made by a Democratic Congress. The Democratic Members of this Congress propose to continue that program of reduction on every item that comes before the House.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman has not named a single department.

Mr. CANNON. All departments.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman take a few moments to explain those rescission bills? Will he tell us how these $64,000,000,000 were saved?

Mr. CANNON. During the war the Committee on Appropriations reported in deficiency bills a provision which was adopted by the House and the Congress, under which the Budget Bureau was required to make monthly studies and reports on the status of all appropriations so that the minute the war ended we would be in position to recall authorizations and funds not expended or committed. The day announcement was made that Japan had surrendered, members of the Committee were called back and began work on these reports. The President, in cooperation with the committee, froze all funds provided for war purposes in order to hold them subject to the action of the committee. As rapidly as we could we went through department by department and reclaimed in successive bills, as developments permitted, authorizations and appropriations in excess of $64,000,000,000. It constitutes the greatest salvage, both in amounts and by percentages, ever made by any nation after any war in history. And it was handled more promptly and effectively than any rescission made in the conduct of any American war. It is a record never equaled before—and one which will never be equaled again—at least not in this Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. JENSEN Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] just mentioned the $57,000,000,000 we recovered last year from amounts previously provided. I have a letter which deals with that matter. This is a letter which was sent to me, as you will note, by the former chief clerk of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. John Pugh, in response to a demand which I had made last August requesting that the Treasury Department give us facts and figures as to the amount of dollars which were still lying around loose in the departments and bureaus of the Government. Here is Mr. Pugh's letter to me of September 16, 1946:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, D. C., September 16, 1946.

Hon. BEN F. JENSEN,
Member of Congress, Exira, Iowa.

DEAR MR. JENSEN: At last I have gotten the final figures from the Treasury Department giving unexpended and unobligated balances carried forward on June 30, 1945, and June 30, 1946.

As of June 30, 1945, the figures reflect the following:

Total balance carried forward	$85,547,620,000
Total obligations outstanding to be liquidated out of the foregoing amount	57,817,626,000
Available for obligation after June 30, 1945	23,366,681,000
Not available for obligation	4,363,313,000

As of June 30, 1946, the figures reflect the following:

Total balance carried forward	$33,401,337,000
Total obligations outstanding to be liquidated out of the foregoing amount	20,876,907,000
Available for obligation after June 30, 1946	8,874,831,000
Not available for obligation	3,649,600,000

The amount remaining available for obligation after June 30, 1946 ($8,874,831,000), includes $3,987,000,000 for the Veterans' Administration, $440,000,000 in the National Housing Agency, which is almost entirely veterans' housing funds, $548,000,000 for the Federal Works Agency, and approximately $1,000,000,000 each for the War and Navy Departments. The remainder is distributed in smaller amounts among a number of agencies. The unliquidated obligations on June 30, 1946 ($20,876,907,000), include $10,300,000,000 for the Navy, $5,800,000,000 for the Army, $1,170,000,000 for the War Shipping Administration, and lesser amounts distributed among a number of agencies.

Taking the figures for the two fiscal years and using appropriation, expenditure, and repeal figures, we get this picture:

Balance available for obligation and expenditure after June 30, 1945	$81,184,307,000
New appropriations available after June 30, 1945	66,856,191,000
New appropriations available after June 30, 1946	35,806,919,000
Total available for disbursement for the period July 1, 1945–June 30, 1947	183,847,417,000
Appropriations repealed	56,897,895,000
Balance	126,949,522,000
Expended, 1946	64,900,000,000
	62,049,000,000
Estimated expenditures, 1947	41,500,000,000
Leaving a facial surplus of	20,549,000,000

The facial surplus includes funds for liquidating long-time obligations which may not mature before the fiscal year 1948, it includes 1947 appropriations which will not be actually disbursed until after June 30, 1947, and there may be some salvage in it flowing from the cancellation of obligations on June 30, 1946 There will be another rescission bill at the next session when the matter of unexpended balances generally will be under review In the meantime, it should be borne in mind that all funds are appropriated for specific or general objects and may not be employed for other purposes than those for which appropriated.

I have discussed this balance with Mr. Lawton, of the Budget Bureau, and he tells me it is under study by the Bureau at this time, but that it may be some little while before the Bureau will conclude its analysis and reach a determination of approximately how much of it will not be required for disbursement.

With all good wishes,
Sincerely yours,

JOHN PUGH.

In the bill coming before the House tomorrow there are some rescissions, which are a drop in the bucket compared to $20,549,000,000. We will still have left to recover almost $20,000,000,000. It is true that a lot of that money was for commitments we had made for future use in prosecuting the war. Congress will be in session not only this year but next year, and so we have no right to leave almost $20,000,000,000 of the people's money lying around loose for the great spenders to spend at will. We should recover every dollar of this surplus and do it now, Mr. Speaker, and then as the departments of government need money Congress will provide the necessary funds, and no more.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech delivered by the national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars last Saturday in Boston.

WENDELL BERGE

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I learned with much regret from the press of yesterday that Wendell Berge will shortly leave the service of the Government. I know that most Members of the House on both sides of the aisle join me in this expression of regret that he is leaving the Department of Justice.

Wendell Berge is a man of fine capacities. He is a devoted public servant. As head of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice he has enforced the antitrust laws without fear or favor and in spite of inadequate legal tools and small appropriations has made much headway in breaking up cartels and monopolies and in preserving free enterprise. The Government can ill afford to lose the services of such able and patriotic men as Wendell Berge. As chairman of the Monopoly Subcommittee of the House Small Business Committee of the Seventy-ninth Congress, I had many occasions to witness the vigor and effectiveness with which Mr. Berge carried out his difficult assignment. He is truly a man of vision, character, and devotion to the best of our American principles. If he must leave the service of the Government, we, of course, wish him well in his private practice of the law.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 121) granting, in the case of income, estate, and gift taxes, deductions for contributions to the United Nations.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 23 (o) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the so-called "charitable contribution" deduction) is amended by striking out the word "or" at the end of paragraph (4) thereof, and by inserting at the end of paragraph (5) the word "or", and by adding after paragraph (5) a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(6) the United Nations, but only if such contributions or gifts (A) are to be used exclusively for the acquisition of a site in the city of New York for its headquarters, and (B) are made after December 1, 1946, and before December 2, 1947."

SEC. 2. Section 23 (q) of such code (relating to the so-called "charitable contribution" deduction) is amended by inserting at the end of paragraph (3) the word "or", and by adding after paragraph (3) a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(4) the United Nations, but only if such contributions or gifts (A) are to be used exclusively for the acquisition of a site in the city of New York for its headquarters, and (B) are made after December 1, 1946, and before December 2, 1947."

SEC. 3. Section 1004 (a) (2) of such code (relating to deductions for purposes of gift tax) is amended by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (E), and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by adding after subparagraph (E) a new subparagraph to read as follows:

"(F) the United Nations, but only if such gifts (i) are to be used exclusively for the acquisition of a site in the city of New York for its headquarters, and (ii) are made after December 1, 1946, and before December 2, 1947."

SEC. 4. Section 1004 (b) of such code (relating to deductions for purposes of gift tax) is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (6), and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by adding after paragraph (6) a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(7) the United Nations, but only if such gifts (A) are to be used exclusively for the acquisition of a site in the city of New York for its headquarters, and (B) are made after December 1, 1946, and before December 2, 1947."

SEC. 5. The first sentence of section 812 (d) and the first sentence of section 861 (a) (3) of such code (relating to transfers for public, etc., uses) are hereby amended by inserting after the words "to influence legislation" a comma and the words: "or to or for the use of the United Nations, but only if such bequests, legacies, devices, or transfers to or for the use of the United Nations are to be used exclusively for the acquisition of a site in the city of New York for its headquarters, and the death of the decedent occurred after December 1, 1946, and before December 2, 1947."

Mr. REED of New York (interrupting the reading of the joint resolution). Mr. Speaker, because this is simply a technical bill involving various phases of the tax question and does not relate to the merits except that the text has to be in this form in order to carry out the idea of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the remainder of the joint resolution be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FORAND. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is the resolution to take care of the gift by John D. Rockefeller?

Mr. REED of New York. That is it exactly. If a further explanation is desired, I will be glad to give it; if not, I will place a further explanation in the RECORD.

Mr. FORAND. I do not know that it will apply to anyone else, but this relates to the gift of a site for the headquarters of the United Nations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think we should have a short but clear explanation of this resolution. I am fully in favor of it, but I think the House would like to know whether this would cover anything except gifts to the United Nations.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that by unanimous vote of both Houses of Congress on December 10 and 11, 1945, the United Nations were invited to locate the seat of the organization within the United States.

The General Assembly of the United Nations decided in February 1946 to establish the headquarters of the United Nations in this country. Thus, the United Nations, in deciding to locate its headquarters here, did so at the invitation of the Congress of the United States.

The General Assembly during the second part of its first session, which concluded its deliberations last December 1946 found a site between Forty-second and Forty-eighth Streets on the East River, Manhattan Island, New York City, which, because of its accessibility to hotels and other facilities, seemed to be a suitable site, comprising some 18 acres.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller caused to be obtained from the owners of this property an option on the major part of the site for the benefit of the United Nations. The purchase price specified in the option being $8,500,000, Mr. Rockefeller offered to donate the purchase price of $8,500,000 to the United States on certain conditions.

First. The city of New York must donate that part of the site not covered by Mr. Rockefeller's option, together with the streets which traverse the site; also, the city to give to the United Nations the piers and bulkheads along the East River front between Forty-second and Forty-eighth Streets. The city of New York has agreed to all of these conditions.

Legislation has been introduced in the New York State Legislature to grant exemption from real-estate taxes on property owned by the United Nations. Hon. Thomas E. Dewey has so advised. The gift by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is contingent also on the condition that he be relieved of the Federal gift tax, estate tax, and income tax to the extent that these taxes may be involved in this transaction.

The gift tax involved will range from $3,700,000 to $4,800,000, depending upon whether any prior gifts have been made. Top gift rate is 57¾ percent. The estate-tax rates are one-fourth percent higher than the gift-tax rate. If the property were to be left to the United Nations by devise, the Federal estate tax would be $6,545,000, provided, however, the entire devise were to be subject to the top-bracket rate, which is 77 percent.

The resolution also allows such gifts to be deducted by the donor for Federal income-tax purposes, subject to the 15-percent limitation under the present law, a gift to the United States or a State for exclusively public purposes, or a gift for charitable or educational purposes, is allowed as a deduction in computing income, subject to the over-all limitation that the deduction for all such gifts combined cannot exceed 15 percent of the taxpayer's income for the taxable year in which the gift is made.

Under the resolution, gifts to the United Nations to facilitate the acquisition of a site in the city of New York are placed in the same category as public and charitable gifts, if made after December 1, 1946, and prior to December 2, 1947.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following correspondence in relation to this matter:

CITY OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
New York, N. Y., February 11, 1947.

Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON,
Chairman, House Ways and Means Committee, the Capitol, Washington, D. C

DEAR MR. KNUTSON: I confirm herewith my telegram to you of even date as per the enclosed copy.

I now enclose herewith a copy of a resolution adopted by the Board of Estimate of the City of New York on December 13, 1946. You will note that the Board of Estimate of the City of New York agrees to give the United Nations property in the beds of certain streets in the United Nations area, together with other property owned by private parties which will be condemned, and rights to various bulkheads and piers, and resolves that the board of estimate will do everything possible to carry out the provisions of the resolution.

I send this resolution to you to indicate the greater desire of the city of New York that everything possible be done to locate the United Nations in New York City.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM O'DWYER,
Mayor.

FEBRUARY 11, 1947.

Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON,
Chairman, House Ways and Means Committee, the Capitol, Washington, D. C.:

The city of New York urges passage of House Joint Resolution 120, to grant Federal tax exemption for gifts to United Nations. Location of its permanent headquarters in New York City is of great value to the whole United States. The city is cooperating with United Nations by supporting State legislation to grant its property exemption from real-estate taxes and assessments and to permit the city to acquire and deed to it additional land to complete the site. The New York City Board of Estimate adopted a resolution on December 13, 1946, of which I shall send you a copy, approving of such legislation. Exemption from Federal gift tax is essential to the gift of the New York site, and I hope it will be promptly enacted.

WILLIAM O'DWYER,
Mayor, City of New York.

Whereas an offer has been made to the United Nations by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., to donate the sum of $8,500,000 for the purpose of making available to the United Nations as a permanent headquarters a site within the Borough of Manhattan, located and bounded by Forty-second Street, Forty-eighth Street, First Avenue, and the East River, and shown upon the map annexed hereto.

Whereas such offer and the conditions upon which it has been made to the United Nations are set forth in a memorandum dated December 10, 1946, addressed to Dr. Eduardo Zuleta Angel, Chairman of Permanent Headquarters Committee, and signed by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., a copy of which is hereto annexed; and

Whereas such conditions require that the city of New York agree to give certain public streets traversing the area to the United Nations upon terms which will permit the United Nations to close such streets or otherwise restrict their use for its own purposes, and that the city agree to give to the United Nations certain other real property within the site area and certain rights to bulkheads and piers along the river frontage between Forty-second and Forty-eighth Streets, all as more particularly set forth in the said memorandum dated December 10, 1946; and

Whereas the United Nations has indicated its wish to accept the said offer if the city will agree to the conditions imposed; and

Whereas the members of the Board of Estimate of the City of New York are unanimously desirous of cooperating fully in accepting the conditions imposed relating to action by the city of New York in order to promote and make possible the acceptance of said offer to make available such permanent headquarters site to the United Nations in the city of New York: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Board of Estimate of the City of New York, in accordance with the conditions contained in said offer, agrees:

1. To give to the United Nations Forty-third, Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Streets between the east boundary of First Avenue and the west boundary of Franklin D. Roosevelt Drive upon terms which shall permit the United Nations to close any or all thereof to passage and otherwise to use them for its own purposes without restriction or limitation.

2. To acquire and give absolutely to the United Nations all the balance of that city block bounded by First Avenue, Forty-seventh Street, Forty-eighth Street, and Franklin D. Roosevelt Drive not covered by the firm offer of Webb & Knapp, Inc.

3. To give to the United Nations all rights to bulkheads and piers along the river frontage of the East River between Forty-second and Forty-eighth Streets; and be it further

Resolved, That the board of estimate will take all steps and adopt all measures necessary in the exercise of its powers, and will recommend action and legislation by other agencies, if necessary, in order to carry out the provisions herein set forth.

I may say that the reason we are seeking to pass this resolution today is that the options expire on February 28th and there is a great deal of detail to carry out in connection with the options and clearing the title of the property involved in the set-up.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want it made perfectly clear that this resolution applies only to this particular situation, and also that neither the State of New York nor the city of New York will have this property assessed for tax purposes.

Mr. REED of New York. That is correct.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. FORAND. It means, as it was explained to the committee, Mr. Speaker, that John D. Rockefeller would not make this donation or this gift of $8,500,000 if it were to be subject to the gift tax, which would amount to something like $3,000,000.

Mr. REED of New York. And if he were to attempt to pass this over by devise to the United Nations later on, the tax would be over $6,000,000, because, of course, it would be subject to the estate tax.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE MARITIME COMMISSION TO OPERATE VESSELS UNTIL JULY 1, 1947

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the resolution (H. J. Res. 114) to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to operate vessels until July 1, 1947, and I ask that the same may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that general debate be permitted not to exceed 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by myself and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER].

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law any temporary authority issued or to be issued by an appropriate Government agency to the United States Maritime Commission to provide service as a carrier by water may be valid for a period not extending beyond July 1, 1947.

SEC. 2. The paragraph under the head "United States Maritime Commission" in title I of the Third Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1946, is hereby amended by striking out "March 1, 1947" and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1947."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all points of order be waived on this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this measure comes before the House at the urgent request of the President and of the Maritime Commission and indeed of the entire maritime industry. I do not know of any measure that has come before our committees, in the 8 years I have served on the committee, in which there has been such unanimity of opinion and such a tremendous deluge of telegrams asking that this power for the Maritime Commission be extended from March 1 to the end of the present fiscal year.

I hope there will not be any objection to the passage of the resolution. The report from the committee is very clear. It comes to the floor with unanimous vote of the committee.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BONNER] is recognized.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution came before the committee. There were lengthy hearings. Everyone appearing before the committee was favorable to the passage of the resolution. There was no objection to it whatsoever. At the time the resolution was called up for final vote the vote was unanimous that it be reported favorably, and that the chairman of the committee call it up in the House as soon as possible.

At the time it was considered, I may say for the benefit of the House and those who are interested in maritime affairs, it was expressly stated that at the time this continuation expired it was hoped it would not be asked for again.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONNER. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. It was expressly stated to our committee by the Chairman of the Maritime Commission that they would not ask for an extension of the dry cargo operations after July 1. They may have to ask for an extension of time in the operation of tankers to take care of some of the naval requirements.

Mr. BONNER. In addition to that, we advised the Maritime Commission we would go into the tanker subject with them at a later date.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to concur in what has been said by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER] and the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY]. This legislation is necessary if we are going to continue our coastal and intercoastal shipping operations as well as some of our offshore operations. The Maritime Commission needs the time between now and July 1 to try to make some kind of adjustment in the rates as they now affect coastal and intercoastal operations. At the present time these operations are being conducted at a loss, while the offshore operations are bringing a substantial profit. The total over-all profit from Government shipping operations is about $2,000,000 a month.

This resolution does not involve the appropriation of any funds. It is imperative to the continuance of our present shipping operations. I heartily recommend its immediate enactment.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert, as a part of my remarks on House Joint Resolution 121, certain communications from State and city officials with reference to the gift.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VAIL] is recognized for 10 minutes.

RUSSIA AND THE BALTIC PROVINCES

Mr. VAIL. Mr. Speaker, the United Nations Declaration of January 1, 1942, incorporating the principles of the Atlantic Charter, set forth the aims and purposes of World War II in the following words:

Complete victory over our enemies is essential to defend life, liberty, independence, and religious freedom, and to preserve human rights and justice in our own lands as well as in other lands.

The Atlantic Charter states:

Article I:

Our countries seek no aggrandizement, territorial or other:

Article II:

We desire to see no territorial changes that do not accord with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned.

Article III:

We respect the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live; and we wish to see sovereign rights and self-government restored to those who have been forcibly deprived of them.

Article VI:

After the final destruction of the Nazi tyranny, we hope to see established a peace which will afford to all nations the means of dwelling in safety within their own boundaries, and which will afford assurance that all the men in all the lands may live out their lives in freedom from fear and want.

The foregoing are the principles for which we expended and still are spending billions of dollars; for which we drafted and dispatched to all fronts over 11,000,000 men and women; for which we suffered over 1,000,000 casualties, and lost over 300,000 lives.

True, we destroyed Hitler, Mussolini, and Tojo. But was our lofty aim achieved? We fought and bled against aggression and tyranny—for liberty and independence for all nations, for human rights and justice in our own land as well as in other lands. Have we attained that? We have defeated three aggressors but we have not defeated aggression and tyranny. Acts of aggression and tyranny have been and are being committed and practiced by our ally and a signatory of the United Nations Declaration and Charter—Soviet Russia. A most flagrant violation of treaties and human rights was committed by Russia in the act of aggression against Lithuania and the other two Baltic states. This act was condemned by the Lithuanian Nation and by our Department of State on July 23, 1940. The statement of the State Department reads as follows:

During these past few days the devicus processes whereunder the political independence and territorial integrity of the three small Baltic Republics—Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania—were to be deliberately annihilated by one of their more powerful neighbors have been rapidly drawing to a conclusion. * * *.

The people of the United States are opposed to predatory activities, no matter whether they are carried on by the use of force or by threat of force. * * * They are likewise opposed to any form of intervention on the part of one state, however powerful, in the domestic concerns of any sovereign state, however weak. The United States will continue to stand by these principles.

This statement, it goes without saying, is in complete accord with the stand of the people of the United States. In conformity therewith we have not recognized and do not recognize the illegal and usurpatory acts of Russia in the Baltic states. But is that enough? Not if we are to effectuate our high objectives. Our President and Secretary of State should state plainly and unequivocally that Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia are victims of aggression and injustice, and that these acts are incompatible with the war aims and pledges, and contrary to the principles of the United Nations Charter, and that the United States will not approve nor justify the act which is now legally—by the Nuremberg Court decision—determined as "the supreme international crime."

Lithuania was a progressive and peace-loving and peace-living country until Hitler and Stalin decided in 1939 to dismember and enslave her in violation of international treaties, agreements, and assurances. The Lithuanian-Soviet Russian Peace Treaty of July 12, 1920, explicitly provided that Soviet Russia recognized a free and independent Lithuania within its ethnographic boundaries, and renounced for all time sovereign rights over the Lithuanian people and their territory.

The Lithuanian-Soviet nonaggression pact of September 28, 1926, provided that both countries mutually undertake "to respect in all circumstances the sovereignty and territorial integrity and inviolability of each other." Each of the two contracting parties agreed to refrain from any aggressive action whatsoever against the other party. Lithuania fulfilled the terms of the treaty implicitly—Soviet Russia violated it by invading and occupying Lithuania in June of 1940, and still holds and rules it with tyrannical brutality.

The case of Lithuania is identical with that of Austria and Czechoslovakia under Hitler Germany's occupation and regime. The mode of occupation and hegemony corresponds in every detail.

Austria was the first victim of Hitler's aggression; Lithuania is the first victim of Stalin's aggression. Austria's independence is being restored, Lithuania's independence is undetermined. Why so? Crime is a crime regardless of by whom it is committed.

The aggression against Austria and Czechoslovakia was described by the Nuremberg tribunal as "a premeditated aggressive step in furthering the plan to wage aggressive wars against other countries." The act of Russia versus Lithuania is identical with that of Germany versus Austria and Czechoslovakia with the exception that, in addition to violation of international treaties, agreements, and assurances, there was a conspiracy made by and between Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia on August 23 and September 29, 1939. The texts of those agreements read thusly:

1. In the case of a politico-territorial change in the territories belonging to the Baltic states—Finland, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania—the northern frontier of Lithuania shall form also the demarcation of the spheres of interest between Germany and the U. S. S. R.

For the German Government, J. Ribbentrop.

On behalf of the Government of the U. S. S. R., V. Molotov.

Moscow, 23 August 1939.

Second additional secret protocol.

Point 1 of the secret additional protocol, signed on August 23, 1939, is hereby modified to the effect that the territory of the Lithuanian State becomes part of the sphere of interest of the U. S. S. R. while the Province of Lublin and parts of the Province of Warsaw become part of the sphere of interest of Germany. As soon as the Government of the U. S. S. R. takes special measures on Lithuanian territory for the purpose of safeguarding its interests, the present German-Lithuanian frontier shall be rectified for the purpose of a natural and simple delimitation of the frontier by giving to Germany the Lithuanian territory southwest of the line drawn on the appended map.

Moscow, September 28, 1939.

For the German Government, J. Ribbentrop.

On behalf of the Government of the U. S. S. R., V. Molotov.

Let us rest the criminal case here.

Now, I deem it appropriate to call your attention, gentlemen, to the fact that yesterday, Sunday, February 16, was the anniversary of the independence day of Lithuania, and that today Americans of Lithuanian descent are commemorating that date throughout the United States. Lithuanians in Lithuania, however, will not be privileged to celebrate their "Fourth of July." Such a celebration in Lithuania would mean arrest, imprisonment, and deportation to Siberia or some other remote place in Russia. It is alleged that over 300,000 Lithuanians have already been deported to Soviet Russia. A large number of the deportees have already died in exile because of malnutrition, exposure, and subjection to slave labor. About 100,000 Lithuanians were forced to flee from Lithuania into western Europe—about 40,000 of them are in the American zone in Germany. They dare not return to their homeland because of the foreign occupation and tyranny there.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is this the thing that we fought for? Can you or I, or anyone else, call it freedom and the assurance of dwelling in safety and freedom, as provided by the Atlantic Charter, within their own boundaries? Or can you call it the promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all human persons and nations, large and small, as provided in the United Nations Charter? It is a mockery of the first degree. It is a blot upon Christian civilization and the principle of justice. It is a blot upon international law and treaty obligations. It is the very thing that we condemned and fought against.

The Soviet scourge and injustice must be called to the attention of the peace-loving world. In the words of the editor of the magazine Destiny:

> We cannot remain silent while the terrible scourge of Soviet oppression afflicts helpless people. While Great Britain and the United States continue their policy of appeasement in an endeavor to placate Russia, we must protest or else by our own silence become a partner in the crimes being committed. Unless Great Britain and the United States rise in righteous indignation and demand justice and freedom for those who are oppressed, the wrath of Almighty God will rest upon our people.

Indeed, if we do not condemn lawlessness by every peaceable means at our command, and if we continue condoning international crimes we shall become accomplices to those crimes, and will lose honor and prestige among peace-loving and peace-living nations, and among upright and law-respecting peoples.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

THE OFFICE OF INTERNATIONAL INFORMATION AND CULTURAL AFFAIRS

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the privilege of working closely with OWI in their broadcasts in psychological warfare during most of World War II. Prior to my participation in that program I made a very careful study of available evidence regarding their purpose and method of operation. From this study I was convinced of the worthiness of their contribution to our war program.

During the late war—and even before the first enemy bomb fell at Pearl Harbor—I was firmly convinced of the important place psychological warfare must occupy in any emergency calling for all-out national defense. My experience throughout the war supported further my conviction of the importance of the program carried out by OWI in this field.

At the end of the shooting war, I learned that a similar activity was planned as a psychological peace-fare and that this program was to be carried out by the State Department in much the same way that the psychological warfare had been carried out by OWI. It has always been a matter of personal ethics to me to examine all available evidence of what an operating agency or department of this Government is actually doing before expressing my considered opinion about such program and whether or not it should receive my support, consequently I withheld any statement of approval or disapproval of the new venture by the State Department into this field as a peacetime measure. I had an open mind on this subject when, during the fall of 1946, as a member of a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, I made a tour of certain areas in the Far East which are vital to the defense of this Nation. My experiences during that tour have brought me to the conclusion that psychological peace-fare is as necessary in times of peace—to maintain that peace—as is psychological warfare in times of war, to bring a more speedy end to hostilities.

I know you will be interested in my observations during an extended trip that I made with the Committee on Military Affairs into Japan, China, the Philippines, Siam, and Australia last fall. On that trip I had an opportunity to observe the fine job our State Department representatives are doing in meeting the inroads of communism. Our State Department representatives had only a very small personnel and a very depleted arsenal of information at hand but nevertheless they were doing an outstanding job. I met and talked with these men and women from China to Sydney and I can conservatively report that they are as fine in character and as efficient in their devotion to their manifold duties as any group within the Government today.

I was especially interested in meeting two Iowans engaged in this service whom I have known exceptionally well—Miss Dorothy Ward and Mr. Robert Burlingame. Dorothy Ward, now busily at work in the Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs' Library, at Bangkok, Siam, is the daughter of an old friend and associate of mine at the University of Iowa. Mr. Burlingame, now OIC's chief public-affairs officer in Australia, got his start as a reporter on the Eldora (Iowa) Herald-Ledger and was later executive secretary of the Iowa Territorial Centennial Commission. But it is as a welcome voice heard in thousands of Iowa homes—as the ace broadcaster of the Central Broadcasting Co. in Des Moines—that I best remember "Bob." These are capable, alert Federal employees—and their greatest asset is their unquestioned loyalty to our country.

In addition to my long experience with and high appraisal of OWI in their wartime program, the observations I made during my trip through the Orient in August and September 1946, and the meeting of these highly qualified representatives of America, including especially such worthy representatives as Miss Dorothy Ward and Robert Burlingame, have convinced me that our State Department is making a very worthy and worth-while contribution to America's welfare in their new undertaking known as the Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, in whom we live, move, and have our being, so fill us with holy confidence that every shaft of temptation and evil shall be splintered on the shield of good upright living. When the sea of life is storm-wrought and tempestuous, we would see Thee coming through the conflict and hear Thy voice saying, "Peace, be still."

Blessed Lord, be with every household across our broad land; may every child be held as a gift from God and be brought up in the way of Thy commandments. O grant unto parents that they may never know the anguish which biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder. In these sadly disordered times, O God, so full of folly and irreverence, come and rule over our homes, and may understanding and wise discipline be the triumph of our victories. In the blessed Saviour's name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 1353. An act to amend the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 1030. An act to continue in effect certain war excise tax rates, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MILLIKIN, Mr. TAFT, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. GEORGE, and Mr. BARKLEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 568. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with other American countries in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances, and in one to include a radio address, in another a bill he introduced today, and in the third a further item.

Mr. KEARNEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. KILBURN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two editorials on the St. Lawrence seaway.

WAR EXCISE TAX RATES

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 1030) to continue in effect certain war excise tax rates, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. KNUTSON, REED of New York, GEARHART, DOUGHTON, and DINGELL.

SHORTAGE OF BOXCARS

Mr. McMILLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire again to bring to the attention of the Members of the House the critical condition of the railroad transportation situation and particularly the need of boxcars in the Corn Belt.

My district in central Illinois is part of the so-called bread basket of the Nation, where millions of bushels of corn cannot be marketed because of the lack of cars—the corn is sorely needed by the processor for the manufacture of feeds and corn products, not only for this country but for commitments to the starving people abroad.

I am receiving many letters and telegrams from constituents.

The purpose of my remarks is to urge the Office of Defense Transportation to increase its efforts to correct this situation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LECOMPTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a set of resolutions adopted by the Ottumwa (Iowa) Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. MANASCO asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

SAFEGUARDING ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 105, Rept. No. 40), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 4) to safeguard the admission of evidence in certain cases. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

NEWSPRINT INVESTIGATION

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 58, Rept. No. 41), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of five Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized to conduct a study and investigation of all matters related to the need for adequate supplies, for use in the United States (including use in time of war), of newsprint, printing and wrapping paper, paper products, paper pulp and pulpwood, and of all matters related to means by which adequate supplies thereof may be produced or secured, with particular reference to—

(1) the short-range and long-range possibilities of increased production thereof in the continental United States (including Alaska);

(2) the short-range and long-range prospects of securing increased supplies thereof from Canada and other sources outside the United States; and

(3) the extent to which agencies or officers of the United States may be able to assist in furthering the objective of securing increased production and supplies thereof.

The committee may from time to time submit to the House such preliminary reports as it deems advisable; and as soon as practicable during the present Congress shall submit to the House its final report on the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable. Any report submitted when the House is not in session shall be filed with the Clerk of the House.

For the purpose of carrying out this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the continental United States (including Alaska) or Canada, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

ESTABLISHING CEILING FOR EXPENDITURES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1948

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 103, Rept. No. 42), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

That after general debate, which shall be confined to the concurrent resolution, and shall continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] the concurrent resolution shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to said concurrent resolution. At the conclusion of the consideration of the concurrent resolution the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the concurrent resolution to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

OCEAN TRANSPORTATION SERVICE TO AND FROM ALASKA

Mr. BRADLEY of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 122, to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to make provision for certain ocean transportation service to and from Alaska until July 1, 1948, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. BRADLEY of California. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. That committee has directed me to make a recommendation for the passage of House Joint Resolution 122 since current legislation will expire on the 28th of February 1947.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would like to say I am heartily in favor of the proposed resolution.

Mr. Speaker, the pending bill, House Joint Resolution 122, is cosponsored by myself and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER]. The resolution authorizes the Maritime Commission to provide interim ocean transportation service to and from Alaska until July 1, 1948. It represents a careful study by a special subcommittee of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, commencing in May of last year. In order to give the Members of the House a better understanding of the urgent need for this legislation, I should like to discuss very briefly the history of this problem.

The people of the Territory of Alaska are completely dependent upon a life line of ships operating between the Pacific Northwest and the Territory, both to supply them with the necessities of life and to enable their products to be brought to market. Prior to the war this service was principally provided by three common carriers. During the war, however, all of their ships were requisitioned by the Government and all operations in the Alaska trades were handled by the War Shipping Administration and the Maritime Commission for the Government's account.

During these years of Government operation, costs have greatly risen. As a result of this rise in costs, Government operations have been conducted at a substantial loss. For example, I understand that the operating loss for the year 1946 will approximate $4,000,000. Because of this rise in costs and because of the unfortunate recent financial experiences of the Government in this trade, private operators are loath to resume service to and from the Territory.

Conceivably, Government operation at a loss could be continued in order to insure the development of Alaska. But I think that most of us are convinced of the desirability of getting the Government out of the shipping business and returning ship operations to private hands. The Alaska situation, however, is complicated by the fact that private capital is unwilling to assume the necessary risks at this time because of their inability to foresee profitable operations. It is further complicated by the fact that the present authority of the Maritime Commission to operate ships in the Alaska trade expires on February 28, 1947. Even if the Maritime Commission's authority is extended as provided by House Joint Resolution 114, such authority will only continue until June 30, 1947. As a result, some action must now be taken by the Congress to provide a solution for this most difficult Alaska problem.

The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee has had this problem under consideration for over 6 months. Despite this, we are unable to suggest a permanent long-range legislative policy at this time for the Alaska trades. The reason for this is that until we have had some operating experiences under present conditions, it is impossible to determine what service is required and what revenues are required to continue this service. Our committee, therefore, has submitted in House Joint Resolution 122 and House Joint Resolution 123 only an interim solution to the problem. But this solution is one which will perform the two necessary functions of, first, insuring the continuance of service to Alaska and, second, of providing a year's experience under present conditions to serve as a basis for permanent legislative policy.

The plan which has been developed in House Joint Resolution 122 is a simple one. That resolution authorizes the Maritime Commission to enter into contracts with the private operators experienced in this trade, whereby the latter agree to operate such service as the Commission may deem necessary. All possible losses of such operation are borne by the operators. In order to permit them to operate without fear of too great losses, however, the Commission is authorized to charter to them at nominal rates of hire the vessels to be used in this trade. In addition, the Commission is authorized to provide the necessary marine insurance. To protect the Government and the people of Alaska from these operators' making any large profits, however, this resolution further provides that these operators shall receive, as their profit, a maximum of 10 percent of their capital necessarily employed in these trades. After all other expenses of operation have been met, the Maritime Commission would then recover a minimum of 75 percent of the excess, with a maximum additional 25 percent going to the operators.

It seems to me that this legislation is a highly workable solution of an extremely difficult problem. It solves the impasse resulting from the people of Alaska being unable to pay higher freight rates and the operators of vessels in the Alaska trades being unable to operate under the present rate structure. This solution will permit continued operation with a minimum increase in rates. The assistance which the Government furnishes to these operators will result in no out-of-pocket expenses, as the ships which are to be chartered at nominal rates are those already owned by the Government, and which would otherwise be placed in our laid-up fleet. Should the operation be a profitable one, the Government is assured of the recovery of the major portion of all such profits.

Coming from the Pacific Northwest I am well aware of the problems faced by our people of our great Territory to the north. I feel that by enacting this resolution Congress will not only be doing a great service to them, but a greater service to our Nation. It will be remembered that Alaska is our first line of defense. Only if it is adequately developed can it constitute a barrier against invasion from the north. And only if adequate water-borne commerce to and from that Territory is provided, can this development proceed. Accordingly, I strongly urge enactment of this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to provide essential water transportation service for the Territory of Alaska pending the determination of long-range policy with respect to such transportation, the United States Maritime Commission is authorized to enter into appropriate contracts, charters, and other arrangements with American-citizen operators deemed by the Commission to be qualified to supply such service until July 1, 1948. Such contracts or arrangements shall include provisions for making available to such operators Government-owned vessels under the control or jurisdiction of the United States Maritime Commission for operation during the period ending June 30, 1948. Such provisions may include charter hire at a nominal rate or rates, with necessary marine insurance to be provided by the Commission as to ships made available by the Commission and other ships operated by such operators in the Alaska service under the contracts or arrangements with the Commission. Such provisions may likewise include requirements that the operators shall agree to operate such ships in a manner as determined by the Commission to secure the most economical transportation for the Alaska service. The contracts or other arrangements shall include appropriate provisions for allocation of receipts from the operations of such ships. Such contracts or arrangements shall include, among such other requirements as the Commission may deem appropriate, provision for the application of such receipts to meet the operating costs and overhead expenses of the operator as approved by the Commission and an amount equal to the charter hire paid by the Commission for the use of the privately owned vessels, and amounts in excess thereof to become the property of the operators in amounts not in excess of 10 percent (before taxes) on the value of the assets (other than vessels) contributed to the venture by the operator as determined by the Commission for the purposes hereof and not otherwise. Any amount in excess of such 10 percent shall be applied first to meet the insurance expenses of the Commission, and any balance shall be applied or distributed as may be provided by the terms of the contracts or arrangements, but in no event shall the Commission receive less than 75 percent of such balance, as additional charter hire.

SEC. 2. The Commission shall report to the Congress at intervals of not greater than 90 days all contracts, charters, and other arrangements entered into pursuant to this act and the details and course of all operations which have been conducted thereunder.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SESSION OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may sit during the session of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST GERHART EISLER

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Un-American Activities, I present a privileged report, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Un-American Activities as created and authorized by the House of Representatives through the enactment of Public Law No. 601, section 121, subsection Q (2), caused to be issued a subpena to Gerhart Eisler, of 48–46 Forty-seventh Street, Borough of Queens, New York City, N. Y. The said subpena directed Gerhart Eisler to be and appear before the said Committee on Un-American Activities on February 6, 1947, and then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to the said committee; the subpena being set forth in words and figures as follows:

"By authority of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, to the Sergeant at Arms, or his special messenger: You are hereby commanded to summon Gerhart Eisler, 48–46 Forty-seventh Street, Borough of Queens, New York, N. Y., to be and appear before the Un-American Activities Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, of which the Honorable J. PARNELL THOMAS is chairman, in their chamber in the city of Washington, on February 6, 1947, in room 226, Old House Office Building, at the hour of 10 a. m., then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee; and he is not to depart without leave of said committee. Herein fail not, and make return of this summons.

"Witness my hand and the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States, at the city of Washington, this 23d day of January 1947.

"J. PARNELL THOMAS, Chairman.

"Attest:

"JOHN ANDREWS, Clerk."

The said subpena was duly served, as appears by the return made thereon by Louis J. Russell, investigator of the Committee on Un-American Activities, who was duly authorized to serve the said subpena, the return of the service by the said Louis J. Russell being endorsed thereon, which is set forth in words and figures as follows:

"Subpena for Gerhart Eisler, 48–46 Forty-seventh Street, Borough of Queens, New York City, N. Y., to appear before the committee on the 6th day of February 1947, at 10 a. m. Served the within named on January 24, 1947, at 8:30 a. m., at his residence by Louis J. Russell."

The said Gerhart Eisler, pursuant to said subpena and in compliance therewith, appeared before the said committee to give such testimony as required under and by virtue of Public Law No. 601, section 121, subsection Q (2). The said Gerhart Eisler, after making his appearance in the chambers of the said committee, refused to be sworn by the chairman of the said committee; and as the result of the said Gerhart Eisler's refusal to be sworn as a witness before the committee, your committee was prevented from receiving testimony and information concerning a matter of inquiry committed to said committee in accordance with the terms of the subpena served upon the said Gerhart Eisler. The record of the proceedings before the committee on Thursday, February 6, 1947, during which the said Gerhart Eisler refused to be sworn as a witness and to give testimony is set forth as follows:

"The committee met on Thursday, February 6, 1947, at 10 a. m., the Honorable J. PARNELL THOMAS, chairman, presiding. All members of the committee were present; and in addition thereto there was present Robert E. Stripling, chief investigator and examiner for the said committee, and Louis J. Russell, investigator.

"The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order. Mr. Stripling, do you have all of your witnesses here?

"Mr. STRIPLING. Mr. Chairman, there are two witnesses who did not respond, Mr. Samuel Liptzin and Mr. Leon Josephson. Both have sent telegrams to the committee. I think that the telegrams should be read into the record and that the committee should take some action concerning the matter, for the reason that these are two very necessary witnesses.

* * * * *

"The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Stripling, call your first witness.

"Mr. STRIPLING. Mr. Gerhart Eisler, take the stand.

"Mr. EISLER. I am not going to take the stand.

"Mr. STRIPLING. Do you have counsel with you?

"Mr. EISLER. Yes.

"Mr. STRIPLING. I suggest that the witness be permitted counsel.

"The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Eisler, will you raise your right hand?

"Mr. EISLER. No. Before I take the oath——

"Mr. STRIPLING. Mr. Chairman——

"Mr. EISLER. I have the floor now.

"Mr. STRIPLING. I think, Mr. Chairman, you should make your preliminary remarks at this time, before Mr. Eisler makes any statement.

"The CHAIRMAN. Sit down, Mr. Eisler.

"Mr. Eisler, you are here before the Committee on Un-American Activities in response to a subpena served on you January 25, 1947, which summoned you to appear before this committee this morning. This committee's authority, which is derived from Public Law 601, is authorized to investigate:

"(1) The extent, character, and objects of un-American propaganda activities in the United States;

"(2) The diffusion within the United States of subversive and un-American propaganda that is instigated from foreign countries or of a domestic origin and attacks the principle of the form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution; and

"(3) All other questions in relation thereto * * *.

"The committee considers the Communist Party of the United States to be a subversive organization, and the testimony or activities of any individual connected with the Communist Party of the United States is considered to be the purview of this committee's authority.

"There has been considerable testimony before the Special Committee on Un-American Activities and this committee, its successor, which links you with the activities of the Communst Party.

"The questions which will be asked you this morning will be aimed at determining the facts; and it is, therefore, requested that your answers be responsive and direct. It is not the policy of this committee to permit witnesses to make a statement. After you have completed your testimony, if you desire to make a statement, the committee will permit you to put it in the record at the conclusion of your testimony.

"Now, Mr. Eisler, you will be sworn in. Raise your right hand.

"Mr. EISLER. No

"The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Eisler, in the first place, you want to remember that you are a guest of this Nation.

"Mr. EISLER. I am not treated as a guest.

"The CHAIRMAN. This committee——

"Mr. EISLER. I am a political prisoner in the United States.

"The CHAIRMAN. Just a minute. Will you please be sworn in?

"Mr. EISLER. You will not swear me in before you hear a few remarks.

"The CHAIRMAN. No; there will be no remarks.

"Mr. EISLER. Then there will be no hearing from me.

"The CHAIRMAN. You refuse to be sworn in? Do you refuse to be sworn in Mr. Eisler?

"Mr. EISLER. I am ready to answer all questions, to tell my side.

"The CHAIRMAN. That is not the question. Do you refuse to be sworn in? All right.

"Mr. EISLER. I am ready to answer all questions.

"The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Stripling, call the next witness. The committee will come to order, please. We have strived to put on a witness, Mr. Gerhart Eisler. Mr. Eisler refused to be sworn in.

"Mr. EISLER. I did not refuse to be sworn.

"The CHAIRMAN. What is the pleasure of the committee?

"Mr. STRIPLING. Mr. Chairman, I think that the witness should be silent, or take the stand or be removed from the room, one or the other, until this matter is determined.

"Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, suppose you ask him again whether he refuses to be sworn.

"Mr. RANKIN. Not 'sworn in,' but to be sworn.

"The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Eisler, do you refuse again, to be sworn?

"Mr. EISLER. I have never refused to be sworn in. I came here as a political prisoner. I want to make a few remarks, only 3 minutes, before I be sworn in, and answer your questions, and make my statement. It is 3 minutes.

"The CHAIRMAN. I said that I would permit you to make your statement when the committee was through asking questions. After the committee is through asking questions, and your remarks are pertinent to the investigation, why, it will be agreeable to the committee. But first you have to be sworn.

"Mr. EISLER. That is where you are mistaken. I have to do nothing. A political prisoner has to do nothing.

"The CHAIRMAN. Then you refuse to be sworn?

"Mr. EISLER. I do not refuse to be sworn. I want only 3 minutes. Three minutes to make a statement.

"The CHAIRMAN. We will give you those 3 minutes when you are sworn.

"Mr. EISLER. I want to speak before I am sworn.

"Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I make the motion that the witness be cited for contempt.

"Mr. RANKIN. I second the motion.

"The CHAIRMAN. Any discussion? All in favor signify by saying 'aye.' Motion carried. The witness will be cited for contempt.

"Mr. STRIPLING. Mr. Chairman, before the witness leaves I would like to know in whose custody he leaves.

"The CHAIRMAN. Who brought the witness?

"Mr. STRIPLING. These gentlemen. Will you give your name?

"Mr. GRENNMAN. Steve Grennman.

"Mr. STRIPLING. And what is your position?

"Mr. GRENNMAN. Security officer, Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service.

"Mr. STRIPLING. And your name?

"Mr. BROSMAN. R. J. Brosman.

"Mr. STRIPLING. Your position?

"Mr. BROSMAN. Security officer, Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service.

"Mr. STRIPLING. Did you bring Gerhart Eisler to the committee?

"Mr. GRENNMAN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. STRIPLING. Is he now in your custody?

"Mr. GRENNMAN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. STRIPLING. Can you tell the committee where he will be taken?

"Mr. GRENNMAN. To the county jail in Washington.

"Mr. STRIPLING. Do you know where he will go from the county jail?

"Mr. GRENNMAN. Back to Ellis Island, I believe.

Miss CAROL KING. May I be heard?

"The CHAIRMAN. Take the witness out.

"Mr. Stripling, put on your next witness."

Because of the foregoing, the said Committee on Un-American Activities has been deprived of the right to receive the sworn testimony of the said Gerhart Eisler relative to the subject matter which under Public Law No. 601, section 121, subsection Q (2), the said committee was instructed to investigate, and the willful and deliberate refusal of the witness to be sworn and to testify as hereinbefore set forth is a violation of the subpena under which the witness had previously appeared and his willful refusal to be sworn and to testify deprived your committee of necessary and pertinent testimony and places the said witness in contempt of the House of Representatives of the United States.

"HOUSE RESOLUTION

"Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives certify the report of the Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives as to the willful and deliberate refusal of Gerhart Eisler to be sworn and to testify before the said Committee on Un-American Activities, together with all of the facts in connection therewith, under seal of the House of Representatives, to the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia to the end that the said Gerhart Eisler may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law."

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 104) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives certify the report of the Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives as to the willful and deliberate refusal of Gerhart Eisler to be sworn and to testify before the said Committee on Un-American Activities, together with all of the facts in connection therewith, under seal of the House of Representatives, to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia to the end that the said Gerhart Eisler may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. NIXON].

Mr. NIXON. Mr. Speaker, on February 6, when the Committee on Un-American Activities opened its session at 10 o'clock, it had by previous investigation, tied together the loose ends of one chapter of a foreign-directed conspiracy whose aim and purpose was to undermine and destroy the Government of the United States. The principal character of this conspiracy was Gerhart Eisler, alias Berger, alias Brown, alias Gerhart, alias Edwards, alias Liptzin, alias Eisman, a seasoned agent of the Communist International, who had been shuttling back and forth between Moscow and the United States from as early as 1933, to direct and master mind the political and espionage activities of the Communist Party in the United States.

When Eisler appeared before the committee, he did not come as a grateful political refugee who had enjoyed a safe haven in this country from war-ravaged Europe during the period of World War II; he came instead as an arrogant, defiant enemy of that government and promptly manifested his disrespect by refusing even to be sworn before the committee. His manner and attitude was one of utter contempt.

Two other conspirators and comrades of Eisler, Leon Josephson and Samuel Liptzin, who were subpenaed to appear, did not appear; Josephson contended by telegram that 2 days was not sufficient notice for him to come from New York to Washington, and Samuel Liptzin informed the committee by telegram that he could not appear because he was at the bedside of one very dear to him. It is no wonder that Eisler refused to talk and Josephson and Liptzin did not respond to the subpenaes, because the committee, through its own investigators, had obtained documentary evidence which linked these three individuals with several very serious violations of Federal statute.

The committee also had present qualified witnesses who were prepared to unmask the subversive activities of Eisler and his coconspirators.

I think I am safe in announcing to the House that the committee will deal with Mr. Josephson and Mr. Liptzin at a very early date, and that subsequent hearings by the committee will reveal the detailed operations of Gerhart Eisler. There are a number of witnesses scheduled to be heard by the committee on this case.

I should like to read at this time from a report by J. Edgar Hoover on the activities of Gerhart Eisler:

It is of particular significance to note that through the investigation of Gerhart Eisler it has been ascertained that he is identical with an individual previously known as Edwards, who, from approximately 1933 until approximately 1938, was the representative of the Communist International to the Communist Party, U. S. A., by virtue of which position he was responsible for and instrumental in the determination of American Communist policy and the control and the direction of American Communist operations. * * *

Eisler's primary contacts since his arrival in the United States have been important Communist functionaries, many of whom are strongly suspected of involvement in Soviet espionage operations. * * *

The entire pattern of Eisler's activities since his arrival in June 1941, as previously summarized, is one of apparent evasion and duplicity coupled with clandestine but no less important activity. He has been in constant contact with important Communist functionaries and has been frequently in touch with individuals identified as or strongly suspected as being Communist functionaries identified as or strongly suspected as being Soviet espionage agents. In addition, as noted in greater detail above, Eisler was for many years an important representative of the Comintern. During a recent interview, Gerhart Eisler unequivocally denied his activities as outlined above, which denials obviously were false and unfounded.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the House some of the facts concerning Eisler. He was born in Leipzig, Germany, February 20, 1897. He started his Communist career in Austria when he helped organize the Communist Party in that country. He then transferred his activities to Germany and shortly thereafter was transferred to Moscow, where he was trained to be an agent of the Communist International, or a "C. I. Rep.," as they are referred to in Communist Party jargon. At the Lenin School in Moscow, he was schooled in revolutionary tactics, in espionage, sabotage, and other methods and tactics which serve the Communist revolutionary program. He was assigned to the American Commission of the Comintern to prepare himself for his future duties in America.

His first assignment as a Comintern agent was in China in 1928, and then in 1933 he was sent to the United States to take over. From 1933 until the late thirties, he was the mysterious but supreme authority on Communist activities in the United States. Because his activities were carried on secretly, it was necessary that he use many aliases. It was also necessary that he return to Moscow at regular intervals to get the latest party line and instructions, and so in 1934, when he needed a passport to return to Moscow, he obtained one through the application which I hold here in my hand. This application has been reproduced and is contained in the committee's hearings, and I suggest that every Member, at his convenience, study it, because it will give you an insight into the fraud and intrigue which is employed by the Communist agents to carry on their work.

Now the handwriting on this application, according to the questioned documents experts of the Treasury Department, is that of Leon Josephson; the name on this application is that of Samuel Liptzin; the picture on this application is that of Gerhart Eisler; the signature of the identifying witness, Bernard A. Hirschfield, is also in the handwriting of Leon Josephson. In fact so far as the committee has been able to determine, there is no such person as Bernard A. Hirschfield. The passport was issued to Eisler in the name of Samuel Liptzin on August 31, 1934. He sailed on the Berengaria in 1935 for Moscow on passage which was paid for by the Communist Party of the United States.

He returned to the United States and used this passport again in 1936, when he again went to Moscow. Bear in mind, however, that the passport application made no reference to his going to Russia. Also bear in mind that while Eisler was the keyman on Communist affairs in the United States, he was known only to the top functionaries. The committee produced a number of other documents relating to Eisler's activities during the thirties, and heard considerable testimony to the effect that he was operating in the United States during the thirties. This becomes important when you learn that on June 14, 1941, when Eisler arrived at Ellis Island as a so-called political refugee from France, he swore before a special board of inquiry at Ellis Island that he had never been to the United States before. He swore that he had never been married, although the facts show him to have been married twice before he entered the United States.

When that board asked him the following question "Are you now or have you ever been a member of any Communist organization?" his answer was "No." When he was asked, "Were you ever sympathetic to the Communist cause?" his answer was "No." He even denied under oath that he had a sister, even though that sister was at that time residing in New York. Eisler has been in the United States since June 14, 1941. All during the war period Eisler was the commissar for Communist activities in the United States When he wrote articles he was "Hanns Berger." When he sat in on secret Communist meetings he was "Edwards," and when he traveled he was "Brown." Under the name of Julius Eisman he was being paid regular sums by a Communist-front organization known as the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, and from other Communist sources.

From the story I have related briefly today we can see the type of man we are dealing with For those members who are interested in looking into the matter further, I recommend a reading of the full transcript of the testimony before the committee.

There is a tendency in some quarters to treat this case as one of a political prisoner, a harmless refugee whom this committee is persecuting because of his political belief, and who is guilty only of the fact that he happens to have a different political faith than the members of this committee For that reason, I believe the story of his activities is important. It is a story replete with criminal acts against the United States, forged documents, perjury, failure to register as an alien agent. It is a story of a man described by his own sister as an arch terrorist of the worst type—a man who was clearly linked by the testimony with members of the Canadian atom-bomb spy ring, a man whose only reason for being in the United States was to tear down and destroy the Government which furnished him refuge during the war years.

This is the man who showed such contempt for a committee of this House. Unfortunately, the statute of limitations has run on many of the criminal acts of Gerhart Eisler. It seems most pertinent to ask where were the agencies of our Government responsible for enforcing the immigration and naturalization laws when the statute was running on the Eislers, the Josephsons, and the Liptzins.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. NIXON. I think that every Member of the House is in substantial agreement with the Attorney General in his recent statements on the necessity of rooting out Communist sympathizers from our American institutions. By the same token I believe that we must all agree that now is the time for action as well as words. The Members of this House have probably had experience in dealing with the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Justice. The rules of that Service are extremely strict. For example, I have a specific case in my district, of a teacher of French at Pomona College, California, whose permit has been revoked because she did not report a change of employment to the Service; yet Gerhart Eisler was able to go freely in and out of the United States from 1933 until the present time with relatively no difficulty. It is significant to note that in 1943 the Immigration and Naturalization Service changed his status from that of alien in transit to alien for pleasure. In that status he had the complete run of the country. It would certainly seem that an investigation should be made of the procedures and the personnel responsible for granting such privileges to dangerous aliens of this type. Certainly no stronger case could be made for the proposition that there is no place in the Federal Service in positions so closely related to the security of the United States, for governmental employees who follow the Communist line or any other line which advocates the overthrow of our Government by force and violence.

It is essential as Members of this House that we defend vigilantly the fundamental rights of freedom of speech and freedom of the press. But we must bear in mind that the rights of free speech and free press do not carry with them the right to advocate the destruction of the very Government which protects the freedom of an individual to express his views.

The resolution before the House today proposes a very simple and direct question. By adopting the report of our committee concerning an obvious contempt, this House can put Mr. Eisler out of circulation for a sufficient period of time for the Department of Justice to proceed against him on more serious charges.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, I recognize there is very little anyone can say here that will at this time dispel the hysteria which has been worked up over this case. However, there are certain fundamental truths which are inescapable and which time and events will bring to bear more and more forcibly on the minds of the American people. The first is that when you tear away all the innuendos, the opinions of personal enemies, as well as the propaganda in certain sections of the press, neither this record, nor any other record, will ever show that at any time has this defendant engaged in any activity aimed at the violent overthrow of the Government of the United States. You cannot get away from that. You can say he is a Communist—true. But you cannot say there is any concrete evidence anywhere that he has ever engaged in any activity supporting any action for the violent overthrow of the Government of the United States. His only activity has been that of a militant anti-Fascist. Ironically, the anti-Fascist is on trial while pro-Fascists are at liberty to applaud and demand his persecution. If he has violated any statutes with respect to the immigration laws, that is not a matter for us to decide. We are still living in a country of law and order. That is a matter for the prosecutor, the judge, and the jury to pass upon.

I would like to deal at this time with two phases of this question—the first is whether or not there is a willful contempt of the committee. That is a legalistic phase and one which I admit is relatively unimportant. I call to the attention of the Members of the House page 3 of the committee hearings, and I read as follows:

> The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Eisler, do you refuse again to be sworn?
> Mr. EISLER. I have never refused to be sworn in.
> I came here as a political prisoner. I want to make a few remarks, only 3 minutes, before I be sworn in, and answer your questions, and make my statement. It is 3 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. My time is limited, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I want to add to the gentleman's remarks that that statement that Mr. Eisler wanted to make in 3 minutes consisted of 20 legal-size pages of paper.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Still and all, I do not think that he was guilty of contempt when he offered to answer all questions. The argument between Eisler and the committee was one of procedure. Of course, technically, the committee had the right to establish its own procedure and insist that the witness follow that procedure laid down by the committee. But we are dealing with contempt and we must consider the question of willfulness, to determine whether or not contempt was committed. This was not willful contempt when the witness states, "I want to answer questions but I ask you to permit me to make a statement first and then I will be sworn in and then I will answer questions." Under the circumstances, the committee's insistence on its procedure was unreasonable and this is the decisive factor in this case.

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. In just a moment. I have only about two more minutes. I decline to yield, Mr. Speaker. I want to continue my argument.

So that here we do not have a case of willful withholding of information on the part of a witness. The witness was ready to answer questions. He so stated. He simply asked the right to read a statement. I do not think that witness should be blamed for it. Let us look at the circumstances under which he was brought before the committee. All of the evidence indicates conclusively that the witness was ready and willing to come before the committee and had made arrangements to come before the committee. All of a sudden, at the request of the gentleman from New Jersey, chairman of the committee, this man was picked up and brought before the committee as a prisoner.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes; but I want to suggest at that point that I did not request he be picked up. I have a copy of my letter to the Attorney General, dated January 31, asking that the man be placed under surveillance. It was the Attorney General who perhaps decided he ought to be picked up. I never requested that he be picked up, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] cannot possibly prove that I suggested he be picked up.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Then the gentleman admits he requested of the Attorney General that this person who was going to willingly appear, be placed under surveillance.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. And I will tell you why I did it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Now, Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further. Then the Attorney General places this man in custody and brings him before this committee as a prisoner. Is it unnatural and unreasonable for such a witness to insist that he be permitted to make a statement for 3 minutes or perhaps a little longer? The world would not have been lost; nothing would have been lost, particularly when he said, "I want to answer the questions after I have made my statement," particularly in view of the circumstances under which he was dragged before the committee?

But, as far as the legalistic situation is concerned, I said that it is relatively unimportant, although I doubt whether you will ever get a conviction on this record in the courts. Of course, you will say I am wrong. The majority of the House is against me on the proposition. I was told I was wrong also on the Dodd, Lovett, and Watson cases in this House, but the Supreme Court took the position taken by me on this floor on those three propositions.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. There is something much more important involved here than the strictly legalistic phase. I have taken the floor simply because I refuse to unlearn the lessons that history has taught us. This is the beginning of a Red scare, it is aimed at Eisler, the Communist, but it is aimed at all advocates of democracy. Yes, this is the beginning of a Red scare. History has taught us that behind a Red scare, behind Red-scare hysteria, there marches, slowly but surely, and often speedily, domestic fascism to destroy the democratic rights, not only of an Eisler, but the democratic rights of all people.

The Red scare is the prelude which is now being set forth for an offensive against the rights of American labor, today against the rights of the Communist, tomorrow against the rights of the progressives and liberals. The Red scare is the smoke screen behind which reaction advances to trample ruthlessly over the liberties of the American people in this instance, over the liberties of the Italian people when it was used effectively in Italy; over the liberties of the German people when it was used effectively in Germany. The only issue involved here is whether we shall unlearn the lessons of recent history.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the perfunctory arguments of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] in defense of Eisler, the notorious Communist, I was reminded of what Brann, the great iconoclast, once said, that you cannot "explain a dead cat out of a family cistern."

All this argument, and all this sophistry, absolutely fails to offset the fact that this man Eisler is not only a Communist but that he is one of the most dangerous men who ever set foot on American soil. Not only that, but he has been here for years aiding in the undermining of American institutions.

I had never seen this Gerhart Eisler until he appeared before our committee the other day. The gentleman from New York says that had he been allowed to make a statement then, we could have sworn him. No; what he wanted was to make his statement and walk out. He had already given it to the press. He knew if he swore to what was in it, he would commit perjury. His sister came in and testified against him. She said he was one of the most "dangerous terrorists" in the country, or in the world. We have shown that he committed perjury time and time again, and I submit that the statute of limitations does not run against a perjurer while he is out of the jurisdiction of the court. Now, if the Department of Justice will do its duty as far as this man is concerned, he will probably spend the next 10, 20, or 50 years in the penitentiary.

We had before that committee a witness that I had never seen. I am not so sure that I had ever heard his name. He was a Negro by the name of Nowell. Now, you cannot accuse me of being in a race argument here, because this man Eisler and his sister are both Jews as well as his brother who is helping to poison the public mind through the motion-picture industry in California, but who referred to his sister, Mrs. Fischer, as "My former sister."

The other witness was a Negro. Now let us take these folks for what they are. I helped create this Committee on Un-American Activities because of these very dangers that I saw; and I want to say now that when I leave this Congress I will regard the creation of this committee as one of the greatest services I have ever rendered for the protection of my country.

It is the grand jury of America; it is doing more today to smoke out and expose these subversive elements that are trying to undermine and destroy America than any other influence in this country. The FBI is doing a wonderful job, but the FBI has its hands tied by the Department of Justice, which has not yet cleaned its own house.

During the last year or two when we were after these spies who were in here trying to get information on the atomic bomb, when the Committee on Un-American Activities was doing everything possible to run them down, we had this same nagging and the same opposition from the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]. But we had the help of the Canadian Government, and I want to say again that America owes a great debt of gratitude to the Government of Canada for running those spies down, catching them, and breaking up that ring at least for the time being.

Now, let us turn back to this Negro witness. His name is Nowell. He lived in Detroit. He said he was born in Georgia. Now, I have lived all my life and practiced law for years in a State where we had many, many lawsuits between Negroes and whites and between Negroes themselves. I am used to cross-examining them. I know something of the way they testify, and have a fairly good way weighing testimony, and if I am any judge this Negro, Nowell, was sincere in every word he said.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. POWELL. Is it within the rules of this Congress to refer to any group of our Nation in disparaging terms?

Mr. RANKIN. It is not disparaging to call them Negroes, as all respectable Negroes know.

Mr. POWELL. I am addressing the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of the disparaging term used.

Mr. POWELL. He used the term "nigger" in referring to a group.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to say "Negro."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I said what I always say and what I am always going to say when referring to these people.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, it is not a disgrace to be a real Negro. As I said on this floor before, if I were a Negro, I would want to be as black as the ace of spades. I would then go out with Negroes and have a real good time. These agitators are doing the Negroes of this country more harm than everything else put together.

Let us take this Negro, Nowell. He had been a Communist. They took him to Moscow to give him a course of communistic training. He testified that included in the course he was taught how to plan and carry out the overthrow of the Government of the United States—how to carry on subversive activities of all kinds. It finally got so bad that this Negro, Nowell, revolted, and I want to tell you now the American people owe him a debt of gratitude for exposing this infamous program.

When I asked him the question, he said that that race riot in Detroit a few years ago was caused by Communist agitation. They did not kill 30 Negroes, as was reported. They killed about 700. There was a Negro from my county who had organized a band up in Saginaw, Mich. He was down on Belle Isle playing when this riot occurred. They had 17 Negroes in this band. When the trouble started they got into a bus and started to leave. Their bus pulled up in front of a hotel in Detroit and a mob raided it and killed every single one of them. That is what these Communists are stirring up.

But let us see what this Negro said. We asked him if he was taught the tenets of revolution and he said:

> Yes; on instructions, how to capture a city, we were told how to seize the most vital means of communications, transportation, lighting, water supply, and so on, food; and, of course, the army, the armed forces; any arms, if any arms were stored; then, code, of course, transmission of messages; street fighting.

We asked him if he knew this witness, the man who had just walked out of the room a moment before, who called himself Eisler. He said, "Yes," he was with him in Moscow when they were over there in this Communist school taking training as to how to overthrow the Government of the United States and other governments throughout the world.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not care whose toes this gets on. My country comes first, and I here and now ask the Department of Justice, and the State Department, to clean house and put only Americans on guard, as George Washington advocated, and I am not saying anything to you that I would not say to my friend Harry Truman, the President of the United States.

I say that every effort is being made now by these aliens who have flooded in upon our shores, bringing with them atheism, communism, anarchy, and infidelity, and plotting to undermine and destroy the United States, the greatest Government the world has ever seen, and the greatest country on earth.

Almighty God in His infinite wisdom has placed in our hands the atomic bomb, the most powerful weapon of which humanity ever dreamed. Is it not strange that providence did not turn that weapon over to Japan or Italy or Germany? Is it not strange that divine providence did not turn that weapon over to some country that is now destroying human liberty and human freedom?

Talk about democracy. I want you to read some of this Communist stuff that has been coming out of New York. I see where we are going to broadcast to Russia. For God's sake, let us put Americans to doing the broadcasting, and not have some of the stuff that has been coming out of there sent to the Russian people.

You remember the Irishman who, having been asked what he found wrong in France, said that the French were so ignorant that he could hardly make them understand their own language.

Now, if we are going to tell Russia about America, let us get some real Americans to do the talking.

Now, Mr. Speaker, talk about this man not being in contempt of court. I am a lawyer. I practiced law for many years. There is not a court in America that would not have sent him to jail immediately. What I want is to appeal to the Department of Justice to prosecute him for these other crimes.

I hope the House passes this resolution and in that way backs up the Committee on Un-American Activities in its efforts to protect our country from these enemies within our gates.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MATHEWS].

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, the question before this House is simple: Has this man Eisler done something which deserves citation for contempt? In my mind there could be no clearer case. This man says he did not refuse to be sworn. But he did refuse to be sworn because he refused to be sworn except upon his own terms, and the moment you allow that privilege to any witness you have broken down the whole system of judicial and investigatory processes in these United States, because if he can specify his terms as a 3-minute speech, he could equally specify them as a 3-hour or 3-day speech or anything else that he desired to as a qualification upon whether or not he should be sworn. And thus the control of an investigation or trial would pass from the hands of the committee or court into the hands of the witness. This is a warning, I think, Mr. Speaker, of the insidious processes, the clever, ingenious processes by which these Communists attempt to break down the judicial proceedings of these United States.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KLEIN].

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have wrestled with my conscience on this question, and I have lost a good deal of sleep over how I should vote. I have given a good deal of thought to it, as I am sure most of you have, and I have reluctantly come to the conclusion that I am going to vote to cite for contempt in this case. I say reluctantly, because I am not yet convinced that the present committee will not follow in the footsteps of its predecessor committee. I take my oath as a Member of the Congress very seriously, and I believe that committees of this House should be given the rights and privileges to which they are entitled as long as they are committees of this House.

I believe they should be permitted to function to the fullest extent necessary, and I have confidence and pride enough in the House of Representatives to believe that when a committee has not performed, and will not perform, the functions for which it has been established it will be abolished. But as long as we have this committee, I believe it should be supported. I do not want anybody to get up and remind me that I have not supported this committee at times in the past, and I am proud of that fact because I felt that in most instances the committee was wrong. I believe—and I have said many times—that we need in this country a real Committee on Un-American Activities. Let me say to the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from New Jersey, that there are many other activities which are equally un-American with the types of activities which the committee has delved into. I agree with my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] when he talks about the Red scare. There is a Red scare here. There is much hysteria being created throughout the country about the Communist menace. While such menace may exist, I abhor the committee's practice of branding all those with whom it disagreed as Communists. But I say to you gentlemen—and specifically to the committee—that there are many other groups whose existence threatens the security of this country and the preservation of its democratic processes. How about the Columbians, Inc.? How about the Ku Klux Klan? Do you not agree with me that they are equally subversive, that they are equally dangerous to the welfare of this country, and that they bode no good to this country whatsoever? They are as harmful and as dangerous as the Communists are, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that you will consider that phase of subversive un-American activities in the future.

I want to serve notice that I and many who feel as I do in this House will not vote to sustain this committee in the future unless it demonstrates clearly that it will investigate and stamp out all types of subversion, and not proceed, in the same manner as its predecessor, against only those whom it calls Communists.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POWELL].

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, at all times here and elsewhere, I will always refer to the members of this Nation, whether they are black or white, Jew or Gentile, Protestant or Catholic, in the highest terms. It is unbelievable that any practice contrary to this can be allowed in this the highest body of this Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the Committee on Un-American Activities. I do not agree with it because of the way it was formed. I do not agree with it because of the way it has functioned. I do think there is need for a committee on Un-American activities. I think such a committee properly conceived could do a tremendous job for good. But this present committee has consistently aimed at only one phase of so-called un-American activities—that of communism. I make no brief for communism. It has plenty who can and do speak for it. I am not a Communist and I am not in favor of communism. However, I must defend the right of any individual to maintain whatever particular view he holds until such a view is declared illegal by act of Congress. It is not illegal now to be a Communist. Those of you who are so afraid of Red scares should have the guts to make communism illegal. Until then it is legal.

I am not in favor of this citation or any other, because, first, I have faith in our Department of Justice and our Federal Bureau of Investigation to do the job our laws have set them up for. Second, I have faith in the United States, which we all love, faith in the right, the moral right and the moral power of this Nation to triumph over any form of ism which may be against us. Third, I would vote against Mr. Eisler or any one else if the evidence was properly presented and it was indisputably proven that he was an enemy of our country. Fourth, I am against the Committee on Un-American Activities because of its methods. It follows an un-American patterns of prejudgment. And fifth, the Committee on Un-American Activities is not impartial in its investigations. It is one-sided. It creates a terror of communism while it ignores the deeds of strife and violence. If the Committee on Un-American Activities would go into such things as the Columbians, Inc., the lynchings of Georgia and elsewhere, the anti-Negro and anti-Jewish groups, and the Ku Klux Klan, then I would support it. As it is now constituted and functioning, I cannot support this or any other citation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER].

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I became a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities when it was created as a standing committee of the House. At that time I was not thoroughly convinced as to the value of the Dies committee. I had read many statements with respect to the drawing of red herrings across the trail and witch hunting, so I went on the committee with my mind wide open. If you will notice the hearings, you will see that I asked very few questions. I took a very small part in the activities of the committee and in bringing people before the committee. However, it gradually dawned on me that this is one of the most important committees that has ever been created, and I shall ever remember the gentleman from Mississippi, JOHN RANKIN, as its creator, and the part he has played by the creation of this committee in bringing about one of the strongest forces for the defense of this country that we have today.

Certainly no one can ever accuse me of not being friendly with colored people, with Negroes. I was raised with them. I have played with them. I like them and they like me. I admire the colored man who came before the committee recently. He was like a fellow standing up in a revival meeting, after he had been a Communist sinner, who wanted to confess his sins and return to the righteous way. My heart went out to him because surely he is a real American, and I wish he were here to hear me say that. But when I stand there and watch the defiant and contemptible manner in which these people who are cited to come before this committee appear, it puts a fear in my heart. I saw one man come before the committee. He was the son of a distinguished and old American family, and he so misled me that after his first appearance he said, "Well, now, we have caught the committee wrong." He went away promising to do everything. When he came back he was most contemptible, or equally as contemptible as any witness who was ever called before the committee. These witnesses who are asked to appear before this committee seem to be schooled. They all come in alike and they all have the same tactics and all have the same approach. As red-blooded Americans, on the basis of the evidence that has been brought to light here, whether you are a lawyer or a layman, we are asking you to support this committee in the work they are doing in trying to clean up, bore in, and bring to the surface this group that is being permitted to run in and out of America on forged passports and practice their damnable trick of deception and preparation for the overthrow of our form of government. I think it is the greatest reflection on our Department of State and the Department of Justice when we read and hear the facts that have been produced here about this man under question. If I were a layman or businessman sitting on a jury, after I had witnessed his action and his approach to this committee, I would have sat there until the hair on my head grew to my knees before I would ever acquit him of the charge that has been brought here against him today.

Mr. Speaker, I hold here an advertisement which appeared in several North Carolina papers. It purports to be political advertising. That is not its purpose, and any intelligent person in North Carolina or elsewhere will agree. The purpose is to stir up trouble. It is purely communistic propaganda. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that it be inserted in the RECORD at this point:

[Paid political advertisement]

A PROGRAM TO WIN A BETTER LIFE FOR THE PEOPLE OF NORTH CAROLINA

The people of North Carolina are uneasy about the future. They have a right to be uneasy. Even the experts of big business admit that a recession is on the way. Unless we people of North Carolina unite and fight for a people's program, terrible misery is in store for us.

North Carolina is one of the Southern States in which super profits are wrung from the white and colored peoples by keeping their standard of living below that of the country as a whole. The great corporations, dominated in the State by the Reynolds, the Dukes, and the Cannons, and linked with the billionaire trusts of Wall Street, have a field day at the expense of the people.

They can do so because the dead hand of the slave past still clutches at the people of this State and prevents North Carolina from being the great and prosperous State that it can and will be. One of the biggest lies ever foistered on a people was the one told the white workers and farmers of this State 70 years ago. They were told by the ex-slave-holding plantation owners that the path of progress for North Carolina was to keep the Negro people down and prevent them from winning equal rights as citizens.

Today it is easy to see what that course has meant not only for the Negro people of this State but for the white people as well. United States Department of Commerce figures show that in 1945 the average per person income in North Carolina was only $732 compared to $1,290 for all States outside the South.

In other words, this Jim Crow system robs every white worker in this State of more than $10 a week—money that his children need. In their own interest the white workers of North Carolina must join in the fight to end the Jim Crow system which forces the Negro people to serve as a source of cheap labor and allows the Dukes, the Reynolds, the Cannons, and their Wall Street buddies to wring extra profits from all the people of North Carolina.

Jim Crow also fosters hostility and distrust among our people, therefore its elimination will not only open up a new era of prosperity for North Carolina, but it will also usher in greater unity between the white and Negro peoples of this State, a unity based on mutual respect and trust.

The winning of equal rights for all is a key to winning a better life for the people of North Carolina. Below the Carolina district of the Communist Party lists the main demands in an immediate program for a better North Carolina. The Communist Party, as the political party of all militant working people, regardless of race, creed, or color, raises the goal of socialism for America, but it also leads in the day-to-day struggles of the people.

This immediate program, along with the national progressive demands, such as FEPC, full employment, defense of labor's rights, big three unity for peace, etc., can defend and advance the interests of the people. But only if around these issues is developed the maximum unity of labor, the farming population, the Negro people, professionals, and small businessmen. This is a program that must be fought for through united political action by the people—by all who put the interest of the many above the selfish super profits of the few.

RAISE LIVING STANDARDS

We advocate that the general assembly—

Establish a State minimum wage of 75 cents an hour with overtime after 8 hours a day and 40 hours a week for all workers, including agricultural, domestic, and State employees.

Amend the North Carolina unemployment act to provide benefits of $25 a week for 26 weeks. End exemptions for seasonal workers. Allow benefits for strikers. End delays. Liberalize base-period policy. Guarantee against discrimination.

Petition Congress to extend social security to cover all workers, including agricultural, domestic, and marine.

Require by law that all industries employing women provide a free State-inspected nursery for children of working mothers.

Defeat all antilabor bills.

MEET THE SCHOOL CRISIS

We advocate that the general assembly—

Establish a minimum salary of $2,400 a year for beginning teachers with college certificates, with regular raises for experience and training. Grant full sick leave with pay.

Abolish segregation in education. Open all State schools to all students, regardless of race, creed, or color. This democratic act will end much duplication and our school dollars will buy more education.

Petition Congress to enact the Federal aid-to-education bill.

FULL CITIZENSHIP FOR ALL

We advocate that the general assembly—

Repeal all segregation and Jim Crow laws in North Carolina.

Establish a State fair employment practices act to provide equal job opportunity in industry and government, with equal pay for equal work.

Guarantee the right to vote for all by halting illegal action of registrars that prevents thousands of Negroes from voting, particularly in eastern North Carolina.

MEET NEEDS OF VETERANS

We advocate—

A State bonus of $300 for overseas veterans and $200 for others.

Low cost State-financed, self-liquidating housing projects with priority for veterans, without discrimination.

LAND FOR THE WORKING FARMERS

The plantation system must end. Sharecroppers and tenant farmers must become owners of family-sized farms.

We advocate—

Government loans at low interest rate to guarantee land for the dirt farmer.

Petition Congress to guarantee full parity prices to the family-sized farm.

Help break the monopolistic control of markets by the big tobacco corporations. Establish cooperative control by committees of working farmers.

REPEAL SALES TAX

We advocate—

A tax program based on ability to pay. End the State sales tax which puts heaviest proportionate burden on lowest income group. Tax money should come from large property owners, public-utility monopolies, from income taxes on the higher income bracket, and from capital gain and excess-profits taxes on corporations. Drastic steps must be taken to stop the tax leak resulting from scandalously low assessments by big corporations in North Carolina.

USE BOTH HANDS

United Labor Action—or Else

Big business has captured control of Congress. As the opening gun in their assault against the people's standard of living and democratic rights—they are out to cripple and crush the trade unions.

Workers—AFL, CIO, railroad brotherhoods—unite in action to fight for your unions! Meet together and send joint demands that North Carolina Congressmen oppose all antilabor bills in Congress and that the general assembly at Raleigh defeat all antilabor bills. Send delegations to Congressmen and assemblymen.

Farmers, professionals, all Negro people, small businessmen—join with labor in this fight. It's a struggle between the millions of people on one side and the handful of billionaire trusts on the other. Labor's side is your side!

These demands are only the main ones of our North Carolina program. Write us for more details on any point. Ask us for our program of socialism—when the people, led by the workers, will own the factories, the mines, the banks, etc., and produce for the use of all, instead of the profit of a few.

LABOR, NEGROES ANGERED BY COMMUNISTS' PROGRAM—STATE LEADERS REPUDIATE PARTY'S BID FOR FAVOR IN LEGISLATIVE PLANS

(By Jim Chaney)

Angry North Carolina labor leaders yesterday unanimously repudiated a Communist Party attempt to affiliate itself with their program and roundly denounced a Communist-sponsored advertisement endorsing labor unions.

The advertisement, carried in the News and Observer Friday, purported to outline a program to win a better life for the people of North Carolina, by way of the Communist Party and the labor-union movement.

"It was a Judas kiss, a kiss of death," union spokesmen charged.

Negro leaders were equally irate.

The North Carolina Elks Association, in a resolution adopted at its midwinter meeting at Washington, N. C., called the advertisement an attempt to promote civil strife and array class against class.

OUT OF REACH

Meanwhile, the creator of the confusion, Chairman Sam Hall, of Carolina district Communist Party, United States of America, remained out of reach of potential interviewers. Hall could not be contacted at his Winston-Salem rooming house by telephone Nor did his landlord know his whereabouts.

"The Communists would do well to keep their —— noses out of the labor unions," R. R. Lawrence, southern director of the Textile Workers' Union of America (CIO), exploded. "We deny any connection with the Communist Party, and we object to their attempt to affiliate themselves with us."

Denouncing the advertisement by telephone from Salisbury, C. A. Fink, president of the State Federation of Labor (AFL) claimed, "It has always been our position to stand against the Communist Party."

"We have no common ground to stand on," he said. "I am sorry the advertisement appeared."

"I didn't know a thing about it (the advertisement) until it came out in the paper. I am certain that no responsible labor group would have been a party to it."

Condemned by unions and capital alike, the Communists have been working throughout the Nation largely on the subsistence provided with funds raised among radical groups. Labor spokesmen interviewed yesterday suggested that the Communists may have used the newspaper advertisement as a subtle means of "knifing the unions for ignoring them."

No real friend of labor would have publicly smeared the labor movement with red paint, Fink, Lawrence, and other union officials pointed out.

Even the Communists must realize that their endorsement in this State of a measure or plan or individual means the death of the thing they support, the labor leaders declared.

PROBABLE REACTION

Appearing at a time when the State legislature is considering at least one bill to curb labor unions, the advertisement could cause the passage of the severest type of anti-labor legislation.

State Labor Commissioner Forrest Shufford pointed out that the general assembly might be influenced to throw its weight against a proposed State minimum wage-hour law and to hold out on other labor requests.

Virtually the only persons pleased by the development were reactionary elements in the legislature and in State politics, who acknowledged that the Communists had supplied them with the political equivalent of an atom bomb. Unless liberal elements and labor can correct the damage, some observers felt, attempts may be made to paste the Communist label on any one who advocates betterment of the Negro race or improvement of working conditions.

If the references to the "Jim Crow system" in the advertisement was aimed at gaining favor with North Carolina Negroes, the committee failed as badly as they did with labor.

F. J. Carnage, Raleigh Negro attorney; Dr. O. S. Bullock, pastor of the Negro First Baptist Church, and other Raleigh Negro leaders described the advertisement as a "blow" to the social program of the Negro race.

"The Communists have been taking advantage of every little incident to stir up trouble among our people," Dr. Bullock said. "We do not need the help of the Communist Party nor of any other such group."

Carnage claimed "the Communists would do the Negro race a favor if they ceased associationg themselves with Negro affairs."

ELKS' IRE DRAWN BY COMMUNIST AD—OFFICIAL PROTEST ENTERED AT STATE MIDWINTER MEETING; REPORTS PRESENTED

(By Ed W. Davis)

WASHINGTON, N. C., February 15.—The North Carolina Elks Association in midwinter session here this afternoon "went up in arms" in protest against a Communist advertisement which appeared in the News and Observer Friday morning and unanimously adopted a resolution denouncing and condemning an attempt to promote civil strife and array class against class in North Carolina. The advertisement was waved before the meeting by Dr. W. A. Sams, of Marshall, past State president of Elks and present district deputy grand exalted ruler, who shouted "this is the greatest challenge Elkdom in North Carolina has ever had." He read the advertisement and urged the session to consider an action against it.

RESOLUTION DRAWN

President Boyce A. Whitmire of Hendersonville appointed the following committee, Staton Inscoe of Raleigh, J. C. Pittman of Sanford, and Edgar Woolard of Washington, who retired and after due deliberation returned with the following resolution which was unanimously endorsed by the gathering:

"Whereas there appeared in the Raleigh News and Observer on February 14, 1947, a paid political advertisement by the Communist Party, U. S. A., Carolina district, Sam Hall, Winston-Salem, N. C.; and

"Whereas the program of the Communist Party is un-American and threatens the security of our people and our Government and aims to promote revolution, discord, and civil strife and would seek to overthrow our Government: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the North Carolina Elks Association in meeting assembled at Washington, N. C., February 15, 1947, do denounce and condemn the attempt to promote civil strife and array class against class as shown by the aforesaid advertisement and call on all Elks in North Carolina to use their effort and influence against this and any other false doctrines that threaten our Government or security of the people of North Carolina."

Mr. Speaker, the above is sufficient answer to any communistic movement in North Carolina. It will never thrive there. I ask here and now that every Member of Congress rise up and support the pending resolution and show the country that we are determined to bring this evil in the open and run them out of our country.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I think first of all we should clear up any misapprehension which might exist concerning whether or not this man Eisler is in contempt of the House Committee on Un-American Activities and of Congress. I think we should clear up any misapprehension which might exist in the mind of some Member of the House who has not had an opportunity to read all these hearings as to whether or not Gerhart Eisler was actually in contempt of the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

You heard the impassioned, although not overly persuasive, argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] who, laboring somewhat under a handicap, found a sentence or two in the hearings and on that tried to build a case that Gerhart Eisler was not in contempt. But he entirely overlooked the first two pages of the hearings of the committee. In fact, Mr. Gerhart Eisler's first statement was clearly in contempt of the committee. Remember, he was brought here under a subpena under which he was instructed to answer questions, and a subpena pursuant to which he was expected to be put under oath so that his testimony could be classified as accurate or as perjurious, as the case might be.

Let me quote from page 26 of these hearings, which, incidentally, are so important and informative. Every Member of Congress and every well-informed American should read them from cover to cover.

Mr. Stripling first said:

Mr. Gerhart Eisler, take the stand.

Mr. Eisler said:

I am not going to take the stand.

If that is not contempt of Congress, then it seems strange indeed to what extremes men must go these days to show their contempt for our legislative body.

A little later the chairman said:

Now, Mr. Eisler, you will be sworn in. Raise your right hand.

Mr. Eisler said:

No.

If that is not in contempt of Congress I would like to know what kind of language one has to use to register his contempt.

A little later the chairman said:

Just a minute. Will you please be sworn in?

Mr. Eisler said:

You will not swear me in before you hear a few remarks.

The chairman said:

No; there will be no remarks.

Then Mr. Eisler said:

Then there will be no hearing from me.

I cannot understand what kind of judiciary must prevail in the district of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] if it cannot find a man in contempt who uses language of that type and that nature when responding to a subpena.

After that had transpired I made a motion, saying:

Mr. Chairman, I make the motion that the witness be cited for contempt.

Mr. RANKIN said:

I second the motion.

The chairman:

Any discussion? All in favor signify by saying "aye."

And the chairman declared the motion carried. It was carried by unanimous vote of the committee, with all members of the committee present, accounted for, and participating in the vote. So on that first point there is no question at all but what Mr. Eisler registered his contempt of Congress and the committee and the American system of government here prevailing. The question is whether you want to take it lying down and let this foreign Communist come over here and show his contempt, or whether, on a roll-call vote which is soon to follow, you care to stand up and be counted among those who desire to uphold the dignity and the honor of the House of Representatives.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. I think I have heard enough to enable me to render my own judgment on the matter, but I would like to have the gentleman indicate to the House, if he will, the nature of the testimony that the committee hoped to elicit from this witness, in a general way.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman made a very important contribution to the record when he showed that the chairman of the committee put the vote with all members present voting unanimously in favor of the motion. That is why he declared the motion to be carried. There was no necessity for putting the vote as far as the opposition was concerned. I am asking the gentleman specifically for the record on that point, when the gentleman's motion was put by the chairman, whether or not the vote of the members present on that occasion was unanimous.

Mr. MUNDT. The vote was unanimous and all members of the committee were present. Of course, that is the reason the record shows that the chairman did not ask for a negative vote, because in such a small committee as ours, with all the members close together, he could tell that all members had voted and that all had voted in the affirmative. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for his helpful contribution in making the record crystal clear on this point.

Pursuing the interrogatory of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], I think it might be proper to review a little what we expected to bring out of Mr. Eisler and what we expected to show, because, after all, we expect the Department of Justice not only to act expeditiously from the standpoint of trying this man for contempt of Congress, but also to make certain that he does not leave the country until that trial takes place. We also expect the Department of Justice to move forward with equal expedition on the five other charges that were made against Mr. Eisler, which indicate his great hazard to this country.

May I say in passing that when the trial takes place on the citation for contempt, I offer the faint but vigorous hope that it be tried before a judge of the United States who values the Congress of the United States more than $250 worth, as that was the fine that was last levied against a man who showed his contempt for Congress. I hope that we can find a judge who will value the reputation and dignity of the greatest legislative body in the world higher than $250.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Eisler refused to take the oath because he knew that some questions that the chairman, counsel for the committee, and investigators would ask him would either subject him to perjury or else convict him of subversive activities throughout the United States for the last several years.

Mr. SHORT. And income-tax evasion.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; income-tax evasion, and perjury that he had already committed.

Mr. MUNDT. Furthermore, the reason he refused to take the oath before he made his own prepared statement which he said he could make in 3 minutes but which consisted of 20 pages of legal-sized stationery—the reason he did not want to make his own statement under oath was because it was full of falsifications. Had he taken the oath first he could have been held under perjury charges. Consequently he wanted to put those falsifications into the record with immunity to himself.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. If he had been sworn first and then read that statement which he gave to the press there were enough false statements in it to have sent him to the penitentiary for the rest of his life; and he knew it.

Mr. MUNDT. That would not have been long enough to suit me, but, anyway, that is the truth.

Let us go a little bit into the background of this fellow Eisler. I think it is important that we bear in mind the extent of the maneuvers of these people who constantly defend those folks who are being tested and examined by the House Committee on Un-American Activities. I think it is interesting to note the interlocking communications and cooperation and the interlocking activities of the various groups we have brought before you. This is part and parcel of one big fabric of un-American activities in this country. It has quite truthfully been said that it is a long trail which does not have a turning; and it is indeed a longer trail which does not lead ultimately to some destination. The trail of Gerhart Eisler leads directly to the doorstep of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee which this House in its good judgment cited for contempt in April of 1946—nearly a year ago.

In response to the question of the gentleman from North Carolina, I wish to show you some of the things we expected to bring out from Mr. Eisler in that connection but which instead of bringing them out by questioning him as we planned we placed in the record from the reports of the FBI, from the report which J. Edgar Hoover made on this fellow Eisler. Let me read a portion of it.

Mr. Hoover's report reads:

For the past several years Eisler has made regular daily visits to the offices of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, a well-known Communist-front organization in New York City, and it is indicated that Eisler may have been regularly employed by this organization although he has frequently described himself as unemployed. Contacts with Eisler have been made by numerous individuals, including important Communist Party functionaries through officials of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee and on many occasions at the offices of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee. In this connection, it appears that Eisler has been extremely careful about any visits to Communist Party headquarters.

Through the investigation of Eisler, the possibility was developed that Eisler is identical with one Julius Eisman who is known to have been receiving for a considerable period of time regular monthly checks from the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee in New York City in the amount of $150.

Subsequent investigation has identified Julius Eisman as Gerhart Eisler. It is known that the following checks were issued to Julius Eisman by the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee:

* * * * *

All of these checks which were from the funds of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee and were made payable to Julius Eisman were endorsed by Gerhart Eisler.

So there we have the direct tie-up between this man Eisler and the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee which refused to disclose its books to our committee a year ago and which we were compelled to cite for contempt of Congress because all of its directors and officers, 14 in number, consistently refused to let us look at the books.

Why would they not let us look at their books? Because if they had let us look at their books then we would have known a year ago that Gerhart Eisler was being financed by this group to conduct Communist activity in this country and that he was the mouthpiece and the spokesman and the transmission belt of Moscow directing the Communist activities here in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I ask at this time unanimous consent to place in the RECORD extracts of the debate which took place on April 16, 1946, when we had before us for contempt citation the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, the following quotations are from my remarks found on pages 3843 and 3845 of the bound volumes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, during the debate leading to our vote to cite for contempt the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, which masks its underhand Communist work under that seductive and deceptive title:

The New York World Telegram as long ago as 1941 published a series of articles accusing Dr. Barsky, executive director of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, and many of his present associates of communistic activities. Among the directors we are today asking you to cite for contempt are several self-admitted Communists and at least one who has been a candidate for public office in this country on the Communist ticket.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Members of the House to read the printed hearings which report the testimony of these directors of the so-called Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee when we had them before our committee on April 4 of this year. They were completely noncooperative. They were consistently insolent, arrogant, and secretive. All had been carefully coached by the same attorney and all evaded questions with the same practiced patter. Of more than passing significance is the fact that most of the directors specifically declined to deny that they were Communists when given an opportunity to do so by our committee. None of them availed themselves of the opportunity to go on record in support of American institutions and ideals.

The issue is clear-cut. Will you vote to uphold the dignity of Congress or will you vote to uphold those who defy and denounce Congress? Will you vote to maintain and preserve and emphasize the authority of Congress to conduct an effective investigation or will you vote to establish a precedent whereby Congress would become impotent in its investigatory tasks upon the refusal of a group or individual voluntarily to cooperate?

Today's vote will long be used as tomorrow's index to the attitudes of those of us who now sit as Members of this House. Unless we are to turn America over to those who depreciate it and to those who would destroy its established institutions it is imperative that we today face up to our responsibilities and vote to uphold the dignity and the authority of Congress. Once the powers of a congressional committee to function effectively in an investigatory capacity have been reasserted as I am convinced they will be in today's roll-call vote, the great job of exposing and eradicating the subversive influences now at work in this Republic can be resumed with vigor and authority.

In the meantime, I would like to suggest to the many fine and patriotic Americans who have been induced to make contributions to the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee because of its attractive title and its announced objectives that they refrain from further contributions until we discover the true record of the facts. Before contributing further, Americans generally have the right to know whether the money they subscribe is being used to give relief to the victims and refugees of fascism abroad or whether it is being used to reenforce the ramparts of those attempting to expand the sinister influence of American Communists here at home.

Mr. Speaker, that debate occurred on April 16, 1946. We had the same speakers then defending the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee who have defended Gerhart Eisler today. There were more of them then by a great many voices. The reason fewer spoke today in his favor is because of the 56 people who voted against the contempt citation of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, the people of America in their good judgment retired from office well over half of those 56 on last November 5. I think that is likely to influence today's vote when it comes. The April 26 roll call can be checked for your information. It is found on page 3849 of the bound RECORD. It discloses one compelling reason why so few people spoke here today in condemnation of this committee whereas we had a whole string of them speaking on April 16, 1946. It is my guess today's vote will be a demonstration of confidence in and of approval for the House Committee on Un-American Activities such as is unprecedented in the long history of this committee.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman tell the House what became of that citation proceeding?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; I will be happy to do that. Let me quote from the RECORD. The House of Representatives considers itself a coordinate branch of the Government. The House of Representatives sometimes prides itself on the fact that it controls the purse strings of the Government and exercises a lot of influence, that it can get cooperation and some kind of consideration from the executive agencies because it has control of the purse.

Yet, on April 16 last year it passed by a vote of 292 to 56 a contempt citation of this Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee. Now, the question has been asked by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WOOD], What happened to it? That question, in fact, also appears in the hearings on page 13. I asked the question there. I said, "Mr. Chairman, before we get away from the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee I suggest that this afternoon you address a letter to Attorney General Tom Clark urging him to expedite trial of the contempt proceeding which has been dragging painfully ever since the Congress cited this group for contempt last July." I was in error. It was last April 16 rather than last July. Just exactly nothing has been done, Mr. Speaker, by the Attorney General, to move in on this Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee which we cited for contempt almost a year ago. If you wonder why the Communists are given a free hand in America, one emphatic reason is because after you cite them for contempt nothing happens out of the Attorney General's office. What we need from the Attorney General is less lip service against communism and at least a little specific action to curtail communism where it is known to exist.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. MUNDT. That is one reason we feel that after we cite, as we are going to do today, this Gerhart Eisler for contempt of Congress, probably he will be here at least a year while the Attorney General's Department gets ready to act. So, in all events, that will keep him in America and prevent his carrying information back to his bosses in Moscow. However, we sincerely hope the Attorney General's office will really go to work and get action on this Eisler case.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, the chairman of our committee.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I think it is important that we also put in the RECORD that in the case of the old Dies committee we sent over six cases to the Attorney General and it took 6 years before they even brought up the first case.

Mr. MUNDT. I think that is very important and it is very relevant to the discussion.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to one other item in passing, and this is also in answer to the gentleman from North Carolina. I refer to Mr. Gerhart Eisler's relationship to the secrets of the atom bomb. That is the big reason we do not want him deported. You will find this evidence clearly set forth on pages 41 and 42 of our hearings, which are obtainable in the offices of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. That is one additional reason we want him cited for contempt and brought before a judge who we hope is American enough to do something about it, including putting this man behind iron bars, not merely fining him $25 or $250 or maybe 25 cents if a Red New Deal judge should hold court in this case.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MATHEWS].

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VAIL].

Mr. VAIL. Mr. Speaker, the case against Gerhart Eisler has been ably presented with a transcript of the evidence and the statements made here today, and I do not believe that further detailed elaboration is required.

In general summation I would like to say that it is our sworn duty to uphold, protect, and defend the Government of the United States—to guard it against its enemies.

One such enemy of our Government and the peace and security of our Nation is Gerhart Eisler, whose subversive activities as a guest of our country have been proven beyond possibility of doubt—not an enemy met in combat on the field of battle but of the type that pursues its activities surreptitiously through propaganda—the type that stealthily creeps from behind to plunge a dagger in the back. Eisler refused to testify before a hearing of the Un-American Activities Committee, thus flouting the authority of the Congress of the United States.

The Un-American Activities Committee asks you to endorse the major accomplishment of the committee in securing unimpeachable evidence, apprehending and prosecuting this agent, whose subversive operations have caused untold misery and suffering in various parts of the world.

By your unanimous approval of the action of the committee in citing Eisler for contempt and on other serious charges you will serve notice upon other similarly minded that the United States of America refuses to submit itself as a breeding place for the festering sores that afflict so many other nations of the world and that violators of the sanctity of its government shall receive merited punishment, swift, just, and sure.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I think there is little question about the fact that, as a matter of law, the witness, in refusing to be sworn, was prima facie guilty of contempt. It is an occasion, however, for the Members to indicate to the Committee on Un-American Activities their views with regard to the conduct of its investigations. This is due the country and the gentlemen who give their time and energies to this work.

An unfortunate impression got abroad with regard to the Dies committee that it was engaged primarily in a Communist hunt and that it quite neglected the Fascists, Nazis, and their associates in our midst. The Un-American Activities Committee can now render a great service by proceeding even-handedly to unearth the subversives on the extreme right as readily as those on the extreme left, for the committee knows that they both have the same design on our freedoms—to extinguish them.

Let us hope, therefore, that the committee will—and soon—strike this a twin blow for freedom against the Fascists, Nazis, and those like-minded in our midst.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 370, nays 1, answered "present" 1, not voting 60, as follows:

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1968) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill that contains the cuts of appropriations for OPA?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Then I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. The House may go into the Committee of the Whole and later, after debate has occurred, rise, and then a motion would be in order to close debate; but otherwise a motion would not be in order at this time to close?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York states the situation accurately. The House must first go into Committee and have general debate, and then rise and fix the time of debate by vote.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I take it that the chairman of the committee will see that the minority is allotted time.

Mr. TABER. Unless there is more demand than the first recognition of 1 hour, it will be my purpose to allot out of the hour that I am being recognized for half of the time to the gentleman from Missouri, and see how we get along.

Mr. CANNON. That will be satisfactory, Mr. Speaker, and we will require no further time on this side.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1968, with Mr. HERTER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent (on motion of Mr. TABER), the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been reported for the purpose of supplying certain urgent deficiencies in appropriations and for the purpose of rescinding certain other appropriations which are no longer needed and which the Committee believes is in the interest of the Government that they be rescinded. I will briefly describe what is contained in the bill.

There was in the first place a recommendation on the part of the Budget of a deficiency appropriation of $5,950,000 for the Office of Price Administration, which we have refused. There was an appropriation for the Office of Defense Transportation of $143,000, which we have reduced to $130,000. There was an estimate of $135,000,000 for additional funds for administration, medical, hospital, and domiciliary services, to which we were unable to give a satisfactory hearing, and which we allowed on the basis of what the Veterans' Administration said would carry them to the 31st of March, so that we would be able to have a satisfactory hearing. That is not intended or presented as a cut in the appropriation, but as a postponement of the hearings. The same thing applies to an item for military and naval insurance, where we have provided $1,000,000 out of an estimate of $4,125,000 for the purpose of carrying them likewise until we can have a satisfactory hearing. There is likewise an estimate for the vocational rehabilitation revolving fund—no year—of $500,000, and we have provided $200,000 to carry them until we can have a satisfactory hearing.

There is an estimate for the Division of Disbursement, the check-writing outfit in the Treasury Department, of $3,520,000. The committee reduced that to $3,000,000.

As to the rescissions, we have recommended a rescission of $9,000,000 in OPA funds. We have also recommended a rescission of $2,400,000 in the funds for the Civilian Production Administration. The estimate there was $1,200,000. We have raised a suggested rescission of Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion funds from $46,000 to $60,000, believing they can get along very well on that with the contraction of activities that they present.

I think I have described the major items which were subject to hearings. In addition to that, the committee has included in the bill which is before you rescissions amounting to practically $700,000,000—to be exact, it is $692,688,579 which the President recommended in House Document 65 in his budget estimate of rescissions.

There are many other items of rescission, some of which will come before the committee upon budget estimates that will hereafter be considered and some will come as the result of the initiative of the committee, so that we may go into the picture to see just what is needed for the operations of the Government. I might say in addition there is one estimate that is pending for the rescission of a very large amount of lend-lease funds, if I remember correctly, approximately $900,000,000, which we have not been able to hold hearings on and are not prepared to report on at this time.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have been informed that there is a very substantial sum of money that is being held by these various agencies that could be recovered running into several billion dollars. Is there anything to that?

Mr. TABER. There is no question but what there is a very large amount of money, the rescission of appropriations of which should be considered by the committee, and it is the intention of the committee to go ahead just as rapidly as possible to hold hearings upon these items and recommend to the House rescissions insofar as it is possible to make them.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS. The gentleman mentioned lend-lease funds. In the past few days the papers carried the story that Lend-Lease officials are seeking to have a change in the law preventing the use of such funds after December 31, 1946, for shipments to Europe. Is there anything in this present bill that would affect that situation?

Mr. TABER. There is not. I might say to the gentleman that our committee held hearings on that situation. We have not taken it up in the Deficiency Committee, and we have not acted upon it. There is one item in connection with that which I think the Congress should act on and should provide for. That is an item of about $100,000 worth of merchandise that the Australian Government purchased from us and for which they have paid in cash. I would think that that presented an entirely different picture from anything else that is in the offing in connection with that situation. I can see no reason why, frankly, any country presently in default of payment, such as the Union of the Soviet Republics is, for the use of ships and which ships have not been turned back as was agreed upon, and where they have failed to get together and make an agreement accepting their obligations, should be handed any more merchandise or should be entitled to the fulfillment of any contract which it is supposed to have made. Frankly, I do not have a ruling on whether or not that alleged contract was of any validity, as yet. But in all transactions there is the right, as I understand it, under any kind of procedure, of stoppage in transit, or of the refusal to deliver things to a proposed debtor who is in default. That is the picture from a business standpoint.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. VORYS. Is this not the proposition: The question is whether anyone has the right to make a moral commitment for the United States Government in face of a statute that would forbid the carrying out of that commitment?

Mr. TABER. That is true. On the other hand, with reference to that particular item of $100,000 that Australia has paid for, I think they were in a different category from any of the rest of the outfits.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Is this an appropriate place to ask a question with regard to the denial of a deficiency appropriation for the OPA?

Mr. TABER. I would think so. I intended to discuss that at a little greater length, and I will do so now.

Those of you who have the hearings before you I suggest turn to pages 80 and 81. The OPA has not done an honest job in connection with its operations. At the time the hearings were held, a week of two ago, they had 914 employees in the office in Washington drawing $4,000 and more each. They had 851 employees drawing less than $4,000 each. In other words, they had more generals than they had privates, and that picture with reference to their whole operation extends throughout the country except that it is not quite so bad. The only place where they have as high as three privates to one general is the State of New York. Other places it is hard work to figure out how they have two privates to one general. In Washington they have 122 economists. They have no possible need for any at the present time. They have 31 personnel officers and personnel assistants at a time when they should be reducing the force and should not have any to speak of. They have 147 accountants in the Washington office at a time when three or four should be able to do all the work they have to do. They have 37 investigators in the Washington office, absolutely unnecessary.

They have 14 price executives, with nothing to fix prices on except rents. They have 187 analysts who can perform no useful function whatever. They have 21 administrative officers when they need but one or two. They have six labor relations advisers when the time for that sort of activity has passed. They have 168 lawyers and there is no legal activity for any except possibly six or seven in the rent set-up. They have 25 directors. What they have to do is beyond the imagination of the most gullible. They have 14 administrative assistants, 13 information specialists, 4 archivists, 7 engineers, 22 field representatives, 10 statisticians; and on down the line—business specialists, graphic analysts, executive officers, special advisers, deputy administrators, general counsel—four general counsel. What anybody can imagine they would do is beyond my ability to figure out. Rationing executives, two. That is the first item I have struck where they have any excuse whatever for the set-up. They have: Rationing analysts, 2—probably they need them; stenographic reporter, 1; printing and publications specialists, 4; training specialists, 8; commodity standards specialists, 2—absolutely no use for them; auditor-supervisors, 6; administrators, 1; historians, 6. What do they need them for? Procurement assistant, 1.

That is in the Washington office alone.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION. I see there are 914 employees in the Washington office.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION. One of them seems to be a stenographic reporter.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION. I am just wondering how that one stenographic reporter handles the business of the other 913 generals.

Mr. TABER. I suppose the fact that there is one stenographic reporter indicates the real volume of work that is being done.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that OPA has transferred a lot of employees to the Division of Rent Control.

Mr. TABER. They have increased the number in the Rent Control Division by 1,500 to 2,000. They have put on people in places where it was absolutely unnecessary. They have extended rent control, according to my information, where it was unnecessary, and they have in general a very incompetent staff and a very incompetent set-up.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. The gentleman is correct. As an example, the regional office in my territory is at Dallas, Tex. Recently they sent 11 inspectors to St. Joseph, Mo., which is the largest city in my district, to investigate the property owners there.

Mr. TABER. Probably not over a thousand miles of travel each way.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. It is about a thousand miles, possibly a little more, from Dallas to St. Joseph.

Mr. TABER. Each way.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Each way. They are there at a per diem, as the gentleman knows, of $6 per day, plus all expenses. They have been there for the past 3 or 4 weeks. They are asking the property owners to furnish them with their records from 1938 to the present time. They travel in pairs. One cannot go alone and do the job. They must have two or three who call on the property owners. I call this to the attention of the House so that the Members will know how they are padding the pay rolls and how they are making work for themselves and how they are squandering the appropriations granted to them by the Seventy-ninth Congress.

Mr. TABER. I think probably they have a justification for about 50 out of the 914. That would be my judgment from the whole picture.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. We are in no position obviously, in looking over this set-up, not having been in the hearings, to know what these people are doing. I happen to be one who is convinced that we have to have rent control and I do not feel we can have rent control by hobbling the OPA so that it does a bad job of administration. Therefore, I ask the gentleman this question: Is the gentleman convinced, as a result of the hearings, that the OPA will be able to carry on its rent-control functions until June 30, 1947, yet give landlords who have true hardship cases adequate and rapid enough satisfaction so that we will not have the unnecessary pressure from them to do away with the OPA and rent control, which the people in my district are about 95 percent for?

Mr. TABER. My own idea was, after very careful and extensive hearings on this subject, that we could rescind about $12,500,000. The judgment of the committee is $9,000,000. My own idea was to allow every dollar that I could legitimately allow for an honest administration of this rent activity. I cannot see any sense in allowing a great lot of money for them to carry on their pay roll a lot of generals and other personnel that they do not need and that they have no useful function for.

I will give you an illustration of some of the highfalutin activities. They had an employment committee set up composed of 64 people whose average salary from the OPA was $7,500 to $8,000. The job that these people had to do was to go out and get jobs for the employees of the OPA. Perhaps the thing to do is to try to supersede the employment offices that are set up all over the United States by grants to the States and the District of Columbia under the Labor and Federal Security bill, but, frankly, the idea does not appeal to me. I think it is an utter and absolute waste of money, as well as a violation of the trust and duty imposed upon the managers of the OPA when they were given their appropriation. As I remember the figure, they have two-hundred-and-sixty-odd people involved in getting up a history of the OPA and, in my opinion, the only value that I can see in that would be for guiding future generations in what not to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises the gentleman that he has consumed 25 minutes.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. How much does this leave the OPA after rescission of the $9,000,000?

Mr. TABER. About $18,000,000, as I remember it.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Is that not about three times more than it needs?

Mr. TABER. I think it is more than they need; yes. I will give you the exact figure a little later on.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION. How much do they have for this year?

Mr. TABER. They had $101,000,000, as I remember the figure, and the amount of expenditures was somewhere around seventy-odd-million dollars.

Mr. ROBSION. That was allowed for a full year.

Mr. TABER. It was allowed for a full year; that is right.

Mr. ROBSION. And for full activities.

Mr. TABER. But their activities have dropped off and they have not reduced their force as they should. For instance, it came along about the middle of November when they cut off a lot of their pricing activities, but they did not serve any notices upon their employees of termination of employment so that their terminal leave could begin to run. They let them hang around the place until the first of December before they got their notices, and they managed everything else in just the same way. They want to carry on, according to the statement that came out in the paper, with 13,500 personnel to the end of the year. They show no disposition to try and put the set-up on a business basis, which is absolutely necessary if it is going to succeed, and if your rent control is not going to be destroyed by bad administration.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, do I understand the gentleman then to assure us—and the gentleman knows that I have very high regard for his assurance—that he is convinced that OPA can do the rent control job with the funds which will be available to it after the passage of this bill?

Mr. TABER. I believe they can, if they do it honestly.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this bill is in some respects a very satisfactory bill; in other respects not so satisfactory.

It is satisfactory in that the larger part of the bill is devoted to rescissions recommended by the President. There is a vast number of these rescission items and in all save three the bill before us follows the President's recommendations, word for word and dollar for dollar without deviation. In other words, the Committee on Appropriations is continuing the program of retrenchment and rescission so auspiciously begun by the President and the committee in the last Congress. Following the close of the war, this program was consistently adhered to and funds sequestered as rapidly as the liquidations of war agencies and war activities advanced and as surpluses developed and rescissions became possible and practicable and it is gratifying to see it continued in the pending bill.

There are, however, a few items in the bill, some minor and some which merit more than passing attention.

The first item discussed in the report, the provision for Defense Transportation, is a case in point.

Everybody is familiar with the war record made by Colonel Johnson as head of the Office of Defense Transportation. He accomplished the impossible. He provided cars. He kept the trunk lines open. He kept traffic moving. He kept the trains running. He provided transportation during the critical period of the war when collapse was imminent any day.

Incredible as it may seem the traffic load is heavier today than at any time during the war. To complicate the situation the rolling stock is wearing out. Boxcars are being switched off to the junk yard daily and there are no replacements.

Production and consumption are dependent on transportation. It is useless to produce goods when they cannot be delivered; and consumers are helpless if goods are not available. Transportation is the indispensable link.

We must have cars. Labor is short and materials are lacking. ODT is needed to mobilize construction, allocate material, mobilize labor, and expedite construction.

To meet this new and unexpected situation it is necessary to continue ODT beyond the period originally set for liquidation. The estimate for the purpose is $143,000, but the committee arbitrarily cuts the amount to $130,000. It offers no explanation, no basis of computation on which to predicate such a cut. Throughout its war service ODT has returned at the end of the fiscal year every dollar not needed for the economical administration of its activities. Any surplus of the pending estimate will be returned. So why cut it? If not needed it will not be spent. If required any money cut from the estimate will have to be returned as a deficiency. So the only result of the cut will be to leave the impression that economy is being practiced when actually no economy is being effected.

In the same way, an arbitrary cut is made in the estimate for the Division of Disbursements in the Treasury Department. This agency has no control over the volume of its work. It must accept the allocations of the various agencies of the Government which themselves have no choice but to forward to the Division of Disbursements the volume of work assigned to them, whether large or small. The work must be done and money must be provided to do it. The money cannot be expended unless needed. So again, the cut here is merely to leave the impression of saving money when as a matter of fact not a dollar is saved by the cut.

The item for the Office of Price Administration is not retrenchment. It is extinction. The provision for OPA amounts to liquidation.

Here is the analysis of the situation as submitted to the committee:

MY DEAR MR. TABER: We have just completed an analysis of the report of the subcommittee in charge of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, 1947.

From the determinations made by the committee as indicated by this report, we feel sure there has been a misunderstanding of the information submitted by the Office of Price Administration and the Civilian Production Administration of the Office of Temporary Controls.

We feel that we should immediately call your attention to the following facts and the situations that would result if action is taken on the basis of the committee report:

With regard to the Office of Price Administration, there was available on January 1, 1946, as stated in the committee report, $27,649,222; obligations incurred between January 1 and February 15, 1947, amount to $10,213,534, which leaves a balance available from February 15 to June 30 of $17,435,688. If the recommendation of the committee to rescind $9,000,000 is carried out, there will be left a balance of only $8,435,688. The present dollar value of accrued annual leave is $7,555,974. This would leave only $879,714 for liquidation and program activities—sufficient for only a few days' operation.

If the rescission is made effective and the Office of Price Administration meets its present financial obligations, it must immediately—

1. Stop rent control.
2. Stop all sugar rationing.
3. Stop all price control on sugar, rice, and sirups.
4. Stop all audits in connection with subsidy payments.
5. Eliminate all enforcement and compliance activities.
6. Eliminate all activities in connection with the veterans' housing program.

With regard to the proposal to increase the rescission for the Civilian Production Administration from $1,200,000 to $2,400,000, I should like to call your attention to the statement of Mr. Houston, Commissioner of Civilian Production Administration, as recorded on page 154 of the hearings.

"On the basis of complete termination of all Civilian Production Administration functions by March 31, 1947, * * * the financial requirements would be $15,800,000 as compared to $16,800,000."

This statement makes it clear that the million-dollar reduction is definitely predicated on stopping Civilian Production Administration work March 31, and not June 30, which may not have been understood by the committee.

If the action of the committee is approved, the Civilian Production Administration will have to discontinue all program activities on March 31, which means they must:

Cease all functions performed in connection with the Veterans' Emergency Housing Program, including those provided for by the Patman Act.

Dismiss employees now engaged in allocation and priority operations in connection with tin, rubber, antimony, cinchona, streptomycin, tractors, automobiles, and other imports and exports. In respect to these items, this would mean that even if positive legislation is enacted to implement the recommendations made by the President in his message of January 31, there would be no personnel available to implement the continuing work required by the legislation.

Suspend all functions on premium-payment plans for the housing program, including the audit of accounts for payments already made.

Halt all compliance activities, including the completion of cases now pending in the courts or about to be brought before the courts, whether in connection with housing or earlier programs of the Civilian Production Administration and the War Production Board.

Drop defense of Government claims to which the Civilian Production Administration or the War Production Board was a party. These claims are filed against the Government under section 17-A, Contract Settlement Act, Renegotiation Act, Requisitioning Act, Tax Amortization Act, and other statutes.

Abandon the partially completed program of the agency to analyze and make available for future use the records and details of actions taken by the War Production Board and other predecessor agencies.

Stop informal assistance in support of the freight-car program.

We appreciate the seriousness of the proposal of the committee which, if made into law, would in effect stop all Office of Price Administration program activities immediately and all Civilian Production Administration activities by March 31. In carrying out our administrative duties, we do not feel that we can properly stop these programs based on the committee report but must wait until there is final action by the Congress. This means, of course, that obligations continue to accrue and the situation with regard to available balances will become progressively more serious.

Sincerely yours,

J. W. FOLLIN,
Acting Administrator.

To summarize the statement in tabular form, here is the proposition reduced to its simplest terms:

1947 appropriation	$101,000,000
Less transfer to FTC	125,000
Available appropriation	100,875,000
Obligations to Feb. 15	83,439,312
Unobligated balance of original appropriation as of Feb. 15	17,435,688
Less proposed rescission of	9,000,000
	8,435,688
Employees' accumulated annual leave	$7,555,974
This sum available for purposes other than payment of accumulated annual leave, as of Feb. 15 provided $9,000,000 rescission should become effective	879,714

In other words, with only $879,714 remaining, liquidation is the only alternative. What does that involve?

All rent control stops. The law is still in effect but there is no money with which to implement it. Without funds there can be no enforcement. And without enforcement the law is a dead letter.

Rationing of sugar ceases. Without money to maintain the agency, rationing is at an end. Price control on sugar, rice, and sirups stops. Audits on subsidy payments must be abandoned. And all activities in connection with the veterans' housing program must be discontinued.

It may be that this is the committee program. I am not taking issue with it. I am merely calling attention to the effect the agency says will follow enactment of the provisions of the pending bill.

Similarly, the provision for the Civilian Production Administration will force immediate liquidation. According to the figures submitted to the committee by CPA the fiscal program laid down in the bill would have required post liquidation commencing 2 weeks ago in order to comply with the provisions of the act.

Mr. Chairman, while the principal provisions of the bill are in keeping with the program of the President, the Bureau of the Budget and the last Congress, I recommend to the committee and the House a careful and factual study of these individual items which affect so directly the national economy during this critical period of reconversion. Unquestionably they merit deliberate consideration in this or another body.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I am amazed to hear the statement by the gentleman from Missouri that the action of the Committee on Appropriations in connection with the Office of Price Administration means that the ability to control rents and the control of the rationing of sugar will disappear very shortly. There are two ways to kill an agency—that is, by direct attack through legislation, or by failure to appropriate money. I hope that the price of sugar is not going to increase to 30, 40, and 50 cents. Certainly, if we do not have some kind of sugar rationing, the American public, the consumers, are going to feel it very keenly. If we have a rent situation that is uncontrolled, there is bound to be an increase in rents, and the responsibility will rest upon the Republican Party.

In connection with the appropriations we make for our armed forces, such appropriations are the price or premium that we pay for national security. In connection with this important duty, we should give the benefit of any reasonable doubt to that determination which will assure security rather than insecurity. We cannot let the conditions that existed after World War I be a guide for meeting the conditions that now exist following World War II; that is, unless we are going to follow, as we did then, the road of isolationism. That was the road which the country was committed to by the Republican Party in the Congresses of the years following World War I. I wonder if history is going to repeat itself, and I wonder if the dreadful experiences of World War II are going to be ignored.

After World War I, America failed to assume its dominant role in world affairs. To follow the road of isolationism now, as has been done in the past, will be inconsistent with our present and future national interests. Due to the policy of isolationism that we followed after World War I, and the disarmament conference in 1922, as a result of which we scrapped a mighty fine navy, which, by the way, also was during a Republican administration, appropriations for defense purposes were sharply reduced. In the light of world conditions today and so far as we can see into the immediate future, it would be dangerous to do that now.

An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. If any Member thinks he can justify himself or lull himself into slumber by voting for this reduction, $6,000,000,000, and that it is only a gesture, or a meaningless or pious hope, and when specific appropriation bills come up vote the other way, I call his attention to the frank admission made to me only yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that he will consider the resolution agreed upon as instructions to the Committee on Appropriations to keep within that limit. Do not underestimate the ability or the courage of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], nor his tenacity. Also, do not underestimate the same qualities in the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

If my friend from Minnesota had not spoken too soon in favor of a 20-percent income-tax cut across the board, which practically every big taxpayer is favoring, the "quickie" tax, so called, and if it goes through will be a "wickie" tax, meaning wicked, I am strongly inclined to the belief that the situation would be different today.

This reduction is not based on reason. Its basis is the 20-percent "wickie" tax cut. In order for the Knutson bill to have any chance of passing, a large reduction in the budget, even if not justified, must take place to comply with the campaign promises made by a few men in pivotal positions, even if it means our country again taking the dangerous road of pacifism and isolationism.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HALLECK. I do not know whether my memory serves me completely or not, but it runs in my mind that shortly after I came to Congress the administration of the gentleman then being in power proposed what was known as the Neutrality Act. Some of the provisions of that act were to bar our vessels from dangerous waters, and such other provisions as to prevent the sale of war goods to belligerent countries.

Mr. McCORMACK. What is the question?

Mr. HALLECK. The question is simply this, if there was any isolationism in the country, was that not a definite move in the direction of isolationism, and was it not presented by the gentleman's party?

Mr. McCORMACK. The answer to that is emphatically "No." Oh, you Republican gentlemen may laugh and smile, but the reason for that answer is that we passed a Neutrality Act in those years so that we would not be permitting the powers of America to be used in the conflict going on in Spain by the so-called Loyalist government. We passed the Neutrality Act in those years so that the foreign policy of America would not be such as to lend assistance, directly or indirectly, to the destructive forces that were engaged in the Spanish conflict. We amended the Neutrality Act in later years because the continuance of it was helping Hitler, and we were helping the destructive forces engaged in the war before we were forced into it. So that the basic proposition is that our country passed the Neutrality Act in the Spanish conflict so that we would not be helping the Loyalist cause which was the only side of that conflict that had freedom of the seas, and could send vessels to America to get arms to transport over there to use against the other forces. We amended that law in later years so that we would not again be helping the destructive influence that was engaged in the World War, represented by Hitler.

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield for a question only, because I have some other observations to make. I yield because the gentleman is majority leader and I respect him, but the gentleman knows I have only 10 minutes.

Mr. HALLECK. I certainly do not want to monopolize the gentleman's time.

Mr. McCORMACK. By the way, the gentleman forgot to answer a question of mine yesterday. How did the gentleman vote on the extension of the Selective Service Act in 1941?

Mr. HALLECK. I voted "no" on the extension.

Mr. McCORMACK. And it passed by a 1-vote margin. If that bill had not become law we might not be sitting here today.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to permit me to answer the question he asked me?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I said to the gentleman, as the RECORD discloses, that I voted "no." If the gentleman's administration had told the Congress and the country the true state of affairs in the world, of course I would not have voted "no."

Mr. McCORMACK. What an alibi that is. What an alibi. What a poor alibi.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. Wait awhile; I have the floor. I will yield, of course, but let me answer. The gentleman's alibi cannot stand up in the light of history. I now yield.

Mr. HALLECK. It certainly will stand up much better than the gentleman's alibi about how the Neutrality Act was passed to meet a situation existing in Spain. I never heard a more ridiculous assertion in my life.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is losing control of himself. The gentleman voted against every bill before Pearl Harbor necessary for the preservation of the United States of America.

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am going to continue my observations.

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will yield; yes.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman refers to the fact that as he suggested——

Mr. McCORMACK. It is rather pleasing to know that I get under the gentleman's skin.

Mr. HALLECK. Certainly the gentleman does not mean to say what he just said, because no later than yesterday he said: "Why, the gentleman from Indiana voted against all the appropriations for the prosecution of the war."

Mr. McCORMACK. I said before Pearl Harbor.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman said "prior to Pearl Harbor" and I said I voted for them.

Mr. McCORMACK. Did the gentleman vote to lift certain restrictions of the Neutrality Act?

Mr. HALLECK. Of course I did.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is exactly correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I hope the gentleman will let me have a portion of my 3 minutes.

Mr. HALLECK. I certainly will; and I shall be short.

Mr. McCORMACK. There seems to be something about the gentleman from Massachusetts that makes the gentleman from Indiana feel compelled to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield whenever the gentleman from Massachusetts takes the floor.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman from Massachusetts and I always get along.

Mr. McCORMACK. We are warm friends.

Mr. HALLECK. We are warm friends. The gentleman in his speech apparently is complaining about our cutting the cost of government and our action to reduce taxes. I infer from what the gentleman has said that he is against cutting the expenses of government and against reducing the personal income taxes of the people of the country.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman, of course, again jumps to an erroneous conclusion. The gentleman has not been following what I have said. I am talking about a $6,000,000,000 cut as proposed and its effect upon our Army and Navy, our national defense, and the national interests of our country. Witness the Republican promise to lift wartime excise taxes even before June 30. Witness the failure to keep that promise and the extension of these excise taxes permanently, the reason being—now mark this—the reason being the necessity for this additional revenue, $1,200,000,000 to put through the Knutson bill. Also further in support of this fact that the legislative pattern is being cut by the Republicans for this "quickie-wickie" tax reduction, our national defense, and our national interest to the contrary notwithstanding.

I call attention to a statement appearing in the Washington Post only this morning purporting to come from my distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] in announcing the postponement of hearings on his bill which were scheduled to open tomorrow, saying that the failure of the Congress to slash the President's budget by $6,000,000,000 would materially cut the idea of a 20-percent tax reduction. The evidence clearly supports the finding that a primary purpose of the arbitrary cut is tax reduction as proposed by the Knutson bill—and the national interest of our country be damned.

At this time, with our civilization, our way of life, and our concept of government being challenged by another concept of life, it is my belief that our national interest is more directly linked up with the necessary power of our armed forces than if such a challenge did not exist.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS].

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Chairman, according to the Legislative Calendar, on Thursday, February 20, the Congress will consider and vote on the proposed cut to the Federal Budget. In my humble opinion the vote on that subject will be the most important that will come before us while Members of the Eightieth Congress. I know how I am going to vote, yet I do not consider it sufficient to merely cast a vote, for the importance of this question requires a statement of reasons as to why one votes as he does.

I hasten to say that I am far from being an expert on budgetary matters.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have seen at firsthand and do know something about the tragedy, the pain, and the devastation of war. Thousands of pages have been written of the destruction, the waste, and the havoc of World War II, and hundreds of thousands of pages have already been written of how vastly more terrible will be the results of World War III. While nobody can accurately state just what the results of World War III would be, certainly all of us agree that insofar as our country—its people, its system of government—are concerned, the results would be catastrophic. Certainly therefore we all can agree that the problem of working out a lasting peace is the No. 1 problem facing this Congress and the world.

Economy is important. Both Democrats and Republicans alike want an economically operated government. There may be some difference in the approach to the question of economy, but in substance I think that everyone wants economy in government because everyone knows that practical economy usually goes hand in hand with efficiency. Tax reductions are important. Everyone wants less taxes. I have yet to see the man who enjoys paying taxes. Certainly all of us want to lower them at the first real opportunity.

Those two problems are important ones that are facing this Congress; but can anyone successfully claim that the problems of economy and lower taxes are more important to this country than is the problem of peace? No answer is needed. Yet, gentlemen, tomorrow in considering the question of the proposed cut in the budget, we should keep reminding ourselves that peace is vastly more important than taxes.

According to the reports as I read them, the proposed budget cut of $6,000,000,000 would reduce the money allocated to the United States Army by $1,000,000,000. It would reduce the money now allocated to the United States Navy by $750,000,000. It would reduce the money now allocated for the functioning of civilian affairs in foreign countries by $500,000,000.

On February 15 the New York Times quoted Secretary Marshall as saying to reporters following the closed meeting of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and I quote:

> If the Army is deprived of the necessary funds, or adequate funds, to provide food for those people who are so sorely in need of it, a practically impossible situation will be created for our troops and for our Government in its international commitments. We cannot expect to maintain the occupation with our troops if the people are starving. That would be an intolerable condition, and under that condition the present procedure would be impractical.

Mr. Chairman, I am certain we are all aware that upon Secretary Marshall's shoulders has been placed the greatest and gravest responsibility that it is possible for man to carry—that of working out a world peace—yet are we going to make his already difficult and dangerous task onerous by depriving him of the funds that he needs?

Senator VANDENBERG, who has played a large and important part in working out the manifold problems of peace, is reported in the Evening Star to have said that he was opposed to any budget cuts that would require the United States to "disarm alone." He further declared that he feared "a cut of $1,750,000,000 in Army and Navy funds might upset American prestige in troubled international affairs." Senator CONNALLY, the great Texan, who has been a part of this great American team for peace, has voiced strenuous objection to the proposed cut.

Now, Mr. Chairman, is there anyone better qualified to pass judgment on the requirements and needs of the peace problem than Secretary of State Marshall and Senators VANDENBERG and CONNALLY? I do not know of any Congressman who claims that he is better qualified. Marshall, Vandenberg, and Connally know that, while we have made some steps toward a peace program, world peace is not yet a reality. It is still a hope. They know that another world conflagration could overwhelm us in the space of a few months. They know the necessity for us to have adequate armed forces, not only to protect us during this period of uncertainty and unrest but to give us bargaining power at the conference table.

Someone may wonder what constitutes an adequate armed force sufficient to protect this country in event of an emergency. No doubt we have some military and naval experts in the Congress; no doubt some of them are sitting on this Budget Committee, but do they or anyone else claim that they know more about what the Army needs to maintain adequate standards than does General Eisenhower? Does anyone in this Budget Committee claim he knows as much about the Air Force as General Spaatz, or about the Navy as Secretary Forrestal or Admiral Nimitz? These are the best qualified men in the country to advise us on our armed forces, and they all urge us not to cut the armed-forces allocation, because, and I quote Secretary of War Patterson, "the President's War Department estimate was down to the minimum our leaders believed necessary for support of our occupation forces overseas and for reasonable guaranties for national security."

Most of us have agreed that Secretary Byrnes' policy of "friendly but firm" in dealing with foreign countries was a sensible and wise one. We can be friendly, but how can we be firm if we have reduced our strength to below the standard of adequacy. It takes strength and power to be firm.

Mr. Chairman, if we vote for the proposed $6,000,000,000 cut in the President's Budget, we are grossly ignoring the advice and counsel of those men who, in all fairness, we must admit, know more about the armed forces, the practical problems of peace, and what is needed to protect our country, than does anyone else in these United States. If we vote for the proposed cut, we are closing our eyes to the fact and entrusting our fate to chance. No one can be certain just what lies ahead. Certainly we are inviting trouble by weakening ourselves at this time—yet no one knows—we are gambling. We are gambling the biggest stake in the world—peace—against less than $2,000,000,000. The stakes are all out of proportion.

Money is important. Lower taxes are important. But certainly they are not important when the choice could easily lie between money or bloodshed—less taxes or peace.

I would think that those veterans who had seen their friends, their brothers, their buddies, give their lives in order that the world might have peace, I should think that those fellows who had seen that sacrifice would think a long time before making that sacrifice a mockery by giving it away for $2,000,000,000 and lower taxes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that some of the figures that were given by the gentleman from Missouri came in a letter which was delivered after I took the floor, I feel obliged to take the well of the House at this time and call attention to the serious discrepancies in the stories that have been told by the OPA.

First off, in the President's budget estimate he reports expenditures to the 30th of November of $56,971,000, leaving a balance of $44,000,000. The OPA told us that they had spent $80,000,000 to the 1st of February, or at a rate double what they had been spending in the previous months. Based on the President's budget statement we would be able to cut at least $12,000,000 back and let them go on and operate with the force that they now have, allowing plenty of money for terminal leave and everything else.

Now they come in here with a statement indicating not only that they have spent twice as much money in December, but that they have spent in January and the first half of February $10,000,000, which is just twice as much as they could possibly spend on the same ratio that they have been operating on before.

Frankly, I am in this position: I do not believe a word of the testimony that they have given us or a word that is in the letter, and I shall stick to my position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II—REDUCTIONS IN APPROPRIATIONS AND AUTHORIZATIONS

Amounts available to the departments and agencies from appropriations and other funds are hereby reduced in the sums hereinafter set forth, such sums to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury immediately upon the approval of this act:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Office for Emergency Management:

Office of Scientific Research and Development:

Working fund, Executive, Emergency Management (Office of Scientific Research and Development), 1942–46, $2,044,477.

Working fund, Executive, Emergency Management (Office of Scientific Research and Development), 1940–46, $160,744.

Working fund, Executive, Emergency Management (Office of Scientific Research and Development), 1945, $6,688,979.

Office of Temporary Controls:

Salaries and expenses, Civilian Production Administration functions, Office of Temporary Controls, 1947, $2,400,000: Provided, That the Civilian Production Administration shall be discontinued and its affairs placed in liquidation not later than June 30, 1947.

Salaries and expenses, Office of Price Administration functions, Office of Temporary Controls, 1947, $9,000,000.

Salaries and expenses, Office of War Mobilization functions, Office of Temporary Controls, 1947, $60,000.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to say for the benefit of those who have come in since general debate started that the action taken here with respect to the Civilian Production Administration and the Office of Price Administration functions means that we are definitely on our way toward redeeming the pledges made to the people that we are going to save some money out of the Budget, money that has previously been appropriated.

The mandate given in lines 10 to 13 on page 4 provides that the Civilian Production Administration shall be discontinued and its affairs placed in liquidation not later than June 30, 1947. I recognize that it has been said, probably, a little during the debate here, and more will be said in the press, that that interferes with the CPA's continuing to allocate materials, and the red herring will be drawn that that will affect the veterans' housing program.

At a meeting of the committee on veterans' housing conducted by the South Dakota Department of the American Legion, in my own State, along in November, members of the Legion, representing the building trades, the construction industry, and just rank-and-file veterans, came to the conclusion that continued channeling of materials was defeating the purpose of veterans' housing, defeating jobs for the veterans, and retarding the welfare of the veterans generally. It is my own belief that the CPA program has reached its maximum usefulness, and that the provision here for discontinuing its functions by the 30th of June 1947 will have a salutary effect upon the economy of the country and the welfare of the veterans and their housing program.

With respect to the Office of Price Administration, it must be borne in mind that many controls were discontinued last fall. When the statement was made that the people who lost their jobs by reason of the decontrol then would be added to the other functions of the OPA the country heard it with a horselaugh. The people just did not believe that kind of thing was possible or would actually be attempted. Actually, that is what happened. In the field of rent control, on the 1st of July last year the OPA had 5,700 people. That was the 1st of July last year, a year after VE-day. Under the figures given the committee in these hearings, on the 1st of February of this year, many months later, that number had increased from 5,700 to 6,554. They had increased the number of rent-control areas in the country from 535 to 649. That is after the war had been over for a year. They increased by almost 1,000 the number of employees of the O. P. A. Rent Control Division between July 1 last year and February 1 of this year. They did increase by over a thousand in the field offices.

The only way we are going to redeem the promises which have been made to the country with respect to getting rid of controls and reducing expenditures is to have the courage to do it. What the committee is here doing is proposing that not only shall we refuse the increase in money this agency has requested but we shall take back some of the money they have had appropriated for the balance of this year, in order that they may move in the other direction, that of reducing the number of employees rather than increasing them the farther we get away from the war.

When this bill passes, as it will today, you can send out the word: "Congress is in action. We are on the way. We are reducing expenditures. We are reducing the Federal pay roll."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the remainder of the bill involves rescissions which were recommended by the Budget and since the committee is in complete agreement upon it, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

After hearing the distinguished minority leader attacking cuts in the appropriation for the OPA and mentioning that sugar may go up 30 or 40 cents a pound, I thought it might be appropriate to talk a little bit about sugar. Mr. Chairman, on Wednesday of this week, the International Emergency Food Council consisting of representatives from more than 30 countries, will meet in secret session to split up or divide amongst themselves American-owned sugar supplies. We are not unwilling to share a portion of our sugar with other countries where they are in short supply, but the question that I want to raise is by what authority the Secretary of Agriculture or any other representative of the United States Government has the right to enter into an agreement with other nations to keep the division of American-owned sugar secret from the people of the country? There is no law authorizing such secrecy. The American people are entitled to learn all of the facts as to what is being done with the sugar owned by the United States Government. In addition, the people are entitled to find out as to sugar supplies in all countries that now seek to secure a substantial portion of American-owned sugar.

The special food committee to investigate the sugar situation insists that the direct sugar allotment for consumers in the United States be increased from 35 to 40 pounds for 1947 as against 25 pounds last year. The committee also recommends an increase for industrial users of approximately 30 percent. These are minimum recommendations of the committee. If the Secretary of Agriculture or any member of the Cabinet consents to any smaller amount of sugar than recommended by the committee, American consumers should know where the responsibility belongs.

To fill the minimum quotas of sugar recommended by the committee for American consumers for use in 1947, we will need approximately 3,300,000 tons of American-owned Cuban sugar. This amount from Cuban supplies plus 3,808,000 tons produced in American areas shows a minimum requirement of approximately 7,200,000 tons of sugar for the use of domestic consumers in 1947. I insist that the Secretary of Agriculture stand by the recommendations of the committee and that all proceedings of the International Emergency Food Council, including information on stocks and supplies of sugar in other countries, be made available to Congress and the country.

I again invite the Members of the House to secure copies of the report of the committee on the sugar situation, and I also urge my colleagues to contact the Secretary of Agriculture today with a demand that he retain a minimum of 3,300,000 short tons of American-owned Cuban sugar for use in 1947 by the American people.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HERTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1968) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and three Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 319, nays 26, not voting 87, as follows:

Mr. CELLER changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. MADDEN changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I voted against H. R. 1968 for the following reasons:

First. The bill reduces veterans' appropriations from the requested $307,258,000 to $135,000,000.

Second. It eliminates appropriations for OPA. This withholding of funds endangers rent control.

CONFEREES ON EXCISE-TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the number of conferees on the bill which was sent to conference this morning be enlarged to seven.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIMPSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] to act as conferees.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and other special orders, I may be privileged to address the House for 35 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE LATE COLONEL EARLE L. JOHNSON

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, our Nation sustained a great loss yesterday in the death of Col. Earle L. Johnson, national commander of the Civil Air Patrol, when the plane he was flying crashed only half a mile from its take-off at Cleveland Airport.

Colonel Johnson was my friend for many years. Of gigantic stature, well over 6 feet, with the genial simplicity of a big boy, he naturally had the nickname of "Tiny" Johnson. He was a lineman on Ohio State University first Western Conference football team in 1916. He was active in farming, real estate, and business and served three terms as a representative in the Ohio General Assembly. He became interested in aviation during this period through his friendship with his colleague David S. Ingalls. In 1929 Mr. Ingalls was author of the law creating a bureau of aeronautics for the State of Ohio. I had the honor of being appointed as Ohio's first director of aeronautics. In 1931 various amendments and improvements to the law, which experience had shown were necessary, were drafted in a bill which Colonel Johnson sponsored in the Ohio Legislature. Although this bill was vetoed by the Governor, such a protest arose from friends of aviation that it was immediately repassed with slight changes and is still the law in Ohio. In 1939 Colonel Johnson was drafted from private life by Governor Bricker to act as Ohio's director of aeronautics. In 1941 he helped organize the Civil Air Patrol and in April 1942 he became its national commander. Under his guiding genius the Civil Air Patrol performed vitally important war services while retaining its character as an organization of amateur volunteers. In 1942 when the submarines were sinking ships all along our coast the CAP carried on antisubmarine reconnaissance along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts which was extremely effective in keeping our shipping lanes open. Since the war the CAP has performed many different missions and services, as well as furnishing preflight training for air cadets.

Only a man with the energy and resourcefulness and tact and ingenuity and force of Earle Johnson could have organized and directed the vast volunteer organization of the CAP in war and peace. He loved and understood flying, and people, young and old, and his country. He was only 52 when he died. His experience and his ability would have been invaluable to our Nation in the next few years. His death is a great loss to his family and friends and to his country. Our deep sympathy goes to his widow and his mother who survive him. His memory will be an inspiration to those who served with him and under him and to all who learn of his great character and his great work.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. I desire to say that I knew Colonel Johnson very well. I considered him as one of the men who had performed outstanding service for his country during the war as head of the Civil Air Patrol. With the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] and others, I want to say how much I sympathize with those of his loved ones who are sad today in the loss of this great man.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the memory of Col. Earle Johnson. I was greatly shocked when I learned of his tragic death. Aviation in this country suffered a heavy loss in his passing. For many years he had been recognized as one of the outstanding leaders in matters pertaining to aviation. He was an expert flyer himself, and was tireless in his leadership of the Civil Air Patrol. I first met Colonel Johnson several years ago and was immediately attracted by his charming personality. A visit with him was always a delightful and profitable experience. All who knew him have lost a true friend.

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my colleague from Ohio in expressing my sympathy on the tragic death of Col. Earle L. Johnson, National Commander of the Civil Air Patrol. It has been my privilege to know him down through the years, and he was one of the air pioneers who carried on during this war. He was a leader in the early days and gathered together those who wanted to serve for the air protection of our country.

The colonel was always gracious and held the affection and confidence of his men. He will long be remembered for his distinguished service to our country. My sympathy goes to his family and I know that they will be comforted by the affection and love of his many friends.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday last, Col. Earle L. Johnson lost his life in a yet unexplained plane crash. Those of us who knew him are certain that if he had time to think it would have been for the two who were with him, not for himself.

For a quarter of a century or more, Colonel Johnson has been a leader in aviation in Ohio and in the Nation, serving as Ohio State Director of Aeronautics, and as director of the National Aeronautics Association. Upon the creation of the Civil Air Patrol he was made Ohio wing commander. At the time of his death he was head of the national patrol organization. His work won him the Legion of Merit.

Colonel Johnson had been recommended for the Distinguished Service Medal and his nomination as brigadier general had been sent to the Senate by the President, all of which attests to the fine service he has rendered his country.

Colonel Johnson was a man who took his responsibilities of citizenship seriously. He has been active in his community of Painesville, Ohio, and Lake County, having represented the county in the State legislature for 6 years, prior to serving the State of Ohio in several capacities.

To his family we extend our deepest sympathy. The Nation can ill afford to lose such a man.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members desiring to extend their remarks on the life and character of Colonel Johnson may be permitted to do so at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a radio address by Fulton Lewis, Jr.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a certain editorial comment.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein certain tables and extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN HEALTH

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, during the next few minutes I would that we counsel together on the Nation's health.

Are you interested in the health of your family, your constituents, your State, and our great Nation? If you answer these questions in the affirmative, then the observations I make today should command your attention, inspire you to make a careful and serious study into the health of the people in your own State, and thereafter join in an American crusade to restore health to the people of our great Nation.

SELECTIVE SERVICE REJECTS AS UNFIT FOR MILITARY SERVICE 5,000,000 PROUD YOUNG AMERICANS

On January 8, 1947, the distinguished and able gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] spoke briefly before the House and inserted in the RECORD certain findings released by the Selective Service System which revealed the sad, yet true, fact that the health of the American youth had reached a new low. The details are so tragic that this Congress will stand indicted by this and succeeding generations if we fail to offer some remedies.

BASIC MATERIAL

The basic material used in presenting my opinions include medical statistics from the Selective Service System, hearings before the Committee on Education of the United States Senate in respect to the Hospital Construction Act, the Nation's Business of August 1946, releases from the American Hospital Association, findings of the North Carolina Medical Care Commission, not to mention the able counsel and advice of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress.

OVER-ALL DATA

During the war 5,000,000 young Americans were rejected as being physically unfit for military service. The record shows that of the 22,000,000 men between 18 and 32 registered for military service in World War II, 5,000,000 were deferred on essential occupational grounds. Of the 17,000,000 remaining, examination showed 5,000,000 physically unfit for armed service, this being a rejection percentage of 30.2 percent.

REJECTION PERCENTAGE RACIALLY

A break-down nationally between the races reveals that the ratio of rejection to those examined for Negroes was 53.4 percent and that of the whites 39.2 percent.

HEALTH BY STATES

Every Member of Congress is proud of his State and it is not my desire to embarrass my people of North Carolina or my colleagues from other States as I go a little further than did the gentleman from Illinois, Representative DIRKSEN, and spread upon the record some rather damaging testimony concerning the health of this Nation.

BIPARTISAN APPROACH

My observations today are indeed bipartisan and there must be no aisle separating our joint efforts in this common undertaking to restore good health to the people of our Nation. Since the health of those folks in my home State is of great concern to me, I shall begin by citing the North Carolina record.

In North Carolina out of 530,800 examined for military service—ages 17 through 18—by August 1, 1945, 227,600 were rejected. This is a rejection percentage of 42.9 per 100 men examined. Racially the percentage in North Carolina ran higher than the national average. The only figures available for this State are for the period August 1944 to August 1945, and the rejects to number examined were 57.9 percent for the Negroes and 46.7 for the whites.

At this point Mr. Speaker, I insert along with my remarks three tables compiled by Selective Service showing the rejection percentages for each State.

The first table is limited to inductions. A careful study will reveal one other State with a higher rejection ratio than North Carolina, yet many States with records almost equal that should shock us out of our complacency.

VOLUNTARY ENLISTMENT RECORDS

I point out to the Members that the voluntary enlistments from each State are over and above the total number of selectees accepted for the armed services. This should be taken into consideration as we study the rejection records by States. To the credit of North Carolina and several other States where the rejection record looks bad, it is interesting to discover that these States have an excellent percentage record of voluntary enlistments. In World War II in North Carolina over and above the 303,200 who were accepted for induction, 66,651 volunteered. If the North Carolina enlistment record was compared with certain States which did not have as favorable voluntary enlistment but did have a lower percentage in rejections, we would not be next to the cellar in the number of rejections.

ACCEPTANCE RECORDS BY STATES

For the information of the Members I insert at this point in the RECORD the acceptance record of the various States showing the percentage of men and women in the service in comparison with the number of citizens 21 years and over in the United States.

According to War and Navy records, North Carolina averaged 19.2 in the service, compared with the national average of 18.9.

BREAK-DOWN OF DEFECTS

Because of my limited time I cannot give comparative data on the five most frequently recorded defects for all the States. However, at this point I will insert in the RECORD the rates per 1,000 examined in the continental United States, Kansas, and North Carolina. Kansas has been chosen for comparative purposes because its rejection rate was the lowest of any of the States. I should point out, however, that Kansas had the lowest percentage of service personnel serving in World War II, the percentage to total population being 8.8, whereas the national average was 18.9; this low average, I would assume, being due to essential occupational deferment.

Continental United States

	Rates per 1,000 examined
Total defects	1,105.7
Eyes	119.6
Teeth	116.1
Feet	90.1
Musculoskeletal	87.5
Cardiovascular	57.5
Ratio rejected to examined (all defects)	30.2

KANSAS

Total defects	729.8
Musculoskeletal	73.7
Feet	70.7
Eyes	68.9
Mouth and gums	56.6
Cardiovascular	46.7
Ratio rejected to examined (all defects)	23.9

NORTH CAROLINA

Total defects	1,157.3
Musculoskeletal	126.5
Feet	123.1
Mental and educational deficiency	116.5
Eyes	78.6
Cardiovascular	63.9
Ratio rejected to examined (all defects)	42.9

FREQUENTLY RECORDED DEFECT

The studies show that a State may have a large number of most frequently recorded defects that do not appear as a chief cause for rejection. This is due to the great variance in the political, social, and economic conditions in the various regions of the country, and it explains the omission of mental deficiency as one of the five causes of rejection in most of the Northern and Western States.

In the South the rejection rates were above the national average for educational deficiency and syphilis.

In the eastern region, cardiovascular defects were above the national average.

In the Midwest, rejections for hernia were above the national average, and also in the Midwest mental deficiency, dental defects and defects of the abdominal viscera were important causes for rejections.

In the far West rejections were above the national average for musculoskeletal defects, hernia, eye defects, and syphilis.

GREAT RECORD OF OUR ORPHANAGES

Before I suggest one remedy for what I have tried to reveal, you would be interested in the excellent acceptance record of the young men called by selective service from our orphanages, and at this point I wish to make a plug for every orphanage in this land.

The figures I give to you for North Carolina are comparable to those for the continental United States. Of 1,154 former students of North Carolina orphanages listed for the Army, only 16 were turned back—and this in spite of the fact that the Army was pretty choosy in the early days of the war.

The orphanage boys had good bodies and good eyes. The rejection rate was 1.4, against a rejection ratio of 42.9 to the number examined for North Carolina as a whole. The orphanage boys came from the same blood lines, presumably, same social and in the main perhaps worse economic background.

The only reason for this great record in our orphanages must be due to adequate hospital and medical care at an age when it was most needed.

WAC'S REJECTED

My approach today is limited to the male rejects, but the same serious health conditions existed among the young women called for service; for example, one-third of the applicants for the WAC in the Nation were rejected for physical or mental reasons.

WHAT IS THE PARTIAL ANSWER?

In the Seventy-ninth Congress the Hill-Burton bill was enacted into law. It was brought before the Congress under the bipartisan sponsorship of Senator LISTER HILL, of Alabama, and Senator (now Justice) Harold Burton, of Ohio. It was passed by a unanimous voice vote in the Senate and by a vote of 136 to 28 in the House.

Examination of the testimony of expert and professional witnesses at the hearings on this bill disclosed many convincing facts in support of a program to increase the availability of medical care and hospitals. Dr. Frederick D. Mott, then chief medical officer, Farm Security Administration, testified that less than one-third of all the counties in the United States, with 69 percent of the population, have 89 percent of the total number of hospital beds. He further stated that 1,785 counties having no cities of more than 10,000 population but including 21 percent of the total population had only 8.8 percent of the total number of general hospital beds. In plain language this means that most of the hospitals have been built close to urban areas and are not uniformly distributed so as to be equally available to all segments of the population.

HOW—THE DESCRIPTION OF THE ACT, ITS SCOPE, ADMINISTRATION AND ENABLING STATE LEGISLATION

I will not presume upon the time of the House to discuss the details of the Hill-Burton Act, its scope and administration and the required enabling State legislation, but for the benefit of the new Members of this House as well as the old, I insert in the RECORD at this point a brief résumé of the act and its broad objectives:

THE ACT

Within the next 5 years the Nation's communities—small and large—will construct $1,125,000,000 worth of hospitals and related facilities under a Federal grant-in-aid program. These are to be built on the basis of need under programs which will be drawn up within the States, and the Federal Government will pay for one-third of the cost of constructing and equipping them. The other two-thirds of the cost will come from sources within the State.

This construction program was made possible by Public Law 725 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, signed by President Truman August 13, 1946. The law is better known by its earlier title, S. 191, the Hospital Survey and Construction Act, or the Hill-Burton bill. The American, Catholic, and Protestant Hospital Associations have endorsed and actively supported the bill because of the direct benefit to the Nation's health through increased hospital facilities. Additional support has come from leaders in the public health field and labor, farm, civic, and welfare groups.

There will be hospital construction outside of this program; but the money provided by this law will be used for assistance in building hospitals in those areas which are shown by State-wide surveys to be in greatest need of additional facilities.

ITS SCOPE

Public Law 725 provides grants-in-aid to States for the purposes of (sec. 601[1]):

1. Conducting State-wide surveys and planning for construction of needed hospitals, health centers and related facilities;

2. Constructing hospitals, health centers and related facilities which are part of over-all State plans developed from surveys.

For both surveys and construction the Federal Government is authorized to contribute one-third of the cost with the remaining two-thirds to be provided from sources within the States.

ITS ADMINISTRATION

Administration of the Nation-wide program is under the direction of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service through the newly created Division of Hospital Facilities. The Federal Hospital Council, with members drawn from various interested groups, will assist and guide the Surgeon General in formulation of policies and standards for the program.

Administration at State levels will be through a single State agency and an advisory council. The State agency may be an existing agency or one established for the purpose of administering the new law.

STATE LEGISLATION

Each State, in order to participate, will be required to enact an enabling law and a hospital licensing law.

The enabling law must provide for the proper organization and administration of the State's program (sec. 623 (a)). The American Hospital Association is working with governmental agencies and the Council of State Governments in preparing a model enabling act. As soon as an enabling act is developed which the association can recommend, it will be distributed to officers of State hospital associations and will be available from the Washington Service Bureau.

Public Law 725 does not authorize Federal control over the operation of hospitals after construction is complete; it does specifically require that each State must enact legislation before July 1, 1948, establishing minimum standards of operation of hospitals constructed with Federal assistance under this law (sec. 623 (d)). A model hospital licensing law has been prepared by a special committee of the council on Government relations of the association and is now available from the Washington Service Bureau.

ITS FINANCING

Three million dollars are authorized to assist in surveys and planning. Of this, $2,350,000 have been appropriated. A later Congress may appropriate additional funds as required.

Survey and planning funds are allotted on the basis of State population. For each dollar put up by the Federal Government, $2 must be furnished by the State (sec. 613).

Seventy-five million dollars annually for 5 years are authorized for construction grants. No appropriation for construction has yet been made by the Congress. Construction funds will be allotted according to population and the per capita income of the States, weighted so that States with lower per capita incomes are allotted higher amounts per capita. Each dollar of Federal funds must be matched by $2 from the project applicant (sec. 625 (b)).

[1] Section numbers refer to sections of the act.

Church and other nonprofit organizations in many States will find that constitutional or statutory provisions prohibit their receiving funds through the State's disbursing agency. Public Law 725 provides that under such conditions the Federal funds can be paid directly and the State agency need only certify for compliance (sec. 625 (b)).

THE SURVEY AND PLANNING PROGRAM

In order that a State may participate, it must set up a single State agency and an advisory council to consult with the State agency in surveys and planning. This, in most States, will require enabling legislation, but in some States survey programs have been started under executive order of the governor.

The designated State agency then applies to the Surgeon General for funds to cover one-third of the cost of its survey program.

The groundwork for surveys has been completed in many of the States where groups working with the Commission on Hospital Care have outlined and begun State-wide surveys. These will usually be carried forward by the designated State agency.

From the inventories, plans for a State-wide construction program will be made. The State agency will submit the State plan to the Surgeon General. If the plan complies fully with the regulations drawn up by the Surgeon General and the Federal Hospital Council it will be approved. If the Surgeon General rejects a plan the State agency may appeal to the Federal Hospital Council and that Council may uphold or veto the original ruling. (Sec. 623 (b).)

THE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

As a first step for this phase of the program a State must again designate a single State agency—to administer the construction program. The agency may be the same as the survey agency or a new agency may be selected. This, also, will require State enabling legislation.

Applicants for individual projects may apply for Federal assistance for construction of any project, provided it is part of the approved State-wide construction program (State plan). (Sec. 625.)

Application forms for construction funds may be received from the State agency after construction funds are appropriated by Congress. (It is expected that Congress will make the appropriations by early spring and such action as well as other events significant to the program will be reported in hospitals.) The application will be submitted to the State agency for approval and will then be recommended to the Surgeon General. Should the Surgeon General refuse approval of any project which is part of a State plan, the State agency may appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Upon final approval of the project, Federal funds for one-third of the cost of construction will be allotted, and will be paid in installments as work progresses.

IN SUMMATION

The Office of the Surgeon General will:

1. With the approval of the Federal Hospital Council, draw up complete regulations for administering the law (sec. 622 and sec. 633).

2. Approve State plans and applications for funds for surveys and planning (sec. 623).

3. Approve individual applications for construction projects (sec. 625).

The States will:

1. Pass enabling legislation to set up:

(a) A single State agency to conduct the surveys and planning.

(b) A single State agency (or the same) to administer the construction program (sec. 612 and sec. 623).

(c) An advisory council to consult with the State agency (sec. 612 and sec. 623).

2. Pass a hospital licensing law by July 1, 1948, providing for minimum standards of operation for hospitals and related facilities constructed as part of the Federal grant-in-aid program (sec. 623).

The State agency will:

1. Administer the program with the assistance of the State advisory council in accordance with Federal regulations (sec. 612 and sec. 623).

2. Complete survey work and develop a State plan for construction (sec. 623).

3. Accept applications for construction and forward these to the Surgeon General if they are approved as part of the State plan (sec. 625).

4. Inspect projects and certify payment of installments from Federal funds (sec. 625).

The individual project applicant should:

1. Consult with the State agency to plan its project so that it is in accord with a State-wide plan (sec. 622).

2. Submit application for construction funds, in accord with the State plan and the Federal regulations, to the State agency for approval and recommendation to the Surgeon General. The application should contain:

(a) A description of the site for the project;

(b) Reasonable assurance that the title to the site is or will be vested solely in the applicant;

(c) Plans and specifications which comply with Federal regulations;

(d) Reasonable assurance that adequate financial support will be available for two-thirds of the cost of constructing the project and for its maintenance and operation when completed;

(e) Reasonable assurance of the payment of prevailing wages for construction work; and

(f) Assurance of compliance with requirements of the State plan and regulations concerning the availability of hospital services without discrimination on account of race, creed, or color, and for persons unable to pay, as well as assurance of compliance with State minimum requirements for operation and maintenance (sec. 625).

HILL-BURTON BILL NOT SOCIALIZED MEDICINE

The Hill-Burton bill is not socialized medicine, nor is it considered a step in that direction. It does not provide that the Federal Government shall build hospitals or control them. It does provide that the hospital construction in each State shall be under State control. It provides that in each State an advisory council, composed of citizens who represent a cross section of the community, including doctors and hospital administrators, will advise with the State agency in developing a program that will put new hospitals in the areas where they are most needed in the State. Federal money is not distributed on the basis of political patronage.

NECESSARY APPROPRIATIONS

The Hill-Burton bill authorizes five annual appropriations of $75,000,000 each, to assist the States in developing a medical-care program. The first fiscal year of this program will end June 30, 1947. No funds have been appropriated for the first fiscal year. Perhaps it is not necessary that they should be, since most of the States are surveying their needs as provided and required under the bill.

But at the end of the second fiscal year the Hill-Burton bill authorizes $150,000,000 to be appropriated. Yet the President's Budget requests only $50,000,000 as an appropriation to include the first and second years.

Perhaps the program will not get under way any faster. The $50,000,000 recommended may be all that is needed at this stage. However, it would seem that this question should be carefully examined and a definite reason set forth as to why $50,000,000 is sufficient to meet a $150,000,000 planned program. My opinion is that each Member of the House should determine what progress is being made in his own State and when his State will need the full annual allotment.

SEVERAL STATES HAVE COMPLETED PLANS

My closing remarks are not selfish, as you recall my honest efforts to present an over-all picture; but North Carolina, like several other States, is at the crossroads on this hospital and medical-care program. These States have provided from their own funds plus Federal grants and have completed the planning program as will be revealed by convincing data which I have and will insert in the RECORD.

The legislatures in various States are at this very time beginning to set in motion appropriations from the States to qualify under the hospital construction part of the bill.

STATE PROGRAMS IN JEOPARDY

Yet, if this Congress refuses to support the recommendation of the President, or even go beyond, the program in the various States, including countless small towns and communities throughout this land where the citizenship has raised thousands and millions of dollars to take advantage of the provisions of the Hill-Burton Act, will be placed in jeopardy.

NORTH CAROLINA 5-YEAR HEALTH PLAN

If North Carolina was not taking steps to protect and improve the health of her people by providing an adequate health program, frankly I would be ashamed to open up the record and address the House today.

At this time the North Carolina Legislature is in session and is being asked to provide for a $48,000,000 medical-care program, within $2,000,000 of the Federal recommendation for all States, and I believe the greater part, if not all, of the program will be enacted into law.

Your attention is directed to my remarks which follow, which I will not describe in detail, outlining a 5-year health plan, 1947–51, sponsored by the North Carolina Medical Care Commission; this survey and suggested plans having been made possible by the cooperative efforts between the State and the Federal Government.

FIVE-YEAR PLAN, 1947–51, NORTH CAROLINA MEDICAL CARE COMMISSION

For building, first, new general hospitals; second, health—medical—centers; and enlargement of existing hospital facilities.

One hundred counties in State.

Seven new hospitals in what might be termed "rural counties."

Twenty-three modern health centers—these centers being removed from urban areas.

Eleven hospital districts.

When erected these additional facilities will provide for 7,200 additional beds in the State, distributed as follows:

One thousand five hundred beds to mental hospitals, plus 3,374 additional beds, if the State acquires United States Camp Butner, Durham.

Seven hundred beds to tuberculosis hospitals.

Four hundred beds to medical health centers.

Four hundred beds to university teaching hospital.

Four thousand two hundred beds to be distributed on basis of need to new hospitals and for enlargement of existing hospitals.

THE PEOPLE'S HEALTH IS A NATIONAL PROBLEM

My contention is that this subject of good health cannot be restricted by race or by geography. Like many other States, North Carolina's No. 1 problem at this time is to seek better health for its citizenship. There is no iron curtain surrounding this State. One million five hundred thousand citizens from every State in the Union visited free of charge the Great Smoky Mountain National Park during the 1946 season, with over 2,000,000 expected this year. We have in the universities and colleges of North Carolina more students from the North, East, and Middle West than any State south of a line beginning on the southern boundary of the State of Pennsylvania extending westward to Kansas.

While each State must first shoulder the responsibility in the improvement of the general health of its people I contend that our national economy and welfare, as well as our National Defense, is now so closely linked together that the health and welfare of the people of North Carolina, as well as that of Arizona, Michigan, Ohio, New York, Georgia, Louisiana, Oklahoma is tied closely to and concerns the health and welfare of every State in the Union, economically and socially.

To support that contention consider these economical reasons:

Years ago in the days of the buggy and wagon the citizens of my State purchased these vehicles in Winston-Salem and other points within North Carolina. Today we send our money to Michigan for cars, trucks, and tractors; to Ohio for tires and tubes, to the Middle West for fine farming machinery; we trade on the New York, Chicago, and New Orleans stock exchange.

What are some of the social reasons? A plague in North Carolina, Florida, Mississippi, Maine, can be planted in Oregon or Washington within 12 hours. Thousands of fine lads from every section of the country were stationed in Army camps in my county and throughout the South, hundreds and hundreds of them married Southern girls, and conversely young men from the South went North and West and married girls in those areas.

All this means the breaking down of so-called State lines, the South, the North, the East, the West, and I am glad to see that day arrive.

But it imposes a problem healthwise since surely these families will from this day henceforth be closer drawn together.

Another reason to support my contention that this subject of health poses a national cooperative effort, I point out that we combined our efforts and created the atomic bomb, won a ghastly war, and we will never change the Selective Service indictment until we combine our efforts and place the power of this Government behind a great health program.

THE AVERAGE MAN WATCHING THIS CONGRESS

The average man in the smaller and rural communities of this Nation, where over 21 percent of the people live, who vote and in so many cases think alike, and who seemed to have been forgotten, are watching this Congress. The people in these communities do not understand and may not be greatly concerned with reciprocal trade agreements, tariff techniques, budgetary controls, freight rates, but they understand what mental deficiency, hernia, and syphilis mean.

CUT THE BUDGET WISELY

My closing plea, this House must cut the Budget wisely, so as not to penalize the essential services of this Government.

I ask, too, that each Member of the House study the health of the people of your State, contact the State survey director in your State, whose name is listed within the body of my remarks, to determine what progress is being made, and get behind this Hill-Burton bill. Remember that in this presentation I have dealt only with the youth. I tremble to think what the record would be if we included the old and very young.

Surely, from a selfish point of view it is not fair for the great State of Kansas to furnish a larger percentage of its youth for the miltary draft than North Carolina.

Surely, we will not face the possibility of another war and see 5,000,000 proud, young Americans, a great reservoir of manpower for national defense, rejected because of physical and mental handicaps.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BONNER. I commend the gentleman highly on the splendid presentation he has made here, particularly that part which deals with the great movement in North Carolina to improve the health of the citizens of North Carolina and all those who may sojourn in that State.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE] is recognized for 15 minutes.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, slightly more than 5 years ago, on Opana, a lonely Hawaiian hill, two enlisted Army technicians were delayed from their breakfast by transportation which failed to arrive. They climbed back into the trailer which housed the aircraft warning equipment they had been operating for the past 3 months. For lack of anything better to do, they turned on the equipment and watched the indicating screen which, during the months they had been observing it, had failed to indicate anything out of the ordinary. But this morning was to be different. This was Sunday morning. This was December 7, 1941.

We know now the story of what happened. Suddenly the indicator sprang to life. Little pips jumped across the screen—pips of light which signaled the approach of many aircraft. More than 100 miles away, the pips became Japanese aircraft—bombers and fighters, bound for Hawaii.

Frantically, one of the men yelled a warning into a field telephone. That warning, as we well know, failed to take root in fertile ground. The day that will live in infamy recorded itself in history.

History also is the story of how our professional fighting forces—prepared, perhaps, for a battle, but certainly not a war—rushed to the job of putting out the conflagration; a conflagration which grew until it threatened to engulf us all. That conflagration brought men and women from all walks of life rushing to the assistance of the professional fighters. After a desperate and costly struggle, it finally was brought under control. The men and women who survived returned to their homes and their work, to the old problems of civilian life, leaving the professional forces to guard the smoldering embers. World statesmen met to author a program to prevent those embers ever from bursting again, not only in our time, but in any man's time. With the memory and the scars of the holocaust fresh in our minds, we, as a Nation, firmly resolved that this program would be carried out.

Yet—and historians may look back on this moment as unbelievable—with permanent peace still a goal waiting to be won, we here in Congress are debating a proposition to emasculate the only effective instrument at our disposal which will assure the attainment and maintenance of that goal.

Once more, the indicators of danger are jumping across the screen. Once again, the field phone is ringing. Once more, the warnings are being sounded. History will record whether or not they fall on fertile ground. It is imperative on this occasion that they do, lest a world-wide Pearl Harbor jeopardize the future of our civilization.

Our military leaders warn that the proposed action to cut appropriations for national defense at this time is an open invitation to disaster. Yet there are men among us who choose to ignore that warning. I do not choose to be one of those men. Let the names of those who do ignore it be broadcast to the Nation. Let their names be known to the millions of Americans who fought for a new world as men who would sell them down the river for thirty pieces of silver, men who place ill-considered campaign promises above the security of the Nation.

This warning of our professional military leaders is no hysterical appeal dictated by false emotion. This appeal is dictated by stark, fearsome fact presented by the only men who are fully aware of the precarious position in which the proposed action would place our armed forces, and thus our national security. These are men of unquestioned integrity and ability. These men have no political ax to grind. They merely are charged with the preservation of our way of life.

Who are these men? What are their warnings? What could be lost if the warnings are ignored? Examine the answers to these questions in the cold light of the present world situation. Then pass judgment.

These men, the leaders of our military forces and the head of our Department of State, tell us that a further cut of the national defense budget invites disaster. Their names are indelibly stamped in the memory of every true American—Eisenhower, Marshall, MacArthur, Forrestal, Patterson, Spaatz, Nimitz, and many others. These are the men who guided this Nation through its most desperate hour. They are men who have no allegiance to any political platform, although several would be acceptable to either political party as a Presidential candidate were they of a mind to accept. These men already are faced with a tremendous task and the minimum machinery with which to accomplish it. Now they are to be placed on the altar by the Budget hatchetmen to chop their meager forces further, not in the interest of world peace but to facilitate the meeting of campaign promises. Their warning may be summed up in three words—"invitation to disaster."

Do not make a mockery of their warnings. Do not make these men the Billy Mitchells of our time.

What could be some of the results of this proposed cut?

First, there is the problem of carrying out our vital occupation mission, the success of which must be assured if world peace is to become a reality. Secretary Patterson tells us that our funds and the strength of our occupation troops in Europe and in the Far East are presently at the lowest level consistent with performance of the mission. Yet we propose to make necessary a reduction of 100,000 men in the over-all strength of the Army and further, a reduction in funds needed to feed the already near-starving people of the American-occupied areas. That such action would be an invitation to disaster is not merely my personal belief. General MacArthur and General Eisenhower tell us the same thing in plain, simple language.

What about our Navy? Secretary Forrestal has told us in plain words what the proposed cut would mean: our Navy would be immobilized. To his words of warning have been added those of Admiral Nimitz.

Our Air Forces, which will receive approximately 58 percent of the funds budgeted to the War Department, would be forced to absorb a staggering setback.

Both General Arnold and General Spaatz have told us repeatedly that a 70-group Air Force is the minimum force necessary to meet our interim peacetime requirements. Budget cuts to date have already whittled that program down to 55 groups and those at only 80-percent strength. Now we propose another reduction which would slice the program to 35 groups, of which only 3 would be available within the continental limits of this country.

Perhaps even more important is the fact that research and development programs will be seriously curtailed. General Spaatz warns that, with such funds curtailed, we can expect to have a second-rate Air Force in 3 to 5 years. A second-rate Air Force, we all know, is no better than none at all in this atomic age. We can stock pile atomic bombs but we cannot stock pile an air force. New planes do not grow on bushes. Research and development is a slow and costly process. None of the planes with which we fought World War II were developed after hostilities began. The B–29, for example, went on the drawing boards in 1938.

This example of what could happen to our air forces applies to the other branches of the military organization as well. It will mean having not only a second-rate air force, but a second-rate military establishment throughout.

But, most important of all, with our armed forces budgeted into impotency, our diplomats will be seriously handicapped in their peace negotiations with the rest of the world. We cannot bargain effectively with the world if we are not prepared to back up our statements any more than a man can expect to win at cards if his opponent holds all the trumps. Our diplomats have too few trumps as it is; do not weaken their hand further. Remember, eloquence and logic alone cannot win world arguments.

Add to all this even further curtailment of our vital Reserve training programs, procurement of new equipment, abandonment of vital bases. All these are items of major importance. Previous reductions have already eliminated the minor items.

I would question the wisdom of a bank president of an already inadequately guarded bank who would fire guards to obtain additional funds to redecorate his bank. Today I question the wisdom of this proposal to cut national-defense funds so that we might reduce income taxes.

We must find a means of picking the fruit without cutting down the tree.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1947

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, we pray for the Members of this body in their several responsibilities. Help them in their offices, in committees, and, above all, as they meet here in legislative session. May they never forget that what is said and done here is not done in a corner, but always under Thy scrutiny. May they feel the weight of their responsibility before Thee, and remember the influence of a good example, that all who come to this place may have a stronger faith in government of the people, by the people, for the people. May the Senators so speak and act that all who wait upon them and serve them may be inspired, rather than disillusioned, by what they see and hear and are asked to do. Lord Jesus, make Thyself real to these men, that each may feel Thee sitting beside him, and hear Thy voice, and win Thine approval in all things. So help them, God, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, February 17, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, notified the Senate that, pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 101, Eightieth Congress, the Speaker had appointed Mr. BISHOP and Mrs. NORTON members of the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers on the part of the House.

The message announced that the House had passed without amendment the following joint resolutions of the Senate:

S. J. Res. 4. Joint resolution relating to the salaries of certain Senate employees; and

S. J. Res. 24. Joint resolution providing for a more effective staff organization for standing committees of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1030) to continue in effect certain war excise tax rates, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. KNUTSON, Mr. REED of New York, Mr. GEARHART, Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania, Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. COOPER, and Mr. DINGELL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

BELL NOTICE TO COMMITTEES OF SENATE SESSIONS

Mr. BROOKS. I desire to make an announcement, Mr. President, of certain action taken this morning by the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, no committee has authority to sit during sessions of the Senate without the consent of the Senate. Because of delay in closing committee meetings and the inability of Members to reach the Senate Chamber promptly, a suggestion was presented to the Committee on Rules and Administration, which was unanimously adopted, that henceforth there shall be a new system of bells, as follows:

At 15 minutes before 12 o'clock, or any other designated hour of meeting of the Senate, there shall be one long bell announcing the 15-minute period, and at the immediate opening of the session there shall be another bell.

This will be of assistance to committee members in clearing their offices and closing the hearings, so that the committees may abide by the provisions of the Reorganization Act and their members may be available on the floor of the Senate at the time of its opening.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE HEARING DURING SESSION OF THE SENATE

Mr. REED. Mr. President, under the provision of Senate Resolution 47, a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has been holding hearings on the critical freight-car situation. We are now in about our seventh or eighth day of hearings. There are present this afternoon some witnesses who came from New York, New England, and more distant points. As chairman of the subcommittee, I ask unanimous consent to proceed with the hearing this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and the consent is granted.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BARKLEY ON NOMINATION OF DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the body of the RECORD at this point a brief statement which I issued yesterday concerning the nomination of David E. Lilienthal to be Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR ALBEN W. BARKLEY

I regret that the nomination of David E. Lilienthal has aroused so much controversy, and I especially regret the grounds upon which it has been aroused.

As I see it, the question before us is not whether any one of us, if in a position to do so, would have appointed him to this position. The question is whether by experience, character, and general fitness he is qualified for the important post of Chairman of the Atomic Commission.

In my opinion, he is abundantly qualified. He has administered the affairs of the Tennessee Valley Authority with outstanding success. Before he became its Chairman he was a member of the Board of Directors. His services there were generally regarded as being of a high character.

The report and work of the Secretary of State's Committee on Atomic Energy, of which Mr. Lilienthal was Chairman, have been generally accepted by the country as sound and substantial.

I am under no personal or political obligation to Mr. Lilienthal. During his long tenure in connection with the Tennessee Valley Authority he never did me a personal or political favor. So far as I know, though I live within 20 miles of the largest dam in the Tennessee Valley, he never appointed any person to any employment on my recommendation.

The charge that he is a Communist seems to me to be wholly unfounded. It has become fashionable to accuse a man of being a Communist or of having Communist leanings if he entertains liberal or progressive views concerning government or society. By any such standard Jefferson, Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, and Franklin D. Roosevelt would have been barred from public office.

I cannot follow such a dogma. I shall therefore vote to confirm Mr. Lilienthal. I recognize the right of the Senate to reject this nomination or any other nomination sent to it by the President. But I fear that Mr. Lilienthal's rejection for any of the reasons thus far given would reflect upon the Senate more than upon him.

ADMINISTRATION OF VETERANS' PREFERENCE ACT

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD Resolution No. 11 adopted by the Federal Employees Veterans Association, relating to an investigation of the operation and administration of the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Civil Service, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas it is believed that in the demotion and furloughing of employees of the association that there has been unjust discrimination against veterans entitled to preference under the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944, and that there has been undue delay in the adjudication of appeals from such demotions and furloughing by the Civil Service Commission; and

Whereas the United States Civil Service Commission has in a number of cases made decisions favorable to the veteran employees but claims or pretends that it has no authority to compel the department or agencies to reinstate the veteran employee to the position from which he was unlawfully demoted or furloughed; and

Whereas because of the long delay in the matter of making decisions, the red tape involved, the veteran employees have been unable to ascertain their status which does not improve the efficiency or the morale of the employees; and

Whereas a number of department and agency officials who are charged by law with employment and supervision of personnel have manifested a hostile attitude to all veterans, and are in fact prejudiced against veterans because of the preference which they have under the law: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Federal Employees Veterans Association, of Philadelphia, Pa., at its regular meeting this 4th day of February 1947, That we protest to the Congress of the United States concerning the conditions herein mentioned; and be it further

Resolved, That we request the Congress of the United States to enact legislation limiting the time in which the Government departments and agencies may appeal from the decisions of the Civil Service Commission, and making provision in such legislation for a court review de novo of any such decisions adverse to a veteran employee, with penalties provided for any violations of all veterans' preference acts, and providing that in certain instances that the United States district attorneys appear for said veteran employees, and in establishing uniform rules and regulations in the matter of such appeals to the Civil Service Commission, one of which regulations should provide that any furlough, demotion, or discharge of any veteran employee shall be stayed pending final disposition of the matter on appeal within Civil Service Commission and requiring the administrative heads of the departments or agencies to obey the decisions of the Civil Service Commission; and be it further

Resolved, That we request the Civil Service Committees of the Congress of the United States to fully investigate the conditions herein mentioned and make a sweeping investigation of the operation and administration of the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944, not only as to the agencies covered by our members but as to its operation in all of the departments and agencies of the Government.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION IN MANITOWOC, WIS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, great occasions in the life of a city or a locality, which symbolize America's past, present, and future, are always worthy of note. In this connection I call attention to the fact that the year 1947 marks the centennial of the establishment in the city of Manitowoc, Wis., of the shipbuilding industry and the Rahr Malting Co.

In these 100 years of growth from small beginnings, both the Manitowoc Shipyards and the Rahr Malting Co. have never had a labor strike. What an outstanding message this fact holds for all Americans—a message of the value of work as a means of insuring an ever higher standard of living for our people.

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that Manitowoc Harbor is universally recognized as one of the outstanding harbors on the Great Lakes. The Manitowoc shipyards made an outstanding contribution to the winning of both World Wars I and II, especially in view of the fact that in the war just concluded, for the first time in the history of the United States, ocean-going submarines were built at an inland port—the Manitowoc River.

I believe that this splendid dual centennial should receive all the fine recognition which it deserves, and, in this connection, I ask that a resolution adopted recently by the Manitowoc County Historical Society be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the year A. D. 1947 marks the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment in the city of Manitowoc, Wis., of the shipbuilding industry and the Rahr Malting Co., the latter still owned and operated by the same family, each having, down through the years, advanced and kept pace with the most improved and most modern American methods, each having, from a small, modest, humble beginning, grown and expanded into an industry and an institution of national and international recogition and renown, each constituting an epoch, as it were, an important, outstanding epoch, in our county's history, living monuments of human progress, each achieving its goal the hard way, on the difficult road, the courageous, fearless, persistent effort and spirit of free and fearless men in free America and demonstrating beyond all doubt, right here in our own community, that American democracy still lives and works, each having for over a century been an important, outstanding, active, living, advancing part of our community's life and progress, each ever holding high the banner inscribed "Let freedom ring. Yes; let it ring, but, also, let freedom live and work"; and

Whereas Manitowoc County has a right to be proud of its history and its heritage, the progress of its industries and institutions and the success of its citizens, for all too often do we fail to appreciate, to commemorate, to celebrate the same, and the taking of an inventory of the past and a look into the future, will do us no harm, but may bring us new hopes and aspirations, new ideas and ideals for the many tasks that still lie ahead for all of us, individually and collectively. By honoring them we honor ourselves, for we are an inseparable part of that self-same community: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Manitowoc County Historical Society in annual meeting assembled this 28th day of January, 1947, That Manitowoc County as a whole fittingly, impressively and historically commemorate and celebrate these two notable historical events and such others as may in due time be brought to our attention and that proper plans be formulated, arrangements made and committees appointed with a view toward having all interests, departments and agencies of the entire county, both private and public, actively cooperate and participate, for the education, enlightenment, inspiration and general welfare of all the people of Manitowoc County, making it an effective, impressive, worth-while project as befits Manitowoc County, also marking the forty-first anniversary of the Manitowoc County Historical Society, now permanently established in a house it can call its own, through the generosity of Mrs. Reinhardt Rahr and family and the foresight and tenacity of Mr. J. G. Johnson; be it further

Resolved, That all individuals, industries, businesses, institutions and projects and the like that have reached or will reach the century mark in the year A. D. 1947 communicate that fact with all available information to J. G. Johnson, president of the Manitowoc County Historical Society, care of Rahr Civic Center, Eighth and Park Streets, Manitowoc, Wis., as soon as possible, so that the same can be included in the aforesaid centennial celebration, in effect commemorating a full century of Manitowoc County progress, all together furnishing, if properly dramatized, an invaluable example, stimulus, and inspiration to present and future generations. In short, a century of progress joined with the world of tomorrow; be it further

Resolved, That all individuals, industries, institutions, projects and the like about to reach the century mark in 1948 and thereafter be requested to notify the Manitowoc County Historical Society from time to time far enough in advance so that plans for proper observance thereof can be made in due time.

"Every home has a history—even a peasant's hut," said Bulwer-Lytton. "The perfect historian is he in whose work the character and spirit of an age is exhibited in miniature"; said Macaulay. It always has been and may it continue to be the aim and purpose of the Manitowoc County Historical Society, so far as possible, to be the alert, the practical, the loyal, the perfect historian of Manitowoc County.

BILLS RELATING TO THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, there have been presented to me proposed bills by the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion relating to universal military training. I am asking permission to introduce these bills at this time. The one from the Legion I will introduce first. It is entitled "To provide for the national security of the Nation by requiring that all qualified young men undergo a period of training."

The title of the bill submitted by the Veterans of Foreign Wars is a little longer, but it covers the same subject. I introduce them both at this time.

The bills introduced by Mr. GURNEY (by request) were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Armed Services, as follows:

S. 651. A bill to provide for the national security of the Nation by requiring that all qualified young men undergo a period of training; and

S. 652. A bill to provide for the national security of the Nation by requiring that all qualified young men undergo a period of military, naval, or air training for the common defense.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, the National Guard Association of the United States has asked that I introduce four bills, which they would like to have the Congress consider.

The bills introduced by Mr. GURNEY (by request) were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Armed Services, as follows:

S. 653. A bill to provide for the distribution of nonappropriated moneys derived from the operation of officers' clubs of the Army of the United States;

S. 654. A bill to provide for the construction of armories, warehouses, and other storage facilities and the maintenance of same upon an equitable basis;

S. 655. A bill to reduce the age of enlistment in the National Guard from 18 to 17 years in order to conform to the Army and Navy; and

S. 656. A bill to create an Officers' Corps, Army of the United States, to which may be assigned all officers except Regular Army officers, making them available in peace or war as officers of the Army of the United States rather than as Officers' Reserve Corps and National Guard of the United States, and making all Reserve officers available for service within any component of the Army of the United States.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I introduce another bill, which was introduced in the previous session of Congress, and was not considered by the committee.

The bill (S. 657) to provide that service as a cadet, midshipman, or aviation cadet shall be credited for pay purposes, and that service as a cadet or midshipman shall be credited for retirement purposes, in the case of military and naval personnel, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

PREPARATION OF NEW EDITION OF ANNOTATED UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution authorizing the preparation of a new edition of the annotated Constitution of the United States of America. The last such edition was published in 1938, and it proved an invaluable guide to all students of constitutional law. I suggest, through this joint resolution, that the previous volume be revised and extended to include annotations of decisions of the Supreme Court prior to January 1, 1948. This new volume will then be printed in the Government Printing Office as a Senate document, as was the previous volume.

I need hardly point out the tremendous importance of insuring an adequate understanding of the United States Constitution among our citizenry and, in particular, in our Congress itself. I would be the last person in this great body to suggest that appropriations be expended for the printing of any document unless I fervently believed that such printing is vitally necessary. But I believe that the sum of $35,000 which would be expended by the Library of Congress in preparing this work, would repay itself manyfold, and I might add that this is a conservative sum that has been asked for this vast undertaking.

William E. Gladstone, as my colleagues will recall, said:

The American Constitution is the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man.

Thomas Jefferson wrote:

The Constitution * * * is unquestionably the wisest ever yet presented to men.

Printing of this revised volume, then, seems but a small but worthy measure to insure wide understanding and familiarity with constitutional law.

I ask that the joint resolution be appropriately referred.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 69) to prepare a revised edition of the Annotated Constitution of the United States of America as published in 1938 as Senate Document No. 232 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MAJOR GENERAL'S COMMISSION FOR THE LATE COL. WILLIAM MITCHELL

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution authorizing the President to issue posthumously to the late Col. William Mitchell a commission as major general in the United States Army, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate for not to exceed 10 minutes on the subject of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin that he be permitted to address the Senate for 10 minutes? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Wisconsin may proceed for 10 minutes.

AMERICA MUST HONOR BILLY MITCHELL

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, today is the eleventh anniversary of the death of one of America's greatest heroes, an immortal son of my own State of Wisconsin, a prophet, pioneer, and martyr, Brig. Gen. William L. (Billy) Mitchell. On this sad anniversary I am introducing again a measure of which I have sought enactment, beginning in 1941, in the Seventy-seventh Congress, and extending through the Seventy-eighth and Seventy-ninth Congresses. This measure would elevate General Mitchell, who was "busted" to a colonelcy by a blind, brass hat court martial, to the rank of major general, as of the date of his death in 1936.

I shall continue to fight for this measure until it is enacted by Congress, and I trust that this fight will be concluded successfully in the Eightieth Congress.

AVIATION IMPORTANCE

It seems particularly appropriate that this joint resolution be introduced at this time in view of the increased importance which might be given to aerial power under the proposed armed services merger plan recently agreed to by military and navy officials. It was Billy Mitchell, of course, who pioneered in the development of air power and who championed it against the land-stuck generals and the rowboat admirals.

MILITARY BUDGET

It is fitting, too, that this measure be introduced in the light of the current controversy over proposed reduction of military expenses as a part of the reduced national budget.

It seems to me that we have become so involved in the question, "How much money for military appropriations?" that we have lost sight of the more important question, "What will the military appropriations be used for?" That is the question Billy Mitchell would have asked. Will the taxpayers' money be spent for "squads right" training, for teaching navy recruits how to tie knots, or will it be spent on guided missile research, on airborne troops training, on bacteriological defense, on radioactive disease research and other present-day needs? Let the Army and the Navy prove that money for which they are asking is being spent for atomic-age preparations rather than for nineteenth century "popgun" warfare.

THE NEED FOR THIS JOINT RESOLUTION

The purpose of this joint resolution is not merely to add an honor to a man who has already been honored by the love and respect of his countrymen. It is not to be a mere formal gesture to one who has now gone on ahead in the great journey we all have to take. Rather, the purpose of the resolution is to declare resoundingly to the brass hats, who have three times prevented the resolution's enactment, that America intends to liberate itself from their fossilized approach to national defense.

Mr. President, I used advisedly the term "fossilized approach to national defense." We remember the French in the last World War, when they had the Maginot line. They thought they had the answer. They were blind, even as we were blind at the same time.

The greatest honor that we can do to Billy Mitchell is not merely by passing a joint resolution of this sort, necessary as it is, but by erecting a national defense attuned to the atomic age, a national defense of adequate push-button plans for the push-button atomic and bacteriological warfare that will come unless the nations of earth, through the United Nations, can achieve a just and lasting peace.

As indication of the fact that the purpose of this joint resolution is not merely to honor Mitchell, but to constitute a guidepost to the new American concept of security, I repeat now words which I said on June 21, 1940, even before I then introduced a similar measure:

If we are really to vindicate Mitchell, we must erect a monument to his memory in the sacred shrine of a new concept of security.

On May 20, 1941, I said:

I am introducing a bill, not only for the Billy Mitchell who has gone but for the countless host of Billy Mitchells who are yet to come.

I call attention to the fact that that was months before we entered World War II.

By that, I meant the young aviators, the young scientists, the young technicians, who will want to modernize American security plans, but who may be stepped on by brass hats, as Billy Mitchell was.

On June 7, 1941, speaking in Milwaukee on this subject, I said:

We must scrap outmoded ideas, red tape, and mossback thinking. We must insist on open minds, receptive to new ideas. We must slough off the dead timber in our military system. We cannot follow our outmoded thinking of yesterday.

Mr. President, that language was used in 1941 but it is pertinent today.

HISTORY OF MEASURE

I now desire to discuss the history of this movement.

In the Seventy-seventh Congress, on May 20, 1941, I introduced a resolution for the restoration of Billy Mitchell's rank of brigadier general. The resolution passed the Senate so late that it died in the House. Again in the Seventy-eighth Congress, on January 7, 1943, I reintroduced the resolution. Once again the Senate adopted it and especially honored itself by conferring on Billy Mitchell the rank of major general, but again the resolution failed in the House. On February 19, 1945, the ninth anniversary of Mitchell's death, I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 34. Again this measure passed the Senate unanimously, but again it died in the House Military Affairs Committee.

GENERAL MAC ARTHUR'S ENDORSEMENT

This was in spite of the fact that General MacArthur, in November 1945, wrote me, endorsing the measure. It had been intimated in some quarters that passage of the Mitchell resolution would embarrass General MacArthur. I recalled, however, that, exactly to the contrary, General Mitchell was a devoted friend of Douglas MacArthur, and that it had been reported that General MacArthur, who served on Mitchell's court martial, had cast the lone dissenting vote against the guilty verdict. General MacArthur confirmed this, as follows:

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: Thank you very much for the many kind and generous expressions contained in your letter which has just reached me.

I was one of Billy Mitchell's most intimate and devoted friends from the beginning to the end. Our families came from the same spot, Milwaukee, and enjoyed the most cordial intimacy for many decades. Your recollection of my part in his trial is entirely correct. It was fully known to him and he never ceased to express his gratitude for my attitude. It would be ridiculous for anyone to say that any posthumous honors that might be granted him would be embarrassing to me. He was a rare genius in his profession and contributed much to aviation history.

I know nothing of the discussion involved in your resolution, but do know that any part I played in his career should have no bearing whatsoever on the matter.

Out here we are making excellent progress. With renewed expressions of thanks and appreciation.

Very faithfully,

DOUGLAS MACARTHUR.

RELATED LEGISLATION

I call attention to the fact that the Seventy-ninth Congress passed Private Law No. 884, which authorized the President of the United States to award posthumously in the name of Congress, a Medal of Honor to Billy Mitchell in recognition of his outstanding pioneer service and foresight in the field of American military aviation.

The medal was directed to be transmitted to William Mitchell, Jr., son of General Mitchell.

If Congress believes, as it did believe through passage of Private Law No. 884, that this great departed hero is worthy of a Medal of Honor, surely it believes that a similar military honor, elevation of Mitchell's rank, is befitting this immortal American.

In order to make sure that the hidden brass-hat influences, which have previously exerted themselves against this proposal do not again succeed in blocking it, I recently wrote to General Eisenhower, for whom I have the greatest respect and admiration, asking for his reaction. General Eisenhower stated:

I personally know of no reason why this measure should not be enacted.

He restated the previous War Department position, recommending the enactment of this joint resolution with this amendment:

SEC. 3. No person shall be entitled to receive any bonus, gratuity, pay, allowances, or other financial benefit by virtue of the enactment of this joint resolution.

This amendment is entirely acceptable because it was never intended, through this joint resolution, to confer any financial benefits.

Several months ago one of our former associates, the present distinguished Judge Bennett C. Clark called me up and said, "Senator, what has become of the medal that the Congress voted for Billy Mitchell?" I said, "I presume the medal has already been struck off and presented."

"No," he said, "no medal conforming to the resolution of the House and the Senate has been struck off; in fact, the son of the deceased has never received the medal."

Ah, Mr. President, it is about time we look into some of these things, to ascertain who is running the show. How about the power of the legislative branch of Government?

Judge Bennett Clark said, "It is a shame. I will take it up with the President. The President has funds, perhaps he will see to it that adequate funds are appropriated to pay for this medal."

I saw Bennett Clark a month or so afterward, and he had no information concerning it.

All I am asking in this joint resolution, Mr. President, is what I asked 7 years ago and what the Senate has granted unanimously three times, but the House Committee on Military Affairs, because of certain influences, has not acted. I think the time has come when there should be no question about the prerogatives and power of the legislative branch of the Government.

PROPRIETY OF JOINT RESOLUTION

Some question may arise whether a joint resolution, such as this, is allowed under the Legislative Reorganization Act, Public Law 601 of the Seventy-ninth Congress. Section 131 of that law states that:

No private bill or resolution * * * and no amendment to any bill or resolution, authorizing or directing * * * (3) the correction of a military or naval record, shall be received or considered in either the Senate or the House of Representatives.

I call attention to the fact that, in the opinion of the legislative counsel, this resolution does not correct a military record in that it does not raise General Mitchell from a colonelcy to a brigadier generalship—the rank from which he was broken; rather it elevates his rank to major general. This is not a correction; it is a promotion—a small honor in the light of General Mitchell's services to our country.

IDENTIFICATION OF BILLY MITCHELL

Mr. President, who was Billy Mitchell? The very name of this giant is his monument. Billy Mitchell, prophet, martyr, crusader, pioneer, valiant rebel against closed minds. Billy Mitchell, son of a great man whose distinguished presence filled this very Chamber. Billy Mitchell, who came up through the ranks from a private, who was the youngest American officer in the Spanish-American War, who was the first American officer under fire in World War No. 1, who was the first American flying officer to cross the German lines just 16 days after our entrance into that war, who commanded the AEF air force in France. Billy Mitchell, the seer who advocated aerial torpedoes, parachute troops, troop transport planes, heavy bombers; the realist who warned us of the Japanese peril to Alaska, the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippines, and all other foreign possessions in the Pacific; the man of his word who proved that planes could sink the mightiest dreadnaught; the man of courage who dared to blast the swivel-chair generals and rocking-chair admirals from their seats with the accusation that they were negligent in America's national defense; the man of conscience who kept faith with his young aviators by hounding the "brass hats" who gave them "flaming coffins" in which to fly and die; the man of righteous wrath who so incensed his muddle-headed gold-braid superiors that they court-martialed him, deprived him of his rank, his command, and his duty; made him forfeit all pay and allowances for 5 years and virtually forced his reluctant retirement on February 1, 1926. Billy Mitchell, the man whose warnings of America's dangers, whose colorful personality, whose fearless counsel filled American magazines and newspapers until his death more than a decade ago. Billy Mitchell, who, at last, speaking of his imminent passing, said:

I feel that it is better for me to * * * (be laid to rest) in Wisconsin, the home of my family, although I should like to be with the pilots and my comrades in Arlington.

Billy Mitchell, who is buried in Milwaukee, whence in the unforgettable spring of 1898 he had enlisted as a youth to go off to war.

In the name of this great man and in the name of adequate American defense I trust the Senate and House will pass promptly the joint resolution which I now send to the desk and for which I ask appropriate reference.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 70) authorizing the President to issue posthumously to the late Col. William Mitchell a commission as a major general, United States Army, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

CONTINUATION OF RENT CONTROL—AMENDMENT

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I submit an amendment to Senate bill 528, to continue rent control until June 30, 1948. The important part of the amendment is this:

No general increase in rents shall be granted under the authority of such act as amended, and no increase shall be granted under the authority of section 2 (b) thereof in the case of any housing accommodations unless such housing accommodations shall have been repainted, redecorated, renovated, or otherwise substantially improved.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that I see no reason why rents should be increased in cases in which the landlord has not kept up the property.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish the amendment referred to the committee in charge of the legislation?

Mr. LANGER. I do, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

The amendment submitted by Mr. LANGER intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 528) to continue rent control until June 30, 1948, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE BUDGET—AMENDMENT

Mr. KNOWLAND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bill and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred, as indicated:

H. R. 1968. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the judgment of the Congress, based upon presently available information, that revenues during the period of the fiscal year 1948 will approximate 39.1 billion dollars and that expenditures during such fiscal year should not exceed 31.5 billion dollars, of which latter amount not more than 24 billion dollars would be in consequence of appropriations hereafter made available for obligation in such fiscal year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, 17 years ago the financial affairs of the Federal Government began to slip out of control and became progressively worse thereafter. While every attempt to apply some control ended in frustration, two lessons were learned. The first was that Congress, as the appropriating authority, must have control of the purse independent of the executive branch, which spends the money. The second was that the facilities for such congressional control must be improved. As a result, there were included in the Congressional Reorganization Act noteworthy new tools with which Congress could better control Federal expenditures and fiscal policies. These fiscal-control features helped arouse widespread citizen support for the Congressional Reorganization Act.

The Congress is applying now, for the first time, the legislative budget procedure established under that act. People have looked to this legislative budget tool as the Moses to lead them from financial wildness if not wilderness. At this moment the Senate may well remember the hope and promise which attentative citizens in every State placed in this new fiscal-control facility. Judging from comments of Members of Congress, I am inclined to believe that many citizens understand the legislative budget procedure and its correct use better than do some of us in the Congress.

This legislative budget procedure is, in fact, the simple application of expenditure control which experience has taught every solvent individual, family, or government is necessary in some form.

The authority and facilities of the Federal Government to spend have been without definable limitations, other than those the Government has occasionally imposed upon itself. Therefore, it is no cause for wonder that the new legislative budget procedure instilled within the people hope that Congress would use it effectively to impose expenditure control. Just how we shall use it is the responsibility of the Congress today.

First, we must understand what the legislative budget is and what it is not. It provides simply that when the President's budget for the ensuing year is presented to Congress it shall go for study and report to the Joint Legislative Budget Committee. That committee is composed of the members of the four House and Senate committees which handle appropriations and revenue. The functions of this joint committee are to view the fiscal needs of the economy as a whole and to propose a sound fiscal policy which the Congress can adopt and to which it can adhere. The past practice has been to consider Federal expenditures for each division of Government independent of its relation to other divisions and independent of a national fiscal policy. In prescribing that over-all income and expenditure totals should be recommended, the Reorganization Act clearly did not direct that the expenditure limitation should be an arithmetical sum of predetermined amounts to be allotted to each division of Government. Rather, it directs that the total needs for Government expenditures shall be related to the other factors which should be considered in reaching an over-all fiscal policy. Among these factors are fiscal soundness, Federal debt, taxation, cost of living, inflation and deflation, and the needs of productive economy. After Government spending needs are viewed in the light of these factors, an expenditure limitation must be recommended which is the committee's best judgment for meeting all these interrelated needs. That is the responsibility which the report of the Joint Legislative Budget Committee discharges and now puts upon the Congress.

This committee report and these recommendations are not a specific official allotment of proposed spending under this limitation. Those spokesmen for the spending divisions of government who are opposing the adoption of the limitation recommended in the report on the ground that it will cripple their programs are not only out of order but are insisting, in effect, that all divisions of government be granted amounts requested in the budget so that all of them may have assurance that their requests will be granted.

After a limitation such as that which the joint committee has recommended is imposed, the expenditure needs of each division of government must be related to the spending needs of all other divisions and must be graded as to necessity. This is the first responsibility of the Appropriations Committees. Of course, a $31,500,000,000 limitation would require a substantial reduction in many of the amounts requested in the President's proposed budget. However, such a limitation subsequently would insure that the most important and necessary functions would be given prime consideration in the allotments under the limitation. One may wonder whether the first cries of imaginary harm we are hearing reveal a lack of faith in the ability of these spokesmen of the various governmental agencies to present facts to justify the amounts requested by their divisions or departments.

Before considering the needs for Government spending in the ensuing fiscal year, we must first remember the other related needs, because this first application of the new legislative budget law comes at a time when the decision of this Congress could have tragic significance. The reasons are understood by all attentive citizens. After a decade of high levels of Federal spending, financed in substantial part by mortgaging the future resources and production of the people, we have waged a war at a cost which is almost beyond comprehension.

The debt incurred in consequence of these expenditures, even at low interest rates, is such that, according to the latest figures available, the annual interest charge exceeds the total general property tax collections in 1942 for all the 48 States, including their counties, cities, villages, and school districts. This annual interest charge, plus the present level of veterans' benefits, means for the Federal Government an expenditure total which practically equals all the expenditures of our 48 States and their local governmental units, including schools. Inevitably, the future Federal tax load will be so heavy that even with our unprecedented high employment and income, it will remain a threat to the development of the national economy which constitutes the tax base we must nurture zealously and guard.

We are now legislating a limitation on Federal expenditures to cover a fiscal year which is two full years after the cessation of war with Japan. Our domestic relief burdens are at a low point. If the Federal Government is to put its financial house in order, it must start now. The key to that start is the reduction of Government spending. The decision facing this Congress is what amount to place as a limitation on expenditures for the coming fiscal year.

The Legislative Budget Committee, composed of 102 members serving on the four congressional committees which guide the fiscal policies of our Nation both as to income and outgo, has reached a decision. The facts involved in that decision are clear. The President has asked for $37,500,000,000 for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948, which begins on July 1, 1947, and ends on June 30, 1948. In the fiscal year 1940, the comparable expenditures were $9,600,000,000; in 1941, $12,710,000,000; in 1942, $32,396,000,000, and during one-half of that year the United States was in the great World War II. Thus, the budget recommended to the Congress by the President for the fiscal year 1948 requests expenditures almost three times those of 1941, and substantially more than those for the fiscal year 1942, during one-half of which year we were in the midst of a great World War. This huge total is the more astounding because our high level of income drastically reduced the proposed expenditures for work relief and direct relief to $7,000,000 in 1948 from $2,189,000,000 in 1940.

These facts bluntly present the issue. If the expenditure total recommended by the President for next year is accepted, this Nation may find fastened upon it a peacetime level of spending which will frustrate any hope of turning our fiscal path to sound foundations, and which will discourage individual endeavor. Individual endeavor is the backbone of our national strength. The need of the people and the need of our economy as a whole for drastic reduction of Government expenditures should be clear to all of us.

What about the needs of Government spending next year?

The first evidence is the President's budget now before the Congress. Some talk fearfully about reducing the spending authority requested in that budget by ascribing a sanctity to it and its details which it does not deserve. The average citizen may know little about the Federal budget, but he considers it a reflection of the desires of those who spend public funds. As a matter of fact, the budget is a composite of varying degrees of needs. Some of the budget recommendations are guesses. The budget is not the result of an annual challenge which makes each division justify its needs starting from zero. It may be only a challenge of those requests which are in addition to or different from those of past years. It does not pretend to conclude that there are not ways to get more for less. It is acknowledged everywhere that reduction in Government spending could be secured by:

First. Eliminating the extravagant, wasteful practices engendered by the war.

Second. Reduction of personnel.

Third. Reduction of Government scope.

Fourth. Reduction of overhead and duplication.

Congressional committees constantly disclose the fruitful opportunities in these fields. The Comptroller General has specifically outlined some of them. If an expenditure limitation is to force action in these fields, it must be severe enough to actually hurt. This may be a grim approach, but nevertheless necessary. It can result in benefit both to the Government and the people and the economy as a whole. This is no time to compromise with this need. In my judgment, more harm will result from compromising at a limitation figure higher than $31,500,000,000 than at a lower figure.

The need of the country and her people to return to fiscal soundness cannot be met by anything but drastic, courageous action. Many believe the $31,500,000,000 figure is too high. Why should the Congress hesitate in applying at least that limitation and earnestly enforcing it? It is not an irrevocable action. Disclosed need could modify it in either direction.

It is said that the proposed concurrent resolution is a will-of-the-wisp and without force because it is only a moral pledge. Such a stricture on the lack of moral faith in the Congress is worse coming from Members of Congress than from others. I say to all such, if they will adopt this concurrent resolution they will soon have the opportunity to give it, not only the moral, but the legal effect of law as well.

The opponents of the resolution before us are inconsistent on other counts. They talk fearfully of cutting the military, and then with equal concern they deplore cuts in civilian activities. The President's budget is equally inconsistent. It urges that large military expenditures are necessary because we are not at peace. Then it urges that large civilian expenditures are necessary because we are at peace and must catch up with the lag in the civilian fields where we postponed and reduced our efforts in order to win the war. The justification of the one undermines the other.

Likewise, where are those defenders of the compensatory theory which justifies large Government expenditures, financed by incurring debt, when employment and income are low, and with equal force maintains that reduction of Federal spending and public debt should be zealously pushed when employment and income are high and inflation is a real threat? The supporters of this theory have had their fling, and they should be the first to support this proposed limitation on expenditures. In view of the budget forecast for income next year, they should be demanding an even lower limitation.

When we apply these yardsticks to the President's budget, we find ample justification for reducing it to a total expenditure limitation of $31,500,000,000.

To compromise this figure in the face of the needs is an act offensive to the financial integrity of our people. Therefore, I stand squarely against reducing that limitation. I would rather compromise to reduce it than to increase it. The longer we wait to take this decisive step, the harder it will be for the Congress and the people.

The report of the committee is before the Senate. I say very frankly that there can be honest differences of opinion, and there are such differences. Decisions are reached as a matter of judgment, as a matter of estimate. There are some Senators who sincerely believe the limitation recommended by the joint committee is too low. On the other hand, there are Senators who believe just as sincerely that the recommended limitation is too high. I should not like to hear anyone attribute ulterior motives in connection with this subject, because what is involved is the determination as to what is a sound figure, a common-sense figure, in fixing an over-all ceiling on expenditures; and as to that, of course, men may differ.

I believe that within reasonable limitations, and within the recommended limitation, there will be ample funds for the domestic essentials of our country and the security of the Nation. I would not for a minute stand here to advocate a limitation which would in any way jeopardize that security. My record is indisputable proof of that truth.

We must all remember that this procedure is new. The joint committee has had only a comparatively brief period in which to work, and it has been without that staff assistance which should be available to it in succeeding years.

In spite of those truths, however, the vital issue should not be obscured.

The vital issue at stake here today is what this country we love can afford to spend within the requirements of internal and external security. I believe each of us knows in his heart that America cannot safely continue to expend the substance of the people with reckless abandon. Yet it is true that some are fearful of the benefits which can be the Nation's if we mend our fiscal ways.

I would ask that Senators bear in mind that my efforts are directed toward a Federal budget which is within the honest means of our country, a Federal budget which is balanced, a sound systematic method for reducing the national debt, and tax relief for the people. In my opinion, the only sound way to accomplish all those objectives is to drastically slash Federal expenditures—or to accept the limitation recommended by the joint committee.

It is for us to determine here today what total expenditures the country can afford. Hereafter, as the deliberations of the Eightieth Congress progress, it will be for us to decide how many dollars of the total we set shall be given to the respective divisions of the Government, according to their and the Nation's needs.

I am firm in my belief that the security of America—internal and external—demands that we spend no more than $31,500,000,000 in the fiscal year 1948. I believe that a limit should be set by the Senate today, and that within that limit the Eightieth Congress should allot funds to the respective divisions of the Government according to the needs they display in relation to the security requirements of the Nation.

It is not for us to prejudge today the number of dollars any given division of Government should be allocated. It is for the Senate and House to decide the total Federal expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 from which each division may draw. The country awaits our decision.

In summary, Mr. President, let me say that in the contemplation of the Reorganization Act, which was put on the statute books for a definite purpose, the legislative body is a very important factor in considering the national budget. The Congress of the United States has had limited time to arrive at its decision and to make its recommendations. We have approached the problem in the same way in which we will approach it in succeeding years. There is room, I repeat, for honest differences of opinion as to this matter.

As a member of the committee, I believe, and those who joined with me in the recommendation believe, the figure prescribed is a reasonable one, and on it I should like to have the decision of the Senate, recognizing, of course, that in its vote the Senate will use the same good judgment which the committee followed in preparing and submitting the report.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, in view of the subject now before the Senate for action, it seems particularly appropriate at this time for those of us on this side of the aisle, though the Eightieth Congress is but a few weeks old, to spend a little time in stock-taking.

The atmosphere is so charged with complex and often conflicting issues, the divergent voices crying out in the wilderness of headlines are so numerous, that it might be beneficial to the party and helpful to the country for us to stop, look, and consider.

We can well afford to consider objectively the question of what Republicans as a party should stand for—to take our bearings as to the direction in which we are heading. This is a vital matter because these are momentous days. We are faced today, I dare say, with more crucial questions of policy and of fact than have confronted any party in the peacetime history of America.

There are such vital questions as taxes, the national budget, foreign affairs; questions concerning the economy here at home and the world economy, social problems here at home, labor problems, agricultural problems; questions having to do with the preservation and maintenance of our natural resources, and above all, we are dealing with problems affecting the future peace of the world.

Because these issues are so important, not only to the future peace of the world but also to the immediate and future welfare of our Nation, the need is all the more urgent for us to orient ourselves in relation to these issues so that we can chart a sane and sound course.

I am convinced that the Republican Party is now afforded the greatest and most challenging opportunity any party has ever had to render real and lasting service to the Nation and to mankind. The people of this country turned to the Republican Party last November as the only means of achieving freedom from the chains of bureaucracy.

The way in which our party conducts the affairs of the legislative branch of the Government in the coming months will determine whether or not the Republican Party is entrusted with the executive branch of the Government in 1948.

Make no mistake about it, the people of the Nation are watching the Republican Party closely. The party is on probation. We can no longer get by by pointing out the weaknesses or shortcomings of others. We must deliver the goods.

The senior Senator from Michigan, the President pro tempore of the Senate, speaking in his home State recently, gave the party some good advice when he said that we should proceed on the invincible theory that the best service we can render is the best politics we can play.

We must show the people of the United States and of the world that under Republican leadership this country can make progress in the fields of economics, politics, and social welfare, and at the same time conduct the affairs of the Government in a sound and efficient manner.

The record will bear out the statement that in the past the country has in general had good administration and efficient administration under Republican leadership.

We face the challenge now of showing that we can provide the Nation that kind of leadership again.

The party will not be serving the best interests of the Nation if it tries to cut taxes indiscriminately, without carefully studied judgment; if it tries to forget the recent war and its lessons; if it attempts to repudiate foreign commitments already made; if it tries to shut out the rest of the world and build a wall against the atom bomb; if it ignores the needs of school children and poor and unfortunate people; if it permits the abrogation of any fundamental human rights; if it turns its back on the problems of agriculture and of developing and conserving our natural resources.

Before I go further I want to make it clear to my colleagues that what I say is not colored by personal rancor nor is it intended in any way to reflect upon the good name of any member of the party. These remarks are offered in a spirit of sincere concern for the welfare of the American people.

In the organizational set-up of the party, I realize that the leaders occupy an exacting and difficult role. There is placed upon them a great burden of responsibility not only for what they do but for what they say as well. I submit that we have had some talk for the press and otherwise recently that has not borne much semblance of responsibility.

Some utterances of Republican leaders have been so misleading and have left the public so confused about certain issues that it has been next to impossible for the rank-and-file citizen to discern the facts or to judge what the stand of the party really is.

This places the party and the Congress, since the majority is largely responsible for the actions of the Congress, in an extremely difficult position.

It is only natural that there should be divergent views in our party as in other parties. That is all right. It is in keeping with our democratic way of life. Any honest difference of opinion should be condoned and respected.

I should like now, Mr. President, to discuss some of the main issues which the Republican Party is sure to face in this Congress, and to apprise the party of my views on these issues, for whatever they may be worth.

Without any attempt to take them up in the order of their importance, I shall begin with foreign affairs.

There are some who believe that the United States should go its way alone, leaving the rest of the world to itself.

They would revoke the assistance which America has been giving to the small nations and to some of the large nations as well, leaving them to get along the best they can or forcing them to turn to other quarters for leadership.

These persons would build a high wall about the United States and erect a "keep-out" sign for the rest of the world. They would say, in effect, "Every nation for itself."

What these live-alone-and-like-it proponents overlook is that less than 7 percent of the world's population lives in the United States, and that neither political nor trade barriers can be built high enough to keep atom bombs and robot planes from hurtling down out of the stratosphere.

The United States can never again quarantine and isolate itself from the other 2,000,000,000 people on this planet.

We have no alternative than to cooperate. We must learn to live together as a world family of nations in peace and in harmony or face what is almost sure to be mass destruction if the newest weapons of war are again loosed upon the world.

We should not overlook the fact either that economic and political peace are inescapably joined. We as a Nation cannot be politically international and economically nationalistic.

Mr. President, I should like now to address a few remarks to the subject of taxes and fiscal affairs. Soon after the election certain Republican leaders broke into the headlines with statements concerning reduced expenses and lower taxes.

They promised a reduction of 20 percent in taxes straight across the board and talked of a reduction of $10,000,000,000 or more in Government expenses. They said little about reducing the public debt.

Of course we want reduced taxes, but more than all else, we want to insure the future of our Nation. That future is not secure so long as a debt of $260,000,000,000 hangs around our neck like a millstone.

Much as we may want to reduce Government expenses, we cannot trifle with the security of the Nation with the world in the unsettled condition it is today.

The major expenses of our Government today are interest on the national debt, national defense, and veterans' services.

Add to these the definite commitments for social security payments, tax refunds, definite commitments in foreign fields which can only be cancelled through the repudiation of agreements, and we have the bulk of our governmental expenses.

I have no doubt that appropriations for many purposes can and will be reduced. It should be the aim of the Congress to reduce Government expenses to the lowest point consistent with national safety and national welfare and to pay a reasonable amount on the national debt.

When we have done this, we will know then just how much taxes can be reduced.

As for a reduction in the number of Federal employees, there has been too much talk about arbitrarily laying off 1,000,000 workers.

We should reduce Federal employment to the number of workers actually needed to carry on the work authorized by the Congress, but we must not cripple that work. Some of the statements that have been made regarding personnel cuts have been bad for morale in the Federal service. Such irresponsible statements will result in some of the more capable employees, rather than the less capable ones, leaving the Government.

The next topic to which I call attention is one in which I am particularly interested—I refer to the field of agriculture.

During the war, American farmers were urged to increase their production. They responded by increasing it nearly 40 percent.

Consumption, on the other hand, has increased only about 12 percent over the prewar level.

Congress anticipated that this condition would develop and enacted the Steagall amendment, which guaranteed to the farmers of the Nation a price of at least 90 percent of parity for the crops which they would produce during the war and for 2 years following the end of the war. That means to the end of 1948.

In some instances the Government has already been called upon to make good this promise, but now that the war is over we hear talk of hedging on the promise of the Government to the farmers.

Two fundamental questions confronting the Congress are: First, shall we keep the bargain made with the American farmer during wartime? And next, what will be the long-range policy of government in regard to agriculture?

It is perfectly clear that we should keep the Government's promise to the farmers. I, for one, will fight any proposal to go back on this agreement, which I consider to be binding.

The long-range program, however, will be more difficult to determine. On this subject, two diametrically opposed schools of thought have already taken shape. One of these schools holds that farmers should be guaranteed 90 percent of parity prices, but coupled with this guaranty would be a strict limitation on production. This is nothing more than the old theory of scarcity, of paying farmers not to produce, or to destroy their crops.

It would mean imposition of Government controls on a scale not yet experienced.

The other school of thought would not restrict production but would approach the problem from the marketing end by seeking to find new methods of distribution or disposing of agricultural commodities on a full-production scale.

Personally, I object to requiring farmers to limit production or to destroy crops. I would seek new and expanded means for disposing of our surpluses both at home and abroad.

In either case, the Government will have to spend money and probably the amount will not differ very greatly whichever plan may be adopted. But when we vote today on the concurrent resolution providing for a budgetary limitation I think we must take into consideration the fact that the Government will have to spend money to sustain American agriculture.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that particular point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALDWIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. If we provide money to the Commodity Credit Corporation with which to restore its capital, I think the Corporation will have a sufficient sum to enable it to handle any requirements in the fiscal year covered by the budget we are now considering. The purpose of the Corporation's capital is to take care of such requirements, and the Corporation has been given $830,000,000 this year. The Corporation will be given another $830,000,000 to make up what it paid out in subsidies, in order to restore its capital. So I think the Corporation will have sufficient capital for any purpose of that sort under any budget plan that is now being proposed.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask that I may be permitted to conclude what I have to say before entering upon a general discussion. I say that it will take money in either case to support agriculture, whatever policy may be adopted. We hope it will take a minimum amount of money, but provision should be made for whatever amount may be necessary.

History has shown how important agriculture is in the economy of the Nation, so if we are to maintain a sound national economy we must maintain agriculture on a strong basis.

We know also how important food is as a factor in world peace. We know how important it is in promoting the cause of freedom and democracy. Men universally want food, jobs, and freedom. The ideal, of course, is to have all three.

Aside from what we may term the noble exceptions, if people have to choose they tend to take the food and the jobs even if they have to sacrifice freedom. The hard facts of reality and necessity when pitted against philosophy of government are often stern taskmasters.

In the light of the strategic role occupied by food it seems clear that the agricultural policy finally adopted by the United States will have a very definite bearing on world peace.

With 75 percent of the people of the world in perpetual fear of famine, there is no surer way to incur their envy, distrust, and hatred than to limit the production of, or pay for the destruction of, food in the United States while the rest of the world goes hungry.

The Republican Party in the Eightieth Congress should adhere to its traditional policy of full production by working toward this objective for agriculture.

Closely related to our agricultural policy is the question of our natural resources. In addition to the exhaustible mineral resources, which we need to maintain and conserve, are the resources such as soil and forests, commonly associated with agriculture, which need also to be maintained and conserved. The distinguishing feature of soil and forest resources is that, with proper care, they can be renewed in a relatively short time. Still at the rate of their depletion, we need to be concerned. According to the Department of Agriculture, the annual cut of saw timber, based on 1944 figures, exceeds growth by about 50 percent. During some periods of the war, the drain was even greater. It is easy to see the handwriting on the wall if this rate of depletion continues.

In the category of soil depletion, the danger signal is already out. It is reported that one-fifth of the original area of United States tillable land is now ruined, chiefly by erosion, for further practical cultivation; and that about one-third of the present remaining tillable land is already badly damaged. We are allowing about 500,000 acres to go down to ruin each year as a result of erosion.

In addition to the loss from erosion, we have for more than 3 centuries been taking fertility out of the soil and selling it in the form of produce to get ready cash.

No policy of government can be complete without a definite plan for restoring and maintaining the fertility of our soil.

This problem is not merely the concern of the farmer, it is the concern of every inhabitant of the country.

Our zeal for effecting economies in government should not carry us to the point of encouraging further depletion of the soil and of our forests and the other natural resources to which we owe so much of our strength as a nation.

Surely any program of government which is concerned with conservation of natural resources should provide also for conservation of human resources.

The late war brought home to us with dramatic force the cost we had to pay for neglecting the health and education of our children.

Not only were millions of young men physically disqualified for military service by reason of such neglect, but many others were unable to give full service to their country because of lack of education.

Never again should we let it be said that America lags in providing adequate educational opportunities and medical care for our children.

We are making progress in the field of public health. The Seventy-ninth Congress approved measures to provide for hospital expansion and further research in the field of tuberculosis and mental diseases. There is reason to hope that the Eightieth Congress will continue along the highway to better health.

We have now reached the point where the status of education in our elementary and secondary schools is of immediate national concern. Among the manifestations of the dire straits of our school system are the low salaries paid teachers, the acute shortage of teachers, the substandard qualifications of many teachers who have been pressed into emergency service, the low morale of teachers, the poor condition of the schools, and generally overcrowded classroom conditions.

Many States cannot meet this emergency. I believe the time has come when the National Government, through tax moneys collected—not merely from the landowners, as is now the case in many States, but from all people—should contribute materially to the cost of an adequate education for all children.

This can be done without violating States' rights in any way and under no circumstances should the Federal Government be permitted to control the educational system of any State.

I urge the Republican Members of Congress to take the lead in an effort to provide better education for the children of the Nation. It must not be said that as a party we are willing to neglect the health and education of our children in order to save a few dollars.

Besides the major subjects to which I have referred, we must also take a stand on labor legislation.

As this subject is to be before this body for action in the near future, I will not discuss it here.

It cannot be disputed that some union leaders appear to have forgotten their obligations to the public, but in spite of such provocations as may have been engendered by their actions, the Republican Party must not become the tool of monopoly-seeking industrialists in their thinly disguised efforts to crush the workingman's right to organize effectively.

Whatever labor legislation we enact at this session should be enacted on the basis of its value to the public as a whole and with due regard to maintaining the rights of all freemen as guaranteed by our Constitution.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to refer once more to the post-election promises of some Republican leaders and the demand on their part for an irresponsible slashing of expenditures and Government employment and taxes on a straight-across-the-board basis.

They say that the Republican Party has a mandate from the people which was given at the last election.

Their imaginary mandate does not come from the people. During the entire preelection campaign the Republican Party offered the people absolutely nothing to vote for. It offered them everything to vote against. The people of this Nation, having been persecuted by bureaucratic orders and petty governmental tyrannies to a point that was no longer endurable, turned to the Republican Party as the only means of escape from this persecution.

If the rank and file of the Republican Party are now giving mandates to the Members of the Congress, how does it happen that these mandates were not in evidence before election day?

Why do they become suddenly recognizable at this time?

Mr. President, what the people of the United States demand is efficient and progressive government for the benefit of all the people.

They gave this Congress no mandate to forget the lessons of the late war and the high ideals and pronouncements in defense of which 1,000,000 Americans were killed or wounded.

They gave no mandate to repudiate the agreements which the United States has made in good faith with other countries.

They gave no mandate to withdraw the help that America is giving to keep millions of children from starving in all parts of this world.

They gave no mandate for this Congress or the Government to blunder along a diplomatic and military path which leads straight to a third world war.

They gave no mandate to this Congress to block the development of atomic energy for industrial purposes or to turn the benefits of such development over to a little group of ruthless and greedy men who would control all the sources of power of the United States and of the whole world if possible.

They gave no mandate to give away the oil reserves on which our national security may some day depend before the Supreme Court can render a decision as to the ownership of those reserves.

They gave no mandate to set the railroads of America and other businesses controlled by great financial interests above the provisions of the antitrust laws.

They gave no mandate to cut the taxes of those best able to pay 20 percent and leave the great burden of taxes on the shoulders of those least able to bear it.

They gave no mandate to take away the milk and other nourishing food which millions of little children are now receiving through the school-lunch program.

They gave no mandate to repudiate the solemn agreement made to the farmers of this Nation as an incentive to greater production.

They gave no mandate to discontinue the soil-building program through which the 8 inches of topsoil, on which the life of every single person depends, may be restored to its former fertile condition.

They gave no mandate to weaken or destroy the Rural Electrification Administration or the Tennessee Valley Authority.

They gave no mandate to discontinue the highway-building and airport-expansion programs at a time when America is desperately short of transportation facilities of all kinds.

They gave no mandate to create an artificial scarcity of food in order that high prices might be artificially maintained while millions of people go hungry in America.

They gave no mandate to take from the American workingman his high standard of living and his right to organize effectively to maintain that standard.

They gave no mandate to weaken the financial structure of our Government by slashing taxes to an ill-considered degree rather than reducing the national debt to a point consistent with national safety.

No, Mr. President, the people who give those mandates are not the rank and file of the Republican Party.

They speak only for a little group of blind, selfish, ruthless men whose voices are loud and persistent and whose influence is far out of proportion to their numbers.

They would make the Members of this Congress believe that they are the voice of the people.

Only this Congress stands between the 140,000,000 people of the United States and the little clique that would control them economically, socially, and politically.

The votes which will be taken in this Congress will reveal to the people which side we are on.

The country will hold the Republican Party responsible for what this Congress does. We can no longer sustain our claim to the support of the voters by simply asking, "Had enough?" for that will not be enough. Only the service which we as a party give our country, our fellowmen, and our God will be the criterion on which we will be judged.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I commend the Senator from Vermont for his very courageous speech. I agree with all he says about the school-lunch program, labor, agriculture, education, and the REA; and I join with him in saying that if the Republican Party, at the behest of the small clique he mentioned, succeeds in an attempt to decrease appropriations for REA, if it succeeds in tearing down appropriations for agriculture and wiping out the 90 percent of parity for agriculture, in my judgment, so far as the western section of the United States is concerned, the majority of the people there will turn from the Republican Party. Instead of having $100,000,000 taken away from REA, the people in my State want at least $100,000,000 added to that sum so that the women folk will not have to slave in the kitchens and the men on the farms may be able to utilize electric power.

So far as I am concerned, I want to tell the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont that with reference to agriculture, education, the school-lunch program, and some of the other items he has mentioned, he will find me fighting shoulder to shoulder with him, and I hope that the majority of the Republican Party will do likewise.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator for his remarks; but I feel that I must say that we shall have to fight to maintain the school-lunch program in America; we shall have to fight to protect the work of the Rural Electrification Administration; we shall have to fight even to maintain the Tennessee Valley Authority, because, in my opinion, there is a determined, organized effort to destroy all three institutions.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Does not the Senator agree that we shall have to fight to maintain the antitrust laws?

Mr. AIKEN. I do.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President.

Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator from Vermont for the very great speech which he has just made. In my judgment he has provided an adequate answer to those who are asking the question, What is the program of the liberal Republicans?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALDWIN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], to strike out in line 6 the figures "31.5" and insert in lieu thereof "33.0"; and in line 7 to strike out "24" and insert in lieu thereof "25.1."

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the majority leader whether he expects that a vote will be taken today on the concurrent resolution.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, that is rather a $64 question. I do not know whether a vote on it will be taken today.

Mr. LANGER. I wish to say, Mr. President, that the hearings have not yet been printed. I understand that they will not be available until tomorrow; and I wish to protest against the taking of a vote until Senators have a chance to read the hearings; at least, I wish to read them before I vote.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT There are no hearings, so far as I know; no hearings were held. The whole question was considered in executive session in the subcommittee and in the full committee; and, so far as I know, there are no hearings to be printed. There are some minutes of a discussion which took place in a meeting of the four committees, and those minutes may be available; but they will not add anything to what can be said here and probably will be said here during the debate.

Mr. LANGER. Will the minutes be available tomorrow? I understand they are being printed.

Mr. TAFT. If they are being printed, they will be available. But everyone who was there is here and can answer the Senator's questions. There was only argument, and subsequently the votes were taken. There was no hearing of any kind.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, so far as I have been advised, the only Senator who desires to speak on this question is one who sits on the other side of the aisle. I have been told that he wishes to speak for about an hour. If that be the case, I think the probabilities of having a vote taken this afternoon are somewhat remote. But I am in no position to give any assurance that a vote will not be had today if debate ceases and if thereupon action is taken on the amendment and subsequently on the concurrent resolution.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I had assumed that a vote would be taken this afternoon on the Millikin amendment. But if it be in order, I ask permission at this time to offer and send to the desk an amendment relative to the systematic retirement of the Federal debt, so that in case a final vote is not taken today it will be printed and will lie on the desks of all Members.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I can only express an opinion about the situation. I think there is a possibility that a vote will be taken this afternoon, but I do not regard it as a probability. I think the chances are definitely that the concurrent resolution will go over until Friday. However, I cannot give any assurance of that.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to speak on the concurrent resolution for approximately 45 minutes or an hour. I did not assume that debate on the concurrent resolution would be concluded today, and consequently I am not ready to speak on it today.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to suggest that probably we shall not have a more important discussion than the one we are now having concerning the Budget, and certainly I hope the majority leader will not insist upon having a vote this afternoon on the concurrent resolution. I happen to know that several Senators who are away today thought they had been assured that no vote would be taken today on the concurrent resolution. I realize that probably their understanding was not based upon any agreement, but I hope the majority leader will see fit to agree that no vote will be taken this afternoon, and that the concurrent resolution will go over until Friday, so that all Senators can be advised of that fact and can be in attendance on Friday, when and if a vote is taken on that day.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I know of no way of determining the matter unless unanimous consent is given that a vote shall not be had until Friday.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will yield to me, I am sure if, in his capacity as majority leader, the Senator should propose such a course, it would be agreed to. I am quite sure no Senator on this side of the Chamber would object.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I make the request——

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me that, if there is to be a unanimous-consent request, it should be that a vote be taken on Friday at a given time. Then we may make some progress. I never heard of a unanimous-consent request that a vote be not taken on the day the request was made.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator from Maine will yield, I withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on January 10 the President submitted to Congress a budget providing for the expenditure in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947, of $37,500,000,000. This may be regarded as the third peacetime fiscal year budget after the termination of the war.

It is well to remind the Senate that the expenditures recommended by the President are four times as much as those in the year before the war, and further, that the expenditures for this peacetime year are equal to about the total cost of World War I, plus the ordinary governmental expenditures for the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920. The budget submitted is approximately $10,000,000,000 more than the national defense expenditures for World War I. It is $5,000,000,000 more than the aggregate of all governmental expenditures for the 11 years 1921 to 1931, inclusive.

I make these comparisons with the knowledge, of course, that conditions have changed, but, after all, there is a limit beyond which we cannot go in spending public money which must be raised by taxation. For 17 years our Government has been in the red, and in that time the public indebtedness has been increased from approximately $16,000,000,000 to $260,000,000,000. During these past 17 years we have built up at Washington a gigantic bureaucracy, which has attempted, sometimes with ruthless and autocratic control, to administer the affairs of our citizens.

Two things stand out very clearly in my mind: One is that if we do not balance the budget now, it may never be balanced until we go over the precipice of financial disaster. The second is that unless we reduce our Federal expenditures during the present period of high prosperity, then reduction when business recession comes will be much more difficult. By all past experience, the end of the present inflationary level will surely come, and no one can safely predict when it will occur, or how great the recession will be.

The people of America want less legislation, fewer directives, and less governmental interference with business. We desperately need a simplification of our governmental machinery, the elimination of needless red tape and overlapping activities, and a return to the free enterprise system, which constitutes today, as it always has, the chief guardian of the liberties of our people. Only economic freedom, with hard and steady work, will overcome wartime dislocation and start our country on the road to financial stability.

In recent years the average citizen of America has been influenced to hold the belief that a grant from Uncle Sam is a gift. The people think of the Government as a third party, when, in fact, we ourselves are the Government. Its wealth is only the collective wealth of all the people. If our democracy is to survive, the people must support the Government and not the Government the people.

In this task before us, one of the most challenging with which the Congress has ever been faced, let us be aware that there is no easy road to economy. In the past 15 years extravagance and waste have infiltrated virtually every governmental activity. It extends into the great bureaucratic activities throughout the length and breadth of America, and, since the war, peacetime expenditures are spread into large foreign areas. We have in Washington itself a vast number of Federal employees, but, when we consider that only 10 percent of all the Federal employees are in the city of Washington, we can apprehend the vast extension of governmental activities which have now reached such a point that in every county, city, and in virtually every township, there are branch offices and substations of the Federal Government, side by side, overlapping each other. An evidence of this is shown by a chart of organizational units in the executive branch, issued recently by the Joint Economy Committee.

On December 12, 1946, there were 1,039 principal component parts of the Federal Government, including departments, main bureaus, emergency and independent agencies. This compares to 1,141 in November 1944, indicating the elimination of only 102 emergency units in the past 2 years. In addition, outside of Washington there are 526 units of Federal district offices in the States, 3,619 field and county offices and institutions, 416 field divisions and area offices, 290 regional offices, and other miscellaneous units, making a total of 46,865, including the 41,790 post office units.

The opportunity for constructive retrenchment and economy in the activities of the Federal Government is as broad as the land, and it is the duty of Congress to reduce to the absolute minimum all Federal expenditures and still provide for the essential functions of Government. The States and localities must realize that they no longer should come to Washington and ask the Federal Government to do those things they should and could do better and more economically for themselves.

It is interesting to note that in 5 years the 48 States reduced their public indebtedness by $1,175,000,000, or 32 percent, and increased the balances in their general fund by $1,188,000,000. During the period of the war the States and localities have been reducing their public debts, while the Federal Government has been increasing its debt.

Never has a Congress been faced with a greater responsibility affecting the future financial stability of America than now. To adopt the President's recommendation means to continue, in large measure, the waste and extravagance that has characterized our public expenditures for many years. It means that when retrenchment becomes imperative by reason of the failure to collect sufficient tax revenue to pay the expenses of Government, the disasters of that time will be aggravated.

On the side of tax revenue, the estimate is $38,860,000,000, the largest exaction in taxes from the American people our country has ever known. This is about the equivalent of the total receipts of the Government for 10 years prior to the war. How long can we continue to collect from the American people this colossal sum in taxation without impairing the ability of the people to pay? Whenever a republic reaches the point of diminishing returns, occasioned by excessive taxation, then that nation is approaching financial insolvency. We must balance the budget and keep it balanced, and we can only do this by reducing our expenditures. We must provide for payments on the national debt and give a tax reduction only on a sound and conservative basis so as to avoid further deficits in the revenue.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The legislative budget carries with it no mandate in law. It was established as a part of the legislative reorganization machinery. The purpose of it was to fix a goal for expenditures which the Congress thinks can be safely financed by taxation and allowing for payment on the public debt. The first and most important approach to solvency is to reduce expenditures, to eliminate to the greatest possible degree all waste and extravagance, but, at the same time, to provide adequately for those activities of Government regarded as essential for our future progress and security.

It is, of course, true that the legislative budget is an experiment; no one knows whether it will succeed or not; but I, for one, believe that it is a very sound and important step toward financial stability, as it, for the first time, coordinates expenditures with receipts, and permits an orderly consideration on the part of Congress of a balance between the two.

All of us must recognize the fact that the establishment of an over-all expenditure, as provided under the Legislative Reorganization Act, does not permit the submission of definite and detailed facts as to the exact amount that can be reduced in each of the thousands of budget items. Such detailed information would not be possible between the date the President submits his budget recommendations and February 15, the date on which the over-all figure of expenditures must be submitted to Congress.

Those familiar with the vastness of our present budget, involving the expenditure of thirty-odd-billion dollars in this country and in foreign lands, know that painstaking investigation by the Appropriations Committees of the House and the Senate is necessary to determine where appropriate reductions can be made. I stand upon the principle, however, that if such reductions are wisely and effectively distributed, we can operate the Government without impairment of the essentials of our national defense or any other required function of the Government, within the sum of $31,500,000,000, recommended by the Joint Budget subcommittee, and passed by a majority vote of 50 to 22 in the full committee.

So as to proceed in an orderly way, I submit that we must change our present practice of bringing in 11 separate appropriation bills, exclusive of deficiency and supplemental bills, so that we may consider all appropriations in one bill, as otherwise, it will be virtually impossible to confine the expenditures to a definite over-all limit, or even know when the limit is reached. It has been the custom heretofore for the 11 regular appropriation bills to be submitted, often at intervals of 30 days apart, and, if that custom is continued, it is possible that proportional reductions may not be made in the first bills, necessitating greater reductions in the later bills, and this obviously would bring about an unfair distribution of the total reductions.

We are trying out a new theory of government but one that gives hope for great benefits. Let us give it a fair trial and if, after full hearings, the Appropriation Committees of both the House and the Senate, reach the conclusion that it is impossible to confine expenditures to the limit fixed, then it would be a proper procedure for these committees to make recommendations to Congress explaining their inability to carry out the mandate and suggesting a revised figure.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], and I have introduced a resolution, which is now pending before the Committee on Rules and Administration providing for one appropriation bill, which I sincerely hope will be adopted by both Houses, as this will enable the Congress and the citizens better to ascertain the correlated relations of expenditures between the different divisions of Government. This is difficult, if not impossible, during the consideration of 11 appropriation bills, and other deficiency and supplemental bills, that are presented at different times.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senator from Virginia does not concede that any other Member of Congress is more desirous than he is for adequate national defense. In my record of 14 years I cannot recall that I have ever voted to reduce substantially any national defense expenditure recommended to Congress by the Appropriation Committees. Prior to World War II I was an early advocate of vast improvements in our national defense, but I cannot agree with those who think that the Army and Navy recommendations are untouchable by Congress. Neither, let me say, is the present situation clarified by such a statement as recently emanated from the Navy Department to the effect that a reduction of $500,000,000 in the naval appropriation would immobilize the Navy. Immobilizing the Navy means the laying up of all its ships and activities, and to say that a 10-percent reduction in naval appropriations would bring such a dire result is so extravagant as not to carry conviction.

There are vast opportunities for economy in the Army and Navy, and while we admire, respect, and have great confidence in our military leaders, yet we in Congress must realize that these leaders are accustomed to the waste of war, and it is easy to continue such waste, even though it be in lesser degree, in time of peace. For example, the Army and Navy, on January 1, had 1,117,000 civilian employees, including industrial workers, as compared to an armed personnel of 1,600,000. In other words, there were two civilian employees for every three members of the armed services, and it is, of course, true that many thousands of those in uniform perform clerical work.

This item of 1,117,000 civilian employees compares to a total employment of the Army and Navy of 222,136 civil-service employees, including industrial workers, in 1939. I do not think any man can say that there is not a great field for retrenchment in this one single item of the expenditures for the Army and Navy, which, incidentally, is costing approximately $3,000,000,000.

Again, the average cost of maintaining a member of the armed services, his pay and subsistence, is estimated in the next budget at $3,100, as compared to $1,386 in 1940, about two and one-half times as much. These figures are for personal maintenance alone, and do not include any arms, ammunition, or engines of war to implement him. Of course, I know these costs have risen, yet this alone constitutes a $5,000,000,000 item, and certainly there is opportunity for some economy. During the war the over-all cost per man around the world was $6,960, while in the budget the average cost per man in 1948 will be $6,790. These figures include all expenditures for ships, planes, ammunition, and everything else. In other words, the Army and Navy propose to spend, as an over-all average, only $170 less per man than during World War No. 2. To arrive at this comparison in a valid way, of course, means an investigation of the various facilities that were purchased by the Army and Navy in these two periods, but this item needs a clear explanation, especially in view of the fact that, with regard to the Navy, many costly battleships were paid for during the war and are still in good condition.

I venture the assertion that there has not been a member of the armed services, either now or during the war, who has not come in personal contact with the waste and inefficiency of Army and Navy management, and in saying this I do not indict our military leaders. To the contrary, I have the greatest respect and admiration for them. I feel that America will owe an everlasting debt of gratitude to those leaders whose great military skill, courage, and patriotism made possible the victory of our Allied forces. As a member of a delegation of Senators, I visited Europe immediately after the termination of the war and was enormously impressed with the outstanding capacity and ability of the high generals who led us to victory. At the same time, we cannot think of national defense in terms of big armies and armaments alone. There can be no national security against wartime possibilities without financial security in time of peace. We cannot allow wartime extravagance perpetuated in time of peace to devour the primary military requirement, namely, the credit of the Nation.

We must find the balance in this matter and strike it. I shall never vote to dangerously impair our national defense or our national security, military or financial. For this reason I shall vote constantly to make our armed forces more efficient, and I think that can best be accomplished through more economical peacetime operation. I do not believe the Army and the Navy have devoted their best efforts toward this end. Certainly their extravagant statements of recent days—even before they know the full reduction plan, which is not yet developed—do not strengthen their position in my mind.

At this moment we are engaged in a grave economic war. We are fighting to alleviate not only for this country but for the whole world the difficulties growing out of the financial problems inherent in the military war. We must win this economic war now, this year; and I earnestly solicit the cooperation of the admirals and the generals in the effort to place the United States in such a position that it may win another war, should such a great misfortune ever occur, and this can only be done by reducing our public debt, by living within our income, and by a reduction of taxes to the point where the profit motive is once again an incentive to business development.

If there had been a debt of $260,000,000,000 when World War II began, our form of democratic government would today be destroyed, because, if this debt had been nearly doubled, there is no way the freedoms of our Republic could have survived under our present form of government. There has never been a single democracy anywhere in the history of the world that has been able to outlive financial insolvency, because democracy means freedom of the people to own and operate their business and conduct their private affairs, and when the obligations of the government become so overwhelming that the people cannot by their own free initiative pay the cost of government, then democracy must yield to some form of totalitarianism, destructive of the liberties of the people.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

I am anxious in my desire to give every possible aid and assistance to our veterans, and especially to those who were injured in the Nation's defense. I think, in justice to the veterans, it is proper to require the Veterans' Administration to demonstrate that the administration of this agency is on an economical basis. We owe it to the veterans to provide maximum service at minimum administrative cost. Veterans pay taxes, too, and so will their children. I point out that the Veterans' Administration is requesting 47,000 civilian employees in the Washington office, and a total of approximately 250,000 scattered throughout the United States and its possessions. In January 1947 the total veteran population of all wars was 14,341,000. Therefore, there would be 1 civilian employee to every 50 veterans, and, of course, it is a recognized fact that millions of veterans have made no request for assistance from the Government in any form. I would oppose any cuts in the expenditures for veterans which would render it impossible to provide for them reasonable and proper aid and care, but in this day, when expenditure reduction is so vital, this agency, as well as every other agency of the Government, should come under the scrutiny of Congress.

There are only two untouchable items in the budget; one is the interest on the public debt totaling $5,000,000,000 and the other is the tax refund of $2,000,000,000, a total of $7,000,000,000, leaving $30,000,000,000 for other activities. In my judgment, there is not a single agency of Government which cannot reduce its expenditures and at the same time give satisfactory service to the people. There is not one of them that cannot be rendered more efficient by more economical administration and thus make possible reductions in the pending budget.

CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

I think it is obvious to the country generally that for the last 10 years there has been an excess of civilian employees in the Federal Government and that a careful and wise pruning would result not only in a large saving of public funds but would actually increase the efficiency of the various departments.

On January 1, there were 2,283,890 civilian employees. Of these, 296,172 were employed outside the continental United States. For many months, as chairman of the Joint Economy Committee, I have been endeavoring to ascertain, with some degree of accuracy, what the nearly 300,000 civilian employees outside of the United States do, but the results of my efforts have been completely unenlightening. I am told by the Army and Navy that they receive the reports so late that when they do come in they have no real value by way of indicating the work performed by these nearly 300,000 employees. Of course we know the work some of them do, but we do not know about the large majority.

I sincerely believe that the civilian employment, beginning July 1, 1947, can be reduced to 1,600,000, and perhaps to 1,500,000, at a saving to the Public Treasury at the rate of $2,500,000,000 a year on the basis of present employment, and nearly that much on the basis of Budget estimates. If this should be done, it would represent even then an increase of 50 percent more than the prewar employment in December 1939 of 943,000.

When the increased pay bill was under consideration, the Senate Civil Service Committee received from the Civil Service Commission and the Budget Bureau a confidential statement that on June 30, 1947, the total civil service employment would be 1,710,000, so that the recommendation I now make is approximately in line with the planning of both the Civil Service Commission and the Budget Bureau when the increased pay bill was under consideration last May.

GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS

The pending Budget provides for withdrawal from the Treasury of approximately $1,800,000,000 by Government corporations. I desire to call attention to the fact that under the Byrd-Butler bill, all Government corporations are required to return any unused funds to the Federal Treasury, and that the Congress must first approve any new loans or expenditures before they are made. Prior to enactment of this bill in December 1945 the forty-odd Government corporations were a fourth arm of the Government and could use their revolving funds to make such new expenditures as they desired. An analysis of the corporation budgets which are set forth in the President's budget document shows that the 40 Government corporations have a capital of $10,000,000,000, which is supposed to be unimpaired. In view of this situation, it seems to me that it should not be necessary to ask for vast additional amounts out of the Public Treasury.

It should be pointed out also that many of these corporations, following a practice of many years standing, are borrowing money from the Treasury at 1 percent. At the same time the Government—that is the people—is paying an average of about 2 percent for the money it is lending to the corporations at 1 percent. Following through on this situation, we find that those corporations with investment functions turn around and invest in Government bonds on which the Government is paying them 2 percent.

I regret that I do not have actual figures on this matter. They are not yet available, but an audit to develop this information is in progress at the moment. Meanwhile, it suffices to say that this is a source of many million dollars on the receipt side of the Budget if we take necessary steps to recover it.

GRANTS AND AIDS TO THE STATES

As I have pointed out, the 48 States today are in comparatively better financial condition than the Federal Government. They are reducing their debts and increasing the balances in their general funds. All grants and aid to the States should be carefully scrutinized and those that are not absolutely essential should be deferred, if not canceled, and action should be taken to withdraw the Federal Government from all those functions which properly should be financed by the States and localities. By so doing, the exorbitant overhead, which is applicable to all Federal expenditures, can be saved, and this will be one way to reduce the size of the Federal bureaucracy.

Let us remember that we cannot continue to invade new fields of expenditures and at the same time talk about reducing the bureaus and the number of employees of the Federal Government. We must decide between a continuation of Federal control and Federal appropriations for local objectives, and a less costly and more simplified Government whereby some of these things are done by the States and localities.

The total of subsidies in the nature of grants and aids and payments to the States in the present Budget is $1,500,000,000. In the past 12 years the Federal Government, out of borrowed money, has expended $34,000,000,000 for grants, aids, and payments to the States.

REVENUE ESTIMATES

In considering the estimate of revenue of $38,800,000,000, including the excise taxes reimposed, we must bear in mind that the estimate in the President's budget message is based upon an anticipated national income of $167,000,000,000, which is higher than the income estimate for the current fiscal year. As we know, the national income is the aggregate of the cash income of all the citizens of America. Our existing system of taxation relies heavily on income taxes. If our national income goes down, the decline is immediately reflected in the tax revenue. For example, under the existing system and rates, if the national income should drop to $160,000,000,000, which would be a reduction of only 5 percent, the tax revenue would decline to $34,500,000,000, which would be a loss of approximately $4,300,000,000 compared with the present estimate. If the national income should fall to $150,000,000,000, a reduction of approximately 10 percent, the total revenue would be $32,000,000,000, instead of $38,000,000,000, or a loss of $6,800,000,000 in revenue.

Under our present system and existing rates, including excise taxes imposed, the total receipts of the Federal Government at the various levels of national income would be as follows:

National income (billions):	Receipts (billions)
$80	$14.0
$90	16.5
$100	19.0
$110	21.5
$120	23.5
$140	29.0

Suppose our national income should go down to $80,000,000,000. That was the highest point before the war, in 1929. In only one year in the history of this country, before World War II, did we have a national income as high as $80,000,000,000. That was in the year 1929. I do not think it will go down to $80,000,000,000, but I wish to set forth these figures. If our national income should go down to $80,000,000,000, our tax revenue under existing taxes would go down to $14,000,000,000, as compared to $38,000,000,000 which we now receive. These are official figures which I have obtained from the tax experts of the Treasury, as well as from the tax experts of the Joint Tax Committee.

If the national income should go down to $90,000,000,000, the tax revenue would be $16,500,000,000.

If the national income should go down to $100,000,000,000—and that would not be impossible—our tax revenue would drop to $19,000,000,000.

If the national income should go down to $110,000,000,000, the tax revenue would be $21,500,000,000.

If the national income should go down to $120,000,000,000, the tax revenue would be $23,500,000,000.

If the national income were $130,000,000,000, the tax revenue would be $26,500,000,000.

If the national income were $140,000,000,000, the tax revenue would be $29,000,000,000.

If the national income were $150,000,000,000, the tax revenue would be $32,000,000,000.

If the national income were $160,000,000,000, the tax revenue would be $34,500,000,000.

I merely wish to emphasize the fact that our tax system is not on a sound basis. It is volatile and undependable, because it relies so heavily upon income taxes, and particularly upon income taxes in the higher brackets.

Revenue receipts for 1948 are based not only upon continuance of, but actually upon an increase in the unprecedented prosperity which we now enjoy. The highest national income, as I said, before the war was $80,000,000,000, in 1929. The average national income in the 10 years before the war was $68,000,000,000. I do not expect a return to such figures; but, on the other hand, we should protect ourselves from a 10-, 15-, 20-, or even 25-percent decrease in the national income, which would play havoc with this budget. It would create another substantial deficit; and another deficit in Federal expenditures, coming 3 years after the war, and after Congress had made an attempt to balance the budget, would shake the confidence of the American people to its very foundations.

It is for this reason that I am opposed to a tax reduction in the calendar year 1947, although I realize the fact that the present taxes are oppressive to the degree that they will soon reach the point of diminishing returns, and although I know that they are destroying the incentive for profit, which, after all, is the dynamo of our private-enterprise system. I favor tax reduction in 1948 providing the expenditures are sufficiently reduced.

But we must accomplish first these reductions in expenditures, because, from a long-range standpoint, I think it is vastly more important to place our Government on a sound fiscal basis by reducing expenditures and firmly balancing the budget than to reduce taxes first. What could be more reassuring to the citizens than to know that after 17 years of waste, squandering, and deficit spending, our Government is once again in the black? We can wait a few months for tax reduction, and then on a dependable basis be assured the reduction is permanent.

In any event, the effective date of the tax reduction should not be before July 1, 1947, because in this fiscal year we have a deficit; and to reduce taxes retroactively to the beginning of the calendar year 1947 would mean increasing the deficit for this fiscal year. That certainly is not sound government or good bookkeeping.

I favor setting aside $3,000,000,000, as provided in the Knowland amendment, for payment on the public debt. I should like to see the Government in a position where it could pay a minimum of $5,000,000,000 annually on the public debt.

The $3,000,000,000 proposed to be paid on the public debt would also act as a cushion in the event that there should be a reduction in the national income.

The President's Budget for 1948 is $5,000,000,000 less than estimated expenditures for the current fiscal year. If allowance is made for nonrecurring expenditures in the present fiscal year, there is, in fact, not much difference between the expenditures which we will make during this fiscal year and the expenditures recommended by the President for the next fiscal year.

Again let me emphasize that unless we reduce expenditures now, 3 years after the war, the reduction will be more difficult later. The same demands will be made upon the Government which are now made. The same cry will be raised by those who are adversely affected. The time to meet this issue is now, when the country is enjoying a high degree of prosperity. We should eliminate every unnecessary expenditure, simplify and coordinate the Government's activities, and operate our vast governmental machinery in the most economical manner possible. This we owe to ourselves and to future generations.

The greatest internal menace confronting America today is a public debt which is equivalent to more than twice as much as the assessed value of all the property in America. The debt averages more than $5,000,000,000 for each State; and the actual value of the tangible property in a majority of the States of the Union is estimated as being less than $5,000,000,000.

While I am a member of the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, I am not a member of the subcommittee which had the benefit of detailed study and which made the recommendation to reduce expenditures from $37,500,000,000 to $31,500,000,000. Neither am I a member of the Appropriations Committee. I speak for myself alone, and I shall attempt to give a broad pattern of expenditure reduction, which can be taken for what it is worth.

First, I would proceed to reduce the number of Federal employees from the present number of 2,300,000 to either 1,600,000, or, if possible, to 1,500,000, placing the number of Federal employees on a basis of 50 to 60 percent more than the year before the war, which number, I am convinced after long investigation, is adequate to perform the functions of government. This would save, in the salary and expenses such as traveling, stationery, rental of buildings, and so forth, the sum of $2,500,000,000. That is the way in which I would start to realize the reduction of $6,000,000,000.

The average salary of Federal employees is $2,640; and with incidentals each employee is costing the Federal Government approximately $3,000 a year, because they must have places in which to work and other facilities.

I would then seek, as the second item of reduction, to require Government corporations to finance out of their existing assets at least $1,000,000,000 of the $1,850,000,000, which is to be withdrawn from the Treasury next year by such corporations. The net capital of Government corporations is approximately $10,000,000,000. The Byrd-Butler bill provides that as the assets of these corporations are liquidated, or if earnings were made, such balances should be returned to the Treasury of the United States instead of remaining in the hands of the corporations. Consistent with this legislation, it would be entirely reasonable to require these corporations to absorb a part of the amount of the funds included in the expenditure budget. They are requesting $1,850,000,000, and I propose to require them to finance $1,000,000,00 out of their existing assets. This may be difficult, but it can be done, I think, even though it may be necessary to reduce the activities of the forty-odd corporations; and I believe that the time has come for this. I have thought for a long time that we should substantially reduce them. That is the next item I would reduce.

In any event, speaking of Government corporations, the item of $830,000,000 which is in the budget to restore the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation has no place in the 1948 budget, as the impairment of the capital of the Commodity Credit Corporation occurred in 1946 and 1947 and, to be fair about it, that impairment should be handled in the present budget and not passed on to the next budget.

These two savings, if effected, would amount to $3,500,000,000, leaving a balance of $2,500,000,000 of the $6,000,000,000 reduction proposed.

Those are my suggestions. Frankly, if I were called upon to balance the budget, that is how I would go about it as to $3,500,000,000.

I am firmly of the opinion that within the scope of the remaining budget expenditures, a saving of $2,500,000,000 can be effected without endangering our national security or any other essential functions of government—the Army, the Navy, or any others—by scrutiny and careful action on the part of the Appropriations Committees. That would aggregate $6,000,000,000. I will expand that further.

It may be that we shall have to do without some things that are desirable, but not necessary. If the people, through Congress, continue to add to the burdens of the Federal Government by asking the Government to do things which they should do for themselves, then of course these economies are not possible. When I say that there can be a reduction of $6,000,000,000 without doing injury to the essential functions of government, I want to emphasize that the important feature of that program is to allocate and distribute the reductions in the most scientific and fairest possible way. If we apportion the $6,000,000,000 reduction in a just and fair way on the expenditures that are proposed in this Budget, I am convinced that we can effect this economy and not endanger the functions of government.

It may be that some of the things which we have been doing for years we ought not to have been doing, and that they should be dropped in order to reduce our stupendous obligations. It can be done if there is a will to do it. If we say that we cannot do it, we shall not accomplish the desired saving. Every Member of the Senate knows the extravagance that exists in practically every branch and activity of the Army and the Navy. I say this, as I have said before, without criticism of our great military leaders, because they have neither the time nor the inclination to conduct peacetime operations with the necessary economy and efficiency. Let me give a little itemization of the $2,500,000,000.

It may be that there must be reductions in the less essential public-works programs and in other fields of activity of the Government, including the reduction or elimination of an item of $500,000,000 for housing and community work. Personally, I can see no need for such an expenditure under the present situation. Those two items aggregate approximately $1,600,000,000.

From the combination of public works and housing it should be possible to obtain a reduction of $500,000,000, reducing the balance to be cut $2,000,000,000.

The field for economies to produce this $2,000,000,000 cut is very wide. It includes the Veterans' Administration, in which certainly some economies can be made. I believe that such a plan will be devised. It is a comparatively new agency on its present basis, and, naturally, it has been more wasteful up to date than it should have been. I do not know how much can be cut from it. I think something can be, and still give needed service to the veterans.

Economies can be effected in such items as agriculture, national resources, transportation and commerce, finance and industry, and general government. On the items which I have just mentioned we propose to spend $8,000,000,000. We certainly should save at least $500,000,000 out of that $8,000,000,000 in addition to personnel cuts.

That brings us within a billion and a half of what we need to make the $6,000,000,000 reduction. I have not reached the Army and Navy.

Notwithstanding the public statements that have been made by officials of the Army and Navy that no cuts can be made without disaster to our national defense, I am informed by high-ranking officials of both the Army and the Navy that reasonable cuts can be made in the proposed appropriation of $11,200,000,000. I think a 10-percent reduction can be made in this appropriation in addition to a proper reduction of civilian personnel.

It is my opinion that the best service that the Congress can now render the cause of national defense is to insist and demand that the national defense program shall be administered with due regard to economy and efficiency. Looking forward to the future, we must realize that the longer exaggerated military spending is tolerated now, the more difficult it will be to sustain public opinion favoring necessary expenditures for adequate national defense in years to come. Unless we so conduct our national defense program as to bring it within the ability of the people to pay, and at the same time eliminate unnecessary waste and extravagance, then, as the years go on, it will be more and more difficult to induce the people of the United States to pay the taxes necessary to maintain a proper national defense program.

I want to eliminate the water in the national defense programs without injuring our essential objective of a strong national defense; and, by doing so, to convince the people of America that we are performing an essential public service at minimum cost. In the Budget for the third fiscal year of peace after the end of the war the proposed expenditure of $11,200,000,000 is 11 times more than our national defense cost the year before Pearl Harbor, and nearly half the total cost of World War I.

Never in the history of Congress, so far as I can ascertain, has the Congress attempted to substantially lower the budget submitted by the Executive, and succeeded. Mark that, Mr. President: I have never known of an instance, and never have been able to find one in the history of the American Nation, when the Congress has successfully undertaken, as it is proposed to do today, to reduce the fiscal budget of the Nation, as submitted by the Executive, in order to preserve the financial solvency of the Nation.

We are trying an experiment in economy, as contrasted to the many experiments we have tried in spending in the past few years. We are trying an experiment in reducing expenditures and avoiding extravagance, and I say it is time to make this experiment work.

The difficulty, of course, is encountered in apportioning fairly and wisely the cuts to be made. I repeat that I am convinced beyond question of doubt that the expenditures can be reduced $6,000,000,000, or even more, provided that the cuts are properly applied.

I predict that the battle we are beginning will be a bitter contest. We must recognize that we have to meet the opposition of highly organized and powerful minorities who are now the beneficiaries of Federal spending. Federal bureaus are always active in opposition to any effort to reduce their power, funds, personnel; and many of these bureaus do not hesitate, and they will not hesitate today, as they have not hesitated in the past, to use the radio, the mails, and other means to disseminate propaganda, at public expense, to oppose any retrenchment move that affects them.

Mr. President, unless Congress, with the backing of the public, can reestablish control over expenditures and can place the Nation on the sound road of paying off debt and lightening the tax load now bearing down upon the incentive for work and production, we are heading for serious trouble.

Two things which we must do now are: First, cut down Government spending to a level somewhere near our prospective ability to pay—not our ability to pay in the present inflated period; second, try to reestablish conditions which will encourage and stimulate industry and enterprise which are necessary to sustain the production and distribution of goods at high levels. But, first, we must reduce expenditures and allow for payment on the debt before reducing taxes.

This last means a system in which people who show energy, ability, and leadership shall have some prospect of reward for their efforts.

Cutting expenses is one of the hardest things a Congress ever does. Right now decisions are being worked out here in Washington that will go far toward determining the kind of society and economy we are going to live in—whether people will be allowed to spend their own money or whether the Government will spend it for them. During the thirties and the war period the Government intervened in one area after another in our economic life. The present big Executive budget assumes the continuance of that philosophy. With it goes a tax system so onerous that it becomes, in effect, the instrument of socialization by which wealth is redistributed, and by which those who rise above the crowd are cut back to the level of mediocrity.

Mr. President, with the conclusion of the war, it is time we made an abrupt change in that philosophy. What we do about the present budget is a test of how clearly we see this problem and of America's ability to resist the world-wide forces of government dictation and collectivism.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Virginia. I wish to ask him whether at the present time he is in favor of specifying in the concurrent resolution a specific amount of debt reduction, or whether he is in favor of leaving that uncertain at this time, until we know more about the tax returns, and then making such a specification at the conclusion of our session.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I expect to vote for the Knowland amendment which provides for a $3,000,000,000 payment on the public debt. I should like to see it provide for a $5,000,000,000 payment on the debt, but I think certainly the first money we can save by cutting expenditures should be used to pay off at least $3,000,000,000 of the public debt, before we reduce taxes. Then we should reduce taxes in proportion to expenditure reduction and on a basis we can make permanent. To reduce taxes prematurely and then be forced to raise them would have a most disturbing effect.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I am but one of a rather large group of Members of this body who, during the last campaign, told the people of their respective States that, if elected, they would make a determined effort to reduce the expenses of the Federal Government. This is the first opportunity we have had to show that we meant exactly what we said.

In an editorial published day before yesterday in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, which is one of the large and influential newspapers of my State, it is stated:

> The moans over the proposed $6,000,000,000 reduction in the Federal Budget are getting a little ridiculous. Strangely, they are all tuned to the weak theme that the action will wreck our national security—an obvious attempt to let the public believe the whole cut is coming out of the military hide.

Of course, Mr. President, no one of us wishes to handicap or impede General Marshall in the slightest degree in the important mission he is about to undertake. For my part, I believe that nothing will enable him to speak with authority so much as the knowledge that the economy of our country is being placed on a sound basis and that the spirit of production and enterprise is being stimulated and reenergized by the widespread knowledge that the Congress of the United States is seriously grappling with the problem of Government finance.

Likewise, no one of us desires to weaken our national defense. Speaking for myself alone, I am convinced that it is simply not realistic to say that a traditionally, a notoriously prodigal establishment cannot be trimmed without having such an effect. The matter must be approached from a long-range, farsighted point of view. As the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has said in effect, let us be sure that we are going to have the powder when we need it the most.

Mr. President, I do not think the proposed cut of $6,000,000,000 goes as far as the people expect, or perhaps as far as they have reason to expect; but, for my part, I am content with the report submitted by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] placing the reduction at $6,000,000,000. I shall oppose the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the eloquent speech made by the Senator from Virginia sets forth so well the principles of economy in government and of reasonable taxation that the subject hardly needs further amplification.

For many years there has been a government philosophy of spending. Now we are proposing that Congress undertake a definite program of economy. Until 1932, Congress was always regarded as the extravagant body. It was always the Executive who felt the responsibility for balancing the budget. It was always the Executive who vetoed appropriation bills. It is the Executive, after all, and properly so, who has the over-all look at the whole range of governmental operations and expenditures, particularly with the assistance of his Budget Bureau. Until 1932 every President of the United States felt a strong personal responsibility for seeing that the budget was balanced, that the burden of taxation did not bear too heavily upon the people of the United States.

Congress is not a peculiarly efficient body in effecting economy. It is difficult for Congress to know where economies can be made. It is difficult, even after extended hearings before an appropriations committee, to feel certain that we can make cuts without impairing the efficiency of the service. Yet it has come to pass that by an almost unanimous vote of the Congress for a bill which has been approved by the President, the chief burden of economy is placed on the Congress. Now we are supposed to establish a legislative budget, cutting below the Presidential budget. We are supposed to pass now, without much information, on the question as to what the over-all limit on expenditures shall be.

When we adopt the figure suggested, we do not imply that we will not cut below that figure, but our purpose is to do our utmost to hold the total appropriation to such a figure that expenditures will not exceed the figure we now fix for the Budget, whether it be $31,000,000,000 or $35,000,000,000. That is not easy, yet I think it represents the accomplishment of a great purpose.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to ask the Senator if he really meant it when he said we were to pass on this question without having much information as to what we were doing? Is that the Senator's conception of what we will do when we vote on this question?

Mr. TAFT. We can only make an intelligent guess. We have no information before us as to the particular items of the $37,500,000,000 Budget, in justification for the figure fixed by the Budget. We only know it is requested. We only know the Budget Director has approved it, and the President has approved it. All we can do is to look at the figure and say we think the Budget is too high. We can use our judgment, based on our experience covering a number of years, in making what I think is an intelligent guess. But at the present time we do not have sufficient information to enable us to fix an exact figure.

Mr. McMAHON. Would the Senator mind telling me what goes into an intelligent guess? It would seem to me a guess is an approximation based upon chance; there is not very much intelligence to it. That is why I have difficulty in determining how I should vote. I do not like to make intelligent guesses and have them go out to the people of the United States as representing something more than that. I do not believe in guessing about a matter of this kind. I should like to decide for myself on the basis of hearings, on the basis of facts, on the basis of some information. Frankly, unless I can be satisfied in that regard at the end of this debate I shall vote "present" when my name is called on the roll call, because I do not intend to tell the people of the United States that I am guessing at anything.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator from Virginia has given some figures. He says he thinks the number of employees can be reduced from 2,300,000 to 1,600,000, with a saving of $2,000,000,000. He is guessing in making that figure. He is making an intelligent guess. He has studied the whole question of Federal employment, and it seems to me that, based on such intelligent guesses, it is fair to arrive at a figure, because, as I see it, that is the only way by which we can hope actually to cut the budget submitted by the President of the United States.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think it should be developed, I suggest to the distinguished Senator, that what we are doing here has been imposed upon us by law. The Reorganization Act required us to have a budget by February 15. The Reorganization Act did not provide us with a staff to enable us to have the kind of a budget the distinguished Senator from Connecticut contemplates. Therefore we have no alternative but to reach a result based on, let us call it, rough judgment.

Mr. TAFT. I think the Senator from Colorado is entirely correct, and I may add that while, as the Senator from Colorado says, the duty is imposed on us by law, I think it is a good law, though I believe it can be improved. I think in ordinary years we will have had a staff working during the recess which can give us more intelligent information than we now have. But I know of no other method than that we are pursuing. What is now required is something that has never been done in any Congress of which I have been a member. It has centered the attention of Congress on the over-all expenditures, and it has enabled us to debate what they shall be. It has forced every Member of Congress to go into the budget, to look over the items which make up the expenditures of the Government, and come to some over-all conclusion. Up to this time we have never approached the question of expenditures, except through individual appropriation bills, contemplating the merits or demerits of a particular program, and we never have had to consider the over-all effect of all the individual bills put together on the economy of the United States of America.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to state to the Senator that I approve generally of the effort which is being made to arrive at some reasonable judgment about prospective expenditures of the Government. I supported wholeheartedly the reorganization bill, which imposed this requirement on Congress. It may be that the time allowed for preparing a report, namely from the 3d of January to the 15th day of February, was too short. That is a matter we can consider at some other time. We cannot consider it now.

A while ago the Senator from Ohio made the statement that we had no information upon which the $37,500,000,000 budget of the President was based. We have just as much information about that as we have about the proposed $6,000,000,000 cut. Obviously the Bureau of the Budget, the departments, and the President himself, went through the figures, and screened them, in order to arrive at the $37,500,000,000 total.

Mr. TAFT. Let me modify my statement. Of course, what I meant was that we have no evidence; no witnesses, were called to tell us about this item and that item, whether it involved an increase or a decrease. When I said we had no informaton, of course I knew we had the President's budget, with a statement; but we had none of the kind of information the Appropriations Committee finally will obtain.

Mr. BARKLEY. In arriving at the figure given there was a departmental sifting, a budgetary sifting, and a presidential sifting. The President reduced the estimates of the departments by about $5,000,000,000 or more. So that he at least felt that he had based his budget upon information available to him, which had come to him through various sifting processes in the departments.

But let me state what causes me to find fault, and why I think what we have done is wholly inadequate to give the Senate any information. When the first meeting of the committee on the President's budget, made up of 102 Members of the two Houses of Congress, was held, a subcommittee of 20, five from each of four committees, the two Committees on Appropriations, the Ways and Means Committee, and the Finance Committee, were appointed to go over the President's budget and submit a report.

We met on two separate days. The first day was devoted to going through the budget, or a compendium of the budget which was passed around by the chairman of the subcommittee, which I think had been worked out by the Budget Bureau itself. Then we decided to call before the subcommittee the fiscal agents of the Treasury, and the Director of the Budget. So we spent one whole day hearing the Director of the Budget, and hearing Treasury officials on the matter of Treasury receipts, which was simple enough. There is no serious controversy about the amount of money which will be raised by present tax rates, and by the extension of the excise taxes during the fiscal year 1948. When we had the Director of the Budget before us, of course he undertook to explain the budget from the standpoint of the President and the Bureau of the Budget.

Then we adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman. Not another witness was called before the subcommittee. No one else was heard. No other information, so far as we were concerned, was ever sought, although I am informally told that a few members of the subcommittee, from the majority side, not even all the majority, were invited into the Sanhedrin sessions, but a few members of the majority—were called in secret session, and by some process arrived at the $6,000,000,000 reduction.

Those of us who were not invited to those meetings, or were not privileged to attend them, or even to know where they were held or when they were held, or were not even told where the crystal ball was located into which the others were gazing in order to arrive at the $6,000,000,000 figure, have never gotten a breakdown, that could be regarded as dependable or official, as to where the $6,000,000,000 could be saved. So that when the Senator says we do not have any information as to the basis of the President's $37,500,000,000 budget, I might say we have no adequate or dependable information as to the reason for fixing a ceiling of $31,000,000,000 or any other number of billion dollars, and any guess we make will be only a guess, and it may not be an intelligent guess.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, in my opinion, it would have been absolutely impossible for the joint committee to hear evidence on two or three thousand items, or even on two or three hundred items.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with that, and I so stated at the first meeting of the joint committee, that it would be utterly impossible to go into details as to individual appropriations; but we who were on the joint committee certainly were entitled to some information from those who reached the $6,000,000,000 figure. To this hour we have not received it.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, as far as I was concerned, to satisfy myself I took the budget which is here. Table 10 of the Budget contains detailed figures, and I went through it trying to apply an intelligent guess to the items. In that way I cut the budget all the way through.

Of course, the approach of the Senator from Virginia, cutting off 700,000 Federal employees as a kind of over-all cut, applies to all the items, and is only an approach. I think there was considerable duplication in his figures. If we cut the number of employees, then we cannot cut the Veterans' Administration besides, unless we want to curtail veteran benefits; we cannot duplicate the cut. I did not approach the problem from that standpoint. I approached it from the standpoint of the individual items, and I went through the entire budget.

In discussing table 10, the Senator from Virginia mentioned a billion dollars in connection with government corporations. I fully agree that there is a very large cut possible in the appropriations for Government corporations. The Government corporation expenses added up to approximately a billion and a half dollars, but I reached a total of about $5,350,000,000. However, we cut about half a billion dollars off the billion dollars for foreign relief. I do not know whether we are going to be able to make that saving. The proposal cut into various items fairly deeply, the wisdom of which may appear to be doubtful before we get through. My feeling about this subject is that we ought to be realistic; we ought actually to know what it is that we are going to cut.

I rather challenge anybody to sit down, go through the Budget in detail, figure it out, and reach a total cut quite so large as $6,000,000,000, except in one way. In my figures I cut the Army and Navy 10 percent, which is $1,100,000,000. The figures presented to us ran up to about two and one-fourth billion dollars or two and one-half billion dollars. As I see it, that is the principal difference between the conclusions reached by those who have made the computations in different ways.

I think any organization the size of the Army and Navy can be cut 10 percent, probably with gain to its efficiency, so far as that is concerned if that is what is to be done.

On the other hand, I am somewhat concerned to put up to them a 20- or a 25-percent cut, for fear they will throw up their hands and say, "Well, the only way to do that is to cut out this or that very important item; that is what we will have to do." I feel that as a matter of safety it would be better not to plan on a 20- to 25-percent cut in the expenditures for the armed forces.

I think it should be pointed out that the armed forces already have been substantially cut. Everyone should realize that. The total expenditures of the Government this fiscal year will run close to $45,000,000,000, so that we are asked under the President's budget to spend for the next fiscal year about $7,500,000,000 less than was spent this year.

We would add to that a reduction of $4,500,000,000 in actual expenditures during the next fiscal year, which would make about $12,000,000,000 less than in the current fiscal year. The expenditures ought to be much less.

We have been demobilizing, so to speak, but still it must be borne in mind that the figures we are talking about represent a reduction in an imaginary figure the President has suggested, and not a reduction in the expenditures, which are now being made in the current fiscal year closing on the 30th day of June 1947.

The actual cost of the Army in the fiscal year 1947 will be, as estimated to the 1st of July, $10,500,000,000. The President is cutting it $3,800,000,000. With the additional 10-percent cut as figured by me, the Army cost would be reduced in this 1 year from $10,500,000,000 to $6,030,000,000.

In 1947 the Navy will cost $5,780,000,000; in 1948, according to the President's figures, $4,500,000,000; and according to the proposal for a $4,500,000,000, possibly a $5,000,000,000 reduction in the total budget, the Navy will cost $4,000,000,000, or, in the 2 years, the cost will be reduced from $5,700,000,000 to $4,000,000,000—a cut of about 30 percent.

I think in peacetime the cost of both the Army and the Navy should be considerably less than the new figures—considerably less than $10,000,000,000; which is about what I would provide for the two of them for this year. I should hope that in peacetime, even with the large Army and Navy, they would not cost in excess of $6,000,000,000.

There are still in the Budget a number of nonrecurring expenditures. We can count certainly on much further reductions in the Army and Navy when the world has settled down, and we do not have to use occupation forces on such a large scale.

The budget provides for about $2,500,000,000 for foreign expenditures, of which $2,000,000,000 is committed. There is no way I can see to avoid that expenditure. One item is the British loan, and the other is the Export-Import Bank. I voted for the Export-Import Bank and against the British loan. Those are commitments, but they will not continue indefinitely.

Items for veterans contain about $2,000,000,000 for educational expenditures, which will gradually disappear. So I figure that with the disappearance of these hangovers from the war, we can probably cut the budget nearly $10,000,000,000 below the figure we determine upon today.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to ask whether the committee has an estimate of how much of the Army's appropriation was for occupational food, for food relief abroad, and that sort of thing.

Mr. TAFT. I think I can say, without revealing anything particularly confidential, that the Army budget which I am figuring, and to which I have referred, covers only expenditures for the armed forces; it does not include provision for any relief abroad, that being a separate item.

As to how much it costs for occupation, we were told by as high an authority as can be found that the occupation of Japan, Korea, and Germany costs about $2,000,000,000 a year, in this budget, and that the occupation of other stations outside the continental United States costs another $1,100,000,000; so that the Army costs outside the United States are approximately $3,100,000,000.

Certainly if the total Army cost is $6,800,000,000, it seems to me that it could stand a substantial cut. The other $3,700,000,000 is being spent in the United States. Most of it is for the air force. The air force is not being used to any great extent in occupational service, and certainly half or more of the expenditures in the United States are for the air force. In fact, approximately $1,000,000,000 is for the purchase of new airplanes and airplane parts to maintain the service. I think that can be cut to some extent. I do not think it ought to be entirely eliminated.

In addition to the Army cuts, my proposal was to cut the foreign relief item from $1,000,000,000 to $500,000,000. The foreign relief figures are about $700,000,000 for the occupied countries and about $300,000,000 for Australia, Italy, and Greece. That is a total of $1,000,000,000 merely for food.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. Specifically I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio what reasons he has or what evidence he can now give the Senate as to why he would cut that particular item from $1,000,000,000 to $500,000,000. Before the Senator answers, I should like to say that I do not want the Senate to misunderstand the purpose of my questions. I am as anxious to get every bit of water out of the budget as is the Senator from Ohio, but my position is that I must refuse to act without some evidence which will compel my intellect to accept the choice. Now, I should like to ask specifically: What evidence can the Senator give us as to the reason why the item for foreign relief should be cut from $1,000,000,000 to $500,000,000?

Mr. TAFT. It is the pious hope that the crops in Europe will be sufficiently good so that in the fiscal year beginning next July and extending through next winter the possible demands which are now estimated may not have to be met. However, I may point out to the Senator from Connecticut that after making that cut and reaching the figure of $5,350,000,000, I stated that I regarded the item of food as one that might have to be restored when all the evidence is in. That would reduce my figure to $4,800,000,000, after restoring the item for food.

Mr. McMAHON. That is what might be called rather an "iffy" item.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct. It is the most doubtful of the deductions I have made, and I do not know whether it can remain. I understand that Mr. Hoover is now in Europe for the War Department trying to make a complete estimate of the food situation. When he returns there may be better information on that subject, but I do not believe the final information will be available until we are advised as to the character of the crops in Europe and in Africa.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator from Ohio, I am sure, appreciates the terrific impact that that particular item may well have on the maintenance of the peace and the stability of the continent of Europe which is so essential to our own peace as well.

Mr. TAFT. I quite agree with the Senator, and I say that even though we restore and grant that item as it now appears in the Budget, we can still cut the budget $4,800,000,000, according to my figures.

Mr. President, I now want to say a word with regard to the reduction of taxes, a subject on which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] was so very eloquent today. I think the present tax burden is in itself a threat to the welfare of the United States. The Budget cut is for the purpose of enabling taxes to be reduced as well as to bring about a reduction of the national debt. If we cut the Budget $4,500,000,000 in line with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], we will have then a margin of estimated receipts over estimated expenditures of $6,000,000,000; estimated receipts being $39,000,000,000 and estimated expenditures $33,000,000,000. That, I think, will enable us to make, and we should make, beginning with the 1st of July, a tax cut of 20 percent in the personal income tax total receipts, which are now about $17,500,000,000, or a cut of $3,500,000,000. That would leave $2,500,000,000 to apply on the national debt.

At the present moment, however, it is, I think, even more important to reduce taxes than it is to reduce the national debt, particularly in view of the fact that we still have a budget larger than normal because of the aftermath of war. To the present national tax burden of $39,000,000,000 must be added local and State taxes, which bring the total tax burden of the country up to $50,000,000,000 a year. Our national income is $165,000,000,000 a year, so that nearly one-third of our income is being taken in taxes for the support of government. That means that on the average the people of this country are working 1 day in 3 for the Government, and 2 days in 3 for themselves. It imposes an almost intolerable burden on the lowest income group. A man or woman earning $1,200 a year has to pay $100 a year in taxes. It imposes a great burden on the intermediate groups. The President of the United States receives a salary of $75,000 a year, but he has to pay about $40,000 of that amount in taxes.

The imposition of such taxes reduces the incentive to work. Persons who are worth a great deal of money, who have initiated new projects, who have found new ways of doing things, who have enabled new businesses to become started, are practically invited by the end of 6 months to go to Florida rather than to stay at home and do any more work. Individuals in the high-income brackets must pay such a high rate of tax that it is not profitable for them to invest any money in any business enterprises. It is better for them to put their money into municipal bonds. There is not the incentive there should be for them to invest money in creating the new businesses the country desires to have created. In the thirties, for the first time, the amount of money invested per man who worked decreased, and is decreasing today, whereas, as a matter of fact, the way to raise the standard of living is to increase the per capita investment.

It seems to me that the whole effect of the tax structure is to slow up the development of the country and interfere seriously with its welfare. It seems to me that, for the economic advance of the United States, we must take the steps which are necessary in cutting down expenditures so that in balancing the budget we may cut taxes to the point where they will constitute a reasonable burden upon people of all classes, from the highest to the lowest.

So, at the moment, if I only had $3,500,000,000 to apply, I would apply it all to reduction of taxes. The debt is a serious problem, but, as I say, we are not back yet to normal expenditures, and the important thing is that the debt shall not be increased. The important thing is that the debt shall not be used as an inflationary method to increase expenditures, and actually spend more than we take in.

Mr. President, I think the $6,000,000,000 figure or the $4,500,000,000 figure involves merely a question of degree. Perhaps those of us who think it ought to be $4,500,000,000 are simply a little more conservative. We are not sure, and we think that if we actually reduce expenditures by $4,500,000,000 we are doing a tremendous thing, something that no Congress heretofore has ever done. We are trying an experiment. I would rather put it on the ground that I myself feel it can be done, having satisfied myself to that effect. When the appropriation bills come before us it is not going to be easy to cut them by $4,500,000,000. We are going to have a real job to hold the cut to that figure, in my opinion, but I think it can be done. I would rather hold the cut to that figure than make a cut which personally, perhaps wrongly, I think, cannot be made without impairing certain essential services of the Government.

So, Mr. President, I hope very much that we may undertake a reasonable program, one we can hope to carry out, and one we may in our hearts promise the American people when we vote it that we will carry out. Certainly whatever Congress may decide upon, I shall do everything in my power to see that, regardless of where the chips fall, the promise is carried out and the appropriations are held down, and that even essential services are eliminated, if that be necessary, in order to keep the promise that we here, I believe, are making to the people of the United States.

NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMED SERVICES REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, there have come before the Committee on Armed Services numerous nominations in the Navy, the Army, and Marine Corps. The committee approved all the nominations. In the list there are 1,128 ensigns and 1,100 chief warrant officers. The committee has authorized me to report the nominations to the Senate with the request in order to save the expense of printing, that the nominations of all officers below the grade of colonel or captain be presently considered and approved.

The committee also instructed me to report certain other nominations, in the grades above colonel and captain, in order that they may be listed on the Executive Calendar for consideration at the next session of the Senate.

As in executive session, I report a list of Marine Corps, Navy, and Army nominations below the ranks of colonel and captain, and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota reports from the Committee on Armed Services certain nominations, and asks unanimous consent that the nominations in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, below the grade of colonel and captain, be immediately considered, as in executive session. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, clearly what is proposed is a contravention of the rules of the Senate; but if there is any substantial reason for proceeding now, I shall not object. I think it is highly important that we conform as closely as possible to the rules of the Senate, and that there be no departure from them unless there is substantial reason for the departure. Specifically, would any harm result to the public if these nominations were to go over until Friday?

Mr. GURNEY. No harm whatever would result. However, by confirming them at this time there will be a considerable saving. The nominations have been considered by the committee. The committee took a record vote upon the nominations of junior officers. A saving of approximately $800 in printing the Executive Calendar would be effected by confirming at this time the nominations below the grade of colonel or captain.

Further, I may say to the Senator from Maine that I am reporting another list of general officers, those of high rank, which I am asking to have placed on the calendar.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the item of $800 is not one to be lightly brushed aside. In view of that saving, I withhold any objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Maine that the rule contemplates the possibility of unanimous consent as a means for immediate consideration, because it is specifically so stated in the rule.

Mr. WHITE. I think the Chair is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, the nominations below the grade of colonel or captain are confirmed.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I now report a number of nominations approved by the Committee on Armed Services, and ask that the nominations be placed upon the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report is received as in executive session, and the nominations will be placed upon the calendar.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports were submitted:

Sundry officers for appointment in the Regular Army of the United States;

Sundry officers for temporary appointment in the Army of the United States;

Sundry officers for appointment in the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army of the United States, under the provisions of law.

By Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Executive B, Eightieth Congress, first session, a protocol signed October 1, 1946, to exend for 1 year from October 1, 1946, subject to certain conditions, the Inter-American Coffee Agreement signed in Washington on November 28, 1940; without amendment (Ex. Rept. No. 1).

MARY SHEARIN PERRY

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I wish to report several resolutions.

I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 84 and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 84), submitted by Mr. HOEY on February 17, 1947, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Mary Shearin Perry, widow of John R. Perry, late an employee of the Senate, a sum equal to 1 year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], as well as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], whether it is proposed to interrupt the discussion on the budget which is now under way in order to take up these resolutions, or whether it is proposed to take a recess following action upon them. Ordinarily such resolutions are disposed of at the end of the day, unless there is some reason for expediting their consideration. When a hot debate is in progress, the introduction of extraneous matters for a few moments always produces a "cold choler." It distracts the attention of Senators from what is going on. I wonder if we are reaching the point where we are about to suspend for the day.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I shall be glad to yield as soon as I answer the part of the question which was directed specifically to me. I saw no heated desire on the part of any Senator to rise to the occasion in the present debate. It seemed to me that the "cold choler" had already arrived. I saw an opportunity to report certain resolutions the consideration of which would not require long because they were unanimously agreed to in the Committee on Rules and Administration. If the Senator from Kentucky has any heat he would like to get out of his system, I will withdraw my request until he has had an opportunity to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no special quantity of heat. I always try to generate my own. When the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] arose a while ago I thought he was rising to discuss the budgetary question which is before the Senate. Instead of that he contributed to the cooling-off process by presenting some nominations. The Senator from Illinois seems to want to add further frigidity to our debate. It is all right with me; but I am wondering whether we are tapering off for the day, or whether we are to undertake to vote today on the pending amendment or the concurrent resolution itself, or postpone it. What is the plan? I suppose that during this colloquy the resolutions which the Senator from Illinois wishes to present might have been disposed of. I shall not object to their present consideration, although I have not received an adequate answer to my numerous interrogatories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of Senate Resolution 84?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

SUPERINTENDENT OF SENATE PERIODICAL PRESS GALLERY

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution 79, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 79) submitted by Mr. BRIDGES on February 3, 1947, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, until otherwise provided by law, compensation at the base rate of $3,860 per annum for the services of a superintendent of the Senate periodical press gallery.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments of the committee were, in line 2, after the word "until", to strike out "otherwise provided by law" and insert in lieu thereof "June 30, 1947"; and in line 3, after the word "of", to strike out "$3,860" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,660."

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PRINTING OF SENATE RULES AND MANUAL FOR EIGHTIETH CONGRESS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration I report an original resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 86) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 285, Seventy-ninth Congress, a resolution providing for the preparation and printing of the Senate Rules and Manual for the Eightieth Congress is hereby rescinded; and

Resolved further, That the Committee on Rules and Administration be, and it is hereby, directed to prepare a revised edition of the Senate Rules and Manual for the use of the Eightieth Congress, and that 1,500 additional copies shall be printed and bound, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the Senate, 200 copies for the use of the Committee on Rules and Administration, and the remaining 300 copies shall be bound in full morocco and tagged as to contents and delivered as may be directed by the committee.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. [Putting the question.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I inquire what it is we are voting upon?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. BARKLEY. We are not ready to vote on that amendment now. I understood, from conversations with several Senators, that it was not proposed to vote on the amendment today. Several Senators wish to discuss it further.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, some time ago I made inquiry as to whether we could reach an agreement for a vote on Friday, so that Senators might be assured that no vote would be had this afternoon. I made no progress with such inquiries. At the moment the legislation is in charge of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], and anything that he proposes with respect to the continuance of the session this afternoon is agreeable to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I was honored by being consulted with respect to an agreement to vote on Friday, a proposal to which I warmed up, and I was prepared to accommodate myself accordingly. A number of Senators are absent today who wish to vote on the pending question. Most of them will be back on Friday. It will be entirely agreeable to me to fix an hour on Friday to vote on the Millikin amendment and on the final passage of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky says he warmed up somewhat to the suggestion he has just referred to. I not only warmed up to it, but was burned by it. I found that I could not get such an agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator does not intimate that I scorched him, does he?

Mr. WHITE. I do not. I received no encouragement that an agreement could be reached this afternoon for a voting time on Friday.

Mr. BARKLEY. The only way to test it is to make the request. If any Senator objects, of course that ends it. I do not think we should admit total defeat without making an effort.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, inasmuch as the issue is before us on the Millikin amendment, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, asking for the yeas and nays is entirely agreeable, but that does not necessarily bring about a vote today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the demand of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, many Senators, if not most of them, were led to believe on Monday that there would be no vote today. It was practically predicted that there would not be a vote before next Monday, and most Senators felt that that would probably be the case. With that understanding quite a number of them left the city on official business. I am not insisting that the vote be put off until Monday, but under the circumstances I feel that we should not try to force a vote today. I think there was a general feeling among all of us that there would not be a vote today. I hope we may vote as early as possible on Friday. I think, in justice to all Senators, we should not try to take snap judgment by forcing a vote today.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, if no other Senator wishes to discuss the amendment, I see no reason why we should not vote this afternoon. But if there is objection I should like to get an agreement as to a time for voting on Friday on the Millikin amendment, and in turn on subsequent amendments which may be offered. I am perfectly willing to proceed to a vote now.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may say to the Senator from New Hampshire that two or three Senators on this side wish to discuss the subject from a general standpoint. It is not convenient to do so this afternoon. It will be convenient to do so on Friday, without any extended remarks. Personally, I am willing to agree to almost any reasonable hour on Friday. I think the chances are that we might get a vote Friday even without an agreement, but I should prefer to have an agreement.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate agree to vote not later than 2 o'clock on Friday on the so-called Millikin amendment to reduce the Budget cut from $6,000,000,000 to $4,500,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator make it 3 o'clock?

Mr. BRIDGES. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire that the pending amendment be voted on at not later than 3 o'clock on Friday?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I feel that the particular resolution before the Senate, as was stated earlier this afternoon by the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is one of the most important pieces of business that will come before the Senate at this session.

I have been listening to as many of the speeches as my duties have permitted. I understand that I missed a very able speech by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] this afternoon, which I shall want to read between now and the meeting on Friday.

I have been waiting for some reliable information that would indicate to me exactly where the savings are to be made in the Budget. There are a great many features of the Budget which are very vital not only to the country as a whole but to certain sections of the country, and hence I do not think it would be wise to limit debate. I am inclined to believe that we can probably reach a vote on Friday, but something may arise in this debate that will require extended answer because of the vital importance of this issue to the economic welfare of the whole Nation. Therefore, I object to any unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the resolution at any particular time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon objects.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think the Senate has made appreciable progress this afternoon in the discussion of this measure. I think it is perfectly certain that we cannot dispose of it this afternoon, in view of the statement made by the minority leader as to the number of Senators who may wish to discuss the resolution. Therefore it seems to me we might as well conclude today's work at this time and go over until Friday, when I hope that Senators will be prepared to discuss the concurrent resolution. I think we shall ultimately dispose of it on Friday afternoon.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, so far as I know, there will be no delay on this side. We shall be ready to go forward with our part of the discussion promptly on the reassembling of the Senate on Friday.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, with reference to the remarks of the majority leader, if it is the desire of the Senate to recess until Friday, I shall offer no objection. But I shall oppose any partial day's session on Friday. So far as I am concerned, we shall make a full day of it on Friday, and if there is a motion to recess before we shall have fully discussed the question and reached a vote, I will oppose it. To a recess at this time I offer no objection and shall concur in what the majority wishes.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I wish it to appear clearly that the delay in the further consideration of the concurrent resolution is caused by the minority. We have been hearing references to this "Do-nothing Congress," but there seems to be a readiness on this side to dispose of the question by vote. If the delay is out of courtesy to and in consideration of the minority, because some Senators are absent, I think it would be well to clear the record as to who is responsible for the delay of 2 days.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to admit my responsibility so far as any delay is concerned; and I am satisfied that the injection of the observations on the part of the junior Senator from Maine will have a vital effect upon the next Presidential election in 1948. I may say in that connection that I am informed that there are more Republicans than Democrats absent.

Mr. BREWSTER. If we are to become personal, I hope my observations may have a more salutary effect upon the next Presidential election than many of the observations of the Senator from Kentucky upon the Vice Presidential nominations in connection with the last election.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know to what the Senator refers. But I am not anticipating any particular observations on the next Presidential nominations of either party, notwithstanding the vital interest of the Senator from Maine.

RECESS UNTIL FRIDAY

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the discussion of the last few minutes has confirmed me in my judgment that we might as well close now. Therefore I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Friday, February 21, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Holy Spirit, revealer of truth and sealer of every holy purpose, help us to realize that all things are ours through the illumination of Thy presence. O Thou Crucified One, as we bow at the altars of our hearts, we pray that the perfect blending of the human and the divine may unite in us, for under Thy shadow lies the promise of redemption.

On this day of holy memory and consecration we pray for a rededication. Fill us with high hopes and keep us in the pathway of obedience. Bring surcease to those who weep because of sorrow and failure; and grant Thy blessing, Heavenly Father, to make them peaceful and their hearts pure. Bring a new sense of power to those who are discouraged, and unfold a light to those who are afraid. Keep our lips, Heavenly Father, from impetuous speech. Bless all of those sweet and beautiful ministries in home and in hospital.

And, Heavenly Father, as we view our own sins today, grant us Thy holy presence that we may be kept free from transgressions that hurt and assault the soul.

Let us pray the Lord's Prayer:

Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever.

Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on February 1, 1947, the President approved and signed a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 57. Joint resolution extending for 15 months the period of time during which alcohol plants are permitted to produce sugars or sirups simultaneously with the production of alcohol.

PRELIMINARY REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to speak for the purpose of calling to the attention of the House the fact that your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has filed today a preliminary report on the subject of safety in air navigation. Since the organization of Congress the committee has been actively engaged practically every day in the week, mornings and afternoons, in conducting an inquiry into the cause of and remedy for air accidents. The committee has collected an extensive amount of important information. However, there is much yet to be done.

I am confident when the committee has completed its investigation and study it will have a fund of information from which recommendations can be made that will prove very worth while. I call particular attention to the fact that the report filed today is only a preliminary report. It is in no sense to be considered as an all-inclusive or final report. The final report will be filed at a later date when the committee has finished its hearings. The vast amount of work yet to be done by the committee will preclude the filing of a final report for some time to come.

To date the committee has concentrated on air safety in connection with scheduled or certificated air operations. It has heard, among others, from representatives of the Department of Commerce, the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Civil Aeronautics Administration, the Army and the Navy, the Coast Guard, the Air Transport Command, the Weather Bureau, the Air Pilots' Association, the Air Transport Association, several air lines, insurance underwriter organizations, and oil companies in addition to navigators and airport officials.

In the future the committee intends to hear from the manufacturers of instruments, engines, and airframes, and others who have it within their power to contribute to increased safety in air navigation. At the conclusion of the hearings the committee intends to file a final and complete report which takes in all ramifications of the problem of air safety on the part of scheduled air lines as well as nonscheduled operators and private fliers.

The reason for filing a preliminary report at this time is that the Congress is now, through its Committee on Appropriations, studying the budgets of the several Government departments and agencies which are concerned with civil aviation. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce felt that it was its duty to call to the attention of the Appropriation Committee the needs of those departments and agencies in order to assure the adequacy of their contribution toward increased safety in air navigation.

The committee by no means takes the view that air safety is exclusively the concern of the Government. On the contrary, there are a great many things which the manufacturers of engines, instruments, and airframes, as well as the operators of aircraft, can contribute. However, there are some things which fall peculiarly within the sphere of Government responsibility, and it is those aspects of air safety with which the preliminary report deals, such as airport landing lights, in-flight weather reporting, meteorological studies, and basic research.

I have tried in these brief remarks to show that the committee is giving careful consideration to all matters that enter into a full and complete study of safety in air navigation. I feel certain that the final conclusions of the committeee will prove helpful in promoting safe air navigation.

GERHART EISLER

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that, pursuant to House Resolution 104, Eightieth Congress, he did, on February 19, 1947, certify to the United States attorney, District of Columbia, the willful and deliberate refusal of Gerhart Eisler to be sworn and to testify before the Committee on Un-American Activities.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on February 21, 1947, after the reading of the Journal, Washington's Farewell Address may be read by a Member to be designated by the Speaker.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Connecticut, the Honorable JOHN DAVIS LODGE, to read George Washington's Farewell Address on February 21, 1947.

INVITATION TO VISIT THE CZECHOSLOVAK REPUBLIC

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of State and the Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary from Czechoslovakia, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

FEBRUARY 11, 1947.

The Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. MARTIN: There is enclosed herewith a communication dated January 30, 1947, addressed to you by His Excellency Dr. Juraj Slávik, Ambassador of Czechoslovakia, which the Ambassador has requested the Department of State to forward to you.

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON,
Under Secretary.

[Enclosure: As stated above.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 30, 1947.

The Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The Czechoslovak National Constitutional Assembly unanimously passed a resolution inviting the United States House of Representatives to visit the Czechoslovak Republic. The members of the Czechoslovak National Assembly would welcome such a visit and would be happy to receive and to honor a representative delegation of the United States House of Representatives in Prague, the capital of Czechoslovakia. In adopting the resolution the members of the National Assembly gratefully acknowledged that it was on the soil of the United States of America where the first two Presidents of Czechoslovakia found refuge in the two world wars and where they were so generously helped both by the Governments and the people of the United States in the struggle for the liberation of the Czechoslovak people and for the reconstitution of their independence. The members of the National Assembly stressed on this occasion that the history of the United States and that of Czechoslovakia have thus become closely associated with one another for all future as both are filled with examples and symbols of the continued efforts toward the realization of the ideals of freedom and of human progress.

Mr. President, the National Assembly hopes that it will be possible for the United States House of Representatives to delegate a group of its Members to undertake this journey in the not distant future to see the efforts which the Czechoslovak Republic is making to repair the ravages of the war and the enemy occupation and to convince themselves that the Czechoslovak people will remain faithful to the ideals of democracy and freedom.

In transmitting this message to you, Mr. Speaker, I would greatly appreciate it if you would bring it to the attention of the honorable Members of the United States House of Representatives and let me know at your pleasure of the action the honorable Members of the United States House of Representatives prefer to take.

Sincerely yours,

DR. JURAJ SLÁVIK,
Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary.

TERMINATION OF EMERGENCY AND WARTIME POWERS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 141)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

During the year and a half that have elapsed since the defeat of our last enemy in battle, we have progressively eliminated the great majority of emergency controls over the Nation's economy. The progress of reconversion now makes it possible to take an additional step toward freeing our economy of wartime controls.

Accordingly, I am recommending that the Congress repeal certain temporary statutes still in effect by virtue of the emergencies proclaimed by the President in 1939 and 1941, and I have requested the executive departments and agencies to cease operations under powers derived from certain permanent statutes that are effective only during emergencies, to the extent that such operations are related to the 1939 and 1941 emergencies.

The recommendations I here present for the consideration of the Congress will, if accepted, materially assist in further freeing the country of war controls and will help make possible an early ending of the emergencies. I have under continuing study the question of terminating the emergencies proclaimed in 1939 and 1941, and intend to take action as soon as circumstances permit.

In my recent message to the Congress on the State of the Union I outlined the following program with respect to the termination of emergency and wartime powers:

Two groups of temporary laws still remain: The first are those which by congressional mandate are to last during the "emergency;" the second are those which are to continue until the "termination of the war."

I shall submit to the Congress recommendations for the repeal of certain of the statutes which by their terms continue for the duration of the "emergency." I shall at the same time recommend that others within this classification be extended until the state of war has been ended by treaty or by legislative action. As to those statutes which continue until the state of war has been terminated, I urge that the Congress promptly consider each statute individually, and repeal such emergency legislation where advisable.

Accordingly I now submit recommendations with respect to more than 100 laws which are affected by the limited emergency declared September 8, 1939, or the unlimited emergency declared May 27, 1941.

In the case of those statutes that remain in force until termination of the war, I have directed the executive departments and agencies to assist the Congress in its consideration of these statutes, individually, by making available full information concerning them to the appropriate congressional committees. The work done on this subject in the Seventy-ninth Congress by the Committee on the Judiciary of both Houses, with the assistance of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion, the Department of Justice, and other Government agencies should offer valuable aid to the Congress in accomplishing the task which remains. At a later date it may prove desirable to send a further communication to the Congress concerning these statutes.

Emergency laws dealt with in this message fall into five broad classes: (A) Temporary statutes which are no longer needed, and which consequently should be repealed forthwith; (B) permanent statutes under which operations related to the 1939 or 1941 emergencies have been or are being discontinued, but which should remain for possible use during future emergencies; (C) statutes appropriating funds, which should, when the funds are no longer required, be handled by rescission of funds rather than by repeal of the statutes; (D) statutes which should be temporarily extended by the Congress pending consideration of permanent legislation or other disposition as indicated below; (E) statutes which should continue in force for the period or purpose stipulated.

In appendices to this message the statutes under reference are enumerated according to the above classifications.

A. TEMPORARY STATUTES WHICH SHOULD BE REPEALED

I recommend the outright repeal of the 24 statutes or portions thereof specified in appendix A. To a greater or lesser degree, all these statutes were designed to meet special problems of the war which no longer face us. It should be noted, however, that repeal of one of these laws will restore customs duties over certain commodities. In repealing it, the Congress should provide for the customary 30 days' notice before duty changes become effective.

B. PERMANENT STATUTES EFFECTIVE ONLY DURING AN EMERGENCY

The 36 laws enumerated in appendix B are permanent legislation but come into force only during emergencies. Many of them were enacted during or before the first World War. Nothing requires their removal from our body of permanent law at this time, and it is preferable that operations conducted under them by virtue of the 1939 and 1941 emergencies should lapse rather than that the statutes should be repealed.

I have requested the head of each executive department and agency to discontinue at the earliest possible moment and in any event not later than March 15, 1947, the exercise of such powers as are derived, from these statutes, by virtue of the existence of the emergencies of 1939 and 1941.

C. STATUTES APPROPRIATING FUNDS

When appropriated funds are no longer required, it is the established procedure of the Congress to rescind these funds rather than to repeal the appropriation acts. On six occasions since the surrender of Japan I have recommended that the Congress rescind certain appropriated funds, and I shall continue to make recommendations for rescission of funds whenever possible.

Dependent upon the emergencies of 1939 and 1941 are 20 appropriation provisions listed in appendix C. Expenditures under two of these acts have already ceased. Expenditures under 12 others will be terminated as rapidly as possible, and appropriate recommendations for rescission will be made.

In the case of four acts making appropriations for roads under the Defense Highway Act of 1941, after the end of the emergency these funds will continue to be needed by the Federal Works Agency for maintenance of access road projects until June 30, 1947, completion of access road projects now under construction, strategic network projects, and necessary advance engineering. I shall shortly transmit a budgetary communication in the usual form for this purpose.

In the case of the appropriation acts by which funds were provided for clerical assistance to Senators and for the Capitol Police force, this is, of course, a matter which exclusively concerns the Congress.

D. STATUTES WHICH SHOULD BE TEMPORARILY EXTENDED

In the case of most of the 12 statutes listed in appendix D, the Congress may wish to consider permanent legislation. In order to preserve existing activities and conditions until the Congress has had an opportunity to consider such legislation, I recommend the temporary extension of these statutes until June 30, 1948. In a few cases, termination on an indicated date appears desirable even though permanent legislation is not contemplated. The reasons for temporary extension in each case, the period of extension requested, and the executive departments and agencies interested are set forth in appendix D.

E. STATUTES REMAINING IN FORCE FOR THE PERIOD OR PURPOSE STIPULATED

Of the remaining 10 statutes affected by the existence of the emergencies, five will continue in force for a stipulated period after the emergencies have been declared at an end, and two have no termination provisions. The remaining statutes consist of one mandatory law under which operations cannot be discontinued during the emergencies (Act of July 2, 1940); and another two laws which are needed until the end of the emergencies (act of June 29, 1936, and act of March 8, 1946). The five statutes with terminal provisions beyond the emergencies should be allowed to remain in force for the periods stipulated by their terms; the two statutes without termination provisions should continue for the limited purposes provided; and the remaining statutes should be permitted to lapse according to their terms.

These statutes are enumerated in Appendix E, which states the purpose for which each of these laws will be needed and lists the executive departments or agencies concerned.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 19, 1947.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, at a meeting of the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments this morning I was authorized to insert in the RECORD as chairman of the Subcommittee on Executive Agencies information as to the number of civilian employees in the United States Government. This table lists the various departments and lists the number of employees in each department by numbers. The numbers are indicated on the margin of the table which I expect to insert in the RECORD. On the margin you will find information from the Committee on Executive Expenditures as to the functions of each department. At a later date, we expect to ask to have that inserted in the RECORD and be made a part thereof. But, at the present time, Mr. Speaker, I would like permission to have inserted in the RECORD this table showing the Members of the House the total number in each department and each division of the Government as of December 31, 1946.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(The table referred to is as follows:)

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article. The Public Printer estimates the cost at $160.34. Notwithstanding the cost, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the cost and without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

SUGAR

Mr. MILLER of Nebraka. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I have just received a letter from one of my constituents at Lodgepole, Nebr., which I am sure will be of interest to the Members of this House. It reads as follows:

LODGEPOLE, NEBR., February 17, 1947.

Hon. A. L. MILLER,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: Two packages of sugar have been sent to my wife from Czechoslovakia. The parcels are now in the post office in Lodgepole, Nebr. The postmaster got notice not to deliver except on payment of duty and surrender of four sugar-ration stamps, No. 53 spare.

I have no sugar ration stamps now. We had only two No. 53 spare. I can't understand how they demand ration stamps, as the sugar has been sent as a "gift." I think they are wrong to do anything like this. Please can you advise?

Respectfully,

A CONSTITUENT.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this raises several interesting questions. From whence comes this supply of sugar that permits people of eastern Europe to squeeze it from their meager food supply to send to America? Is it UNRRA sugar bought with our money and in greater supply than necessary? Has the allocation of the world's sugar supply been too liberal to other countries at the expense of the American housewife, as some of us have contended all along?

Something is wrong. It is time that those who are juggling our food supply find out what it is. I am constrained to believe it is basically the result of the New Deal philosophy of controlling our production and consumption. The all-wise Government in Washington must tell the people what to produce and what and how much to consume.

Now take a look at the rest of the picture. When some good-hearted relative, in an attempt to repay for help they have received, sends sugar, some snooping Government agency notifies the recipient he cannot get it without surrendering ration stamps and paying duty. That reaches a new height in the ridiculous.

I have called this matter to the attention of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Administrator of the Office of Temporary Controls, and the Chief of the Bureau of Customs, asking for an explanation.

SUGAR DECONTROL

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the Members of the House, I enclose a statement regarding the decontrol of sugar. This statement was adopted by the American Sugar Beet Industry Policy Committee, meeting at Salt Lake City, Utah, on February 1, 1947:

STATEMENT REGARDING SUGAR DECONTROL

The American Sugar Beet Industry Policy Committee strenuously opposes the continuation of wartime price and rationing controls on sugar beyond the time necessary to protect the American public against excessive prices. However, just as the public in the past has recognized the need of the domestic industry for protection against excessive world supplies of tropical sugar, the domestic industry now appreciates the need of the public for an adequate supply of sugar at reasonable prices.

The policy committee believes that current supplies of sugar justify substantial increases in the present ration to housewives and other sugar users of the Nation. It also believes that, just as soon as practicable, all of these sugar controls should be ended.

As long as present circumstances prevail, the policy committee favors continuation of sugar controls, provided that such controls are vested in the Secretary of Agriculture, that he is free to remove any or all of these controls at any time conditions warrant, and that he exercise these controls in a manner to provide maximum possible supplies for consumers, encouraging full production of domestic sugar, and recognize the special problems of the sugar industry remaining under control with the rest of the Nation's economy free of control.

I also enclose a list of members of this committee:

Harry Clark, chairman, Eaton, Colo.; Frank A. Kemp, chairman executive committee, Denver, Colo.; Fred G. Taylor, secretary-treasurer, Washington, D. C.

REDUCTION OF FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include certain articles from the Chicago Daily News and Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. OWENS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, the newspapers of today confirm the rumors that have been flying during the past 24 hours concerning the actions of certain Republican Members of another body who wish to modify by 25 percent the present contemplated $6,000,000,000 slash of the budget. They say they feel that the Army would be endangered. I charge that they are giving way to the blandishments of their Army general friends. They must know the budget can be cut at least $6,000,000,000 and that income taxes can be reduced at least 20 percent. I think the action is unwise, if not craven. I hope the Republican Members of this House will have no traffic with it.

The newspaper articles are as follows:

[From the Chicago Daily News of February 14, 1947]

ECONOMY ALWAYS HURTS

The protests from the War and Navy Departments over the reductions in their budgets proposed by a House-Senate subcommittee are only the forerunners of the bleats that will arise if any substantial portion of the suggested $6,000,000,000 total is cut from the budget.

To the uninformed, the complaints will sound plausible, even convincing. But Congressmen who get around headquarters will not be easily dissuaded from the knowledge that even more than most agencies the Army and Navy have retained the lavish methods of doing business that grew up in wartime.

Any reduction in a departmental budget can be represented as the cost of some essential service. Impressive reasons may be advanced to prove the necessity for every last item of river and harbor work in the Army engineers' budget.

But a Nation as heavily in debt as this one will have to forego some luxuries if it seriously intends to get its finances on a sound basis. It can't afford drones in the Pentagon Building any more than it can afford to flood the mails with useless questionnaires.

The unanswerable case for budget reduction is the fact that civilian employees of the Government are more than twice as numerous as before the war. If every one of them was doing an honest day's work performing a desirable service, we still couldn't afford it.

[From the Chicago Daily Tribune of February 17, 1947]

THE ARMY DICTATES TO CONGRESS

The $6,000,000,000 cut authorized by the Senate-House Budget Committee in President Truman's requested budget of $37,500,000,000 represents a 16-percent reduction. The committee could have done better than that if it had been less timid, but there is hope that when Congress as a whole takes up the question of appropriations, the Members will slash expenditures further.

The Army and Navy, whose requested appropriations constitute the largest single item in the budget, are going to feel the effects of the cut already authorized, but there is little doubt that, by setting their spending sights high, and by howling to high heaven against accepting any cut at all, they succeeded to a degree in bulldozing the Budget Committee.

Secretary of War Patterson was the leader in this rear-guard action. One of the most dangerous men in the country, because he strove with all his might to institute the slavery of the labor draft and the intervention of the Army in the civil Government, Patterson wept crocodile tears about what he termed the adverse effect of a budgetary cut upon the "long-term missions of the Army." Truman's budget for the services, he said, "was down to the minimum our leaders believed necessary for support of our occupation garrisons overseas and for reasonable guaranties for national security."

This is an old, familiar tale. The Army is going to make its mission abroad last as long as possible, for that is the way it can get the most money, world without end, to the great satisfaction of the generals as well as the big money grafters in search of profitable contracts at home and the loot of conquest abroad. As long as Congress encourages the War Department by an uncritical surrender of huge funds, the same argument can be expected to be heard at the budget hearings every year.

Patterson was supported in his plaint by General Eisenhower, Chief of Staff, who said that cuts would "invite disaster," and by that other old Regular Army man, Secretary of State Marshall, who said that cuts would create "practically impossible conditions for our Government in its international commitments." These men are in contempt of the Nation. They are trying to force on Congress measures which the Senators and Representatives were elected to overthrow.

Both Marshall and Eisenhower choose to overlook what the Constitution has to say about the powers of Congress relative to the Army and Navy. These provisions are as follows:

"The Congress shall have power

"To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than 2 years.

"To provide and maintain a Navy.

"To make rules for the government and regulation of land and naval forces.

"To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

"To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

"A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed."

These provisions make it plain that Congress has the constitutional authority to dictate to the Army. The attitude of Patterson and the two generals is that the Army dictates to Congress. It is up to Congress to correct this notion.

While the Constitution fixes a 2-year limit upon the use by the Army of any appropriation, in order to prevent it from becoming strong enough to threaten the Nation's liberties, no such limitation was placed upon the Navy, for it was not thought the Navy could threaten the existence of Government.

Yet, as a spender, the Navy now is almost in the same class as the Army. It is seeking $4,400,000,000 for the coming fiscal year, as compared to $6,700,000,000 for the Army, and Secretary of the Navy Forrestal complained long and loud that even a reduction of $750,000,000 would endanger maintenance of the Navy's reserve, or "mothball" fleet.

Congress, however, should find the problem of introducing economy into the Navy relatively easy to solve. The solution lies in decommissioning the obsolete ships, which means ships not used in connection with aircraft carriers and submarines—the only type of ships which are likely to be at all useful in a future war. The maintenance of battleships, which are no longer of any utility, but reflect a sentimental devotion to tradition, is undoubtedly a major item of cost. Congress can make a start by junking all of them. After that, it can start looking for the other soft spots in Forrestal's spending program.

When these things are done, and the same elementary rules of economy applied to other departments and agencies, Congress will find that it can easily redeem the pledge of a 20-percent tax cut while achieving a balanced budget and still have a couple of billion dollars left over for debt retirement.

COMITY BETWEEN THE TWO HOUSES OF CONGRESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, throughout more than 150 years we have labored in the House of Representatives to keep the comity between the House and Senate. It must continue or we cannot legislate. I trust that older and younger Members, when they speak before the House, will refer to the Senate as "the other body," and that no criticism of Members of the Senate as individuals or of the actions of the Senate be indulged in, to such extent that the long-standing comity between the two Houses might be disturbed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and any other special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include two editorials of timely interest.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement by Dr. Louie D. Newton, pastor of the Druid Hills Baptist Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter by the Honorable Warren R. Austin, United States delegate to the United Nations, dealing with the necessity for adequate controls of atomic energy.

Mr. BONNER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a final statement of the late Senator Bailey, of North Carolina.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two separate instances, in one to include a statement made by Avery R. Schiller, president, of the Public Service Co., of New Hampshire, and in the other an address he made before a Lithuanian group at Lawrence, Mass., on February 16.

CONTINUE THE CADET NURSE CORPS

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, many of our hospitals have only a skeleton staff of trained attendants. In some State institutions, the situation has become so serious that patients have been put in charge of the wards. In the all-out emphasis being given to reconversion, we have become machine-minded and have neglected certain fundamental human needs.

First and foremost, we must have skilled personnel to care for the sick and the aged.

That need is not being met.

To correct this tragic oversight before it gets worse, I am introducing a bill to continue the Cadet Nurse Corps which will enable our young people to take up this essential profession and thereby prevent a break-down in the Nation's health.

Doctors warn us that the epidemics which have swept through many hospitals are due largely to the shortage of nurses. Under normal operating conditions, at the first sign of an epidemic, emergency wards would be set up, the sick would be isolated in them and cared for under aseptic technique. Without the nurses, you cannot do it. The infection spreads beyond control, resulting in needless suffering and death.

The Cadet Nurse Corps helped us to meet this emergency during the war, but the shortage has continued into the peace, while we have allowed the Cadet Nurse Corps to pass out of existence without providing a decent incentive for our young people to take up the study of nursing.

For that short-sighted policy we are now paying a heavy price.

I contend that this situation will become more serious as new veteran hospitals are built but not adequately staffed.

In view of this, the Congress should revive the Cadet Nurse Corps.

The bill which I present for your earnest consideration provides that the Government will pay the tuition, board, cost of textbooks and equipment, uniforms and their upkeep, to accredited hospitals which will expand their program for training nurses. The Federal Government would exercise no control over the administration of the individual hospitals.

Graduates of high schools would be eligible for this 36-month course, with the understanding that they are being trained for a nursing career.

Student nurses will be paid $40 a month while in training.

The public health must be protected.

A Cadet Nurse Corps will help us to overcome a dangerous deficiency in trained personnel.

WAR DEPARTMENT EFFICIENCY

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I am sure no Member of the House wishes to interfere with the efficiency of the program of our armed forces, but I believe we do want to cut every possible bit of extravagance we can from their budget.

You are all familiar with the fact that all through the war, on the House side, we had a Colonel Pearson who acted as liaison officer between the Congress and the War Department. He was a very fine officer and gentleman and one who has been very helpful to all of us. Now that the war is over, however, and the cases we have to take up with the War Department are materially reduced in number, Colonel Pearson is retiring, or has been transferred. In his place, however, the War Department sends up here to act as liaison officers one colonel and two lieutenant colonels to do less than 25 percent of the work done all through the war by Colonel Pearson alone. Certainly such items should be eliminated from the budget. My remarks are not intended to reflect on the ability of the three officers who are replacing Colonel Pearson. They are fine gentlemen, carrying out their new duties as officers in our Army.

THE NATIONAL BUDGET

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, many Members of the House have expressed themselves as being opposed to fixing of the over-all legislative budget at $31,500,000,000, a reduction in the Presidential budget of $6,000,000,000, most of them stating that they were opposed because they were not advised as to where the $6,000,000,000 cut would be applied.

This matter has not been developed in detail. At no place do we find any detailed discussion in the record as to where the cuts will be made. Though the Congress has been in session approximately 6 weeks I understand the special committee of the four committees of the House and Senate met only three times, heard only two witnesses. The majority report is a result of this "extensive" investigation.

I yield to no one in my desire to cut expenditures wisely and well. I voted to abolish the WPA long before it was abolished, the same for the CCC camps. I voted to curtail UNRRA expenditures, and against the British loan, and feel that I contributed somewhat in savings of the Army and Navy during the war by raising the question of the legality of the Standard Oil and Navy contract on the Elk Hills oil reserve, which resulted in that contract being held illegal. I feel that I contributed to economy by forcing the Army and Navy to get together on the use of facilities which resulted in the Navy using $350,000,000 of Army facilities instead of building new ones. Thus in considering this fixing of the legislative budget I believe I can claim to be economy-minded.

I expect to vote for real reductions in governmental expenditures, but I expect to do so after we have the benefit of hearings in detail. I believe there is much merit to opposing the $6,000,000,000 reduction on the basis that no record showing is made as to where the cuts would apply. However, Mr. Speaker, there is a greater reason to oppose such $6,000,000,000 cut before hearings and that is because we do know where it is contemplated that such cuts will be made by the Republican majority.

Take the Army and Navy. We know from the discussions of the majority that they contemplate a reduction in the Army and Navy Departments of $1,750,000,000. This without benefit of hearings and just prior to the Moscow Conference and other international conferences scheduled for the next few weeks. Can anyone fool himself into believing that such action will not seriously weaken the hands of our diplomatic representatives in their efforts to formulate plans and agreement for world peace. Now I do not say that the War and Navy Departments cannot stand cuts in appropriations. I have voted many times to reduce their expenditures. However, our action has come after exhaustive hearings and we have directed the place where such cuts were to be made, thus making sure that the real strength of the services were not interfered with. That could be done in this case when the proper subcommittee has finished its hearings. After all, this money will not be made available until after July 1. The majority may say that is what they intend to do. Yet we cannot avoid the fact that if the $31,500,000,000 budget is fixed it is commonly known this would contemplate a reduction in the Military Establishment of $1,750,000,000 and would be taken over the world as a retrenchment in this country in preparedness just on the eve of these international peace conferences where all agree that it is imperative that we maintain a strong and firm stand.

Now, in the domestic field we also know what such a reduction of $6,000,000,000 means. Those Republican Members in key positions, where their attitudes will govern, know it is contemplated in the field of agriculture that the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the next fiscal year be cut from nine - hundred-and-forty-seven-million-and-some-odd dollars to five-hundred-and - fifty-three-million-and - some-odd dollars, or a reduction of approximately 42 percent. Now, where do they expect to apply such cuts? The major ones are as follows:

Seventy-five million dollars to be cut from the school-lunch program, thus eliminating such program. Yet just a few months ago, when all were soliciting votes, this program was approved by the Congress.

One hundred million dollars reduction in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, just after we prevailed upon the farmers of the Nation to deplete their soils if necessary to meet the food quotas needed by the world, and the records show that many, many millions of acres of our soils have been practically exhausted as a result. Furthermore, commitments have been made to the farmers of the Nation for this year, based on these funds.

The entire sum of $19,000,000 for agricultural research is to be cut out. Yet the Hope-Flannagan bill passed the Congress last year by an overwhelming vote. Of course at that time the Republican majority was anxious for the farm vote. I firmly believe that to delete this item is one of the most short-sighted actions the Congress could possibly take. All recognize that the farm problem in the next few years will become one of the most serious we have. What to do with surplus commodities, how to maintain reasonable prices—all will be facing us. Why, today, we have the Commodity Credit Corporation with a capital stock of $4,000,000,000 with authority to spend it if necessary to support farm prices. Is it not foolish not to carry forward research in the use of farm products, thereby create demand and possibly alleviate to some extent the cost of supporting prices by buying up farm surpluses, or I wonder if such Republican leaders do not contemplate the removal of support prices for farm products. It is time for those who have the interest of the Nation and of the Nation's agriculture to wake up and take notice.

Is the Congress to eliminate research, that great boon of mankind? John Deere took an old saw, made a moldboard for a plow that would cut Midwest soil, making possible development of Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska. McCormick with his reaper made possible the wheat of that section. Eli Whitney with his cotton gin made cotton king. And all these did more to make the United States we have than did all the statesmen so-called. Swift said:

> He who has made two blades of grass to grow where one grew before, or two stalks of corn to grow where one grew before, has done more for the good of mankind than all the race of politicians put together.

Carver with his peanut is an illustration. Are you to develop the atomic bomb to destroy mankind, and deny money to develop and enlarge natural resources of the Nation? Will you build a great Army yet deny lunchrooms to nourish and build the boys and girls who make up the real forces on which we must depend? "When they ask for a fish will you give them a serpent, when they ask for a loaf of bread would you give them a stone?"

Mr. Speaker, we must not do that. Never let it be said that the Congress of the United States would be so short-sighted.

These Republican leaders contemplate a reduction in the Rural Electrification Administration of $394,000,000, which includes a reduction of $125,000,000 in loan authority for the next fiscal year. Thus this great program which has meant much to the rural inhabitants of this country, which is doing much to help keep folks on the farm is to be curtailed. The local cooperatives which charge rates whereby they can and have repaid the Government for the funds borrowed so that practically all are up to date in their repayments will be restricted in bringing the same service to the millions who did so much for the war, wanted electricity then but were told to wait until after the war as the war effort required the materials necessary for their extensions. Thus it goes.

A $50,000,000 reduction is contemplated in the Farmers Home Administration, now that hundreds of thousands of veterans are clamoring for the opportunity it would afford to pay for a farm and a home, a $10,000,000 reduction in roads and trails, which are used in getting lumber out of the national forests for the veteran's home program, reductions in the Soil Conservation Service, and so on through the activities of the Department. And this without and prior to any hearings after commitments to the American farmers. And why is this done? Because the Republicans promised to cut to the bone expenditures and to cut taxes their way 20 percent across the board. I do not mean that this Department should not be cut, but I do believe such plans are premature and as now planned would break faith with the people. Later you cannot say you did not know what this means.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], chairman of the over-all committee and chairman of the Appropriations Committee, was quoted yesterday as saying that if the Congress were to approve the $31,500,000,000 budget, he would take this as a mandate to stay within that figure and I have tried to give you the outlook for agriculture.

There is another reason for such attitude on the part of the Republican majority. Tax reduction on their terms. I realize that conditions can be such, and it is possible that they now are such that we must do without lots of things that are almost essential because we have a huge public debt to be paid. Certainly I, like lots of others, know what it means to do without as an individual to pay off debts. Most all of us have had to do this at various times. Yet, if such is the case here the Republican majority have refused to go along. We tried, in the meeting of the joint committee, to require that any surplus that might be saved as a result of curtailing the expenses of Government even to the extent of the $6,000,000,000 be paid on the national debt. We did this though we believe that the exemptions under the present income-tax law should be increased, but they would not support us because of commitments made in their campaign of last fall to reduce taxes. How? From the actions of many of their leaders by the 20-percent across-the-board reduction.

Such action on the part of the majority members of the committee can only be understood when considered with the efforts of leaders of the Republican majority to force through the Congress tax reduction on a 20-percent across-the-board basis, under which big business—those with a large income—would reap by far the greatest benefits of such tax reduction. It means that the Republican members of this committee then are willing to jeopardize the national defense by reducing the appropriations for the Military Establishment by a billion and three-quarters without hearings; to cut out expenditures for agricultural research, the authorization for which they so enthusiastically supported last summer in an effort to secure the farm vote; to cut the AAA payments after commitments have been made to the farmers of the Nation by $100,000,000; to cut out the school-lunch program; to reduce the Rural Electrification Administration by $394,000,000, money which would be repaid to the Federal Government by the appreciative farmers and rural inhabitants of the Nation who so badly need this service; to cut out or reduce the power projects, the irrigation projects which mean so much to the Midwest, not in order to reduce the national debt, but largely to pay the money so saved at the expense of the people of the entire Nation and of their actual safety, to the people of the Nation who enjoy large incomes, some of whom would have their left-over income increased as much as 72 percent. Though such tax relief would give a little relief to those of low incomes, necessary we suppose to cover up the tremendous sums such a tax program would benefit those already enjoying a large income.

After all, what counts is what is left over after taxes.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] submitted some figures which are interesting in this connection.

Under the Knutson bill:

Single person with income of $1,000 will receive 2.1 percent of increase in take-home pay. Single person with income of $10,000 will receive 6.1 percent of increase in take-home pay. Single person with income of $100,000 will receive 34.9 percent of increase in take-home pay. Single person with income of $250,000 will receive 65.9 percent of increase in take-home pay. Single person with income of $302,896 will receive 72.6 percent of increase in take-home pay. Single person with income of $1,000,000 will receive 69.4 percent increase in take-home pay.

A large part of the funds to be saved thus do not go to the payment of the national debt, but go to make possible the passage of the infamous tax bill described above. Thus the school-lunch program is abolished to help increase the income of those receiving $100,000 by 34.9 percent. Research in agricultural products is postponed and the rural residents of the Nation are told that they cannot have lights, that such an infamous tax bill may be had. Verily, food is taken from the mouths of little children and the hand of the Nation is weakened at the most trying time in our history, all because of campaign promises.

I glory in the fact that the people of my district have never exacted of me any platform of promises in advance. I am proud of the fact that they have left me free to do what I believed to be right. I do know, however, that if I were foolish enough to commit myself, as apparently many Republicans feel they are committed to this destructive program, my people would want me to go back on any such foolish commitment and vote for the welfare of the Nation, and not to support a program against the interests of the Nation and for the benefit of the few.

Mr. Speaker, I expect to vote to cut the appropriation of each and every department of the Government, after hearings, just as much as we possibly can consistent with the public good. I cannot be a party, however, to the hasty action with a meat ax which is proposed here.

AUTHORIZING SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE TO COOPERATE WITH OTHER AMERICAN COUNTRIES IN THE CONTROL AND ERADICATION OF FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE AND RINDERPEST

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Pathfinder.

Mr. STEVENSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an outstanding editorial on the subject of brotherhood week and democracy, by the La Crosse Tribune, of La Crosse, Wis.

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I want to serve notice on Miss Democracy on the other side of the House that we can no longer support you in the style to which you have been accustomed.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, the remarks just made on the floor of the House by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], indicate very clearly the difficulty that will confront the Congress in its attempt to reduce public spending. Every conceivable power of propaganda that can be waged in behalf of the pet projects of those who want to continue the spending policy is going to be turned upon the Congress. As one chairman of a subcommittee I am now the beneficiary of a tremendous flood of telegrams and letters, even telephone conversations, protesting against the action of the subcommittee of which I have the honor to be chairman before the subcommittee has even started to mark up the bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is going to be necessary for the Members of the House and the Congress to have courage if we are to reduce the public expenditures. You are going to have to show courage and stand up and fight against the efforts of those who for years have fattened their own districts with huge expenditures of public funds.

I think the time has come to serve notice that the Republican Party intends to see to it that the public expenditures are reduced.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL], is recognized for 25 minutes.

WE CANNOT CONTINUE TO FINANCE THE WORLD

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, today I want to give the Members of the House some recent and interesting figures setting out the amounts our Government has furnished to some of the European countries and to China through UNRRA and through lend-lease since VJ-day. I shall also give you some interesting figures as to loans made and in the process of being made to these same countries through the Export-Import Bank.

Doubtless history will record that we have poured out relief on a wider scale than can be justified to the taxpayers, the American people who constitute this Government.

The present administration, with its big majority when UNRRA was enacted into law, must bear the major responsibility for its administration. And may I recall that when the minority attempted to write amendments into the act to follow the goods through to their destination to prevent their diversion away from the hungry people, that such amendments were voted down by the majority. As a result great sums poured out for relief by the American taxpayers have been diverted to build up dictatorial governments in Europe. This is their record, and they must accept it.

Mr. Speaker, I offer these remarks and what information they will convey because the President has called, in his budget for fiscal year 1948, for the further expenditure of aid to foreign countries through UNRRA until it closes shop June 30, 1947, and through the War Department in occupied countries, for the expenditure of over $725,000,000. This amount will largely be spent for relief in such occupied countries as Germany, Japan, Korea, and possibly some in Austria.

Then he proposed when UNRRA folds up that another organization shall be formed either under the United Nations organization or otherwise, to carry on relief to countries in Europe such as Austria, Italy, Greece, Czechoslovakia, and other countries with the further expenditure of $326,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, on page M–20 of the Budget Message of the President, you will find an item following the words "Proposed legislation" for this $326,000,000. On this same page you will find figures and expenditure during the latter part of fiscal 1947 and for 1948 of the $725,000,000 I referred to a few moments ago. On this page you will find many other items such as the Philippine-aid program of $144,000,000; membership in the international organizations, $18,000,000; State Department, $197,000,000, and again referring to the Philippines, I think it was a $500,000,000 loan we provided for them in the Seventy-ninth Congress to help get this nation started on rehabilitation. In fact, this one page, M–20 in the Budget, headed "International Affairs and Finance" calls for appropriations in the 1948 budget of $1,169,000,000, and, this is only a beginning on our international expenditures. On this page alone something like $1,000,000,000, if the proposed legislation is passed, would be committed for relief to the occupied countries and other nations without any hope or provision for a dollar of it ever to be repaid to our Government.

Mr. Speaker, the Appropriations Committee, which is doing a magnificent job, I am certain will give particular attention to this whole question of expenditures for relief. I submit that at this point they will find a fertile field for a considerable cut in governmental expenses. The war has been over almost 2 years, we have given to other nations during the war and after, over $50,000,000,000 worth of relief through lend-lease. Certainly the time has come when we must give more consideration to our own taxpayers' and our Nation's ability to continue to carry such a great part of the financial burdens of other countries.

Soon two harvest seasons will have passed. Certainly the people of other nations with a desire to work, should be almost able in many instances to carry their own load.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes one must wonder when we try to save the lives of a starving people of a foreign country how much thanks come back to the people of America from such countries for the sacrifices we have made. How much good will, if any, comes to our Nation? To be specific, during the war we extended through lend-lease to Russia alone $11,320,864,109. Now, when our Government has on three different occasions approached them in an effort to get them to discuss some return lend-lease, they have not even extended the courtesy of a reply to this Nation, who doubtless kept Russia from being conquered by the hordes of Hitler. Invective and abuse through nationally owned and directed press and propaganda to date have been directed against our Nation. Constant nagging at the American Government and constant objections to and delay of our further efforts for world peace have been the returns on our investment which have come to us from Russia. No thanks or appreciation was ever expressed.

And let me point out that since VJ-day this country has sent through lend-lease to Russia $226,300,000 worth of goods, referred to as being in the pipe lines but not yet delivered. I am informed by the Treasury that there are yet $34,000,000 in lend-lease which will go to Russia. To France, since VJ-day, we have sent $411,500,000 worth of goods. When you read the current events of the day in France and learn that the Government at present is controlled by the Communist Party, that the Cabinet Minister of Defense in that strategic, powerful position is a Communist, that a majority of the police of Paris and most of the large cities in France are communistic; when we know that the Russian Government has inspired and motivated this communistic attempt to take over the Government in France, one wonders what appreciation will be shown in the future for all we have done for France.

To Czechoslovakia, since VJ-day, we have sent in lend-lease $174,000,000, and to Yugoslavia our total lend-lease, to this puppet satellite nation of Russia, has exceeded $33,100,000. This country has gone completely communistic, according to the plans of the Kremlin, and is now ruled by the ruthless dictator Tito, who told the world that he ordered the shooting down of American planes which cost the lives of our American airmen. From Tito not one word of good will or praise for our United States of America for all the aid we rendered.

Our total lend-lease to Poland, that country where people literally died by the millions fighting against Germany, we gave over $20,000,000. The Russian Communist Government is now in complete control of this country. The Russian Government is the beneficiary of much of this large amount of money which came out of the American taxpayers' pocket.

Mr. Speaker, in aiding Poland, Yugoslavia, and the other satellite nations of Russia, one wonders, aside from the pride of saving human lives from starvation, how much real good we have done in turning these human lives over into hopeless political bondage. One wonders how much good will, if any, will ever be manifested toward the United States from these countries which are rapidly falling under control of the orbit of communism.

Other millions upon millions of dollars has gone into relief either through UNRRA or the United States Government to various other countries all over the world. We have paid into UNRRA $2,700,000,000 that has been taken from the American people through taxes. Seventy-two percent of all UNRRA funds has been paid by our Government.

The New York Times, in a Washington dispatch dated January 25 of this year, reported that shipments of relief and rehabilitation supplies reached the 20,000,000-ton mark that week with the loading of Liberty ship Hoosier State with a cargo for Austria, Greece, Hungary, Italy, and Yugoslavia, according to an UNRRA announcement.

Of this shipment, the Times said, the cargo manifest of the Hoosier State "reads like a mail-order catalog." The cargo included artificial limbs, shoes, tractors, auto spare parts, glass jars, horse collars, soya flour, sewing machines, milk-testing equipment, and scores of other items.

General Rooks, the Director of UNRRA, stated, "The departure of the Hoosier State highlights UNRRA's huge and dramatic shipping operations." The ships have sailed from any one of about 150 loading areas in both hemispheres and all continents. He described the shipments as the largest peacetime shipping operation in history.

Mr. Speaker, the Congress in appropriating funds for UNRRA in the seventy-ninth session directed that no more relief money be spent for Europe after last December 31 and for Asia after next March 31, providing however other items purchased before the ends of these periods may be shipped later.

Of course, a great effort will be made by the other nations of the world to continue this pool of relief to these nations, the larger part of it to be paid by your Uncle Sam. This problem will come before the Congress when the proposed legislation referred to earlier by me of $326,000,000 for the continuation of UNRRA relief will be brought forward by the administration.

It is my opinion that whatever money the United States spends in the future should be spent and directed individually by our own United States Government separate and apart from any world pool. The Congress should demand a tremendous reduction be made all along the line in furnishing relief to foreign countries. The time has come when this Congress should begin to realize that charity begins at home and should show a greater interest in giving some relief to the American taxpayers. We cannot continue to finance the world as we have been doing for the past number of years.

This Congress should not make any further gifts even to avert hunger in countries that have come under the influence of Russian domination.

Mr. Speaker, UNRRA Director General F. H. LaGuardia estimated last November that at least $400,000,000 would be necessary to continue relief through the year 1947 in food, farm machinery, fertilizer, railway cars, trucks, and so forth, in Europe alone for Czechoslovakia, Poland; Greece, Yugoslavia, White Russia, and the Ukraine as well as the former enemy countries of Italy and Austria. One of the biggest mistakes ever made with reference to UNRRA was the appointment of Mayor LaGuardia as Director General.

The above statement is the best evidence of the mistake that was made when he was appointed. No wonder with such leadership that the taxpayers of this country have been paying billions of dollars, and that we have gone so far toward really rendering aid to Russia through her satellite nations.

Mr. Speaker, all sorts of argument and propaganda will come from the internationalists, pinks, American Communists, and their fellow travelers to continue some sort of UNRRA relief at the expense of this Nation to the rest of the world after June 30. UNRRA has gone a long way toward helping to make Stalin the dictator of Europe. We should make certain that any aid we render European countries in the future will not help him further on the road to dictatorship of that Continent.

In addition, his emissaries have been busy organizing and have made headway in the Latin-American countries of South America in an attempt to build up Communist nations to our immediate south.

Mr. Speaker, the recent election in Poland should convince everyone as to Stalin's aggression in Europe. Here are some questions the Members of Congress might well ask themselves when they are considering passing on appropriations for further relief, and particularly if and when they are called upon to reestablish some sort of an UNRRA organization.

First. Are the American people willing and prepared to accept a lower standard of living in order that the standard of living may be raised in foreign lands, including lands enveloped by the Iron Curtain?

Second. Has UNRRA relief been used as a tool of Russian policy and for the purpose of promoting a communistic world?

Third. To what extent have UNRRA supplies been diverted to maintain Red armies and build up the war potential of Russia?

Fourth. How widespread have been abuses of UNRRA personnel with respect to black-market activities, thieving, and loose handling of supplies and funds?

Fifth. Is the United States getting full credit for the generosity of its citizens in providing $2,700,000,000 for UNRRA food and equipment of all kinds, or is Russia taking the credit and at the same time stirring up hatred of the United States through smear propaganda in countries aided by us?

Sixth. Are any of the promoters and sponsors of UNRRA activated by sympathies for a world government requiring an increasing surrender of sovereignty on the part of this country?

Seventh. Is this Congress justified in adding on to the fearful United States public debt and the staggering tax burden of the American people?

Eighth. How far should we go in encouraging the peoples of foreign lands to sit back and wait for Uncle Sam to feed them instead of going to work and raising their own food?

Speaking of UNRRA, if you will read volumes 24 and 25 of the Slaughter committee's investigation of the disposition of surplus property, you will get some idea of the arrogance and independence of this organization. Time will permit me to give but one illustration. When General Marshall went to China to try to arbitrate the differences between the warring factions of that nation, and found they needed their railroads repaired to make it possible to ship the food and supplies delivered at the Chinese ports back into the country, he called for 50,000 tons of steel rails. The order was passed on to UNRRA as an emergency request of General Marshall. They sent their agents out through surplus-property divisions to try to locate these rails. Of the rails located, only a part of them, after they were procured and turned over to UNRRA, were consigned by UNRRA to China. Several thousand tons, however, were diverted to Yugoslavia for the rehabilitation of Tito's Russian-controlled government, and the irony of this diversion of these rails needed in China and ordered for China, then diverted to Yugoslavia, was the fact that these rails crossed the Atlantic going east as the American ship headed west for home was bearing the bodies of the American airmen who had been shot down on the orders of Tito, the dictator of Yugoslavia.

If you will read the Slaughter report, you will be interested in this and in many other phases of UNRRA's work.

Who are some of the officials of UNRRA? Chief of Industrial Rehabilitation Division at the present is Norman Leon Gold. His duties are to supervise on a global basis the acquisition, allocation, and distribution of supplies through UNRRA world-wide. He is a Canadian by birth and became an American citizen in 1937. However, he went to work for Henry Wallace in the Department of Agriculture in 1934, 3 years prior to becoming an American citizen. He is one of the big men of power in UNRRA.

The Materials and Equipment Branch is under Mr. Rodnov, a Russian engineer; Branch of Program Control and Records was under Mr. Weissman, a Yugoslav by birth who has his first citizenship papers from the United States. Transportation and Communications were under Mr. Anderson, an American citizen; Industrial Rehabilitation Service was under Mr. Lassiter, an American citizen; the Fuel Branch was headed by Mr. Uderski, a Pole who was hired by Dr. Gold from the Greek mission.

There are many others holding positions of great responsibility in this organization most of them coming from other departments of Government where they have served for a number of years. Former employees of the NYA, FEA, OPA, WPB, and so forth. It is fair to say when it comes to the spending of the taxpayers' money, these men have plenty of weight and they do not always follow the intent of the Congress and the law too closely in running their global show.

Only a comparatively few weeks ago, UNRRA bought in Boston from the WAA $140,000 worth of construction equipment for Yugoslavia consisting of wheelbarrows, shovels, picks, tractor blades, and dozens of articles that were short in the American market.

There are three planes at Love Field in Dallas, Tex., which were purchased some 18 months ago for Yugoslavia. UNRRA is paying someone $75 per day to turn over the engines of these three planes for an hour a day and has been paying this sum right along for the past 18 months.

UNRRA juggled around about $750,000 of its funds in order to acquire 17 C–47 transport planes for General Chennault for use in a private airline operating between China and the west coast. This transaction was reported to have been agreed upon last June at the Geneva Conference of UNRRA among General Chennault, Mr. LaGuardia, and General Rooks. In addition, UNRRA funds will supply parts for 2 years to maintain these 27 planes. General Rooks has sent a group of mechanics to Honolulu and Manila to overhaul these planes and put them in fly-away condition to take off to China. Certainly this transaction does not come under relief. It appears very irregular that UNRRA would purchase planes with United States taxpayers' money to be used to set up a private air line in China.

I cannot give further time to UNRRA.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

In addition to the enormous amount of aid we have given, here are some interesting figures showing the aid that the Export-Import Bank is rendering to a few of the European countries and to China. These figures are complete as of January 15, 1947, and are official. This bank has established what is termed "credit lines" with the following nations.

Let me illustrate as follows: Let us say the bank agrees to give a line of $200,000,000 credit to France. As France uses the money, she gives a note or I O U to the Export-Import Bank charged against her line of credit.

First we gave England, by an act of Congress, $3,750,000,000, known as the British loan. Then the Export-Import Bank extends a credit line to England for $550,000,000.

The bank gave to France a credit line of $550,000,000 to wind up some lend-lease contracts.

To France another credit line of $650,000,000, of which they have used all of the first line of credit and $112,000,000 out of the second line of credit.

When you realize that France has practically gone communistic, how far will this money go to the benefit of the Kremlin, possibly within the next 2 or 3 years?

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield.

Mr. JONKMAN. The gentleman speaks about France being practically communistic; is it not true that Russia uses her tremendous gold production—and she is the second in production in the world—to spend millions in every country on the continent to propagate communism while we are doing the feeding of those who are being converted?

Mr. VURSELL. We are doing the same thing with a different purpose in mind; ours is a humanitarian purpose, theirs is a purpose doubtless of conquest, destruction, and enslavement of those unfortunate people—unfortunate at least by location.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to the fact that there are other special orders, but if there is no objection the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, they extended a credit to the Netherlands of $93,600,000, also a 2-year credit line of $200,000,000.

A credit line to Belgium of $100,000,000, all of which has been borrowed.

A credit line to Denmark for $20,000,000, of which $15,000,000 is borrowed.

A credit line to Finland of $35,000,000.

A credit line to Greece of $25,000,000.

A credit line to Poland for coal cars and railway equipment, $40,000,000. Russia will find these useful.

To China, $64,000,000.

To Czechoslovakia, $20,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, earlier I failed to point out that since VJ-day we have shipped relief amounting to $744,493,578 to China. Our total lend-lease to China was $1,543,385,795. You are familiar with the situation in China. After almost 1 year of the efforts of General Marshall to try to bring the Communists and the Central Government together, he recently abandoned the job and came home. The Communists, doubtless aided and abetted by Russia, have continued their warfare against the Central Government and by vicious propaganda have inflamed the minds of the Chinese, in great numbers, against our Government, after all we have done for them. Demonstrations and denunciations of the Americans continue to increase in China. There is great danger that the controlling influence of China in the future will be Russia.

European and Asiatic conditions as they stand today pose the question, "Have the American people spent $400,000,000,000 with the loss of 300,000 American soldiers killed and 1,000,000 wounded to destroy the dictatorship of Hitler, to be supplanted by a dictatorship ultimately over all Europe and Asia?"

At this time when the American railroads cannot furnish sufficient cars to move the farmers' grain, and Congress is being urged to do something about it, we pick up the New York Herald Tribune of February 12 and learn that official presentation of the first part of a shipment of 160 locomotives and tenders destined to China has been made by Major General Rooks, Director General of UNRRA to Chen Chih-ma, counselor of the Chinese Embassy in Washington.

Is it possible that the UNRRA policy for China has changed since General Marshall pulled out of that country, soon to be followed by the withdrawal of the United States troops. Will this rolling stock in the future in fact roll for Russia when she indirectly or directly brings China under her control?

Mr. Speaker, we have heard much about the necessity of backing up our international representatives thereby adding to their power and prestige in world-wide negotiations. I think it is obvious from these figures that we have not only backed up our own representatives from a financial standpoint in the world-wide picture but we have backed up, to a large extent, the financial structure of the world, at the expense of the American taxpayers.

And that is not all. Let me now call your attention to the fact that under the Bretton Woods Agreement we have set up the International Bank for world reconstruction in cooperation with some 40 other nations.

This bank has a capital of $8,000,000,000. The United States Government has underwritten the lion's share of $3,175,000,000.

In addition to this we have become partners with some 40 other nations of the world in establishing the International Monetary Fund for Stabilization of Currencies capitalized at $7,300,000,000 in which again, the large sum of $2,750,000,000 of that capital structure is underwritten by the United States Government.

Through these funds will be drawn other billions of dollars which eventually will have to be paid by the United States taxpayers. Certainly we have gone far enough to satisfy the wildest dreams of the most internationally minded if they have any regard left for the financial solvency of our Government and for the well-being of the American people and our future generations.

Mr. Speaker, I charge that the Director General of UNRRA has violated the plain wording of section 11, article 10, of the joint resolution establishing UNRRA by the Congress, that the Congress wrote into the act the following language "the task of rehabilitation must not be considered as the beginning of reconstruction—it is coterminous with relief."

They have gone farther and have engaged in world-wide reconstruction in violation of the spirit and letter of the law, and the understanding and representations made to the Congress that we were to provide medicine, food, clothing, shelter, and immediate relief to sustain human life. The act certainly does not provide for the shipment of millions of dollars worth of new machinery for coal mines, industrial plants, such as have been shipped to Yugoslavia and other satellite countries.

And in conclusion may it be said that the majority of the Republican Members of the House since the very beginning of UNRRA tried time and again to limit the activity of UNRRA so that the Congress and the American people could have some control over the distribution of the billions of dollars our Government furnished. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will disclose that we were voted down by the administration forces in our every effort. The administration must answer to the American people for the waste of UNRRA. This Congress must answer to them in the future.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. STIGLER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

VETERANS' BENEFITS

Mr. STIGLER. Mr. Speaker, in his recent message to the Congress, the President of the United States stated that the program of veteran benefits was virtually complete. By that statement he paid great tribute to the foresight of the veteran organizations and the Congress itself in drafting and enacting into law the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944.

Although we may agree with the President that the program is virtually complete, he has not advanced and we must not adopt the premise that the program is anything like perfect. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Although the originally enacted GI bill was considered good at the time and most certainly served its purpose, it is high time that we looked into certain features and the success with which they have been administered.

The fact that the GI bill has been amended only once since its passage in 1944 is a great testimonial to its original quality. Because a law is good, however, should not deter Congress from looking into its administration and taking whatever corrective action as may be found necessary.

For the information of those who are not entirely familiar with the particular phase of the veterans' program I plan to discuss today, a brief review of the subject may be in order. There has been a growing tendency on the part of government and some individuals and organizations to consider the veteran in an abstract sense. Having served as both an enlisted man and a commissioned officer in the infantry on the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne fronts, as well as in the army of occupation in Germany during World War I, I believe that I have some understanding of what constitutes a fighting man in the armed forces of this Nation. From more than 25 years of membership in veteran organizations, having served as department commander and national executive committeeman of the American Legion and as national president of the Ninetieth Division Association, I have come to know the veteran as a loyal citizen devoted to the Republic for which he fought on the field of battle. I deplore the attitude of those who consider the veteran in any other light.

The treatment afforded World War I veterans upon their return to civilian life is a too well known part of our national history. The most important elements in their readjustment—education, training, and employment—were left to the vagaries of chance. The dismal picture of long lines of unemployed veterans fading into soup lines, apple selling, and finally the ill-fated bonus march on Washington is something some of us cannot forget. That these veterans survived and later rose to some of the highest ranks in public and private life is only further evidence of quality of the American fighting man.

Those who suffered and saw the suffering which followed World War I were determined that our comrades in arms from World War II would not return to face the same conditions. It was this determination that brought the GI bill into existence and the enactment in law. The so-called GI bill as enacted into law represented the best thinking of the representatives and officers of the veteran organizations, educators, public and private officials concerned with the programs it encompassed, and the then Members of Congress. The World War Veterans Committee of the House of Representatives, of which I was a member at that time, devoted days on end to the hearing of testimony and the deliberation of the relative merits of the various provisions. That the bill was passed without a dissenting vote—unusual in modern legislative activity—was a clear indication that the other Members of Congress concurred in our belief that we had at least framed a bill which would serve the immediate need of our returning veterans.

Some of the provisions of that law are more or less adequate and are effectively administered. Under title I and in accordance with other related laws, the Administrator of Veterans Affairs has slowly but steadily moved forward with the hospitalization and claims program. So far as the hospitalization program is concerned, I do not believe it is moving fast enough. There are too many applications on file for hospitalization. Title III has not been too successful, and I, for one, never entertained any great hopes that this form of aid would lend itself to effective administration. However, according to the Veterans' Administration, the fact that 639,387 loans have been made to veterans as of January 25, 1947, totaling $3,421,098,627, of which $1,584,847,177 was guaranteed under the guarantee provision, is a source of some satisfaction.

I am especially interested in title IV, which deals with unemployment of veterans. At the time the GI bill became law, the Veterans' Employment Service, which administers this program, was a struggling and pitifully inadequate organization. Never too strong, it had during the war been completely absorbed and all but forgotten by the War Manpower Commission. Despite resistance and open opposition from many within the War Manpower Commission and later the United States Employment Service, the Veterans' Employment Service is becoming one of the most efficient and effective agencies of Government. Whereas only three short years ago the Veterans' Employment Service could hardly justify its own existence, it is now a hard-hitting organization with representatives in nearly every area in the country. We owe no apology for this title of the GI bill.

Title V of the bill has proven difficult to administer effectively and there is some question in my mind as to the real honesty with which its benefits have been made available to veterans. At the time the bill was enacted into law, we contemplated that the servicemen's readjustment allowance would prove a temporary stop-gap for the veteran, if needed, while he found the job he sought. However, there was a regrettable laxity in its administration, and it was only recently that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs saw fit to administratively interpret its provisions with any clarity. Because of an improper explanation of this provision to the dischargee by the armed forces, and by reason of the failure of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to take a firm stand, this title has proven most costly to the Government and may not have in all instances been most beneficial to the veteran himself.

I have purposely reserved until the last a discussion of title II of the bill. The educational provisions of that title have in most instances been fairly effectively administered—although at times delays on the part of the Veterans' Administration almost ruined the program—and the educational institutions of this country are deserving of the highest accolade for their magnificent contribution. The fact that 1,600,393 veterans were enrolled as of January 31, 1947, in schools and colleges with financial assistance from their Government is evidence enough that this program is proving successful.

Unfortunately, we cannot with any honesty say the same for the on-the-job-training provision of this title. From the very beginning this very valuable program was permitted to wander aimlessly without any apparent direction, and abuses began to spring up throughout the country. To my mind, this was one of the most important provisions of the bill. It still is.

Following an urgent recommendation from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, the Seventy-ninth Congress, in its closing days, hurriedly and unfortunately, in my judgment, enacted legislation amending this section of the bill. Not having the opportunity to hold hearings, which would have been most desirable, restrictive legislation was passed. A ceiling was placed on the combined earning—that is, the Government allowance plus the wages paid by the employer—and the period of training was shortened.

Further confusion has arisen among our veterans by the interpretation placed on instruction V by the Administrator on his instruction to veterans with reference to income from seasonal employment. I dare say every Member of Congress has had complaints from veterans concerning this interpretation. I am hoping our World War Veterans Committee will take cognizance of this and change the ruling whereby it will make no difference if the veteran does exceed the ceiling in any one month; it will be the total amount received during the 12-month period that will count.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that you can appreciate my interest in this bill. I believe that under the circumstances you can understand why I have conducted my own investigation of the on-the-job-training program under the GI bill. I believe further that you and every Member of this body will be surprised and even amazed at some of the things I have discovered. If that be true, think if you will, how the veteran feels upon learning that his chances for improving his skills or acquiring a new skill have been jeopardized by poor administration and what I now believe to be inadequate legislation.

In the course of my investigation I talked to many individual employers—bankers, plant managers, garage owners, owners of retail establishments, and many others. I talked to literally hundreds of veterans who were anxious to obtain this training. That the program is yet far from a success is clearly apparent.

Several days ago I asked the Chief of the Veterans' Employment Service to furnish me the reports on on-the-job training from his representatives in the several States and Territories. I particularly asked for the reports for the month of September—immediately following the recent amendment to the bill—and also for the most recent reports, those for December.

The following are direct quotations from those reports, and I recommend that every Member of Congress read them all. If you do not have either the time or interest, read, if you will, those from your State, and I am most certain that you will agree with me that it is time we quit talking about our program of veteran benefits and do something about this phase, which practically amounts to a public scandal at this moment.

SEPTEMBER REPORTS

Arizona:

From our viewpoint, the small but increasing number of employers who resist the establishment of on-job training programs because of the 2-year limitation is more significant. These employers argue that (1) their training period is of more than 2 years' duration, but that cessation of Federal subsistence will make the veteran feel that his training is or should be complete in 2 years; (2) that limiting employers not under the apprenticeship to 2 years while allowing training of 3, 4, or 5 years under the apprenticeship system is an attempt of the Government to coerce the employer into coming under the apprenticeship plan.

California:

The VES and USES, up to date, have spearheaded the OJT program for veterans in California. We are still pushing the training under Public, 16, but have had to put the skid chains on our efforts under Public, 346. * * * Veterans are howling about the $175–$200 limit. * * * Labor has declared its "thumbs down" on a program of training where a veteran gets considerably less than an unskilled laborer. * * * Industry is disgusted with a law that is retroactive and interferes with the continuance of programs that they, in good faith, instituted. We, of course, still believe in OJT. * * * We shall continue to try and overcome this new earning-limit obstacle. * * *

It is our thinking that veterans with education or with natural ability should be enabled to use on-the-job training to train for top-flight positions, and to a certain degree maintain a standard of living commensurate with the particular position that is to be their goal. We also agree with Congress that every training program should receive the closest scrutiny * * * turn on the klieg lights so there can be no shadowy doubts as to the program being legitimate. * * * We feel too, that it is a good investment of the taxpayers' money to give subsistence to make an average run-of-the-mill veteran a genius in his chosen field * * * top-flight men, production wizards, always pay dividends. * * * A $200-a-month man trained to earn $400 per month will soon repay the Government via the income-tax channel.

Connecticut:

A number of employers believe they would do better by running their own training programs without a tie-up with the GI bill training programs, as it appears that the new law will offer too many complications in connection with the amount of subsistence allowance granted trainees as well as the records, reports, inspections, overtime problems, etc.

District of Columbia:

Numerous complaints still continue from employers, veterans, veterans' organizations, and other interested groups. At the present time openings for on-the-job training in the local offices practically do not exist. The restriction particularly affected the construction trades, inasmuch as the wage scale is usually in excess of the limit now placed on earnings.

Florida:

Approximately 8,000 firms in Florida have been approved as on-the-job-training agencies with approximately 16,000 veterans participating. However, this activity is showing little expansion and if anything considerable reduction due to the new amendment. Reports indicate that practically 50 percent of the veterans will be affected in one way or another while employers are becoming reluctant to make application under the present conditions.

Georgia:

This program is still in a chaotic state in Georgia.

Idaho:

Because of the general confusion resulting from the revised OJT program, it has been deemed advisable for local office personnel to proceed rather cautiously in promoting this program. * * * there seems to be quite a good deal of confusion at this time and also quite a lot of dissatisfaction. We will quote a few of the comments from local office VER's:

Blackfoot report: "During the month of September it was noted that, due to the new changes that were made in the Veterans Training Law, No. 346, many of the employers have cancelled their GI training programs and it seems that a strong feeling of opposition against this program exists in this area."

Boise report: "The veterans seem somewhat dissatisfied with the ceiling established for OJT earning and are refusing to work under the prevailing conditions."

Gooding report: "Most veterans will not take a job that is connected with OJT. Several veterans are considering dropping out because of this ceiling. The VFW and American Legion here have gone on record as opposing this program."

Twin Falls report: "Some of the veterans who were already training under this program have given up the job they were on because they had incurred obligations under their previous wages which they cannot meet under the present conditions. These obligations consist mainly of building homes and improving living conditions."

Illinois:

Of course, they continue to operate under the most serious difficulties because of limitations imposed by the amendments to the GI bill on both training time and pay.

Indiana:

The change in the law has continued to lessen activity in the on-the-job training program. There is very little new to report.

Iowa:

Due to the enactment of legislation which changed the requirements for on-the-job training, the picture with respect to this activity was completely confused during the month of September.

Kansas:

Many agreements have been terminated in Kansas. Some are due to disgruntlement of the veteran over the ceilings established; some at the employer's request. The State office of veterans' affairs says the withdrawals average 20 per week.

Kentucky:

Some of the factors causing reluctance to enter into or continue the program are the new wage ceilings, new forms to be completed, delays in approval of programs, proposed check-ups by representatives of the Veterans' Administration.

Michigan:

The OJT program has experienced some slowing down since the passage of the bill placing ceilings on earnings for veterans participating in these programs. In most sections of Michigan the established ceilings are at or below the prevailing rates of wages for workers in the lower skilled levels. Fewer new programs are being submitted for approval and many cancellations of existing programs are being made. In one locality, Midland, one firm canceled 200 openings.

Minnesota:

Both veterans and employers contacted by VER's during the month felt that the combined wage and subsistence ceilings were placed too low and that the veteran would suffer as a result. * * * The veteran objects to the wage ceilings because he feels that his present program has been approved and he has made commitments on the assumption that no changes in his training would be made, provided, of course, that he and the employer fulfilled the requirements of their agreement. * * * They feel that it is unfair to them to be allowed only 2 years, while students and trainees under apprenticeship indentures are allowed 4 years.

Nebraska:

Another cause for the decline in the number of applications is the ceiling placed by Public, 679. This has also caused some employers to reduce the entrance wage.

Nevada:

On-the-job training has received an excessive blow by the new ceiling established by the Veterans' Administration.

New Hampshire:

Since the passage of Public Law 679 limiting the length of training and placing a ceiling on wages, there has been quite a lot of anxiety among employers. I have had the occasion to talk with a number of employers who have definitely stated that they would throw the program right out the window due to these limitations.

New Jersey:

Dissatisfaction has been expressed by both employers and veterans over the new regulations.

New York:

The new ceilings on OJT and apprenticeship training programs have created considerable comment, discussion, and problems since they have been put into effect. * * * It is felt that this ceiling will also increase labor turn-over, as many veterans are leaving their training programs for other jobs that pay higher rates.

Ohio:

Several offices reported that they were experiencing more and more difficulty in setting up programs due to the wage ceilings. OJT activity decreased the most in areas of high-wage scales. We are still of the opinion that an upward adjustment of wage ceilings under OJT to allow for the increased cost of living will do much toward reactivating the interest in OJT both by employers and veteran applicants.

Oklahoma:

Very little has been done in regard to the promotion of OJT in Oklahoma for the past month. The entire OJT program is at a standstill and will continue to be so long as it takes the Veterans' Administration to reapprove some 23,000 employers that have already been approved.

South Dakota:

The number of requests for approval have declined considerably with most employers reluctant to request approval until further clarification is made on recent amendments to the law. There appears to be considerable dissatisfaction mainly on the part of the veteran and which is also expressed by a number of managers in training establishments.

Tennessee:

Employers were quite disturbed (veterans also) over the new maximum wage limitations for eligibility. This has caused some turn-over by veterans and most employers to limit their training to low-pay jobs. It means also that veterans may not have the chance at better-pay jobs since there is no training subsistence-wage incentive.

Texas:

Both employees and employers are generally opposed to the $200 ceiling, and many trainees are dropping out.

Utah:

Since the announcement of recent legislation placing a ceiling on training, we have had a number of veterans in this office who have advised us they are leaving their employment to secure more remunerative work even though they have been on the job a considerable length of time. We are also finding employers contacting this office by phone, or whom we have met in personal contact, who are much perturbed over the ceiling and are finding it difficult to keep some of the trainees whom they claim would be excellent employees at a later date. * * * Employers and veterans are also objecting to the 2-year limit set on training.

Washington:

The recent Federal law limiting employment ceilings to $200 a month for married men and $175 for single men, has seriously cramped progress in this program. * * * Now the employers of the association of auto mechanics feel that they do not want to carry on the program because the normal starting wage is such that they have decided they do not want to follow out all of the red tape.

Wisconsin:

The VER for Beloit, as well as those from other offices, report that unfavorable comments have been received from veterans regarding the ceiling imposed by Public Law 679. Some of the veterans apparently feel that they have been penalized.

Wyoming:

Naturally, some repercussions developed on the new subsistence regulations recently enacted by Congress. Some employers are inclined to drop the program, and some veterans have lost interest.

DECEMBER REPORTS

Alabama:

The OJT program in Alabama is still in a state of flux and unrest. The new amendment 679 has done much to discourage veterans in many fields from taking training or continuing their present training. The peculiar set-up in Alabama which requires all veterans to take related subject work, which is usually given at the local high school, has also been generally criticized by many of the on-the-job training veterans. They state that in many cases this is purely a waste of time as no training was given nor was any studying done with qualified instructors' aid.

Alaska:

Many are anticipating the removal or raising of the ceiling on on-the-job training under Public Law 346. Should the ceiling be removed, this program will go places in the Territory, for this time the Veterans' Administration have the personnel trained and ready to carry out a good working program.

Arizona:

Most of the participation on OJT during the month of December was in the capacity of peacemakers and appeasers between the apprentice-training group and the OJT group.

California:

Employers are frank with us and have expressed themselves as being fed up with all the bother of so many interviews. They feel there is too much pampering and too much tax money being spent on the program. When employers begin to talk thusly we believe it is high time that some remedial action be taken.

Florida:

It still stands, however, that the interest on the part of employers and trainees is way off, due to the new law which affected subsistence and also many employers are getting cold on the program because of reporting demands. They feel that there is too much detail work in many cases.

Idaho:

Some employers have become discouraged with the OJT program. They are particularly unhappy about the change of the rules and the "ceilings." The VER has had several employers comment somewhat as follows: "We just don't like to have the rules changed on us in the middle of the game."

Illinois:

No cases of special problems have been reported other than continued objection to the imposed ceiling under Public Law No. 679. While they exist, these ceilings will continue to be an obstacle to a full OJT program.

Kansas:

The Veterans' Administration regulation requiring the recertification of all employers caused a retardation of the program the last several months. Also, many complaints are registered against the paper work involved. Firms where the owner does most of his own office work balk at the program for this reason. Veterans with any earning capacity say the restricted OJT program is of no use to them. Some who had hoped to learn new trades find they must stay on jobs which, though unsatisfactory for a career, are paying a living wage temporarily.

Kentucky:

Some local veterans employment representatives continue to report that employers will not accept the on-the-job-training program with its present restrictions.

Louisiana:

The increased cost of living and the apparent slowness of the approving and inspection authorities of the OJT program have presently stymied the program. In some scattered instances, employers with programs in effect are discontinuing them due primarily to ceilings limiting salaries which they express as not being inducive to the higher type trainee.

Maine:

This activity has been greatly curtailed as requested by the VA. * * * Due to the stringent arrangements placed upon employers by the VA, many firms have discontinued many OJT programs for veterans. * * * Still another problem encountered often centers about the resurvey of the job training spots by the VA. * * * Many employers state that they are given no reason for the withdrawal of the approval but are told "That's it." There is no question in the minds of the staff of this office that the on-the-job-training program by the VA is at an extremely low ebb in the minds of employers in this State and sinking fast and lower.

Michigan:

The OJT program in general is still marking time for the most part awaiting such action as Congress may take on the matter.

Mississippi:

We have found that employers who are dissatisfied with the on-the-job-training program refuse to talk about employment of veterans and contacts with these employers are worthless.

Montana:

There have been both reverberations from employers and some dissension among Veterans' Administration representatives because of lack of over-all understanding in proper placement of trainees.

New Hampshire:

A great many employers look upon OJT as something that will cost money to put into operation and something that will require a great deal of additional work. Another objection usually presented is the number of special reports that must be submitted to the Veterans' Administration. Due to these conditions, many employers turn down the possibility of setting up OJT programs within their establishments.

New Mexico:

On or before December 31, many on-the-job-training programs were canceled by the Veterans' Administration. Cancellations for the most part were in those programs set up as on-the-job training that covered apprenticeable occupations. Employers have been advised by the Veterans' Administration that it is necessary to set up a program in accordance with the standards approved by the Federal Government or a State apprentice training council. Other on-the-job-training programs that were set up for a period of more than 2 years were also canceled and employers advised to set up a program for 2 years or less.

New York:

Despite the brighter OJT picture for the month, the OJT ceilings and high turn-over rate continue to mar the program.

North Carolina:

In that Public Law 679 reduces periods of training in certain group classifications to 2 years, automobile mechanic trainee has been shifted to apprenticeship training of 4 years. This has more or less upset planned schedules over the State in garages who have previously been approved for such training and has retarded approval due to the office of apprentice training (State) having to pass on all such applications. We do not hold with the order making automobile mechanic trainee as an apprenticeship training, as we are informed by garages, etc., that 2 years is all they have ever trained mechanics. Then there are thousands of veterans who are not entitled to a full 4 years under the GI bill, due to lack of service. This leaves them out in the cold for any training under this classification, which we feel is unjustified.

Oklahoma:

The biggest problem encountered with respect to OJT is that there are so many more veterans requesting this type of training than there are openings. Many employers have indicated that they are waiting to see what Congress does in respect to the ceiling on wages before they request any more trainees.

Puerto Rico:

We find that there are good opportunities for developing a sound on-the-job training program, but due to official red tape in the Insular Department of Education and the jealousies of some field employees of the Veterans' Administration, many qualified employers fail to be certified and we are robbed of the opportunity to make referrals of trainees.

South Carolina:

Through personal contact with local VERs it appears that both the Employment Service and a great many employers have had their interest dulled in on-the-job training program due to the time that it takes an employer to get a program approved after applications and all necessary forms have been filed.

South Dakota:

Very few new establishments are requesting approval. The wage ceilings and 2-year limitation has caused many veterans to discontinue such training.

Texas:

The general trend over the State is that employer acceptance of the program is at an all time low.

Utah:

During the month of December there seemed to be a dissatisfaction with the employers and veterans alike with the ruling of the Veterans' Administration as to what the veteran might earn while in OJT. The continued delay in getting jobs approved and the veteran getting his pay is a chief source of worry.

Vermont:

While every effort is made by our local offices to develop training opportunities in approved establishments for referral purposes, there are few openings at present because of the reluctance of emloyers to proceed further with the program until such time as the Eightieth Congress might remove or modify the existing ceiling provisions.

Virginia:

There was little activity in this program this month.

Wisconsin:

It has been alleged that the GI training programs have become so involved in red tape, many employers and veterans want nothing to do with them.

There, Mr. Speaker, you have irrefutable evidence from corners of the Nation and even the Territories that what we considered one of the most vital phases of our veterans readjustment program is a dismal failure. Obviously, I have presented today only that which is unfavorable. Many good things can be said about on-the-job training program under the GI bill, but the facts I have laid down before you today constitute an indictment of the program as it is now functioning which cannot be questioned.

Woven through the whole fabric of the data that I have collected is positive evidence that the whole enterprise has been misdirected. It is immediately apparent that a disservice has been done to veterans and employers alike. There is no doubt that the costs of administration have been needlessly increased. There is a clear indication that a studied effort has been made to convert what the Congress intended as a plain and simple training program for veterans into a complicated and confused undertaking.

There is also clearly apparent an attempt to convert the program into a formalized apprentice training program which, good in many instances, is not necessarily required in a great many cases.

We accepted in good faith the recommendations of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Concerned as he is with so many other responsibilities it is highly possible that he erred in his judgment regarding on-the-job training. The whole program demands more than a cursory review. In the interests of the veterans to whom we promised so much in the way of readjustment assistance, I urge the Congress to turn its immediate attention to the careful examination of this misguided venture and the prompt enactment of corrective legislation.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STIGLER. Yes; I yield to my distinguished friend from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. I know the intense interest of the gentleman in veterans' affairs, because he is a veteran of the First World War. I would like to ask my colleague at this point whether he thinks there should be a ceiling placed upon the amount the Government should pay, and if so, where does the gentleman think that ceiling should be.

Mr. STIGLER. I will answer the gentleman by saying that if there is no ceiling placed there will be some abuses. If there is a ceiling placed there will be abuses just as there are now; but those things can be handled administratively.

Mr. RIZLEY. In other words, the gentleman would not want to put on a ceiling? Let the Administrator handle the matter of making the adjustment as between employer and employee?

Mr. STIGLER. That is my idea about it; yes, sir.

Mr. RIZLEY. If the gentleman will yield further, I agree in the main with what my colleague from Oklahoma has said. On the other hand, I think it should be pointed out that Congress undoubtedly intended this program, when it was enacted, to be an on-the-job-training program, to train veterans.

Mr. STIGLER. There is no question about that.

Mr. RIZLEY. I have known of instances and I am sure the gentleman knows many instances where this has been abused. I can cite some cases where young men were in the service and have abused this privilege. For instance, I can cite the case of a young man who was in the banking business, who had been in the banking business for as much as 10 years, advanced from office boy up to vice presidency of the bank. Still, when he came out of the service he went back into the same bank under on-the-job training.

Mr. STIGLER. And abused the law.

Mr. RIZLEY. That is exactly true. Does not the gentleman believe that administratively there ought to be something done about that feature of the program?

Mr. STIGLER. Yes; I do. I believe such action is long overdue.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, in order to clear up some points of misunderstanding we must have the facts as to the cost of coal production, distribution, and sale, together with wages, labor and living conditions in the coal-mining industry.

American coal miners produce more coal annually than all of the rest of the coal-producing nations of the world combined, with 200,000 less men than are employed in England alone. In 1944, with a 25-percent manpower shortage, American coal miners produced 684,000,000 tons.

Coal is the life of the business of the country. Without cheap fuel available at all times we are handicapped in our economic growth. So much depends upon coal that it is quasi public in character, and our citizenship is fast realizing that until we solve the coal problem our national greatness is woefully handicapped.

It is hoped by those who are thinking the deepest on this great national problem that we may eventually find a remedy for the evils in the coal industry and that it may be stabilized so that we may have a steady production at all seasons during the year, and when competition will reign and cheap fuel may be had with good fair profits to the operator and a good wage and steady work for the employee.

In 1945, the weighted average labor cost per ton of coal was less than $1.82 and this includes wages paid mine management, clerical and supervisory forces, which average from 8 cents to 15 cents per ton. On 25,500,000 tons reported in Indiana in 1945 the labor cost per ton was approximately $1.03. Those consumers who pay $5 to $10 per ton can readily see that the miners get a small percent of the retail cost of coal. The retail selling price totals over five times the labor cost of producing bituminous coal. When you consider the operators', wholesalers', and retail margins plus freight and retail delivery costs you won't say the miners are geting too much money.

We should hold the operators in the coal-mining industry jointly responsible with the miners in bringing about strikes. I am certain that the President and his administration are not unmindful of the fact that the country cannot stand another Nation-wide coal strike at this time. The responsibility should rest squarely upon the Government if they do not encourage a meeting of the operators and miners. I am at a loss to know why something is not being done to ward off this terrible threat that now overshadows us. We cannot afford to wait on Supreme Court decisions, because they have had too many recesses in the past. If the operators and miners do not meet soon we can expect a big coal strike in April. An identical situation existed before a long strike in 1922. I hope the President and the Secretary of the Interior will go the limit in trying to get the contending forces together. I am certain the miners and northern operators are willing and anxious to meet. If they meet immediately, it is my judgment that they would arrive at an agreement.

It is obvious that the Government cannot continue to run the coal mines indefinitely. Of course, the operators are perfectly satisfied for the Government to be charged with running the mines when the operators themselves are in complete control. They are, therefore, not laying themselves liable to any charges for increased wages or welfare fund. The Government has refused until recently to name a member of the welfare board provided for in the contract between the Secretary of the Interior and the United Mine Workers. So nothing is being done about welfare conditions and the situation in some mining localities is simply terrible. According to the United Mine Workers Journal, the report of the Navy investigators found sanitation and health conditions in some coal camps deplorable and disgraceful. Telling of a hospital in an unnamed coal community, Admiral Moreell said, "This institution is definitely a disgrace not only to the town, county, and State, but to the Nation in general. It is the most insanitary thing I have ever seen. The health and general sanitation of the community, including water supply, is deplorable and disgraceful. There is no first-class water supply or sewage disposal in the entire county. All sewage is dumped into the streams and the stench that arises from the streams, from which the town gets its water, has a strong odor." At the present I was unable to get the entire report of the investigation from the Navy Department, but I expect them to make their full report to the public soon.

I realize that the lack of an adequate Federal social-security law has created a demand from labor unions for welfare funds. Many miners cannot understand why owners are willing to care for retired mine mules and not willing to do anything for the miners who have worked 40 or 50 years for the coal industry. The widows and orphans of those men killed and those injured so severely as to end their ability to make a living should be given adequate care.

The number killed in the coal mines from all causes annually, 1906 to 1945, averages 1,981, which means that for every working day five men are killed outright. Permanent total, permanent partial, and temporary disabilities for the period 1930 to 1944 total 1,004,524—more than twice the number of men employed in the industry. Statistically, every man was injured twice during that period. I do not believe there is an industry in the world that paid that price in blood, bone, and human flesh as our own bituminous-coal industry.

Since the passage of the Federal mine-inspection law, which I took the lead to force out of committee, the number of accidents and deaths in the coal fields has been reduced materially, especially where the States have cooperated with Federal mine inspection.

I know, from experience in the coal fields in southern Indiana, that the coal miners are not to be bludgeoned into working if it is at the cost of all they have gained by negotiations of the past. I do not mean to say that any labor organization should be permitted, in key industries, to refuse to yield to reasonable terms and thus bring about national catastrophe, but if union labor has been taught anything in recent years, it has been taught to believe in the efficacy of collective bargaining.

Of course, if the price of coal is increased appreciably because of the granting of union demands, it would have to be passed on to the consumers. This, they say, would bring about an impairment of the coal-mining industry by reason of the competition of gas and oil. It is generally understood by those best informed that it will be a long time before either of these commodities can, except in isolated instances, take the place of coal, because coal, admittedly, is the cheapest commodity to use in producing power. The miners' officials have been informed of this threat for many years and have looked it squarely in the face. They believe, and there is justification for this belief, that the operators, particularly during the last decade, have hogged the trough when profits were being divided and that the miners, during the war and now, have not had their fair share of the profits when measured by that which others were obtaining, although the latter worked under more healthful and less dangerous conditions.

Judged by the number of days the miner was actually employed, his earning capacity was not sufficient to maintain a proper standard of living. Among the factors causing instability in the coal industry are uncertainty of markets, physical dangers to the workers, car and timber shortages, break-downs, and various other factors causing idleness.

It is true that some among the miners, who have the most favored working conditions under the existing wage scale, at times earn a wage that is fairly compensatory and which is adequate to raise their standard of living high among the working people.

There are a number of features of the Government agreement with miners which are objectionable to the mine owners, particularly the southern operators. These include the union welfare fund, the unionization of foremen, and the mine safety code.

One of the chief proposals the miners will demand in the new contract with the operators is a shorter workweek. During the war, and at the present time, the miners are working 9 hours per day, and thousands of miners spend at least 2 hours' travel time in going to and from the mine. Due to the hazardous conditions in the coal mines the miners are entitled to a shorter workweek.

As long as the Government has control of the coal mines, it will be difficult for the operators and miners to reach an agreement. Just remember that the chief counsel for the coal operators resigned in disgust because of the attitude of certain operators connected with the southern coal fields. It occurs to me that the northern operators, particularly our Indiana operators, have not shared with any enthusiasm the "dog in the manger" policy of the southern operators and would be glad, indeed, to have a peaceful settlement on reasonable terms.

The Government and the Congress cannot remain indifferent to the pending struggle of the operators and miners. It is the duty to give the facts to the public.

The United Mine Workers of America ask for no special privilege. These miners who go down into the bowels of the earth and mine the commodity upon which our present-day civilization is founded, merely ask for equality in the economic life of our Nation and in the community life of our people. The miners dream of having their rights recognized to a point where they are privileged to live as other men, and while they are making this fight for that equality of treatment, they are always willing to lend a helping hand to all unfortunates.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANDIS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Has the gentleman any figures on the cost of mining a ton of anthracite coal; that is, has he any knowledge from his survey or review of the cost of mining anthracite coal that comes to us people in the North? I know that we are paying $16 a ton for stove coal, and I was wondering how much the miner gets for the ton of coal that we pay $16 for?

Mr. LANDIS. I think the highest price I noticed on the list was $2.39. That was the highest price that was listed. It ran from $1.03 in Indiana, on up. It may be $4 in the anthracite coal.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. The coal in the gentleman's State is bituminous coal?

Mr. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. And anthracite in Pennsylvania.

Mr. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. So the highest price for mining a ton of, say, anthracite stove coal would be about $4.

Mr. LANDIS. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. That would be the very highest point.

Mr. LANDIS. I think so.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Has the gentleman any comment to make about the reasonableness of the cost to the consumer?

Mr. LANDIS. Of course, we wonder why Indiana coal sells for $10 when the miner only gets $1.03. But you have the operator's profits, freight rates, the retailers and the wholesalers share, and by the time it gets to the consumer, why it is evidently pretty high.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. We think, of course, it is high at $16 a ton.

Mr. LANDIS. That is true.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. It makes us worry a bit to burn coal and look, of course, naturally to oil or something else.

Mr. LANDIS. That is the point I want to make today, that the miner who produces the coal is getting only a very small proportion of it.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Not a fair proportion of it.

Mr. LANDIS. That is right.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BLATNIK] is recognized for 10 minutes.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND POWER PROJECT

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a House joint resolution authorizing the President to conclude the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence agreement with Canada and proceed with the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project upon acceptance of its terms and modifications with Canada.

With a few exceptions, the people in my part of the country, the Central Northwest, have for a generation or more aspired and hoped for the development of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project to bring direct ocean navigation to the very center of the North American Continent. There is greater unanimity in support of this undertaking in the whole of the Great Lakes and Prairie States than on any other public issue that has come before this Congress.

There was a time not so long ago when defeatist economics assumed that the country's development had reached a stage of maturity and saturation with little opportunity for further development. Our frontiers had reached the Pacific Ocean, and there was, according to this view, no place else to go. We know now that this was inaccurate, and the opportunities for growth and expansion in this country are still unlimited. The new frontiers of scientific and technological development, and in the greater utilization of natural resources within our geographical boundaries, still challenge the best effort of our people.

The development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence system of waterways is one of those frontiers of development and expansion which has not yet received adequate recognition as a stimulus to production and enterprise.

As the geographical frontier moved westward predatory exploitation of the natural resources of many of the Western States threatened to leave them stripped of their inherent resources. These States were stripped of their forests, and now they are threatened with the exhaustion of their mineral resources. Unless far-sighted steps are taken for intensive development of what there is left in the soil, and for new enterprises and wealth-creating opportunities through production and trade, we will soon find States like Minnesota denuded of their natural resources and depopulated through migration.

Anticipating the exhaustion of rich iron ore resources in the Mesabi Range, which would have devastating effects upon the industry of the whole Middle West,

I have been interested in the development of the technology of concentrated low-grade ores, and I shall pursue this with all the vigor at my command.

Again, lacking fuel resources in my State, I foresee the time when it will be possible through scientific development and economical techniques to utilize peat for fuel.

Again, those of us who come from the fertile plains of the Northwest must do everything in our power to accelerate a program of reforestation. All of these things we must do, if our part of the country will contribute its share to the common development of our Nation.

In the forefront of the program of natural resource development must be placed the construction of the necessary works to bring deep sea navigation into the Great Lakes, and to harness low-cost electric power on the St. Lawrence River.

There is a tendency to belittle this project by saying that it is an "old story," but the very fact that in spite of delays and disappointments the subject of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence development comes up for reconsideration in every session of Congress, is a proof of its fundamental merit.

Only a few days ago Secretary of State George Marshall recommended to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee approval of the pending Canadian-American agreement for the development of the St. Lawrence seaway by this session of Congress. Secretary Byrnes before him, Secretary Stettinius, Secretary Hull, Secretary Stimson earlier, and Secretary Charles Evans Hughes even before him, all made the same plea. In the past 25 years successive Presidents of both parties insistently called upon the Congress to approve the development of this great undertaking in the interest of the Nation. Presidents Calvin Coolidge, Herbert Hoover, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Harry Truman have had definite programs before the Congress for the construction of this project.

The fact that it has taken long and has at times been retarded is only due to the magnitude of the undertaking. Democracy moves slowly in the fulfillment of its destiny. It took almost 50 years of negotiation with the United Kingdom and 25 years of constant legislative discussion before authorization of the Panama Canal was approved by the Congress.

If I read historical portents clearly, the time is fast arriving when the St. Lawrence project will also become a reality. The first discussion of a deep waterway began in 1895, and since the early 1920's, that is, 25 years ago, the two Governments—Canada and the United States—have been actively considering this project. If history will repeat itself, I think the time is up and we should put the approval of the Canadian-American agreement on the legislative agenda of this session of Congress.

Of course, there are many arguments for and against a major project of this kind. It is the privilege of a free country to give every man an opportunity to express himself one way or another on any public issue, and those who favor considerable public expenditures for a project of this nature must have persuasive justification.

Since coming to Congress, I have read the record carefully; and without regard to the predisposition of my district in Minnesota, I can say without reservation that the case for the construction of this project at the earliest practicable time is well proved; and the fears of those who oppose it, though sincere and honest, are somewhat exaggerated.

The case is proved by the following evidence:

First. That the navigation through the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River to the Atlantic Ocean will be economically feasible and beneficial seems beyond question. Two thousand miles of low-cost water transportation to the open seas of the world, with water-transportation costs essentially almost one-tenth of the cost of rail transportation, cannot help but give the whole Great Lakes area a new lease on commerce which should be of benefit to the entire country.

Second. That this expansion of commerce will not be to the detriment of existing modes of transportation is a historical fact, proved by the advantages the whole country has gained from the construction of the Panama Canal, and from the development of inland waterways on the Ohio, the Tennessee, the Mississippi, and other river systems of our country. This is particularly true over the territory from Lake Michigan and Lake Superior to the Rocky Mountains. The rail transportation systems in this whole territory will secure greater business by the development of the St. Lawrence seaway, which will make Chicago and Duluth, as well as other Great Lakes cities, terminal ports. Even in the case of eastern trunk lines, the development of commerce and industry, as a result of the advantages of cheap water transportation, cannot but help the traffic in the whole territory south of the Great Lakes, down to the Ohio Valley.

Third. The testimony of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the views of Admiral Nimitz, General Eisenhower, General Marshall, and General Wheeler are incontrovertible that the development of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project will be a great contribution to national security. Although many interests claimed before World War II that this project was not needed, because we had adequate transportation and adequate power resources, the hard realities of a total war belied their complacency. We let our merchant marine be crippled in the open Atlantic, whereas the St. Lawrence system, if it had been developed, would have given our ships a thousand miles of protected navigation—one-third of the way to the Continent of Europe. We carried the products of the steel mills and machine shops of the Great Lakes 2,000 miles to the west coast and 1,500 miles to to the south to be constructed into merchant ships at increased cost of men, materials, and money, while the Great Lakes were mainly confined to the construction of small ships that could navigate the shallow locks of the St. Lawrence River and the Mississippi River systems. Those larger units that had to be built in the Great Lakes were floated down 1,500 miles to New Orleans over the 9-foot channels, again at increased cost to the taxpayer.

It is conservative to state that the cost of the war, including the excess transportation cost paid on war material, including the increase in the cost of our shipbuilding program, was augmented several times more than the total cost of the seaway.

Fourth. The views of the Department of Interior, as expressed in its recent annual report, establish the fact that the St. Lawrence seaway will correct in considerable degree the dangerous situation that confronts this country as a result of the progressive exhaustion of its natural resources in ores and petroleum.

The high-grade iron ore of the Mesabi range, of which there is claimed to be only 500,000,000 tons available, is scheduled for exhaustion in less than 20 years at the present rate of consumption. That is the reason why I have proposed programs for the development of low-grade ores and we must press this program with all energy. However, under conditions of full employment or national emergency, this country will need, as we did in World War II, almost 100,000,000 tons a year of iron ore. It will take a long time, and an expenditure of close to a billion dollars, in concentrating plants and attendant works, to expand production of concentrated low-grade ores to the maximum requirements of this country. It is a safe insurance at the same time as we develop low-grade ores to take steps so that the steel mills of the great Middle West will not move to the East Coast or to the South in order to take advantage of low-priced foreign ores. It cannot hurt our own program of development of low-grade ores in Minnesota to have access, through low-cost water transportation, to the richer ores of foreign countries. There is no danger in this for our own undertaking because, even with free access between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic, it is not possible to bring in more than a small proportion from abroad. In the next 10 years this factor will be better appreciated. It is important to do something about it now, because it may take as long as 5 years to construct the seaway and several more years after that before full utilization of this new facility takes place.

It is to the interest of the miners and the owners of steel mills to make sure that they do not place the Great Lakes industry at a price disadvantage with respect to accessibility to ore resources. It would be a direct blow to the program of developing low-grade ores in the Great Lakes area if the attraction of high-grade foreign ores caused the transfer of steel mills to the east coast. Under those conditions the concentrating plants in my part of the country would have to overcome not only the greater costs of production, but greater cost of transportation to the steel mills.

Let me make this clear. We should develop low-grade ores to meet a substantial proportion of the national demand.

Finally, the record is indisputable that this country has always had and still has, a need for the large water-power resources at the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River. In 1929 a study by the Brookings Institution deprecated the need for this power by saying that there was no market for it. Between 1929 and 1945 in New York State alone, power demand has grown 100 percent by more than twice the capacity of the American share of the St. Lawrence project. This power could have been easily absorbed in that period. In 1941 it was again stated that New York State and the East had adequate power resources. Experience during the war indicated that they were so short of power that the War Production Board had to set definite limitations on the establishment of additional war plants in that area. Experience since the end of the war shows that, whereas much fear was expressed that the country would be confronted by an excess of generating capacity after the war, the Northeast is now short of power. Even in those areas such as the Tennessee Valley and the Pacific Northwest where large power dams were constructed, demand has outstripped supply and they must now make provision for new generating capacity.

The Province of Ontario, as well as New York State and adjacent States, have a need for this power right now. It is still the cheapest source of power in this area of the country and we must not deny any segment of our people their rightful desire to benefit by the bounties of nature.

These, then, are the compelling reasons why I sponsor legislation for the approval of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Agreement with Canada, and why I urge upon the Public Works Committee and my colleagues in this House to set aside sectional considerations and to view these great projects on their merits.

As a member of the Public Works Committee, I expect to view each proposal strictly on its merits, regardless of whether it affects my own district in any way whatsoever. Of course we must represent our constituents in the Halls of Congress, and I shall do so to the best of my ability, but even as compelling, it is our duty to legislate for the country as a whole for its benefit and advancement. We can achieve this common objective, not by tearing down and opposing the interests of other sections of the country, but by combining our efforts for the improvement of every section.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I think it is advisable in view of the editorial comment appearing in some of the newspapers today to say just a few words with reference to the action of the Congress in passing the urgent deficiency bill. The comments of certain newspaper editors and commentators seem to be that the Congress by this action has killed OPA because it has refused to grant the deficiency requested by the OPA; that thereby the Congress had killed sugar control and especially has killed rent control. Now, let us see what the facts are. The facts are these: The Congress indicated by its action yesterday that it did not intend to furnish the OPA funds which it requested to carry on its activities for the balance of the current fiscal year. The rent-control law remains untouched and unchanged. The worst that could happen if the action of the House is sustained in the other body and is approved by the President is that the OPA and its agencies will not have the power of enforcement. It remains with the individual—I hope the people of America may hear and read this—it remains with the individual out in my State, for example, who is operating under an agreement of tenancy by which his rent has been fixed by OPA regulations that in the event his landlord seeks to raise the rent precipitantly or to raise it in violation of existing law and regulation, that individual has the right under existing law to go to his local court and bring suit for treble damages. I have just been wondering, may I say to Members of Congress, whether or not that is not going to be a pretty effective remedy. I am just wondering whether or not that is not going to bring the Government back to the people right at the grass roots instead of having this horde of prejudiced investigators of the OPA performing the service for them. I do not think that the people of America need to fear because every individual will have it within his or her power under the law to seek the protection that every other person seeks, and that is the judicial system of the country and the courts locally to protect his or her rights. Those rights are not destroyed by the failure of the Congress to make appropriations for the money which the OPA requested in the deficiency bill.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. How many other States have that same provision in their statutes, to protect rent violators?

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman apparently did not understand my statement at all. I am not talking about any State statute. I am talking about the fact that under the Federal law an individual has a right to go into a State court and maintain a suit and invoke the protection of the Federal law.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. I understand that, but I am directing this question to the gentleman, whether or not the Congress of the United States having passed a law controlling rents, and not providing appropriations to carry out the enforcement of that law, is saying to the people of the various States of the Union, "You must seek your own redress in the State courts."

Mr. KEEFE. All I have to say is that the Federal Government passed a rent-control law. It is still on the statute books. The fact that Congress did not implement it by providing this deficiency appropriation does not mean that the law is repealed. It means that the law is still there with all of its force and effect and anybody who violates it may be expected to be summarily taken care of in the State courts, or possibly in the Federal court, with the regular machinery that the Government provides for the protection of its citizens.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] has expired.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1947

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and Father, we praise Thee for the dawn of this day which has come from the breath of divine love. In the midst of life's feverish ways, O lead our faltering steps and help us to find peace and unity, which come to those who are led by Thy merciful hand.

Through our waiting hours direct the Congress in Thy wisdom; may we be free from spiritual and intellectual neglect, ever mindful that public office is a public trust and that it may be fulfilled only with stout hearts and deep convictions. Work mightily in us, O God, and guide and sustain us in all our labors; and should disappointment come, grant that it may minister to our greater strength. Help us to realize that what we do will always be determined by what we are; when the workman dies, the work goes on.

"Grant us the will to fashion as we feel;
Grant us the strength to labor as we know;
Grant us the purpose, ribbed and edged with steel,
To strike the blow."

We pray in Jesus' name, our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS AT THIS POINT

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, today the Congress will consider House Concurrent Resolution 20. I am completely in sympathy with the idea of economy, but it should be intelligent economy based upon findings from extensive hearings and investigations.

The greatest aid to recovery would be a balanced budget; a reduction in our national debt, and a reduction in taxes. The balanced budget comes first. Then Congress must give careful consideration to a long-range plan for a reduction in the national debt. We should also do as much as possible to give the American public the incentive it needs by a reduction in taxation.

We must balance the budget. That the public insists on. But the same public likewise insists on the safety of our Nation.

I voted in committee to reduce the budget $4,500,000,000 with a token cut in our armed forces. A reduction of $6,000,000,000, with drastic cuts in our armed forces appropriations, would imperil our national safety, which would be unwise at this time. I shall follow the recommendations of Generals Marshall and Eisenhower and Admiral Nimitz not to reduce our armed forces below the point of safety.

I hold in my hand a letter which I received from Paul H. Griffith, national commander of the American Legion, which I quote in part:

Are we to ignore our international commitments to the extent that our representatives at peace parleys become the targets for contemptuous mockery by nations which have remained strong and influential?

In this critical and turbulent hour, a world of nations watches us to see what action we will take to maintain our leadership in world affairs. There is a solemn and sacred obligation upon America to remain strong until a permanent, feasible peace plan is established.

Passage of this resolution would be "penny-wise but pound-foolish."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ABERNETHY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article entitled "The Closed Shop Is Slavery," by Thurman Sensing, director of research, Southern States Industrial Council.

ESTABLISHING CEILING FOR EXPENDITURES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1948

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 103 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 20) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948, and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year, and all points of order against said concurrent resolution are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the concurrent resolution, and shall continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York, Mr. TABER, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CANNON, the concurrent resolution shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to said concurrent resolution. At the conclusion of the consideration of the concurrent resolution, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the concurrent resolution to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I shall later yield 30 minutes to my good friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 20 establishing a ceiling on expenditures for the fiscal year 1948. I think it is important at the outset to say that this is merely an expression by Congress that it favors a $6,000,000,000 reduction in Federal expenditures in the fiscal year 1948. It translates into dollars and cents the wish of the American people that we lower Federal expenditures. We must acknowledge that this resolution is not binding; it establishes no statutory limitations on the Federal Budget, but merely sets a target on which the Appropriations Committee can set its sights. It will give the various departments the right to appear before the Committee on Appropriations and justify their reasonable requests.

I would especially emphasize that, because somehow some people feel that this resolution is an attack on the armed services. I would say, again, in answer to that, that reliable spokesmen of the Army and the Navy can come before the Committee on Appropriations and justify necessary appropriation in the event there is a change in world conditions. I believe I am safe in saying that every Member of Congress at some time has emphasized the importance of governmental economy. So I would say, again, that this resolution gives us the privilege here today to translate their desires into actual being.

Mr. Speaker, this is a closed rule. It provides for 4 hours' debate, after which there may be one motion to recommit. Like many of you, I am not in favor of closed rules, but to you new Members I would emphasize the fact that when I first came to Congress back in 1933 we had many closed rules. I believe the RECORD will disclose that the Democratic leadership during those many years brought in many closed rules, and the Democratic leaders, without exception, voted solidly for those closed rules. At that time bills were sent over by the White House on which we were not permitted to cross a "t" or to dot an "i."

I may say in regard to this particular resolution that perhaps the reason why we are requesting this closed rule is that for 16 years under the Democratic Party this Nation unjustifiably and unwarrantedly squandered billions of dollars, hundreds of billions of dollars, until now we have a national debt of $270,000,000,000. We must do something about that. It is paramount that we reduce Federal expenditures, that we lower taxes, that we pay off on this stupendous, this tremendous national debt.

In regard to the amounts, President Truman sent to this Congress a budget in the amount of $37,500,000,000. That is many times the amounts the late President Roosevelt requested during peace years. The $31,500,000,000 proposed in this resolution is a reduction of $6,000,000,000 from the request of President Truman. This amount will, however, adequately take care of the necessary functions of our Government.

We must not forget that there are but 55,000,000 workers in the United States. By the simple process of arithmetic, you will find that even the $31,500,000,000 budget the Republican leadership is sponsoring will cost every one of these 55,000,000 workers over $500 a year Federal taxes. The Budget submitted by President Truman would mean a considerably greater hardship. Along with this over $500 each year our people naturally will have to pay the hidden taxes as well as the State taxes and the municipal taxes. No one can dispute that over $500 a year charged against every one of the 55,000,000 wage earners for Federal expenditures is a large figure, but neither can anyone dispute that we can adequately provide for the necessary functions of our Government with that large amount of $31,500,000,000, which is many times higher than the Budget recommended by the late Mr. Roosevelt during the peace years.

Adoption of House Concurrent Resolution 20 will be a positive expression that the House membership intends to stand behind its pledge to the taxpayers and translate into dollars and cents the will of the American people that Government activities and evpenditures shall be brought within their ability to pay. We need have no fears today that our action will impair the efficient operations of the Government. On the contrary, this action is a long step toward removing the superstructure of waste and extravagance from the Federal Government.

I personally do not feel that anyone can afford to vote against a reduction in Federal expenditures, and I predict that there will not be 20 votes in the House of Representatives against it. I hope that the rule is adopted, Mr. Speaker.

THE GAG RULE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], states that this resolution is not binding.

Consequently, it must be only for the political purpose of misleading the people into believing that there will be a reduction of $6,000,000,000 in the budget.

If it is not binding, why bring it in here without the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget, or the Committee on Appropriations, making known to the whole country where the cuts to bring about these reduced appropriations are going to be made? Why the secrecy? Why the rigid rule?

REORGANIZATION ACT IS ACTUALLY BEING VIOLATED

I know that gentlemen here will claim that the Joint Committee on the Budget, under the provisions of the Reorganization Act, are supposed to bring in their budget recommendations and establish the ceiling by February 15; but instead of complying with the provisions of that act, they are violating its letter and its spirit, for they do not give to the country, nor even to the House membership, any information as to how they arrived at the conclusion that appropriations can be reduced to the extent of $6,000,000,000. They cannot because they do not know. This is a guess. It is the guess of only 10 of the 102 members of the joint committee.

WARNS AGAINST CONSEQUENCES

Consequently, I have no hesitancy in asserting that this is beyond doubt the most drastic gag rule ever submitted to the House since the days of Uncle Joe Cannon's czaristic control of Congress.

It deprives the Members—and I want you new Members particularly to understand what this means—it deprives the Members of all opportunity to discuss or amend this joint resolution. It deprives you of your rights under the Constitution and under the Rules of the House to vote on appropriations in accordance with the public hearing of testimony and evidence. It deprives you of your moral right to know what you are doing when you vote and of not being obliged to confess to your constituents that you obeyed party orders blindly.

From what budget estimates will these reductions be taken? I am afraid that when appropriations are slashed to meet this blind figure, this "guesstimate," you will squirm in your seats at being shorn of the right to vote on sadly needed appropriations for your district, your State, and your country.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I regret that I cannot yield. I know that you have been misled by the propaganda that you sent out this morning. I know that you would now like to bring it to the attention of the House; but the Members already have received it, and should pay no further attention to this news release from the Citizens National Committee, which is a private tax-dodging organization made up of rich people who want to escape their just share of the tax burden. You cannot afford to form your judgment on such biased and misleading information.

WARNS AGAINST CANNONISM

When I came to Congress the first time in the Sixtieth Congress Uncle Joe Cannon was Speaker and czar of the House. Under his drastic and arbitrary rule, privileges of Members were restricted, and they were deprived of the right to vote with their eyes open, knowing what they were voting for.

I warn you that your present gag policy will soon outdo even Uncle Joe Cannon's dictatorial practices, just as he outdid Speaker Reed, who was first referred to as czar of the House. Uncle Joe Cannon, who ruled the House with an iron hand and brooked not the slightest rebellion, in company with James Tawney, of Minnesota, and "Sunny Jim" Sherman, of Ohio, were the three Republicans of the membership of five on the Rules Committee. Not only was he deaf to the Democrats and to progressive members of his own party, but when he sat in the chair during sessions of the House he could never see to the right side of the aisle; but notwithstanding that daytime blindness he enjoyed good enough sight in his right eye at night.

DICTATORSHIP LEADS TO INGLORIOUS DEFEAT

Again I warn you, if the majority attempts to rule this House with such tyranny it will lead surely again, as in the past, to inglorious defeat at the hands of the American people.

WILL TAX BURDEN BE UNLOADED ON WORKERS?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] states that we are not going to slash Army and Navy appropriations by $1,750,000,000. Where, then, are these six billions of dollars coming from? What departments are going to be crippled? Is chaos to be created and left as our normal way of life by blindly slashing off funds. This will be inquired into more fully by the speakers who follow me.

With all the affection I have for my colleague, I wonder if, when he says that 55,000,000 workers will be obliged to pay $5,000 each for the reduction of our public debt, he is intending to follow the lead of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] in reducing the taxes of the wealthy, of the rich corporations, and the war profiteers, relieving them of any payment of service on the debt while unloading the crushing burden only on the 55,000,000 workers? Does he intend, and does his party intend, to excuse the rich from bearing their just share of the national defense?

Surely, upon sober thought, it must be seen that the statement will be regarded as ridiculous.

FOR ECONOMY BUT NOT FOR BLIND CUTS

Mr. Speaker, I am for economy and for an equitable and orderly reduction of taxes—but I am not for a reduction only in the tax bills of the war profiteers, the black marketeers, and the economic royalists, and I am not for any inefficient, hit-or-miss, shot-in-the-dark false economies.

More than once I have called attention to reckless expenditures by our military and naval gentlemen, and I am of the opinion that even now we have thousands of officers, highly paid civilians, and enlisted men whose services are not essential and could be dispensed with.

But though I am not a militarist, and do not and will not believe that there is any danger of a new war, this is not the time for any reductions that would lower the efficiency of our armed forces.

NOBODY KNOWS WHERE CUTS WILL BE MADE

To be forced to vote on the coming appropriations, after the House has received from the Committee on Appropriations a report on cuts and increases agreed to behind closed doors, appears to me to be outrageous.

I tried my utmost to obtain from the chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], when he appeared before the Rules Committee to obtain this binding and restrictive gag rule on the Members, some information as to how the committee had arrived at the conclusion that $6,000,000,000 can be lopped off the President's carefully prepared Budget estimate, and where the cuts would be made in the appropriations for the various agencies and departments.

I was unable to obtain the slightest information.

He did not have it.

He, himself, stated that he did not have it.

CUTS FIRST, STUDY AFTERWARD

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] said the committee would begin hearings and afterward would decide where the cuts would be made.

Mr. Speaker, I ask, is this not a ridiculous procedure?

We are asked first to vote on the reduction; the committee will later give us the information.

DEMOCRATS RESPECTED MINORITY RIGHTS

Mr. Speaker, during the 16 years the Democratic Party held control of Congress, and during my service of 8 years as chairman of the Committee on Rules, no such abridgment of the rights of Members and of the minority was ever attempted or requested, and no such gag rule was ever presented for consideration of an appropriation bill.

That we did bring in such a rule for a tariff bill or a revenue bill, so technical and complex that the slightest amendment might destroy the structure of a bill which had required months of painstaking study and detailed work by the Committee on Ways and Means, I readily concede but only on unanimous request of the whole committee.

But not only did we never offer any such drastic gag rule on an appropriation bill but, to the contrary, we brought in special rules to liberalize the rules in order to expedite the business of the House by waiving points of order that would have deprived Members of the right to vote on appropriations in a bill. I surmise that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] will endeavor to characterize those as gag rules, but to my mind they were not.

MONEY SPENT TO SAVE COUNTRY

Mr. Speaker, charges have been made that the Democratic administration and Congress under President Roosevelt and under President Truman spent vast sums of money.

Of course we did.

We rescued the country from an abyss of depression into which 12 years of Republican misrule, and especially after the last 4 years of Mr. Hoover's term, had led the Nation and the world.

We were obliged to feed and clothe the hungry and the destitute; to provide work for the 16,000,000 unemployed; to bail out the banks, the railroads, the mortgage companies, the insurance companies; to save industry from insolvency and the farmers from bankruptcy.

All those things were accomplished, but naturally it cost money.

FREEDOM NOT MEASURED IN DOLLARS

The war cost money—vast and hitherto undreamed of sums.

Do the gentlemen on the Republican side begrudge those vast outpourings of money to win the war and save us from the attacks of our foreign enemies, from conquest and enslavement?

The people do not begrudge those vast sums. They believe freedom cannot be measured in dollars.

BOUGHT FISSION DISCOVERY

It must be borne in mind that the winning of the war cost at least $50,000,000,000 more than it should have because of the unpreparedness of the country after Pearl Harbor, because our isolationists and our pacifists and our short-sighted, penny-wise and pound-foolish snippers delayed defense preparations.

It was not so long ago that we cannot now recall their ridicule of our efforts to increase our air forces, to expand our Navy, to construct needed fortifications, and build up the Army.

And atomic energy—would these gentlemen have had us forego being the first to split the atom?

Who can measure its value to the world, in peace or in war, in terms of money?

WHO IS A RUBBER STAMP?

Mr. Speaker, in years gone by, when we followed the inspired leadership of President Roosevelt in putting the country back on its feet, and later on in his courageous recommendations to prepare for a war we did not want but could not avoid and keep our freedom, the Republican minority taunted us as being rubber stamps.

Who now is a rubber stamp?

I say now that if there ever was a time that Members of Congress could be boxed up and labeled "rubber stamps," that honor is now yours.

Never, in all my many years' service in this honorable body, have I seen such unanimity on all votes by the Republicans to the advantage of the wealthy and against the interest of labor and the common people.

NO TIME ON RECOMMITTAL

Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen will surely claim that under the rule an opportunity will be given for debate on a motion to recommit. This privilege could not be taken away by the Rules Committee, for the rules of the House do not permit this motion to be foreclosed.

That every other liberty of debate was taken away is shown by the language of the resolution, which reads, in part:

> That after general debate, which shall be confined to the concurrent resolution and shall continue not to exceed 4 hours * * * the concurrent resolution shall be considered as having been read for amendment.

NO AMENDMENTS PERMITTED

And now note this language, Mr. Speaker:

> No amendment shall be in order to said concurrent resolution. At the conclusion * * * the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the concurrent resolution to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

However, judging by your arbitrary tactics, the previous question again will be moved in denying anyone to say a word in favor of the motion to recommit.

VOTE "NO" ON PREVIOUS QUESTION

If you do not wish to bind yourself for all the remainder of your service to slavish acceptance of party dictates, I urge and appeal to you to vote against this rule, and to vote "no" on the previous question which will be moved by the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

In view, however, of your caucus action, I fear that very few of you, if any, will have the courage to do so, notwithstanding that by your affirmative vote you are digging your own political graves.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER].

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, we are dealing today with a form of procedure that has never before been followed in the Congress of the United States. It is the result of exhaustive study by a special committee which recommended certain reorganization procedures in the last Congress in order to streamline, so-called, the operations of the Congress itself. At the time that the committee was sitting, considering these matters of reorganization, I happened to be one of those who advocated the new procedure which is now being followed. I advocated it for the reason that in years gone by we had appropriated in a rather hit-and-miss fashion, taking up individual bills, one by one, and never knowing from day to day exactly what our fiscal position was. For the last 17 years we have appropriated under a cloud of deficit financing. We have not had a balanced budget in 17 years. Today we are considering both a rule and resolution which, as I said, comes from this new procedure. The resolution itself would, in my opinion, have a binding effect if we were proposing an increase in the debt limit. We are not doing that, because for the first time in 17 years we are dealing with a surplus rather than a deficit. There never was any intent, so far as I know, by those who are members of the Reorganization Committee, to make this resolution a binding resolution from the point of view of expenditures. There was every intent of creating a framework under which the Members could intelligently consider appropriations.

As for this rule, there has been a great deal of discussion about its being a gag rule. In the minority report which was filed in connection with the majority report on this subject there is a great deal in the way of verbiage, but absolutely nothing to carry out the intent of the Reorganization Act; namely, to propose a ceiling on expenditures. The minority, under the rule which I hope will be adopted, has the privilege of advancing whatever figures they like in a motion to recommit. They are not being gagged in any way. Even in the hearing before the Rules Committee, the minority advanced nothing. They did not tell us why they wanted an open rule; what amendments they might offer if an open rule was adopted; nor did their minority report suggest that they had anything to offer in substitution for the one now before us. Why that should be considered a gag rule when it is wide open for the minority to offer any substitute they see fit and demand a roll call on it, is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. Not at this point. During our debates on the reorganization bill last year we had before us for consideration one recommendation which was made by the Reorganization Committee and was then stricken at the request of the then leadership of the House. That was the recommendation that every Member of the House should be privileged to appear at some time before the different committees of the House in advocacy of some particular legislation which he had filed. That provision, which, to my mind, would have lifted the biggest gag that exists today, was taken out of the reorganization bill at the instance of our very distinguished former Speaker the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]. When the matter came before the House for debate I moved that that be reinserted, and in Committee of the Whole it was reinserted. But at the last moment, before the Committee rose, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] took the floor and made an eloquent plea that this should be stricken, and that a continuance of the tremendous powers of the chairmen to gag our own Members should be continued. It was, in response to his prestige, stricken out; but how in the face of that action he can now complain of a gag rule is beyond me.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I presume that a rupture of the harmonious relations that have existed between the two parties represented here by the membership up to this moment had to come, but there was and there is no good reason for bringing it on here.

This is the first time that I have ever opposed the adoption of a resolution reported by the Rules Committee, and I would not oppose this resolution except for the fact that it is a violent departure from what has heretofore been the rule and that it makes too great an exaction of surrender of freedom of action on the part of the membership, an exaction which can only be justified by the most extreme emergency which does not exist. The House has considered legislation under closed or so-called gag rules, but those have been, in the main, set up for the consideration of tax bills and were justified in those cases solely because of the technical nature of those bills.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Just a minute, please.

Never in the history of the Congress has any question relating to an appropriation bill been considered under this kind of rule.

Mr. Speaker, there are none of us but who are in accord with the objective the leadership has in mind, that is, reducing Federal expenditures. What we resist here is the method you are seeking for the determination of what the reduction shall be and where and how it shall be effected.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have asked the gentleman to yield only for the purpose of keeping the record straight.

Mr. COX. I cannot yield, for a statement. I have not the time. Please do not persist. I will consent that the gentleman's observation may be inserted at this part of my statement.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is only to keep the record straight.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I cannot yield.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are doing a very unwise thing in the adoption of this resolution. The report has gone out that in order for the Appropriations Committee to keep within the limit that is here set up it must reduce the Army and the Navy appropriation set up in the President's budget message to the extent of a billion and a half. Cannot my colleagues visualize and understand just what the psychological effect will be of our adopting this resolution which tells the country that the Congress is going to reduce Army-Navy appropriations to the extent of a billion and a half? Army and Navy civilian personnel is unjustifiably high and waste is doubtless great, all of which affords reasons for large savings, but here at this particular time it is unwise and it is dangerous to do that which will carry the implication that to keep within the limit fixed there will have to be a cut in appropriations for essential services. I am certain that my Republican friends do not want to cripple our armed services and I make no such charge, but here is the danger: Our new and great Secretary of State goes to Moscow in a few days, and here on the very eve of his departure we take the edge off his sword. The adoption of this resolution will not only embarrass him but it will handicap him in the contest in which he is about to enter, and it is something we should not do. He goes abroad with the country solidly behind him and we should not do that which might cause the rest of the world to think otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution, and I take the floor because I think this is an historical incident. As has been stated here before, this House has not been accustomed in the past to gag its Members. I have been a member of the Rules Committee for 14 years, and in that time it has been the policy of both the majority and the minority members of that committee to pursue the democratic policy that every Member of this House shall have the opportunity on every bill that comes up to offer his amendments and to offer his suggestions for the betterment of the legislation. There is one exception to that rule, as has been stated by the gentleman from Georgia. That exception has been the matter of tax bills where both the minority and majority recognized the impracticability of writing a tax bill on the floor of the House. Those resolutions have come to this House by the unanimous request of both the majority and minority members of the Ways and Means Committee.

No one in this House is stronger for Government economy, for balancing the budget, for beginning a reduction of the huge national debt, and for a business-like administration of the affairs of this Nation than myself. I expect to vote on the appropriation bills for every cut that I think can be made without affecting the efficiency of Government, and I believe that there are plenty of cuts that can be made, and will be made. But this is an entirely different principle we are talking about this morning.

Mr. Speaker, we are proposing to fix a figure on the national budget that is picked out of thin air. No Member of this House can tell you today, if this resolution is adopted, how much of it is coming out of the armed services. No man in this House, in my opinion, wishes to cripple at this critical hour the armed services. We have no figures. The report gives no figures. Where is your cut going to come from? My Republican friends, you are flush with the powers of victory which you have just had. I think you ought to stop and think about what you are doing to the House and the precedents that have been established over the years, established after a revolt in your own party against czarist measures of your leadership.

I hope somebody will state what is going to be the policy of the majority in this administration.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Let me ask the question; then I will yield for the gentleman to answer. Do you propose, as a matter of policy, from time to time, to bring into this House bills with a closed or gag rule in which you deny to the membership of your own party as well as our party the opportunity to offer amendments to the legislation? I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I may say in answer to that question that the policy of the Republican Party, by and large in respect to rules on general bills, will be to have the open rule. I may say further in answer to the gentleman in respect to this particular rule: The gentleman has referred to the precedents on tax bills. In my opinion, the proposal before us more nearly approximates tax bills on which we have consistently had closed rules than any other sort of proposition that has been before us.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I totally disagree with my good friend, the gentleman from Indiana, with whom I have fought many good battles on his side. There is no comparison whatsoever between these two propositions.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I just want to add one thought. Here we are dealing with a critical situation on this budget, and your own party over on the other side has decided that all you can safely cut is $4,500,000,000. You gentlemen here have decided that you can safely cut $6,000,000,000, and yet your own members who are unable to agree with you and believe that all you can safely cut is $4,500,000,000 are prohibited by this rule, if you adopt it, from voting to agree with the gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol.

I just want to say this, that if you do not believe in this czarist kind of method, if you do not believe in this thing of gagging yourselves, the one and only thing you can do is to vote down the previous question when it comes up.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, I have the highest respect for the gentleman's capacity and ability, and I likewise have the highest respect for the capacity and ability and good judgment of the senior Senator from his own State who said in the other body that the cut should be $6,000,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. But I still reserve the right and the hope that I may have the privilege to vote my own convictions.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CHENOWETH].

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Rules who voted for this rule which is now before the House, I would like to make a few observations. This rule is not as sinister as depicted, and I will try to remove the smoke screen that has been so adroitly presented today in order to divert attention from the real issues before us. This rule does not prevent any Member of this House from expressing himself fully and freely on the question involved.

The venerable and affable gentleman from Illinois talks about this drastic gag rule. I have been a Member of the House for 7 years, and I have grown rather accustomed to such rules. I know of no Member of the House today who is being deprived of any voting privilege whatever because of this rule.

Let us look for a moment at what the rule does. It provides for 4 hours of debate, 2 hours on each side, and an open rule would not give you any more time. Under this rule each Member of the House has the opportunity today to express himself on how much he thinks the expenditures of this Government can be reduced in the next fiscal year. If he believes, as I do, they can be cut $6,000,000,000, which is the amount the Joint Legislative Budget Committee has recommended to the House, then he should support this resolution. Provision is made for one motion to recommit, and undoubtedly the motion to recommit will include an amount which will probably be less than this amount. If any Member of the House feels he would rather support the smaller amount, he can vote for the motion to recommit. In this way he is given full opportunity to vote his convictions just the same as he would under an open rule. So I do not see that any Member of the House is being deprived of any privilege whatsoever. It is very much the same situation as when we vote on a conference report. We vote it up or down; no Member of the House is given the opportunity to offer amendments. He must vote either for or against the report. Now that is exactly the situation before us here today. You can vote to adopt the recommendation of the committee, or you can vote for a smaller reduction.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. This rule cannot become effective, call it gag rule or not, unless a majority of this House votes for it.

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is true, and I cannot conceive how any Member of this House can complain that he does not have the opportunity to express his full convictions on the amount of the reductions that should be made in Federal expenditures. By his vote today on this resolution he can say whether he wants to cut the expenditures six billion, or a smaller amount, or not at all. I hope no one will be deceived by all this talk about the rule which is now being discussed.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman knows on a motion to recommit the previous question will be asked for and ordered and the Members will be denied the right to speak on it, consider it, or to do anything about it.

Mr. CHENOWETH. You will be permitted to offer an amount, will you not?

Mr. SABATH. But that is the only thing we can do—offer an amendment to recommit; that is all. Then we have not got the figure on which to base the amount.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Your reply confirms just what I have been telling the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of the Committee on Rules for a good many years, and cannot recall its reporting any rule of this character during that time except on revenue measures, which rules in those instances were asked for by the unanimous action of the Committee on Ways and Means. It has been a long time since I have seen a rule of this character for a purpose like this.

I recollect the days when the triumvirate of Messrs. Longworth, Snell, and Tilson used to manage the affairs of the House somewhat in this fashion, and I am wondering if the name of that triumvirate may now be changing to Messrs. MARTIN, ALLEN, and HALLECK.

The Reorganization Act does not direct the joint committee to fix the budget limitation, it directs them to report to the House some amount; yet under this procedure no Member of this Congress, fresh as it is from the people, has the right, upon the adoption of this rule, to offer any kind of amendment to the concurrent resolution that will be thereby made in order. So the House is putting itself in the position today of having to accept what the joint committee has done, or nothing.

Of course, we are all for reasonable economy, but Congress, I am afraid, is by this procedure putting itself in the position of a court that renders a verdict and a judgment and then proceeds to try the case. I would not say that the language of this resolution is binding upon the Congress in any legal sense, but certainly it is binding in the highest moral sense. If Congress does not intend to live up in good faith to any limitation it sets today, then this whole procedure comes close to deceit and at best is nothing but a cheap political gesture that ought to be an insult to the intelligence of the American people. If Congress is in good faith going to live up to any limitation it fixed today blindly and without evidence, then this is one of the most important things this Congress will have to consider all during this session, and behind it are as many headaches. The men who vote for the previous question here today ought to be prepared in the future days of this session to vote for whatever cuts may be necessary to maintain that limitation, no matter what hardships the cold facts may divulge when we get to where we can consider them under some decent procedure by which we have some freedom of action.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY].

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, this resolution is no idle gesture. I agree with the distinguished gentleman who just preceded me that those of us who vote today to recommend a reduction to the extent of $6,000,000,000 in the Budget proposed by the President must practice what we preach, and that is what I propose to do. During the rather short time I have been in Congress I have heard a great deal about so-called gag rules. I find that a gag rule is always popular with those that have a majority of the votes and unpopular with the other side. I never heard of anybody now representing the minority shedding tears over a gag rule when the leadership was on the other side of the aisle. I have seen so-called gag rules come in from the now minority, when they were the majority, that had nothing to do with tax bills. There were many such gag rules. I have seen legislation considered under suspension of the rules just because the majority had the votes, when I thought that somebody ought to have the right to amend such legislation. This is not a gag rule. How many Members in this House are prepared today to say that this proposed reduction is unreasonable? There would probably be 5,599,000 amendments if you were to bring this character of legislation in under an open rule. It would be the greatest bill to filibuster that I can think of. The people who are against cutting down expenditures would filibuster to their hearts' content if you had a wide-open rule. The rule provided for in this resolution is the only kind of sensible rule that you could bring in. There is one thing I think ought to be made clear. The gentleman from Georgia suggested that by this rule we were probably fixing the amount of money that the Army and Navy could have. That is what I infer from what he said. It does not mean that at all. It means that we are reducing the over-all expenditures of the Government by $6,000,000,000, but it does not mean that that $6,000,000,00 is going to be taken from any particular Government activity. The amount that any agency shall receive will be justified when they are considered by the various subcommittees on appropriations and by the Appropriations Committee itself. One of the gentlemen undertook to give some little advice to the new Members who are fresh from the people. Well, I happen to be a little bit fresh from the people today myself, because I just spent a week down in Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Ohio. I want to tell you that the people of this country are demanding that this Congress reduce the Budget by at least $6,000,000,000, and if it takes a gag rule to do it, the people want it now. The people are not going to be fooled or scared by this talk that we are ending every national security by reducing expenses in Government.

Yes, gentlemen, the people have had enough of tax, tax, spend, spend, elect, and elect.

My good friends on the other side of the aisle might just as well realize now that the profligate days of the New Deal are over. The people on November 5 brought about the dawn of a new day, and it is up to us, their representatives, to see to it that we carry out that mandate.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time remaining to our former Speaker the gentleman from Texas, Hon. SAM RAYBURN.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my Democratic colleagues, old and new, who have not served under a Republican administration in the House of Representatives, that this is not all of it—this is part of it. You will get more of this generous treatment as we run along. I quite agree with my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], that this is not binding. I quite agree that it is a legislative gesture—and an idle one. I do not indulge in personalities with persons, but I brand this resolution as utter and total legislative hypocrisy.

The gentleman from the wind-swept part of Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY] is the only one I have heard say he is going to live up to it. I wonder how his vote is going to be recorded on the planting of trees and soil conservation in that dry section of the Southwest.

Where are you going to cut? Nobody has mentioned one place specifically that we are going to cut. Now you think this is popular. I do not think so. What is going to be your answer after this pious hope that you express today when, on June 30, you find that you have not reduced appropriations $6,000,000,000, you have not reduced appropriations $4,000,000,000, you have not reduced appropriations $3,000,000,000? You say you are not going to reduce the Army and the Navy.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. No. I have only a few minutes. You say you are not going to reduce the Army and the Navy. Where are you going to make it up? Are you going to cut from the civil functions of the Government $5,000,000,000, $5,500,000,000, or $6,000,000,000? The news that goes out from this Capitol today, my friends, will be sad to people this world around. Do not forget that. I have talked with men in the Department of State, the Department of War, and the Department of the Navy. They are the saddest and most disturbed men I have ever talked to in the 30 or more years I have been a Member of this House of Representatives. Today you are going to say by the adoption of this resolution that nobody can offer an amendment to this thing. Fifty men, seventy-five men and women in this House would like to speak. They cannot do it in 4 hours. They would like to tell what they think about this in a 5-minute speech, in a motion to strike out the last word or in offering an amendment.

The only way you can live up to this pious hope, this legislative gesture, is to have your committees cut appropriation bills $6,000,000,000, and then bring in a gag rule and crowd it down our throats, where we will have to vote for that amount or nothing.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the majority leader, of course.

Mr. HALLECK. I do not agree with the gentleman that this is nothing more than a pious hope, but if the gentleman's interpretation is correct, it is a pious hope that arises out of a reorganization bill passed when the gentleman's party was in power in the last Congress.

Mr. RAYBURN. They did not say anything about reducing the Budget $6,000,000,000.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course not.

Mr. RAYBURN. Or four billion or one billion or raising it to ten billion. There is nothing in the bill with reference to that.

Mr. HALLECK. But the terms of the reorganization bill definitely provided for this recommendation to be made by the 15th of February.

Mr. RAYBURN. Of course; a report.

Mr. HALLECK. That is correct.

Mr. RAYBURN. A report. What kind of report? Pick it out of the air. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], when they were speaking about reducing Government employees 500,000 or a million or a million and a half, snapped his fingers and said, "Oh, I think about a million." The gentleman from New York and his colaborers snapped their fingers and say, "A million." They say, "We want to reduce spending. We will take $6,000,000,000." Where? Nobody has answered where, and I doubt if the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] will answer that when he takes the floor.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. Does not the gentleman from Texas understand that the legislative budget was fixed after four meetings of the Budget Committee, and hearing only two witnesses, when there were 101 days from the November election until February 15?

Mr. RAYBURN. Everybody knows this figure was picked out of the air. It is unjustified, it is ill-considered; and you know you are not going to live up to it. You know that if you had told the members of your conference on yesterday that you would live up to this thing you would have had a mighty lot of trouble.

No wonder these gentlemen want to get up and defend themselves. They will be doing that during the remainder of this Congress and the next session; and this 1948 thing that looked so bright a few weeks ago is dimming out to some extent now.

I started to say that our great Secretary of State is leaving in a few days for a meeting of the first importance, of the very first importance. You cannot let him know or the world know how much you are going to cut the Army and the Navy before he goes. You cannot let him know whether you are going to give him as a weapon some money to feed the starving people on the face of this earth; and I fear that by your action today and the implications here, I deeply fear that when George Marshall flies to Moscow he will fly with a crippled wing.

Feed starving people? People fear communism. You cannot kill communism by making a speech against it or raving against it, you have got to cure the cause of communism. China, Japan, Germany, Europe today do not want communism. I fear that if we do not help these people when they are starving that we will push them into the arms of the Communists, for there is a people that expresses to them some kind of hope.

I fear that you will rue this day.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 11 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have risen from a sick bed and come here to speak and vote on this rule and on the concurrent resolution because I believe that the votes we cast here today will be the most important in this session of Congress.

We are considering this rule and resolution today because the new Legislative Reorganization Act, and a provision therein, requires that the Joint Congressional Budget Committee meet and report back to the Congress by February 15 its recommendation as to the ceiling which shall be placed upon the annual Budget and Federal spending in the coming fiscal year.

The Legislative Reorganization Act, Mr. Speaker, was enacted by a Democratic Congress. Either the Congress, and the members of the Democratic Party who voted for the Legislative Reorganization Act, and the provisions of the act which require that a ceiling be fixed on expenditures, with the very thought and purpose that such a ceiling would help bring about some sort of economy in the Government, were sincere or they are insincere. If they were sincere then, they are insincere now in opposing this rule and resolution. If they are sincere now, then they were insincere a few months ago when they voted for the Reorganization Act and the requirement that a Budget ceiling be fixed. I wonder if, during general debate, some of the gentlemen who have already spoken will tell us which time they actually were sincere, and which time they were insincere in the opposite positions they have taken on this matter.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], chairman of the Congressional Budget Committee, spoke and voted against the provision of the Legislative Reorganization Act which required this Budget ceiling to be fixed and this report to be made. He pointed out the difficulties which would be encountered, at the time the Legislative Reorganization Act was before us, and offered an amendment to strike out that section of the bill, but the Democratic majority voted almost solidly against his amendment and for keeping the Budget ceiling requirement in the act. Now they are condemning the very measure that they wrote into the law of the land.

I give the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TABER] great credit for his present position. Despite the fact he did not want the provision of the law requiring this ceiling and report, he has done his best to comply with the law and to make the report as required. Of course, the Democratic members of that joint budget committee had the full right and complete authority to bring in a minority report and to set forth therein the figure at which they believed the budget ceiling should be fixed by the Congress. However, they failed to do that. Instead they simply wrote a sort of a namby-pamby minority view, saying, "Oh, we are for economy, and a budget ceiling, but we are not going to tell you how much."

I also want to pay my sincere respects to the members of the Democratic Party who put the welfare of their country ahead of partisanship and joined with the Republican majority in fixing the $31,500,000,000 budget ceiling. The Republicans, along with the courageous Democrats on this committee have told you how much they want Congress to cut the President's budget. They want it reduced by $6,000,000,000. Mr. Speaker, any one who stands up here on this floor and tells you it cannot be done is not interested in economy.

Why, of course, the money-spenders do not want to cut the budget. Why should they? That is the way they were elected and reelected until the people finally caught up with the fraudulence of their political operations. Certainly, they will try to tell you it is still necessary, in the third peacetime year after the war, to spend four times as much to operate this Government as was spent in any prewar peacetime year under Franklin D. Roosevelt, when we were spending our way into prosperity.

Yes; we want to cut public spending by $6,000,000,000. We are being mighty good to you spenders, but you do not realize it. You should be grateful to us that we did not make the budget cut $7,500,000,000 instead of only six billion. But we will be back next year with another budget cut; for we are determined to have greater economy in our Government.

Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentlemen on my right who in past Congresses have made the greatest spending record in all history, that you have voted this country into its present condition. You also created the demand, by your wild profligacy, which caused the people to speak out on November 5 and say they were tired of the reckless waste and extravagance of the Federal Government. By their votes the people clearly demonstrated they wanted a Congress which would do something about it. All of us who ran on the Republican ticket, and many of you who ran as Democrats, promised the people we would do something to curb this reckless waste of the Federal taxpayers' money.

Well, I think I can guarantee you gentlemen on the right one thing—the Republicans in this House are going to do something about it by supporting this resolution when it comes to a vote. I rather suspect there will be a great many Democrats do likewise.

I have heard much talk here today about the Army and the Navy. You and I know that the Army and the Navy appropriations are not going to be cut to where our national defense or security are endangered. Yet, every veteran who served in the late war, and every officer down in the War Department, as far as that is concerned, knows that there is waste and extravagance in our military structure which can and should be eliminated without in any way endangering our national security. The fiscal leaders of this Congress pledge us they will eliminate waste and extravagance wherever found in the War and Navy Departments, but that there will be no reductions in appropriations for true national defense and security needs. I think we can depend upon the loyalty and patriotism of these men being just as great as that of any other Member of this House.

But I want to refer back to one or two statements which have been made here today. I love and respect every member of the Committee on Rules. They are a great group of gentlemen. They do have their weaknesses, however. Some of them are seemingly suffering from poor memories, especially when they come on the floor of this House and try to tell us that the only closed or gag rules which have been put out by the Democratic-controlled Rules Committees in this House in the past have been on tax legislation. Why, gentlemen, I am surprised. I am utterly amazed that your memories are so bad.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I can say as chairman of the Committee on Rules that I do not expect to break the record established by our good friends for the past 14 years in regard to bringing in closed or gag rules.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I would say to the gentleman that even if he does break their record, he will have to bring in a lot more rules than we expect to have in this session.

Let me refresh the memory of some of you gentlemen of the minority who have insisted that you did not put out any gag rules on anything except tax measures. Let me go back and find them for you. Here is one on the Agriculture Adjustment Act. Is that a tax measure? Here is another on the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act. Is that a tax measure? Talk about closed rules. Here is one on the Arms and Ammunition Embargo Act. Is that a tax measure, I might ask the gentleman from Illinois? And here is a closed rule on the Tennessee Valley Authority. Well, perhaps, that was a tax measure in one sense of the word, for we have certainly been taxed plenty for it. And the St. Lawrence waterway. Do you remember that closed rule? Well, I do.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I decline to yield. However, you may just keep a record of these closed or gag rules.

Here is another on the independent offices appropriation bill. And here are more closed rules. One on the sale of securities, or the first Securities Act. Is that a tax measure? This National Industrial Recovery Act? Do you remember that one? NIRA, as they called it—or the sick chicken. Do you remember that closed rule? That was another New Deal measure which cost the American people millions and billions of dollars, of course. I could go on and name a dozen or so more, but I have time to only pick out a few.

Here is a closed rule on the extension of NRA. Another on the Merchant Marine Act. And one for the Blue Ridge Parkway. You even had a gag rule on a bill for the building of a parkway. And another on the Townsend old-age pension bill. Do you remember that one? Here's another on the bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act; and still another on the extension of the Sugar Act. Then, of course, we had a closed rule on the famous Economy Act. You remember that Economy Act, do you not? I am sure you do. That is the one by which you took away the pensions of the veterans of the First World War. And by the way, that is the only economy record that you have ever made that I know of. And that was under a gag rule. Sure, you Democrats never had any gag rules? Oh, no.

I can go right on down the list, one after the other; but what's the use? But I do want to call your attention to the fact time after time these rules provided that the bill under consideration should not even be read. The fact of the matter is that many of them were passed under a gagged rule without even being printed, let alone read in the House. The Members were not given an opportunity to read or know what they were voting on—and yet you talk of unfair methods of legislation? You stand up here and attack the majority because it brings in a closed rule to do the very thing we have all promised to do: to bring about a little economy in this Government. You should be ashamed of yourselves.

I was amazed and surprised at my good friend, the former Speaker—and I have the greatest respect and admiration for him—when he said in substance, "We are not going to cut public spending. We are not going to cut the Budget any $6,000,000,000. We are not going to cut it by $4,500,000,000, we are not going to cut it by $3,000,000,000." Someone interrupted him, but I wish he had gone on, for he probably would have ended by saying, "We are not going to cut the budget at all."

The budget would have been cut a long while ago if there had been a few more Democrats voting with the Republicans in support of amendment after amendment we offered to reduce appropriation bills which have been before this Congress since I have been here the last 8 years. Throughout the wasteful, sinful days of the New Deal—when the Nation's substance was being frittered away—there were many of us who made the good fight for economy and against wild governmental extravagances. We were voted down. Our efforts were generally of no avail—but we were right. Now the people are aroused. They are with us today. That is why this rule and this resolution cutting the budget by $6,000,000,000 will be approved by a majority vote of this House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. RAYBURN. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 229, nays 174, not voting 29, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have the privilege of extending their remarks on the resolution which was just agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 20) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 20, with Mr. HARNESS of Indiana in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the concurrent resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 8 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I frankly did not expect my spending friends to be happy with this resolution. It has been presented with the idea of redeeming our pledge to the people of the United States to put the Government's house in order and to reduce expenditures. It has not been our idea that we could have a million civilians employed by the armed forces forever. It has not been our idea that every department and agency of the Government could be overloaded 2 to 1 with civilian employees.

The committee's report on page 5 makes an over-all estimate of receipts for the fiscal year 1948 of thirty-nine and one-tenth billions. It estimates over-all expenditures as thirty-one and five-tenths billions, leaving an excess of receipts of seven and six-tenths billions. The committee suggests that, in its opinion, the maximum amount to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1948 be twenty-seven billions, which is five and two-tenths billions below the President's estimates. It suggests that the maximum amount for expenditure under appropriations for 1948 be limited to twenty-four billions.

In arriving at these figures the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and I, as members of the Appropriations Subcommittee of the House on the legislative budget, together with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] have been working ever since the middle of November upon the data necessary to go into this budget, and we have not drawn these figures out of the air, but have a good idea of what we are basing them on.

I appreciate that we are going to have all sorts of questions thrown at us. We are going to be told that we are crippling the Army and the Navy. Instead of crippling the Army and the Navy by cutting out waste and extravagance and unnecessary expenditures, we will help the national defense and help sustain the hands of George Marshall when he goes to Moscow. If we permit the waste and extravagance and those habits that were practiced during the war to be continued, we will be destroying our national defense. Now is the time that we must meet our obligations.

In making up these appropriation bills the Committee on Appropriations is not going to bring in omnibus bills. They will be brought in after the most careful and thorough hearings and investigations. They will be brought in only when items are justified. When it is possible to rescind any appropriation that has already been made, when it is possible to cut down the expenditures for the current fiscal year or for the next fiscal year, that course will be followed.

No one that I know of has the slightest idea that we are going to reduce our armed forces or the operations of our armed forces below what is necessary. On the other hand, we must know what is necessary—and that we are going to know. Anyone who claims that these things cannot be cut just does not understand the situation nor does he understand his responsibilities as a Member of this Congress. In these appropriation bills we will go in detail into the question as to what the money can be spent for and by means of that operation we are going to be able to cut out very much of the waste that is going on. To give you a little illustration of the waste, under the administration of the Department of Commerce by former Secretary Wallace, he moved down here from New York an activity that was operating tabulating machines in connection with customs statistics. There were 50 people operating those machines in New York, and when he got them down here and installed them in that sacred cow, the Census Bureau, he had 700 people operating those same machines, and yet they tell us that appropriations cannot be cut and that savings cannot be made. Let me tell you that savings can be made, and our responsibility to the people of the United States can be met, so that there can be reasonable reduction of the national debt and so that there can be a tax reduction generally so that the economy of America can continue to function as a free economy. Wild expenditures of the peoples' money results only in inflation and in the destruction of our form of government. It is going to be my object to keep within the $31,500,000,000 ceiling, the $27,000,000,000 ceiling, and the $24,000,000,000 ceiling.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. COLE of New York. I should like to inquire if the gentleman agrees that a vote in support of this resolution cannot be construed as a commitment to curtail the expenditures of the military establishments.

Mr. TABER. Where those expenditures are necessary for national defense.

Mr. COLE of New York. In other words, the gentleman and his committee can assure the Congress and the country that the Military Establishment, both the Army and Navy, will be given every dollar that they can justify as being necessary in the interest of national defense?

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I propose to cooperate in cutting this budget. I propose to cooperate in reducing these appropriations.

And I am in favor of cutting deeper than a majority of the Members of the last Congress who are supporting this resolution are willing to cut. That is not a casual statement. If any proof is desired it is only necessary to refer to votes on amendment increasing appropriations in bills which I reported to the House in the last Congress. I have demonstrated that I am for reduced expenditures. And those who voted for these increased expenditures have demonstrated they are not.

> Let not him that putteth his armor on boast as he that taketh it off.

Even more convincing is our record of drastic reduction in expenditures since the close of the war. In the last fiscal year, 1945–46. Federal expenditures totaled $76,200,000,000. For the current year, 1946–47, expenditures have dropped to $42,500,000,000, and as more favorable conditions develop we hope to further curtail that amount. For the next fiscal year, 1947–48, the total amount proposed for expenditure is $37,500,000,000 even before the usual paring begins.

To the surprise of the new majority party when they came in they found a balanced budget. It was in the black for the first time since it went into the red when they last held the reins of government, and was in the black in the tidy sum of $1,800,000,000, assuming continuance of war excise-tax rates and the self-maintenance of the postal service. A Roman emperor said he found Rome brick and left it marble. The Republican Party relinquished the Government in the red and on their return to power find it in the black.

My friends on that side of the aisle held a caucus yesterday afternoon to hold in line their younger and less sophisticated members. They "briefed" them. They "cased" them. They gave them a "pep" talk just before the game, lest they chafe at the rigors of caucus control. In that meeting our great leader, the Speaker of the House—and he is truly a great leader—he is my Speaker as well as your Speaker—I count it a privilege to serve under him on this floor—the Speaker referred to some of us on this side by name and number. The neophytes were warned that we would want to know what they proposed to cut. Of course we want to know what is to be cut—and how much. How can we vote intelligently unless we do know? To vote on the proposition before us here today without knowing where the budget is to be cut or how much it is to be cut is to vote blindfolded. It is voting sight unseen. It is bidding on a pig in a poke. As an eminent Republican Senator from Massachusetts said last week, "Its like a man in a dark room swinging a meat ax. He might cut off his own head."

You may have read in the Merry-Go-Round this week that during the sessions of the joint committee—I did not hear it at the time but have no doubt it happened—in response to an observation from me, a distinguished Member on that side of the aisle explained that the reason they had not brought in a detailed budget was lack of time; that it involved a large number of items and the preparation of a detailed budget would have taken until Christmas. Such a statement is ridiculous. According to the Committee on Appropriation's published schedule the committee with only 43 members must examine every item and report to the House not later than May 16. The joint committee with 102 members could subdivide into subcommittees and report in 2 or 3 weeks.

The truth about the matter is that there has been ample time to present the most detailed report that could be desired. The election was held November 5. And that week majority Members swarmed into Washington from all over the country—arranging to take over the committees, select their rooms, readjust the employees' rolls, and so forth. But none of them gave the slightest attention to the budget—or if they did, have not reported it to the joint committee. Congress convened January 3 and this is February 20. They have had 107 days since the election and 48 days since Congress convened to work on the budget.

There was even more time than that. Speaker MARTIN, in his address to the House on January 3 last said:

> It is not the intention of the Republicans in the Congress blindly and wildly to slash here and there. The best evidence of that is the study committees we have had at work for 2 years and more, preparing for the time when we should be charged, as we are now charged by the Nation, with the responsibility of putting this country back on the American rails of progress.

But they have held only two sessions of the committee—only one working session. And there have been only three meetings of the subcommittee. Only two witnesses have been called and no actual hearings have been held. There has been some cryptic talk here that the over-all figure was not just drawn out of the stratosphere, that it was based on computations made by some secret committee. But nothing of that kind has been reported in any open meeting. They have chosen deliberately to keep the Congress and the country in the dark. I want to ask now, if they had no information why did not they get it? And if they had it why did they conceal it? It constitutes the most extraordinary instance of calculated legerdemain in legislative records.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. For the first time I found out today from the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that they have been meeting since the middle of November. This is not only refusing to give to the Congress, the elected representatives of the people, information on a matter of the utmost importance, but it is a refusal to give the people of America information they are entitled to have.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is correct. They had no intention of giving any information to the American people—or the American Congress.

They very cleverly avoided it. They wanted to dangle before the higher-bracket taxpayers—those who are better able to pay reasonable taxes than anybody else—they wanted to dangle before the dazzled eyes of the "20 percent across the board" taxpayers this will-o'-the-wisp to lead them across the political marshes to the fabulous pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. Did not the majority, however, indicate some specific cut when it was intimated in the press and otherwise that they wanted to cut national-defense bills which would include some river, harbor, and flood-control items to the extent of two and one-fourth billions?

Mr. CANNON. While there have been surreptitious references to such items nothing official has ever been officially reported to the joint committee or to the House. But it stands to reason that the items to which the gentleman refers are marked for slaughter. You cannot cut large sums out of the post-office appropriations. The mails are heavier than ever before and must be delivered. You cannot save billions in the Treasury Department. Tax revenues are breaking all records and must be collected and processed. You cannot cut the veterans. They have little enough as it is. You are required by law to pay the interest on the public debt, tax refunds, and old-age and survivors' allotments. Where else can these billions in cuts be made except in such items as the gentleman mentions?

On our side we have been consistently cutting such items for years. We have never failed to make every justified reduction in such budget estimates in the last half dozen Congresses.

On their side of the aisle they stand out to be seen of men, and with flashing phylacteries of self-adulation on their breasts they look across the aisle at us and cry out that we are against economy, we are against retrenchment of Government expenditures, we are against reducing the budget, we are against justice and righteousness and windfalls to high-bracket taxpayers. Mr. Chairman, our record shows the greatest reduction in Federal expenditures in the history of this or any other parliamentary body, and larger rescissions than all the combined savings reclaimed by the Government since the Revolutionary War.

In addressing the House on August 12, last, I stressed the need for tax reduction in the interest of business expansion and a continuing high rate of employment, and said that tax reduction was contingent upon lessened Federal expenditures. I said:

> We cannot reduce taxes unless we reduce expenditures, and there will be no reduction in taxes and there will be no permanent prosperity until we have reduced national expenditures and national obligations to a point where we can balance the budget, provide tax reduction, prevent inflation, and reach a standard of living which this Nation has every right to expect.

We were then considering the third deficiency bill, 1946, and I went on and said:

> Not only in this bill, Mr. Chairman, but in every bill which the Committee on Appropriations has reported to the House this session we have had this in mind. We have endeavored to follow a program of retrenchment and economy. We have cut the Budget estimates. We have endeavored to get the country back off its spending spree, away from the huge appropriations which have been necessary during the war, and to initiate a postwar readjustment in costs of operation of Government which will make it possible for us early in the next Congress to reduce taxes. That is the only way it can be done. This bill is a fair sample.

That is a fair statement of the course and objective of our party. We launched an economy drive immediately following the capitulation of Japan. Nineteen hundred and forty-six was partly a war year. The expenditures in that year were sixty-three-plus billion dollars. The current fiscal year total has been estimated to be $42,500,000,000. For 1948 the budget prophesies $37,500,000,000. Obligational availability has been rescinded to the extent of $64,000,000,000, and the public debt during the first 6 months of the present fiscal year has been reduced by $10,300,000,000. The peak debt of $279,200,000,000 had been reduced up to the end of last December by $20,000,000,000.

I submit that is a praiseworthy record of economy that has never been equaled before and which, in my opinion, will never be equaled again.

I favor cutting every item in the budget that can be cut and on which cuts may be justified. Our rule has been, in the Appropriations Committee, in case of doubt cut too much rather than not enough. There is just one exception. When the safety of this country is involved any doubt should be resolved in favor of the security of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, within the lifetime of this generation we have fought two world wars. We did not want to fight, we did not expect to fight, we were not prepared to fight. They were forced upon us. In both of those wars by the providence of God we had two allies who could hold the enemy until we could start production and get ready to fight. Now we face the rather sobering situation of no longer having any allies able to stand between us and the enemy. There will be no time to prepare.

Experts tell us that such a war could be decided in a few hours.

The one over-all dominating issue in America today is, Can we avoid a third war? Nothing else counts. All the tax-saving in the world means nothing if we risk the fate suffered by the nations in Europe in the last war. That is the one thing on which we cannot afford to gamble, on which we cannot afford to take a chance. The supreme head of a nation with the largest standing army in the world, an army ready to the last buckle, ready to move at 6 o'clock tonight—or 4 o'clock tomorrow morning, a nation which dominates continental Europe more completely than it has been dominated since the days of Napoleon, said in an open speech which was published throughout the world that it was inconceivable that his concept of government and our concept of government could exist side by side in the same world, that ultimately one or the other must conquer.

Let me ask those in charge of this bill, Do you seriously propose to reduce our Army and our Navy and the air forces on which we must depend to defend this Nation, below what our naval and military authorities say is the point of safety?

Oh, they tell us there is not going to be any war. That is what they told us in 1916. That is what they told us in 1940. When we look abroad and see great cities which a few years ago carried the wealth of a thousand years of civilization, today such demolished heaps of rubble that you cannot find where the streets were—if, after such a vivid lesson, such a direct warning as that—if those in charge of this bill are not impressed—if they still insist on disarming while other nations are arming—then no warning is of any avail. Even if Lazarus rose from the dead they would not believe.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Presently, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt careful inquiry will disclose that there are what might be termed supernumeraries, picked up during the war, still an item of expense. I think organizational arrangements or procedures adopted by the War and Navy Departments during the war, should be closely scrutinized with the view to shelving until there should be a need for their revival. That is a field for large economies in personnel, civilian and military, and consequent incidental expenses. I think maintenance and operation money for posts and stations should be so restricted as to force skeletonization or a complete shut-down of many, which have no justification except a potential need at some future time. I think procurement money should be granted only upon a definite showing that war surplus is not available or cannot be used, even by improvisation. I believe that very careful inquiry should be made into the duplication of activities by the armed services, including the field of research. I further believe that the air estimates of the armed services should be closely examined as regards procurement, because we had testimony during the last session of Congress that we are now in an interim period as regards aircraft and that air warfare of the future will be conducted with pilotless instrumentalities.

The field is rife with immediate economy possibilities, both as regards procurement and flight training and as regards present personnel engaged in flying and drawing flight pay. Another subject for examination pertaining to the air is the continued employment of service planes for the transportation of passengers. I maintain that a distinct economy would ensue from requiring all air travel to be performed on commercial planes. Now that the war is over the imperative need for air travel by service personnel has for the most part ceased.

I cite these as some possible sources of economy as to the armed services. They would need to be examined, of course.

We cannot do much as regards funds for or on account of veterans except to see that they are administered efficiently and economically. I have much faith in General Bradley, and feel that if, after study, he is convinced that his budget is on the heavy side, he will disclose that information to us.

The concurrent resolution under consideration either should be voted down or recommitted and so rephrased as would enable all of us who are endeavoring to achieve a sound national economy program to vote for it. I trust we will have that opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that if we do not materially and substantially reduce the President's budget as transmitted to us we must acknowledge the charge so often heard during the last 10 or 12 years that Federal expenditures are out of control.

Personally, I am convinced we can cut the six billion recommended by our Budget Committee without in any way jeopardizing our national defense or interfering in any way with any essential function of government.

Our friends on the other side of the aisle are running true to form. By their spending programs of the last 14 years and their action here today they are demonstrating beyond any possible doubt that they are not interested in economizing in Federal expenditures. Bitten by the old bug of "squandermania" they cannot seem to recover from the disease. They speak of being for economy, yet they stand here and cry out against the pending resolution that really looks to economy. When they say economy, therefore, what figure do they fix as a figure for spending in the next fiscal year?

Unless this Congress can bring the Budget into a real working balance at a figure which the people can support in taxes, then we face down that long road once more which history tells us never has ended anywhere short of disastrous inflation.

Of course, we are concerned about our national defense, and properly so. But let me remind my good friends on the other side of the aisle that no military disaster within the range of possibility today could equal in sweep and violence the destruction of American power and authority which would be accomplished by the all-consuming conflagration of inflation.

That is the first threat to our national security today, for no military system can be sustained in effective strength by a nation suffering the calamitous economic erosion of Government-made inflation.

Of course, we are for national defense, but how does one achieve a strong national defense? It is by giving to the Army and the Navy the funds they need and must have to provide for an efficient Military and Naval Establishment; but back of that, and as our great bulwark of defense, we must have a strong, sound, efficient, productive economy. Who is there who would deny that after the disaster at Pearl Harbor it was the great, strong, productive capacity of America, coupled with the brave, stout men who fought, that brought us to ultimate victory?

When we speak of a strong national defense or our national security, too many of us think simply in military terms, of men, tanks, guns, and ships. and I repeat, we shall make certain that we have the finest military and naval machine in the world, prepared to meet any emergency. We shall see that they have sufficient funds to do that job.

But there is more to our national safety and security. We must be strong financially. We must be able to support our military machine. The most elaborate industrial plant, with the most modern equipment and highly trained personnel, has little value if the company is bankrupt. So it is with a country whose productive power is burdened with debts and weakened by taxes.

Let there be no mistake about the fact that Federal spending is today out of control, and that is the great compelling reason behind the provision in the Legislative Reorganization Act which requires Congress early in the session to set a definite budget figure. That is the only way we shall ever restore to Congress its fundamental constitutional authority over Federal finances.

Just a year ago President Truman submitted his budget for the current fiscal year, which ends on June 30, 1947. As of early January 1946, the Budget for the fiscal year 1947 stood at $36,000,000,000. In April of 1946 the President assured the country anew that "it is our aim to balance the budget in 1947." Then, in August, the Budget was increased from $36,000,000,000 to $41,500,000,000. And in December the total was increased once more to $42,500,000,000.

There you have an increase of $6,500,000,000 in the current budget between January and December of 1946. Instead of a balanced Budget for 1947, as promised last April, we face a deficit of more than $2,500,000,000.

What are we to say of fiscal management which, in peacetime, still cannot come within $6,500,000,000 of estimating actual spending?

Until we firmly set our sights on a limit on Executive spending there will always be a tendency toward stretching the budget in many directions. Every appeal for additional funds always has much to recommend it, and it is always difficult to reject specific items of wide social appeal.

But we cannot have anything approaching an integrated fiscal program until we bring all competing claims for new spending under one ceiling and then cut our garment to the cloth.

Let us not forget for a minute that resistance to any real economy in the Federal establishment is always vigorous. That is inherent in the very bureaucratic system of administration. Whatever new field the Government moves into, there is always a great deal more work to be done than can be accomplished with the amount of money Congress has allocated.

This is not to say that these demands for additional funds are wholly without merit. Nobody knows how much Government could spend effectively and soundly, if money were available in unlimited amounts.

But along with providing the necessary governmental functions and services, the Congress also is under the grave responsibility of keeping taxes in some sound relation to total national income.

The real criterion on sound budget policy is not how much we could spend wisely, but how much we can afford.

That is why I go along with the joint committee's recommendation for a $6,000,000,000 cut.

A peacetime budget of thirty-one and a half billions still would be more than three times the peacetime high of the immediate prewar years, and more than six times the average peacetime budget before the New Deal era.

With our recognized larger needs in national defense, veterans' assistance, and national debt service, we cannot hope to use the prewar figures as a sound budget objective for many years.

But we can make a beginning at bringing Federal spending within the limits of tolerable taxation.

That is the great issue before us in this immediate decision. Lay down the rule that Government may spend no more than the people are willing to pay for in taxes, and you will make at least a beginning toward order and reason in Federal finances.

History is our guide that the situation we face today has existed many times in other nations. The great inflation disasters of the past in other lands did not start out as deliberate plans for national ruin.

We all recall that every step along the inflation path since 1933 has been taken with the promise that it was the last.

But each tentative step has led inexorably to the next, and the next, and the next—until the grass-fire of free and easy spending was out of all control.

Sound fiscal policies are our only defense against this drift, and sound fiscal policies are to be realized only when men of responsibility look honestly at the facts and make those difficult decisions which must be made.

The first of these decisions must be to limit Government spending to a tax level which the people will sustain without improper coercion and compulsion by government itself.

Only a very brief study of the 1948 budget is necessary to show that, apart from certain nonrecurring items eliminated by the termination of the food subsidy programs, smaller terminal-leave pay for the military forces, and similar items associated directly with war functions, there has been no real decrease in Federal spending under 1947.

Yet these figures were sent to us by the White House on January 10, this year, with the President's advice that "it is a tight budget."

At another point, President Truman said:

> I believe that no department or agency feels that its needs are fully met.

That is very probably true. I have never known the time when any department or agency of the Federal establishment ever felt that its needs were fully met.

If that is the criterion used by President Truman in his budget-making, then we need no other proof that Federal spending is out of control, save for brakes we apply on appropriations.

The Congress seeks to cut back reckless Federal spending, not to deny the American people the things they want, but to make it possible for the American economy to function at a sustained high level of production.

We all recognize that we cannot maintain taxes at the burdensome wartime rates.

We all recognize that we must accumulate some surplus to start paying off this terrific national debt.

These are steps essential to our broad program of economic stabilization. If we are to maintain jobs, production, and consumer income, we must hasten to achieve a long-time normal level of taxes and Government spending.

The stakes at issue are not the welfare of any one bureau or department—but the welfare of the entire American people, as measured by the difference between a sound and flourishing national economy and a state of inflationary hysteria which leaves everybody poorer in a false atmosphere of booming prosperity.

The task is difficult and challenging. It is not easy for a nation to turn its face from 14 years of reckless easy-money budgets. It can be accomplished only by painstaking attention to detail in every item of the budget. It calls for the best that is in us. It calls for honesty, courage, and candor in facing the fundamental facts of our national economic situation. It calls for sound appraisal of the relative merits and urgency of competing demands upon limited funds. It calls for fair-minded deliberation, not in a frenzy of fear, not in a panic of defeat because this department or that says it cannot get along with a dollar less than the budget estimate.

Our approach must be one of patriotic devotion, free of petty partisanship.

For if we once concede that the appeal of any particular pressure group is superior to the greater appeal of the general welfare, then we shall lay ourselves open to every inflationary force which has jogged us down Easy Money Lane since 1933.

To follow that course is to surrender every hope for a sound American economy and sustained production.

Worse, to follow that course is to admit defeat before the threat of ultimate inflation, and thus to destroy the one great resource which now tilts the scales for lasting world peace.

Destroy America's productive capacity with the fires of continued Government extravagance, and there will be no power on the face of the earth to preserve the peace.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I have always believed that if you would give the American people the truth, and give them the facts, they would do substantially the right thing. The Congress is nothing more than a cross section of the American people, and I firmly believe that if you will give the Congress the facts, the Congress will likewise do substantially the right thing. But I do not believe for a moment that if you would give the Congress the truth and the full facts in the present situation, that this Congress would vote for a cut as drastic as $6,000,000,000.

I am for economy, and I am fully convinced that many substantial reductions can safely be made. I shall vote for them when the facts are presented. We are all for economy, but being sensible men and women we like to proceed on the basis of the facts, and the facts are denied us today.

The able gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] called attention to the fact that the present distinguished Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], had said some time ago that for 2 years his party had been compiling facts upon which to predicate reductions in Government spending. That is well and good, yet those facts are not before us today. Indeed, 101 days transpired between the November election and February 15, the dead line when this report was to be submitted to the Congress and to the American people. One hundred and one days, and what did the party in power do? And mind you the question is desperately important. The destiny of our country, our prestige at home and abroad, $30,000,000,000 and more, were at stake in this period. What did the majority party do about it? They created a Budget Committee. They had four meetings, two of which lasted less than 3 hours. They heard two witnesses, and I think the testimony of those two witnesses is not available to the Members of the House. I know whereof I speak because I was appointed as a member of the Joint Budget Committee and served in that capacity.

I ask you what seasoned, thoughtful legislator, at a time like this, would be willing, upon such limited and unavailable testimony, to vote in favor of a cut in spending of $6,000,000,000, much of it involving national security? It does not make sense. It cannot make sense, and it will not ultimately be accepted by the Congress.

The reason this Congress is not told what major cuts are contemplated is that the majority party leaders fear that it will not be possible to pass the pending resolution if the Members of Congress have the facts.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. Not at the moment, please.

I think some cuts can be made in national defense here and there, but I do not for a minute believe that we can cut national defense as drastically as one and three-quarter billion dollars. I agree with General Marshall that a cut to that extent would imperil the security of our country. He is at least one witness whose testimony we have, even though we had no opportunity to hear his testimony, and must rely on newspaper reports for his statement.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] than whom there is no finer Member of the House, said that the agricultural appropriation bill might be reduced by $250,000,000; I wonder whether the gentleman is going to tell the House today that we can cut agricultural appropriations by one-third or more. I wonder whether the gentleman from Illinois is going to tell this House, as he told subcommittee members, where he proposes to make the substantial cuts. I do not mean that he should give every little item of reduction, but I think that the gentleman from Illinois as chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Agriculture should say now whether or not he still stands behind the statement made to one of the subcommittees that he proposes to cut Soil Conservation $5,000,000 and that he proposes to cut the AAA by $100,000,000 on funds that some of us maintain have already been obligated. The House Members who are interested in agriculture are certainly entitled to know. Will he tell the House that he still believes the school-lunch program of $75,000,000 can be completely cut out? The program has been worth while. If you cut it out in whole or in part, do not do it blindly. And I think the gentleman should tell the Members of the House if he still thinks that the Farmers Home Administration, which makes loans to farmers and veterans for farm purposes can be cut from $170,000,000 to $120,000,000. Let us have these facts out on the table. Under-the-table tactics are not in the public interest.

And I wonder if the gentleman will say on the floor as he said in the committee, as an individual not binding himself for the future—it was a tentative figure, I agree—that the REA lending can be cut $125,000,000 in fiscal 1948. I am a friend of the REA. I will not subscribe to that; but if the Congress wants to do it let it do it with its eyes open and with the benefit of the facts and figures which Members of the majority indicate they have but are unwilling to divulge to Congress.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. Not at the moment, please.

And I would like for my able friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] the chairman of the Independent Offices Subcommittee, to tell this House what he proposes to do about some of the major items in that bill, not the little ones, but some of the major ones.

Our roads have been deteriorating from the war. We have a national investment of $30,000,000,000 in our public roads. Because of wartime conditions, there has been much deterioration in the road system, and the President in his Budget is asking us to appropriate $279,000,000 for public roads, farm-to-market roads. Are you willing to sit blindly by today and vote for that cut without knowing what you are doing? Are you willing to subject yourself to the charge that you are just rubber stamps to a figure that has been picked out of the stratosphere and at a time when there is being withheld from the country the facts of the situation?

And I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to tell us, or tell me now, if he will, what he proposes to do, if he proposes to cut the farm-to-market Federal public-roads program?

I take it by his silence that the gentleman feels that such a reduction can be made. Maybe the Congress wants to make it, but I do not. Let us have the facts before us when we do make the cuts and when we cast our votes.

And I could further say, Mr. Chairman, that in answer to the question raised by my distinguished friend the majority leader, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], as to what figure we would suggest, that specific facts have not been provided and therefore we cannot now set a figure. Instead of meeting day after day and night after night to consider this $37,500,000,000 Budget involving the welfare and the fate of our Nation, the committee only held four meetings. Therefore, exact figures cannot possibly be arrived at now as we do not have the figures. Majority Members may have this information somewhere, but let them pull that information and those figures out into the open and if the Members want to vote for the $6,000,000,000 reduction let them do so intelligently. Those who vote for the six billion cut cannot be heard to come into the House with sad faces later in the session and say, "Well, I did not mean to be voting against public roads, REA, soil conservation, agricultural research, and similar Government programs."

Remember that it is in connection with agriculture that the largest proportional cut in the whole budget is proposed. It cannot then be said, "I did not mean to cripple the armed forces and jeopardize our national defense. No; I did not mean to do that."

If you do not mean to do that, I put you on guard now that this RECORD will show you were told on the floor of the House that the $6,000,000,000 cut contemplates substantially many of the cuts which I have described. As for myself, I want to cut out unnecessary spending, and I do not doubt but that substantial savings can be made, but I cannot accept or approve the course being followed today.

Give the Congress the facts and the Congress will arrive at substantially the right answer Deny the Congress the facts as is being done today, and you are giving a false hope and an illusion to the people. The people are willing to reduce Government spending and deny themselves some of the things they are accustomed to receive under the Government programs, but they want to be told what they are being asked to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, we would be in a far better psychological position if we would tell the Members today what cuts generally are contemplated and have them assent to those cuts. Then later on they will feel more or less morally bound to stand by them, and as far as they reasonably can do so, they will. Under the present situation a Member of the House can reasonably feel that he is not obligated to vote for reduction on any particular item. It is just an over-all thing and he can say that he is not obligated to go down the line on a real economy program which will streamline the Government, save dollars and get more for our money, which every Member devoutedly hopes to do.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Does not the gentleman think, having regard to our desire to accomplish a sound fiscal policy, that it is worth while that we determine what our revenues will be, take a look at what we ought to pay on the national debt, take a look at what we need in the way of tax reduction, then arrive at an overall figure as to what we can spend and say to these various competing demands, "You have got to come in under that ceiling"; then equalize the demands that are made under that ceiling?

Mr. MAHON. The trouble with that is that no department of Government is told, except the War and Navy Departments, substantially what ceilings they will have to come under, so they are in a position of asking for this money because the Congress is not on record on that point. Furthermore, I do not think any consideration should be given to tax cuts until we have really balanced the budget with a considerable overplus and apply that on the national debt.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the paramount problem confronting America today, is the problem of putting our financial house in order. Unless order is restored, national solvency is impossible, widespread suffering is inevitable; our very form of government may well be placed in jeopardy.

The national welfare demands, after proper provision for the national defense, that the Budget shall be balanced, that the national debt shall be reduced, and that the tax burden shall be alleviated, with a view of assuring essential production and avoiding Nation-wide suffering.

All of this, in the last analysis, is dependent on a reduction of Federal expenditures, on the elimination of waste and extravagance and all nonessential activities.

Why are we here today? We are here because of the operation of a new law approved on August 2, 1946, the so-called reorganization law. We are here because of a very difficult problem which that law placed in the hands of the joint committee which has had charge of the resolution now under consideration.

That law made it mandatory for the joint committee to propose to the Congress on or before February 15 an overall legislative budget ceiling. The proposed ceiling is before us today; a ceiling of $31,500,000,000 in expenditure, or $6,000,000,000 less than proposed in the President's budget.

Roughly speaking, the reduction is $5,000,000,000 in terms of new appropriations, and $1,000,000,000 in terms of rescission of appropriations already made. The proposed ceiling is before us today for acceptance, amendment or rejection.

I take exception, Mr. Chairman, to the statement that the ceiling figure proposed is taken out of thin air. It is the best possible figure that a majority of the joint committee could arrive at under the conditions by which they have been confronted.

Some members of that committee and of its subcommittees have worked long and laboriously on this problem. They considered the estimates submitted by the President in his budget. They considered comparable rates of expenditure for the same items in the present fiscal year. They considered reductions in terms of the yardstick which you will find laid down in the committee report, namely, the elimination of unnecessary functions, the holding of appropriations to 1947 or earlier levels, wherever possible, the elimination of unnecessary civilian personnel, the deferment, except as to planning, of unnecessary public works, and rescissions in excess of those recommended by the President in respect to appropriations which have already been made.

They have considered the views of the members of the various Subcommittees on Appropriations of the House. They have considered the views of experts in this general field both inside and outside the Government.

The figure is the best estimate that could be made under the circumstances. It is an estimate of course, and an estimate only. The law so specifies. The resolution before you so specifies. The committee report so specifies.

I quote from page 8 of the committee report as follows:

> Of course, if the accompanying resolution be adopted there is no commitment as to any reductions in specific items contained in the Budget. The resolution expresses an over-all objective and its realization depends entirely upon the final action of the Congress upon Budget estimates, individually and collectively.

I support the recommendation of the joint committee, Mr. Chairman. I support it as a target at which I believe we should shoot. I support it as an objective which, in the absence of detailed hearings, it seems possible that we may attain.

No one can have a firm estimate at this time in the absence of hearings. We are dealing with enormous items, with unusual items. We may fall wide of the mark—we may conceivably do better.

For my part, I am content to aim high and to leave the final results to the good judgment of the Subcommittees on Appropriations of the House and Senate.

Yesterday's newspapers, Mr. Chairman, announced the fact that four former Under Secretaries of the Treasury have endorsed the $6,000,000,000 cut in a joint statement.

The former officials are Hon. Arthur A. Ballantine, Hon. T. J. Coolidge, Hon. John W. Hanes, and Hon. Roswell Magill, three of them appointed by President Roosevelt.

They are quoted in part as follows:

> We believe that $31,500,000,000 is more than enough to run the Federal Government in fiscal 1948, the third year after hostilities. We do not wish to see our Military Establishment weakened, but competent authorities * * * have assured us that the proposed reduction will leave large Army and Navy funds entirely adequate for the Nation's security needs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word in reference to the Army and the Navy, because we have all heard the apprehension which has been emanating either from those departments or in their behalf.

I have already pointed out that the ceiling is not legally binding. The apprehension, therefore, is in my judgment without justification.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is a Member on the floor of this House who in the last analysis is going to vote for any action which in his opinion will impair the essential efficiency of our fighting forces at this time.

Personally, I have always been for national defense. I have always been for a big Navy.

If I live to be 100, I shall never forget the nightmare of those long months between July 1, 1940, and Pearl Harbor, sitting here as we did, knowing that this Nation was taking step after step toward war; knowing at the same time, as a result of figures given us confidentially, which could not be given to the public, that we were lamentably unprepared for war—in a condition, if you please, as a result of New Deal policies which General Marshall subsequently described as "immeasurably worse, except for planning" than the condition by which we were confronted in 1917.

Never again must the country find itself in a similar condition.

That does not mean, Mr. Chairman, that you or I or any of us should be compelled to accept any budget estimate that comes from one of these two departments at face value.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. These estimates are not sacred—they should receive the same scrutiny that the estimates of every other department of this Government receive.

I do not know how much the estimates of the War and Navy Departments can be cut. I do know, however, that in the absence of hearings, it appears that substantial cuts can be made in both requests without in any way jeopardizing fighting efficiency. Simple arithmetic would appear to justify reductions in certain instances.

Our military and naval leaders have been brilliant in the conduct of war but we can all recall errors running into hundreds of millions of dollars in the field of estimates. If the Congress should fail to scrutinize all estimates, it would fail to exercise its duty to the Nation.

Mr. Chairman, we are confronted today by the most enormous debt in all our history—$260,000,000,000 as usually computed, $663,000,000,000 according to Bureau of the Budget a year ago if we include contingent obligations.

We are confronted by some 1,039 agencies, or parts of agencies, as compared with 190 in 1935.

We are confronted with a tremendous amount of overlapping and duplication of functions, which has been so strongly pictured by the Comptroller General of the United States.

We are confronted by 2,300,000 civilian personnel on the Federal pay roll as compared with 900,000 in 1939 and 720,000 in 1935.

We are confronted by gross waste and, worse, the Comptroller General having pointed out in one instance—the Maritime Commission and War Shipping Administration—failure to properly account for $8,100,000,000.

We are confronted by a Budget for the fiscal year 1947 with raises all along the line, generally speaking, in requests for appropriations for the regular departments and agencies of the Government.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, we are confronted by the Budget for the fiscal year 1948, calling for increases for department after department, for agency after agency; showing little or no effort at any real retrenchment; calling for an expenditure of $37,500,000,000 in the third year after the war; calling for an expenditure four times the largest prewar Budget in our history; calling for an expenditure, if you please, equivalent to $55 a month on the back of every workingman and every workingwoman in this country.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, the paramount problem confronting America today is the problem of putting our financial house in order. As far as I am concerned, if I am going to err today in respect to an over-all legislative budget ceiling I am going to err on the side of economy. I have complete confidence in the wisdom of the Subcommittees on Appropriations of the House and Senate and in the wisdom of the Congress as a whole to make any corrections, either upward or downward, which prove to be essential.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ROONEY. May I ask the gentleman whether or not he knows how the figure of $6,000,000,000 was arrived at?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The figure of $6,000,000,000 was arrived at by the most careful scrutiny possible under the circumstances of the data to which I have already referred.

Mr. ROONEY. How much do you cut the Army and Navy in that?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. That remains to be seen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in view of the printed record, which cannot be changed, I think it is extremely unfortunate that some of my good friends on my left have made such wild and irresponsible statements this afternoon. I refer now to the direct charges, and certainly the insinuations of spending—of wasteful spending—and charging that to the Democrats. Why, of course, we have a tremendously large national debt. But how was that debt created? It was not acquired by reaching up into thin air, as my Republican friends have done today, and grabbing out some figures; and who helped create that debt? Was it created by the Democrats alone? And for what purpose was it created? It was created by virtue of the fact that this country was fighting the greatest war this world has ever known, and the vast majority of those expenditures were for that purpose. I recall during those dark days when those expenditures were being made that my good Republican friends on the left—a good many of them, not all of them by any means—would rise, when this House was considering appropriation bills for the Army and Navy and for the Marine Corps—any one of which appropriations was far in excess in dollars and cents than the entire Budget for the entire Government in 1948—and they would say, "I demand the yeas and nays so that I can go on record as approving this expenditure." Can anyone deny that, and will anyone on the Republican side deny that? I say that a large part of the debt was created in that manner, and was approved by my friends on the left. Where did the remaining part of that debt come from? Have you gentlemen forgotten? The remaining part, gentlemen, came from the Hoover bread lines that the Democrats had to clean up. Those bread lines were created by my good friends under your able, penny-pinching leader, our former President, Mr. Hoover. Now, are you not really ashamed to get up and make such wild statements as some of you have made this afternoon?

Let us keep this record straight. Economy is not a partisan matter. I want to keep my record straight. In the Budget Committee composed of Members of the House and of the other body, I reached into thin air and blindly grabbed at a figure of $4,500,000,000 which I was ready to try to cut in the way of expenditure. But let us be frank about it. You know you have not been frank. You know it was a blind stab when you reached up and picked $6,000,000,000. You know it is not binding on you. I am really glad to take that first step of $4,500,000,000 in the dark but I am not going to walk all night in the darkness. I am willing to cut expenditures by $7,000,000,000 or $8,000,000,000 if they are justified by facts, and not guesswork.

My people sent me here to help see to it our commitments to our veterans are carried out; that we maintain an adequate Army, Navy, Marine Corps so we may avoid World War III; to keep the great port of Houston dredged so that world trade can continue to move through her; and to keep our promises to help, little as it is, our old folks and dependent children, and other things. If these things cannot be done with a cut of $4,500,000,000 in the Budget, then I shall not vote to cut the Budget in that sum.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS] referred to President Hoover, when President Hoover became President our debt was $17,500,000,000. When Mr. Roosevelt became President in 1933 the national debt was nineteen and one-half billion. Mr. Roosevelt campaigned on the issue of reducing expenditures by 25 percent. Twelve months after he took office the expenditures were increased by $6,000,000,000. As a matter of fact, the national debt was $19,500,000,000 when Mr. Roosevelt took over, and before Pearl Harbor the national debt was over $66,000,000,000. During the war years civil functions were increased with the same rapidity and speed that other functions were increased.

The gentleman said he believed in proof. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] said when the Democrats took over in 1933 the country was in the red, and when the Republicans took over on January 1 last the country was in the black. I do not know how in the world he figures that, when he knows the national debt as of today is over $261,000,000,000. The national debt when Mr. Roosevelt took office was nineteen and a half billion. The gentleman says they have reduced the national debt.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I am sorry. I do not have time. I cannot yield.

He said we have decreased the national debt by $20,000,000,000. The gentleman knows that is not true. That must be dismissed as moonshine, because there was a cash balance in the Treasury of $20,000,000,000 which was applied on the national debt, but that did not come from revenues. That came from the Public Treasury which the Congress appropriated. It is just a lot of hogwash and moonshine they are giving you here today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Not at this time. I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we are putting the cart before the horse. When you fix a maximum that we can appropriate, that maximum usually becomes the minimum. When you fix a maximum price for anything, it has been my observation that it usually becomes the minimum price.

This procedure is entirely unnecessary, in my opinion. The Congress should have followed the same course it has always followed in the past in reducing Government expenditures as the measure appeared.

This proceeding reminds me of a certain oriental emperor, whom the British minister gave a set of classical English books. The emperor had his carpenter go out and make him some bookshelves. When he finished them they found he had made the shelves too short; the books would not go in them. So the emperor just had them take the books out and saw the ends of them off.

That is about what you are doing here. You do not seem to recognize the relation of prices to the volume of the currency. Prices in a free economy, such as we are supposed to have, are governed by the volume of the Nation's currency, multiplied by the velocity of its circulation. Remember that during the Hoover administration we had less than $4,500,000,000 in circulation. Today we have $28,850,000,000 in circulation, or almost seven times as much, and it is being increased every month.

You had better do something to check the inflation of the currency before you attempt to put Congress in a financial strait-jacket, which cannot be made mandatory. Congress can exceed this limit whenever it pleases to do so, regardless of what we do here now. I am not disturbed about the Army or the Navy, as I am about the atomic bomb. When the first atomic bomb fell on Hiroshima, from that moment back became ancient history, so far as the weapons and methods of warfare are concerned.

What are we doing to protect the atomic bomb? What are we doing to keep our country prepared to defend herself in case of an attack?

I had a letter the other day from a farmer friend of mine who lives on route 3 from a rural post office. It was written with a pencil, and it had more sense in it on this subject than anything else I have seen or heard for the last 3 months. He said:

> DEAR JOHN: Do not let them give away the secrets of the atomic bomb.

He said:

> You know, Samson of old had a secret one time, but he gave it away, and you remember what happened to him.

What we need to do today is to keep the atomic bomb and the finest air force on earth. Then we will not need the large number of obsolete battleships and millions of men walking around carrying guns on their shoulders. We might as well understand it now, the next war is going to be an atomic war.

If the Communists had the atomic bomb today and we did not have it, America would either become communistic or every city of any size in this country would be destroyed in less than 60 days.

So let us be realistic about this all-important question upon which may depend the very life of the Nation.

Some Members are afraid you may reduce the size of our Army and Navy, the same as we did after the last war. But what I am afraid of is that our country might permit the international fanatics to give away the secrets of the atomic bomb and so weaken our Air Forces as to render us helpless in case of attack. I for one am tired of pouring money into the sinkholes of Europe.

You know that UNRRA would not pass this House today—certainly not with my support.

I am tired of seeing American money used to make enemies for the American people throughout the world, and I for one am in favor of cutting down expenses wherever they can be legitimately cut, without crippling our country.

But there are some reductions I cannot support. I cannot support any reduction in appropriations for an adequate air force.

I understand you contemplate cutting down on rural electrification. Just try it and give us a roll call and see how far you get. You do not dare cut rural electrification, for you know you would not get enough Members voting with you to form a corporal's guard. You know that; you know the farmers of this country helped win this war and that they help maintain American institutions, and you are not going to cut down on rural electrification until we get it extended to every farm home in this country.

They talk about cutting out soil conservation. In the name of all the gods at once, do you want to see American soil depleted to where we cannot sustain ourselves?

And they talk about cutting out money for our rivers and harbors and the development of our internal waterways.

Now, there is the issue, and it is going to be an issue from now on. We cannot afford to stop the wheels of progress. We need to improve the navigation of our inland waterways as well as our intercoastal waterways, control floods, and the electric energy that is now going to waste.

As I pointed out the other day, there are 230,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity going to waste in our navigable streams and their tributaries every year. At 1 cent a kilowatt-hour, it would bring more money than the entire wheat crop or the entire cotton crop of the Nation.

Look at the predicament of Great Britain today. What if she had that great wealth of hydro power? If we were to stop our internal improvement today, the development of our internal waterways, who knows but that the time might come when we would find ourselves in the same predicament in which Great Britain finds herself today.

I hope when you bring in bills here to cut down on appropriations that you will not try to paralyze our country or check this great onward march of modern progress in the development of our internal resources that is making America strong and great. Let us keep her strong and make her the leading nation of the world for all time to come.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have been perfectly astounded at the statements which have been made here today. I would think if there were any legislation brought upon this floor at this time in the hour of the country's peril that at least we could all be Americans. This is not a partisan question at all, it is a question of saving the solvency of the Government. When I say I am astounded at the statements made on this floor today, I refer to one made by a most distinguished and much beloved man on this floor, our former Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] who said this was legislative hypocrisy. I believe I can demonstrate where the hypocrisy is, if there be any here in this House today, and I believe I can demonstrate it from the printed record.

I want to call your attention to the fact that in 1944 there was created in this House a special Committee on Post-War Economic Planning.

That committee had on it, I think, some of the most able men in the House. I want to call your attention to these men. There was Hon. WILLIAM M. COLMER, of Mississippi. Does any one question his patriotism or his sincerity? Do you think he would indulge at a time like this in legislative hypocrisy? What about Hon. JERE COOPER, of Tennessee, whose integrity, patriotism, and ability cannot be questioned—a member of the committee.

There was Hon. FRANCIS E. WALKER, of Pennsylvania, certainly an outstanding and distinguished American on the Democratic side of the House. Hon. ORVILLE ZIMMERMAN, of Missouri, a grand, good, patriotic man. Hon. Jerry Voorhis, of California, who is not with us. Hon. JOHN R. MURDOCK, of Arizona; Hon. WALTER A. LYNCH, of New York; Hon. THOMAS J. O'BRIEN, of Illinois; Hon. JOHN E. FOGARTY, of Rhode Island, and Hon. EUGENE WORLEY, of Texas. On our side, there were Hon. CHARLES L. GIFFORD, of Massachusetts; Hon. E. Carroll Reece, of Tennessee; Hon. RICHARD J. WELCH, of California; Hon. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON, of New Jersey; Hon. CLIFFORD R. HOPE, of Kansas; Hon. JESSE P. WOLCOTT, of Michigan; Hon. JAY LEFEVRE, of New York, and Hon. SID SIMPSON of Illinois.

The expert to aid this great committee was one of the ablest men in this country on fiscal affairs. He is employed by the Eastman Kodak Co. and measures up in every respect to all the qualifications that would warrant his appointment as Treasurer of the United States, a most able man. I refer to Mr. Marion B. Folsom. He was the guiding light of the special Postwar Economic Planning Committee. That committee made 11 splendid reports. It combed every item of the Government. It had all the experts it required. They had a whole list of economists to help them. The committee went into every possible detail as to how it would be possible to save money.

Let us see what that committee said on page 68 of its report, because it is rather interesting and highly convincing. It is the eleventh report and the final report made on December 12, 1946, in which it laid down the rules for the 1948 budget.

It can be seen from the above 1947 budget that there are several substantial nonrecurring items. Terminal-leave pay, mustering-out pay, payments on account of UNRRA and lend-lease, refunds and international finance all represent items which will either not recur in the 1948 budget or in greatly reduced amount. It is estimated that there should be a reduction of at least $7,000,000,000 in these items alone. While the committee realizes the necessity of continuing heavy expenditures for strong national defense, it seriously questions whether it is necessary to spend over 12 times the amount which was spent in 1939. It would urge upon the officials of the War and Navy Departments that they should realize the effects which such heavy expenditures have upon the economy of the country and that the greatest effort be made to reduce these expenditures, that each item in the Budget be scrutinized to see if it is absolutely necessary; and that projects which are not immediately needed be postponed.

The committee feels that a budget of $30,000,000,000 is a realistic budget and that expenditures can be reduced to this level without interfering with national defense or other normal functions of the Government. At this level the cost to the Federal Government per family of four would be over $850 per year.

Mr. Chairman, where is the hypocrisy? Why do New Deal Members stand up and make the statement of legislative hypocrisy when you have had a committee working since 1944 studying every item of expense and bringing in a report to guide this House. When we attempt to go along with you to save the solvency of this Government, the real basis of national security, when we go along with you on this report in which you have examined every item, you charge us with legislative hypocrisy. Where is the hypocrisy? Search your own conscience.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], who, by the way, voted for most of the legislation that was put through under the leadership of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt, made the statement that when former President Hoover came into power there was a $17,000,000,000 deficit and when he left there was a $19,000,000,000 deficit.

Well, in 1928, when Mr. Hoover came into office, the debt was $17,604,000,000 and in June 1933, which is the last fiscal year that Mr. Hoover was President, the deficit was $22,539,000,000—just a slight mistake of approximately $3,000,000,000. The fact also remains that deficit spending started under former President Hoover, and that deficit spending was despite a tax bill that we put through in 1930, and despite the fact that there was not a penny spent to relieve human suffering and distress, with twelve to fifteen million good Americans unemployed, unable to get work, and with millions of persons dependent upon them, wives and children; not one penny appropriated by that Congress when the Republicans were in control, and when Mr. Hoover was President. And yet there was a deficit of about $5,000,000,000 during the last three of his fiscal years.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman refers to my vote. The gentleman has not read the RECORD or was not here when appropriation bills were voted on, because the gentleman would know that time and again, scores of times, I introduced amendments on this floor to cut nondefense expenditures.

Mr. MCCORMACK. The gentleman confines himself to appropriations. There are many other bills besides appropriation bills. The gentleman voted for WPA appropriations, did he not?

Mr. BENDER. For the cut in WPA appropriations.

Mr. McCORMACK. Did the gentleman vote for WPA appropriations?

Mr. BENDER. For appropriation cuts.

Mr. McCORMACK. But the gentleman voted for appropriations that went through.

Mr. BENDER. Not on all occasions.

Mr. McCORMACK. Now, my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] said that unless we pass this $6,000,000,000 cut, that the very existence of our country is threatened. The self-preservation of our country is dependent, from his angle, on its passing. But, every one knows that the passage of this resolution is necessary from the Republican angle and the reduction that they have in mind, to bring about a nice, juicy tax cut for the large income tax group in this country; in other words, everything that is done by the Republicans is patented on one objective—a tax cut. The evidence is clear in that respect: 20 percent across the table, 20 cents for the taxpayer who pays $1; $20,000 reduction for the taxpayer who is lucky enough to make enough income to pay $100,000. And they call that equity! They call that applying the rule of equity and justice from the tax angle when they are seeking to bring about tax reductions.

When we are increasing taxes, the rule of capacity to pay is always followed by the Democratic party, and when there is a possibility of a reduction the opposite should apply, the smaller income groups should receive the largest reductions, and the reductions should become smaller and smaller for the higher income tax groups.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], the chairman of the House Committee on Rules, one of the outstanding Republican leaders of this House, recognizes that fact. He takes a position entirely opposite to that taken by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]. The American people might just as well know that the whole purpose of this resolution is to bring about a juicy income-tax reduction for the large taxpayers of America.

My good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is frank. You admire a man who is frank. You may disagree with him but you admire him because of his frankness. The gentleman from New York says they have been sitting since the middle of November "and we have not drawn it out of the air but we have a pretty good idea what we are going to do," referring to the $6,000,000,000 reduction. Those are the very words he used on this floor when he made his opening statement. He has a very good idea, I know he has. I know him well enough to know that he has; but he is not telling anybody what he has in mind. I wonder if he has taken you Republicans into his confidence as to what he has in mind. I do not know what the cuts will be. I do not know how many others know. But I am sure there is only a small group among the Republican Members of this House who know what the gentleman from New York has in mind. He is a clever operator, an effective operator, a determined man, a man with strong convictions. You are going to get in the position after today when for the remainder of this session, between now and June 30, when your projects are cut, when Agriculture is cut, when your toes are stepped on unnecessarily, you are going to get up and try to squirm out of your vote; but the vote stands.

The gentleman from New York said Monday and he said today he is going to try to keep the appropriations within the amount agreed upon, whatever the final agreement is after the Senate acts on this matter and it goes to conference. The gentleman is honest and frank, and he will do it, and he will come pretty close to doing it, no question about that. Then when you come in later, when the individual appropriation bills come in, and you start hollering against what is being done to you and the people of your district and the people of your section, when this project that should go through is cut out and that project is cut out, when the appropriations for soil conservation are reduced, and appropriations are cut all along the line, then many of you will regret the vote you cast today as a result of which you put yourself in a strait-jacket.

Of the $37,500,000,000, $5,000,000,000 is for interest, and you cannot reduce that a penny; $2,065,000,000 is for tax refunds, and the Congress cannot reduce that a penny. Those are contractual obligations; $7,300,000,000 is for veterans, and you are not going to reduce that much. There may be some reductions in administrative expenses, but you are not going to reduce the compensation paid to veterans, you are not going to impair their right to go to college, and you are not going to reduce the benefits they receive under the GI bill of rights. So, for all practical purposes any reductions with reference to appropriations for veterans are out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. There are $3,500,000,000 for foreign commitments. I do not know what you are going to do there when you consider what the effect of that will be, when our country is supposed to be one of the dominant nations of the world. Practically all the world is looking to Washington or to the Kremlin—most of them are looking to Washington, but if we fail they will be compelled to submit to the influence of Moscow and the Kremlin. Those are matters that come close to our hearts, but the national interest of our country, sooner or later, will stare us in the face. If country after country through disillusionment is compelled to go in the direction of the Soviet orbit, then the American people will wake up one morning and realize that the national interest of our country has been adversely affected and that our position in the world has been impaired.

Then, there is $11,200,000,000 for our armed forces. Those five activities constitute a little over $29,000,000,000. If the cut is going to come only in our armed forces, we know the Senate is not going to stand for a $6,000,000,000 cut. Or the cut is going to come in agriculture. After you get rid of 500,000 employees, you still have very far to go to reach $4,500,000,000. Outside of the school-lunch program which hits the cities and the rural districts, too, which amounts to $75,000,000, and we had a hard job putting that through—the only section of the country that can be hit by a reduction in appropriations is the rural parts of the country. The people connected with the soil are the ones who are going to suffer so far as any cut is concerned further than the reduction which affects the number of employees in Government.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has referred to the situation in the rural areas and reference has constantly been made to so-called soil conservation. I hold in my hand a copy of the Delphi Journal of Carroll County in my district, which is a rich farming community. The headline says, "AAA allocates $70,000 to Carroll County soil program." And then it goes on and cites that that will be available to farmers who participate in the program by spreading lime and using fertilizer or through the use of other methods. Then it recites that the sums heretofore have been used to buy lime and fertilizer. Does the gentleman think that we should continue to use Federal funds for that purpose?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is $70,000?

Mr. HALLECK. That is what is allocated in one county.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand the gentleman's inquiry. I am unable to answer that question myself except to say that in the 16 years I have been here, when cotton was, I think, at around 5 cents a pound, and wheat at around 25 cents a bushel, I saw those representing the farm districts of the country from the Middle West, the Far West, the Northwest, and the South, begging Congress to do something, and coming from a city district, I felt that something should be done. It was not a question of party in those days—it was a question of helping agriculture and helping our country. All I can say is that the big cut, outside of the reduction in the number of employees, is going to come to agriculture and its allied activities.

I hold in my hand a newspaper. I do not know whether what it says is true or not, but I see where my friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], is reported in the newspapers as having said certain things. He is not to blame for that before he makes his speech here, but although the headline is not part of the speech, it states, "Cut expenditures or quit, ENGEL says to Army and Navy heads." But he is quoted as saying:

I say to Secretary of War Robert Patterson, Secretary of Navy James Forrestal, Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, and Admiral Chester Nimitz—

They were good enough to serve us in war, all of them, especially Eisenhower and Nimitz—

I say to them that if you cannot give us an adequate national defense during the third year after the close of the war with $14,500,000,000—available for expenditure without wrecking the Air Corps and scuttling the Navy, you ought to step aside and give someone else a chance.

That is what it says here—

Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Michigan is misquoted in this paper. But I will let it stand without any comment because it is hard for me to believe that a hard-working, conscientious Member, such as the gentleman from Michigan, would express himself in that manner even if he disagreed with Eisenhower and Nimitz or if they disagreed with him. It is hard for me to believe that he would call on them to step aside and give someone else a chance. We know that this thing is cut and dried. The $6,000,000,000 resolution will pass on roll call, but this is only the beginning. The headaches are going to come between now and June 30. The American people want a bill of particulars. I am entitled to a bill of particulars. You are entitled to a bill of particulars. Nobody has received a bill of particulars. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] says we are going to help the Army and Navy by cutting them $2,225,000,000.

Mr. TABER. When did I say that?

Mr. McCORMACK. When did you say what?

Mr. TABER. That.

Mr. McCORMACK. You said "you certainly are going to help the Army and the Navy and General Marshall when he goes to Moscow." Is that correct?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. The rest is my own.

Mr. TABER. All right.

Mr. McCORMACK. Because the Army is going to be cut a billion and a half dollars. That is the proposal. Seven hundred and fifty million dollars from the Navy. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has greater knowledge about our foreign affairs than General Marshall. It simply shows we are laying the record here for what is going to happen between now and June 30. The former Speaker the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] said when June 30 arrives there will be no $6,000,000,000 cut and no $4,500,000,000 cut. The American people expect that whatever is agreed upon the Congress will live up to. On June 30, and long before June 30, they are going to realize that in the case of the excise tax there was double talk; that in the case of the Knutson tax bill double talk is going on now, and that in the case of this six billion or $4,500,000,000 reduction the majority party, as on those two other bills, has been engaging in nothing but political double talk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, this particular piece of legislation has caused me no little concern and a great deal of worry, because we are living in a troubled and uncertain postwar period. The shooting stopped in Europe almost 2 years ago, and in the Pacific over 18 months ago, but treaties have not yet been written. We have heard a lot of talk about commitments but I do not know what our commitments are. No members of the War Department, the Navy Department, or the State Department have yet told us what our commitments are. As long as this uncertainty hangs like a sword of Damocles over our heads, this Nation must remain strong on land and sea and in the air.

I traveled all through European Russia. I know the only language they understand is force. They respect strength and have only utter contempt for weakness. God knows I would be the last to let the signs of victory flow through my fingers after suffering more than a million casualties and a national debt of $262,000,000,000 which the second World War in our generation has imposed upon us. But you know and I know, and certainly these American citizens in the gallery and all over our Nation know that the first line of defense of any country is its financial solvency. Today the defense and protection of America does not depend upon large masses of troops, it depends upon a sound economy. This war was won not only by our gallant heroic men and women who fought all over this globe, it was won on the home front as much as the foreign front; it was won in the factories and on the farms, and in the mines, and in the forests of America. The industrial output of this Nation, our productive capacity, is what has startled the whole world.

As one of the six Members of this House chosen to join six Members of the Senate to visit the atrocity camps in Europe, and having flown 38,000 miles in 40 days out in the Pacific last fall all the way from Alaska to Australia, spending time in China, Japan, Korea, the Philippines, even in far-off Siam, down to Australia, and in our insular possessions, I want to say to you that there is no immediate danger of attack on America from that source for a long time to come—or from Germany. From Ludwigshafen down the Rhine through Darmstadt, Frankfort-on-the-Main, past Coblenz, Remagen, Bonn, Cologne, Aachen and Duren, throughout the Ruhr, Essen, Hamburg, Bremen, Osnabruck, Kassel, Hannover, Halle, Berlin, Dresden, Nuremberg, Augsburg, Ulm, Munich, Stuttgart, Karlsruhe—all the land is a heap of rats, rubble, and ruin, just what Hitler promised. Oh, I do not think we are going to be run over by the Nazis immediately.

Mr. JENNINGS. Use the mike.

Mr. SHORT. Can I not make myself heard? I have called too many hogs in the Ozarks. I never liked to speak through a tin horn. It is like kissing a beautiful girl through a screen door—you do not enjoy it.

With the exception of Heidelberg, where I spent a happy and prosperous year back in 1922, an old university town with no military value, practically every city in Germany has been blasted to bits. I have been all over Europe. I visited every country in Europe many times before I ever came to Congress. I paid my own expenses by shining shoes and driving jennies down in the Ozarks. The cities of Germany, with the exception of Heidelberg, have been blasted to ruins, and with the exception of Kyoto, in Japan. Let me tell you that the area around Yokohama, Tokyo, Nagasaki, Kobe, Hiroshima, and other large cities have been literally torn up and down. There is no fear from Germany and Japan or prostrate Austria, where the people even today are starving. They are not going to attack us. In spite of our differences with Great Britain she is our friend, particularly Canada and Australia. Why, Britain is so hard up we have to lend her—or should I say give her—$4,800,000,000.

The only nation in this world that has the potential possibility of reprisal is Soviet Russia, and the great rank and file and mass of the Russian people do not want to fight anybody. I went all over European Russia in 1935. They are worn and they are tired. It will take Russia 25 years to rehabilitate her country, rebuild her railroads, and repair the damage done by the Nazi horde that swept over European Russia to Leningrad, Moscow, and Stalingrad. They tried to throw up a boogie-woogie here. Who is going to jump on America? You know and I know, SAM RAYBURN, that no nation and no government is different from an individual. Neither can spend and continue to spend indefinitely without running into serious difficulty. That, like a cancer, will eat your heart out. The distinguished former majority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] told you that the interest alone on our Federal debt is $5,000,000,000 a year, almost as much as it cost to run the Government before this recent war.

When the First World War ended we had a national debt of $23,500,000,000. Under Republican administrations for 10 years we reduced that debt a billion dollars each year and cut taxes at the same time, from $26,500,000,000 down to $16,500,000,000. Of course we had a crash in 1929, due to the backwash, the aftermath, the repercussions of the First World War, that you kept us out of. When you went into power in March 1933 our national debt was $22,000,000,000. Before Pearl Harbor in this recent war that debt had been tripled, to $66,000,000,000.

I was not going to mention WPA, but since my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] mentioned it, I want to assure him there are at least two men in this House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself, who always voted against it. You were not interested so much in the welfare of the people as you were interested in getting their votes on election day.

We did not have free elections in the thirties. History will be written without prejudice one of these days. I am reluctant to speak of the dead—let them bury the dead and God bless their souls—but Harry Hopkins in 1936 put 4,500 lead and zinc miners in Joplin, Mo., in my district, on the pay roll 3 weeks before the election, and, FRANK BOYKIN, 3 days after that election he put them all off. The scandal was so great in Kentucky that Tom Stokes, a rabid New Deal columnist, won the Pulitzer prize by revealing the stench and the smell in that State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DORN].

Mr. DORN. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that I also have my observations of Europe. They were not as a Congressman but as an enlisted man in the armed forces of the United States during the late war. I know that the people of Europe respect the military power of the United States of America. I agree with the gentlemen on that side that economy also begins at home. National defense begins with the stabilization of this economy—true. My people favor a reduction in appropriation bills. But the point I want to get across to the leadership on the other side is this: I would like to remind you that the VFW, the American Legion and all experts in our armed forces agree that this means a reduction in the appropriations for the armed forces. The Republican leadership has throughout this debate denied that any serious cut is contemplated for the defense forces. They should get together with these men who really know what we need for defense.

May I remind you that this is the same VFW and American Legion that for many long years have advocated before this Congress measures of national defense that would have prevented World War II. Gentlemen of the House, in its national convention in St. Louis, in 1919, the American Legion advocated measures of national defense that most military experts today agree might have prevented World War II. And in every national convention from 1919 to the Japanese attack they pressed these measures and called them to the attention of Congress. So I say to you that before we consider any reduction in appropriations for our armed forces, let us consider carefully these great issues that confront our international policy makers.

Look at research. I am advised that the Army originally asked for research and development over $400,000,000. But the President and the Budget Bureau reduced this nearly one-half. I now wonder what further reductions will take place under this $6,000,000,000 cut. I recall when the United States military forces, the War Department, were conducting research on guided missiles as early as 1921, only to have the appropriation cut and to have to discontinue such experimentation in 1924. Germany took up from there in 1936, and in 1944 they bombed England with the V–1. I say that research is one of the greatest measures of defense before our armed forces today, and I would rather see anything cut than experimentation in research and development of new weapons for our armed forces. It is up to us as Members of this Congress to look 5, 10, 15 and 100 years ahead, that we might prevent World War III. The security of future generations depends on our actions today.

Mr. TABER. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I might say by way of starting that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DORN], who has just spoken for higher spending has tried hard to make the issue seem too simplified; in fact, he has made it so simple that it seems impossible for me to believe that anybody on the floor of this House should say that World War II could have been prevented by the passage of a single appropriation by the United States Congress or a certain series of them. It took more than that; the causes were much more basic that began World War II and caused Hitler and Mussolini to rise, and I am sure that one or two little items of experimentation were not the things either done or undone that caused the world to break out into conflagration. However, as a service man brought back from the Pacific on the Republican side, I guarantee that we service men will see on this side, and I hope that you will see on your side, too, sir, that there is adequate provision in the Budget for the Army and the Navy and the Marines, as well as veteran services and also that there is adequate provision for experimentation and research. We do not want our services and the men that are still in the services to be any less well taken care of than we were when we were in there.

Mr. DORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DORN. Why is it then that the national legislative representatives of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and nearly every authority on militarism and military preparedness in Washington, is afraid of this cut?

Mr. FULTON. Well now, let me say this to the gentleman in answer. Every one of them has not taken such position because I can show you a man on our side that we are very proud of, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT], former national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of this country, who favors this $6,000,000,000 cut and who will answer the gentleman on that specific problem and allay his fears. So rather than have a general statement of a lot of unknown leaders who favor militarism, I would rather have one of our own Members who has served in those capacities answer the gentleman specifically and allay his fears.

May I add, too, that I have been here probably one term longer than the gentleman, as one of the first few veterans brought back to Congress from the service, and if anybody has suffered in this Congress, I believe we first ones have, because in February 1945, on a Navy carrier on the way up to Iwo Jima, I was taken off the ship and sent down here as a newer Member of this Congress, and sat here without making many speeches so that I, too, have gone through a little bit of suffering back here, and I am sure the gentleman himself will after a few months.

We today have been hearing debates on the floor about the Hoover administration and the Roosevelt administration. We vets of World War II are not interested in that. This is a new Congress, the Eightieth Congress. The Seventy-ninth Congress is history. Let us face the new problem, let us fulfill this obligation.

A taxpayer said to me today, "Give us a slight ray of hope, that little ray of gratitude to show that you appreciate going to Congress as a Representative of the people, carry out your promise of economy and put this country on a stable basis." I am going to do that by my vote for economy today, and I am going to see that some of these sacred cows of the Democratic administration are milked to the full.

I think it is time we have these New Deal agencies put on a business basis. We may keep the Sacred Cow for President Truman because he needs it to travel in, but we are going to get rid of some of Roosevelt's other sacred cows and the bureaucrats overcrowding these bureaus because they are not necessary now. We can get along without them and we must in order to obtain efficient Government.

The problem facing us today is to carry out the mandate of the November 1946 election—that is to reduce taxes.

It is now part of our legislative process under the Reorganization Act to set a public budget for the Nation, just as we all budget our personal affairs. The American people have asked for a solvent government run on a business basis.

I intend to vote to give it to them. Some of my Democratic friends have said on the floor today that reducing the yearly budget by $6,000,000,000 to $31,500,000,000 is setting a false illusion to the people. On the contrary we Republicans feel that it is that first small symbol of appreciation for sending us to Washington as the people's representatives. We appreciate their confidence and expect to live up to it.

Of course, on every budget cut, everyone wonders where the cuts will occur. We veterans feel that legitimate economies can be made without hurting the national defense—or the Army or Navy or Marine Corps or veterans' affairs. You may count on the veterans of this Congress from World War II to see that our services' interests are protected when the appropriation bills come up for action. We will see that the weight of the squeeze is applied to the New Deal agencies.

May I emphasize that we will protect the budgets for our occupation troops, and we will continue the policy of assisting the populations they are policing, looking toward rehabilitation and reconstruction so they can in a few years stand on their own feet with self-respect. We will protect the necessary research and development of our armed services as we want our services to maintain their full efficiency with modern equipment. Our defense facilities must equal our foreign commitments.

When the armed services are heard by the committees of this Congress they will receive good and fair consideration of all necessary Budget items.

Let us show the people we mean business and give the working people of this country a bonus from Congress by tax reduction. I am going to do my part today in taking the first step to put extra take home money in the pay envelope, and will vote for this $6,000,000,000 reduction in the highest peacetime Budget we have ever had presented. We must economize and get back efficient Government.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure all the Members that were here a little while ago when the gentleman from Missouri spoke enjoyed his talk very, very much. There is one thing about that gentleman's remarks on the floor of the House, whether you agree with him or not you always enjoy his oratory. Thinking of the enjoyment I was having in listening to his remarks today, my mind went back to 1939 and 1940 when he made the same type of speech against every measure that was presented to this House in favor of preparedness. You older Members will remember that. In those days he got great applause and wonderful acclaim from the left side of the aisle. He used some of the same expressions today that he used in 1939, 1940, and 1941, when under the Democratic leadership we were preparing for an attack which we were almost certain was going to come. So do not be misled by oratory of that sort.

In those days he also said, "Who is going to fight us? Why should we spend all this money for the Army and the Navy and the brass hats?" His arguments today should fall just as flat as his arguments proved to be in those days of 1939, 1940, and 1941.

Mr. Chairman, I first heard about the proposed 20-percent tax reduction last October, and I said at that time, "It is a campaign promise, but if they carry out that campaign promise it is going to be at the expense of the Army at the expense of the Navy, or at the expense of the veterans." That is just what is going to occur, Mr. Chairman.

Two weeks ago the suggestion first came from the Republican leadership that the Army would be cut a billion and three-quarters and the Navy a half billion, but so much protest came from every area of the country about weakening our national defense that today they are afraid to say that that is where the cut is going to be made. They said this 2 weeks ago, but on account of the protests they are not saying it today. They want all the Members on the Republican side to vote for this cut, without knowing where or what or when.

I call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to one or two facts that probably were not even considered. Many of the economists today, the best minds of the country in that line, contemplate a recession in business during the fiscal year 1948. If there is the slightest recession in business and national income falls $10,000,000,000, from $165,000,000,000 to $155,000,000,000, that will mean a reduction in the revenue to the Treasury of the United States of $3,000,000,000—$3,000,000,000 if there is a slight business recession which is expected. Then what will the figures covering estimated receipts you are presenting to this House today mean? Also, Mr. Chairman, may I remind you that during the last session, there was a situation confronting the House wherein it was trying to make the Senate agree to pay terminal leave to veterans in cash, and we worked with the other body up to the very last day of the session before we finally backed down and agreed to issue bonds to veterans instead of paying them in cash. Every Member of this House, except one, voted to pay the veterans in cash. That measure will probably come up before this Congress at this session, and practically every Member will vote to pay in cash. That will mean two billion or three billion dollars in additional expenditures. What will this resolution which we are now considering mean when that comes up, Mr. Chairman? There are proposals sponsored by the leadership in the other body which will call for the expenditure of more than half a billion dollars for aid to education. When those matters come up before the House, where will your figures which you are presenting to us today be? Already, Mr. Chairman, Gen. Omar Bradley has cut down on the services to be given to the disabled and other American veterans of World War II. He sent out a telegram last night freezing all Veterans' Administration employees and not permitting any more promotions. That will result in many a veteran not getting the services to which he is entitled. Mr. Chairman, this resolution today is nothing more than an expression of a pious intention, something that our former Speaker of the House called legislative hypocrisy. My prediction is, Mr. Chairman, that before June 30 rolls around, this resolution will be referred to not only in the Halls of this Congress and at the other end of the Capitol, but all lover the country, as nothing but a mere scrap of paper, because neither the Committee on Appropriations nor the Congress will be able to carry out the pious intentions expressed in this resolution today.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I should first like to answer a statement made by our distinguished former Speaker the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]. In his remarks he indicated that the Republicans were not certain and definite in their program and that no one knew whether a reduction in the Budget would be effected to the extent of $6,000,000,000. In other words he gave the impression that the Republicans were not firm in their determination to reduce the national expenditures. Of course I cannot speak for all of the Republicans and for anyone else in particular but I feel that the Republicans are firm in their determination to reduce the national expenditures and keep the same within a budget of $31,500,000,000.

President Truman has indicated that he needs $37,500,000,000 to spend in the coming year. We will when we pass this pending legislation say to him and say to the world that thirty-one and one-half billion will be the limit of our expenditures. I am sure that with the reputation which our distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. TABER has, for honesty and economy, he will guarantee that the Appropriations Committee does not run beyond the budget fixed in this proposed legislation.

I feel that it is not only a pleasure but a duty for me to vote in favor of this legislation. I would be in favor of reducing the Budget another $1,000,000,000 for I feel that the temper of the country is such that the people will sustain a strict, honest, and sincere program of economy. We Republicans must consider that when this legislation is passed that we are bound to confine our spending within the Budget herein fixed and that we must not listen to any programs that will call for a greater expenditure.

I wish also to make reply to a statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, the former chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. CANNON]. In his remarks he said in effect that at the end of Woodrow Wilson's term that the country's financial accounts were in the black and that when the Republicans turned the country back to the Democrats that the financial accounts were in the red.

The New Deal is vulnerable in so many places but is probably more vulnerable in its reckless and extravagant spending of money than in any other way. Any time a New Deal Congressman attempts to defend the New Deal administration he will always find an unsurmountable obstacle in the colossal failure of the New Deal financial policy and all of this in spite of the fact that when Mr. Roosevelt came into power he promised that he would reduce expenditures and gave utterance to the famous quotation that "many countries have been destroyed on the rocks of loose fiscal policy."

It may be astonishing to you to know that in the 5 years beginning with the first of 1941 and ending with the close of 1945 our Government spent more than twice as much money as it did in all of the period from Washington's day down to 1941. And it must not be forgotten that we spent a terrific lot of money in 1940 and also in 1938 and 1939.

When the Republicans came into power after Woodrow Wilson's administration, the national debt was about $27,000,000,000. This was at that time considered to be a colossal debt and was the greatest debt under which any nation had struggled up to that time. The Republicans paid that debt off for 10 years at the rate of a billion dollars a year. This was considered a great financial feat, for no nation had ever paid its debt at such a rapid rate.

When the Democrats took over the Government by electing a Democratic House and Senate in 1930, the national debt was about $19,000,000,000. From that time forward until this day the Democrats and New Dealers were never able to operate the Government a single year without a deficit of anywhere from a billion to $100,000,000,000. In the first year of their administration, they ran behind about a billion dollars and in the end of the war years they ran behind nearly $100,000,000,000.

I was a Member of Congress during the time that we were reducing the debt at the rate of a billion dollars a year, and during that time we reduced the taxes three or four times with the result that after each reduction we were still able to continue our reduction of the debt. Those were the days when the people had faith in the industrial and economic strength of the country. I was also a Member of Congress when the New Deal took over, and I know that no attention whatever was paid to the promises of Mr. Roosevelt that he would reduce the national expenditures. History will record the fact that one of the reasons they gave for naming this new party the New Deal Party was that they had adopted a new philosophy. That philosophy was that it was unwise to attempt to economize and that scarcity should be the program and that we should spend and spend and spend in order that the New Deal Party should be elected and elected and elected.

I remember well what a terrible strain it was upon many of us when we raised the debt limit to $35,000,000,000. When that was done, I, and I am sure many others, promised ourselves that we would never vote to increase the debt limit beyond that amount. But emergency upon emergency came along, and while on some occasions I did not vote for the debt limit to be raised, still it was raised from thirty-five billion to forty-five billion. Everyone thought that would be enough, but soon thereafter it was raised to sixty billion, and not long thereafter it was raised to the colossal sum of one hundred and twenty-five billions. Of course, everyone thought that would be the end of such extravagant spending. However, Mr. Roosevelt preached that there would be no danger because we were owing this money to ourselves. Then later we increased the debt to two hundred and ten billion and many people thought that we would never be able to pay it, and many think so yet. But we went on to greater heights and increased the debt limit to two hundred and sixty billion and finally to three hundred billions. Today the national debt is $259,000,000,000. If we were to pay this off at what we thought was the unheard-of record of a billion a year, it would take us 259 years to pay the debt. We must pay it sooner than that. That is why I would have been willing to have voted to reduce the Budget another billion, so we could have applied that billion on this terrific debt.

There are only three ways by which this colossal debt can be paid.

First. By repudiation. Of course, no one favors that kind of a program. It would be a terrible political crime for our country to tell the many patriotic people who have bought Government bonds that their Government bonds will not be paid. A policy of repudiation would mean that our Republic would go down because our Constitution would not permit such disgraceful national conduct.

Second. Another method would be inflation. No government ever survived that attempted to pay its debt by inflation. The burning forces of inflation would consume our economic fabric and we would tumble into oblivion.

Third. The third method is the established honest, sincere method that we call taxation. We must tax and tax and tax if we are to pay this terrific debt. We can do so if we practice thrift and economy and if we can establish in our country adequate production. We all know that all wealth comes from the ground through minerals and metals and timber and crops plus the skill of the hands of man through labor and plus the acumen of the human brain through management. It is from wealth that taxes are collected and from no other source. Therefore to pay this colossal debt we must do our utmost to establish a firm maximum productive economy in our country.

We are a great people. We are great because we have assumed great obligations and have discharged them valiantly. We will discharge this colossal debt that the New Deal has given us but we will not do so except that we exert ourselves to the limit. Therefore I shall vote for this legislation because I feel it my duty to do so.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Chairman, there has been, and there probably will continue to be, some really magnificent oratory today, here on the floor of the House. Speaking after such distinguished spokesmen as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] is very much as it must have been when one was called upon to speak after Henry Clay or Patrick Henry. However, there are a few things that I should like to mention in connection with the current debate. There is a lot of smoke drifting around this matter. There are numerous red herrings being dragged across the trail. There is a great deal of hysteria and arduous effort to create hysteria where none should exist. Mention has been made of "fresh" or new Members in the House. I qualify under that description, being a "fresh" Member who only arrived here last January 3. However, I replaced a former Member who was so fresh in the pouring of public funds down the rat hole that the people of my district put him in salt. One of my campaign pledges was to come to the Congress of the United States to help establish some sane and sensible balance in the economy of this Government. That pledge I intend to keep. I might add here that my district is Democratic by approximately 5 to 3 in registration, and I obviously had to come to Congress with Democratic votes. I will be perfectly willing to stand on my vote today establishing this limit, and I will go back and stand on the record in my district when it is necessary, and without apology.

It has been said that America is watching this vote today. It might be well to say that not only is America watching this vote but people like Mr. Eisler are watching the vote, if he can take time out from his other troubles, and so are all the people he works for. So are all of the people who do not want sound economy in this country—those who want chaos and anarchy and all those things that help foster their philosophies of government.

There is nothing spectacular about an orderly process; there is nothing spectacular about economy and about truthfulness and integrity and honesty; so the Eislers and the like do not want them. If you want to continue chaos, continue this mad spending unabated until it reaches a point where it consumes us all.

I, also, am a veteran. As I look on the other side of the aisle I see men with distinguished war records—the gentleman from Texas [Mr. TEAGUE], the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DORN], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS]—veterans all, representing every branch of the armed services. I should like to ask in a friendly way if they honestly believe that the men on this side of the House who are voting for this resolution today would do one single thing to cripple the armed services to which we belonged and in which we saw service. I can assure you we would not.

Mr. MacKINNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON of California. I yield.

Mr. MacKINNON. Speaking about the armed services, is it not a fact that some of the so-called interpreters who were sent to Germany could not even interpret when they got there?

Mr. JACKSON of California. Exactly. Twelve interpreters were sent from this country to Germany to act as interpreters and they could not speak German. If that is not one of the most flagrant examples of a total waste of the taxpayers' money I do not know where you could find one. Those 12 would have felt right at home here. They were masters of double talk. They spoke one kind of German here and another kind over there. They would feel perfectly at home with some of the Members of this House who today are speaking economy double talk. These gentlemen speak economy when talking to the voters in their districts, but on the floor of the House all of those pledges go out of the window.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. TABER. I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. JACKSON of California. Just exactly how can savings be effected in the armed services? If any Member on the other side of the House says that economies cannot be effected it is because he spent his time of enlistment or his term of service with his eyes closed. You and I know they can be effected; that overlapping not only exists but from time to time the overlapping comes in layers.

One example, and only one, before I conclude: Picture 70 United States Army officers, 30 professors, complete with caps and gowns—probably transferred from some bureau—staff secretaries, and all the paraphernalia of this retinue, going overseas to Germany on a 3-year project—to do what? To act as officers of the day? To serve with troops? To facilitate the labors of the occupation? To do any of the things you would normally expect to be performed by an Army officer? No, indeed. They are going over there to compile a history of the Nuremberg trials. Now, it seems to me it is much more important for the people of this country after 3 years to have a few coins to jingle around in their pockets than it is for them to be able to sit down and read a voluminous report of the Nuremberg trials, compiled at fantastic expense in manpower and money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT].

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, I believe my record in the House for 10 years will rank as high as any Member of the House without regard to which side of the aisle he may serve on. I remember back in 1939 when I brought a bill before the House which actually at that time saved about $14,000,000. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], now the Speaker, reserved the right to object. He was a little afraid, because I was a Democrat, that I would bring in a bill to save some money. Later on he withdrew his objection. I was grateful to that fine American. It gave me an opportunity to demonstrate my belief that we could make a saving in some Government expenditures.

I find myself today opposed to the blanket $6,000,000,000 cut, first because I do not know and have not found anybody who can tell me intelligently where the savings are going to be made, what items are going to be cut. I certainly do not want to see cuts made in our defense program, either Army or Navy, because I can remember Pearl Harbor. If the Japs had had an ounce of brains they could have followed up their attack on Pearl Harbor and taken Los Angeles and San Francisco without difficulty. We were not prepared then. I do not want to see the day come when the surprise of 6 years ago can be repeated and we awaken to find ourselves again unprepared. So I question whether it is good economy to curtail expenditures in that direction at the present time, without any specific information to go on, yet I am just as much for economy as any man or woman in this House.

I cannot understand how it is going to affect agriculture. I can see many projects in my own and other States, flood control and reclamation projects that will not receive sufficient funds to complete them. The net result of dilly-dallying along will cost the Federal Government more in the long run. For instance, to give you one example, the Central Valleys project in California has dragged along so slowly and so long until it has reached the point where it is going to cost the Government twice the money it would have cost had sufficient money been appropriated in the first place to complete the project without these many delays.

I have flood-control projects in my district so badly needed that the farmers cannot get crop insurance on account of the danger of floods, yet if this budget ceiling is adopted it is likely no money will be appropriated to relieve that condition.

I am a Democrat. I am not going to drag a red herring across this debate or even a catfish, but I do have a statement to make in all sincerity and honesty, and I particularly want the Members on the Republican side to listen. One week ago today a most distinguished citizen of our State came to Washington, Governor Earl Warren. In the not too distant future he might be the President of the United States, for he is one of the outstanding Americans living today, Democrat or Republican. Governor Warren has the ability to be the President of the United States and I say he would make a mighty good one if he should be elected, much better than many men whose names we have all heard mentioned.

What did the Governor of California say when he was in this building, adjacent to this Chamber a week ago today, testifying before the Committee on Appropriations?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield one additional minute to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELLIOTT. This is what Governor Warren said:

> I am appearing, however, to plead for the earliest possible completion of the several units of the Central Valleys project because I believe that this is in the interests of both the Nation and California.

He said further:

> Unless construction work is accelerated, which of course will require larger yearly appropriations, it will not be completed for another 10 to 12 years, because while the Government has put about $190,000,000 into the project almost a like amount will be required to complete it.

He said further:

> It is because I believe that the people of my State want the project accelerated that I appear before you today to urge an appropriation of $40,000,000 instead of the $20,000,000 provided in the President's budget. This action would clearly set forth the congressional policy that will result in the desired speeding up of the construction I feel thoroughly justified in making this suggestion because I believe it is in the interests of true economy and will actually save dollars to the Federal Government as well as to the people of California.

If we cut this $6,000,000,000 from the budget we do not stand a chance of getting even $20,000,000 for the continuation of the Central Valleys project in the State of California, and it will curtail necessary Federal funds for roads, flood control, reclamation projects, and the entire agricultural program so vital to our Nation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, having been a member of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives for nearly 5 years, during which time this resolution offers the first real opportunity the Congress has had to cut down the reckless and wanton waste of public funds. In fact, this is the first real chance we economy-minded folks have had for over a decade to act, and by our votes to balance the National Budget to make a substantial payment on our national debt, and to cut down extravagance in national affairs, and so to give the taxpayers of America some tax relief, which will be appreciated as time goes on.

The people of Iowa are in favor of economy in government. They want a dollar's worth of service for every dollar of public money spent. The Iowa delegation in the House of Representatives truly represent their constituents in their support of this resolution. We know that there are many places where billions of public tax dollars can be saved without in any way interfering with the necessary functions of our Government. The issue is one that goes to the very foundations of our institutions.

The joint congressional Committee on the Budget did not "just reach into the blue sky" for this proposed reduction of $6,000,000,000, but to the contrary, much research and investigation by the members and their staffs of investigators has brought about this figure, and let me assure you that more than adequate national defense can and will be provided in this proposed over-all budget of $3,500,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948. But it will require the agencies overgrown during the postwar bureaucratic era to bring their operations to a size actually in line with the needs of the country; to cut out unnecessary and wasteful activities.

The people of Iowa and of the country have been overrun for years by the hordes of Federal pay-rollers. The people are tired of paying for the maintenance of these tax eaters. The people know that the estimated tax take from the people of the United States this year is nearly $40,000,000,000, or about $1,000 per family. The time to reduce this burden on our people is now. The only way to reduce taxes is to reduce expenses. That is exactly what we propose to do.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure I bespeak the sentiments of the entire Iowa delegation in the House of Representatives by pledging continued effort for the complete elimination of all unnecessary spending, waste, and extravagance in government.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TIBBOTT].

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Chairman, we who have faith in our political and economic principles which have guided us for more than a century and a half of great progress should be deeply concerned over the events of the past decade or more.

In our democratic government, careful of the rights of the individual citizen, the conception of an all-powerful central government to which all look for security and assistance in turn has undertaken to control and direct the lives and destinies of all. We have witnessed in the economic field a centrally controlled economy and intervention of it by the Federal Government. It is my conviction that the many abuses from Government interference must and will be corrected if our people are to enjoy the progress to which they have in the past been accustomed and to which they are entitled.

We should have the courage, the vigor, and constructive ability to develop a program to meet the issues and conditions before us. Not so many years ago one would say, "I am self-supporting." That was considered a virtue. When we heard it said that "he or she is self-supporting," everyone held that individual in high regard and respect.

The immense sums which we have appropriated over the years with the exception of the expenditures necessary to carry on to a successful conclusion our war efforts was not derived from national income. It was, therefore, borrowed by making use of the national credit. This means that we are no longer self-supporting. We are just like the individual living on borrowed money. We have mortgaged the future of our children and our grandchildren. There is a limit to national credit. We have invited disaster. We have borrowed up to the point of disaster. We must get back to the position where we can say "we are self-supporting."

The Republican Party is definitely committed to this course, and we must now devote our best thoughts and efforts to make the venture successful. There is a moral obligation resting upon the minority to follow in this direction, too. The budget is not beyond control. We can balance it if we have the integrity to do so.

There is no doubt in my mind that an economic system based upon individual freedom and the maintenance of competition under legal provision by which business and industry may check abuses and promote progress for their own guidance, subject to Government regulation based upon law, is the creed to follow. We cannot have this kind of economic system if we continue to appropriate money to carry on an all-powerful centralized bureaucracy, whose authority is over everybody and who is not responsible to anybody. Of course, if we vote for a great reduction in expenditures, we naturally will offend many and probably leave ourselves vulnerable to threats that we must depart our political office. However, the Constitution, as I understand it, was not established to satisfy the aspirations of a single generation, but to secure the blessings of enduring principles to all posterity.

Our national debt is now $260,000,000,000. A debt which means $2,000 for every man, woman, and child to pay. The interest, or carrying charge, on the national debt amounts to $5,000,000,000 a year. To come anywhere near meeting this huge obligation we must retrench. The taxpayer must pay this if our economy is to survive. To be fair with the taxpayer, and all of us are helping to pay the bill, the much-needed reduction of governmental employees, which now number more than two and a half million, is in order. It must be evident to any thoughtful mind that unless we call a halt to the tremendous pouring out of financial assistance it will be impossible to restore our Nation to a healthy and sound Government.

I believe we have the support of the vast majority of the American people in reducing expenses and cutting out the waste in government. This is evidenced by the mandate given Congress on last November 5. It is up to us to show to the people that we measure up to the duties and responsibilities imposed upon us. We can reduce the expenditures of the departments, including the War and Navy, without interfering with their essential administration. The uninformed will naturally fall for the appeals of the armed services departments, but the complaints of those in high positions in these departments are not justified as I am certain we will prove to them and the Nation within the months to come. These departments cannot expect to continue the lavish methods of spending money now as they did during our participation in the last war. They should learn the lesson now that all of us, to hold the respect of the Nation, must be self-supporting. This can be done if we are to survive as a great nation. I venture to say that it will be done by reason of the fact that the people demand it.

We and the people of the Nation are not asking any department to reduce beyond the point of waste and non-essential activities. If we were unreasonable in our demands for a reduction of expenditures beyond that of the $6,000,000,000 recommended, then our recommendations would be far greater than this amount.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

CAN WAR DEPARTMENT BUDGET BE CUT?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss very frankly the action of the Congressional Budget Committee, of which I am a member, in its attempt to cut the President's budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, by $6,000,000,000. I want to give the reasons I supported that action and particularly why, as chairman of the War Department Appropriation Subcommittee, I took the position that the War Department could take a cut of $1,500,000,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, in its military and civil functions budget. I concede to everyone the same sincerity, the same honesty of purpose, and the same desire to protect the interests of my country as I claim for myself. For my part, I want to be guided by facts. Those of the War Department, I know.

FOREIGN POLICY

I am supporting and shall continue to support the foreign policy of our Government as expressed by the senior Senator from Michigan, ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, and his colleagues who are representing our Nation in the foreign councils of this Government. While I do not always agree with them 100 percent in their policy, I am supporting that policy 100 percent in the interest of unity.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

I have repeatedly stated on the floor of this House that I shall support a national defense policy which will make our foreign policy effective. I believe with Theodore Roosevelt in speaking softly and carrying a big stick. Secretary of War Patterson, General Eisenhower, and others have stated that they will require an army for the fiscal year of 1948 of 1,070,000 men, of whom 400,000 men will be for the Army Air Corps.

After studying the budgetary and other figures carefully, I have come to the conclusion that we can cut one and one-half billion dollars from the Army appropriation for 1948, including civil functions, and still have an efficient Army of 1,070,000 men, including an efficient Air Force of 400,000 men. I have asked in the past and all that I am asking now, Mr. Speaker, is that the War Department and Navy Department produce a dollar's worth of national defense for every one of the hard-earned dollars the taxpayers are turning over to them.

OVER-ALL PICTURE

In order to understand what can be done, we must consider the 1947 and 1948 Budgets together. We must consider the expenditures and the proposed expenditures and the balances left at the end of each year. If you will examine that 2-year Budget, you will find that the Government will have $46,200,000,000 available for expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948. June 30, 1948, the end of the fiscal year, will be 3 years and 3 months after the cessation of hostilities in Germany. Total expenditures for all purposes during the first 5 months of the fiscal year 1947 were $14,000,000,000, or $2,800,000,000 a month or at a rate of $33,600,000,000 a year. The 1947 appropriation was $33,656,000,000. Total expenditures during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, are estimated and, if we allow everything they ask for, will be $36,698,000,000.

Despite the reduction in our Army from 1,889,690 men on July 1, 1946, to 1,070,000 in 1947; despite the reduction in the Navy; and despite the discontinuance of other agencies, the Government proposes to spend in 1948 over $3,000,000,000 more than the total appropriations allowed by Congress during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947.

When we deduct the estimated expenditures for 1948 of $36,700,000,000 from the $46,200,000,000 available for expenditure in 1948, the Government will have a balance of $9,500,000,000. If we hold them down to the 1947 rate of expenditure, it will have a balance of nearly $13,000,000,000—see footnote A.

WAR AND NAVY OVER-ALL APPROPRIATIONS

The amount available for expenditure for all purposes by the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, according to the Budget, is $10,038,000,000. The amount available for expenditure by the Navy Department for the same fiscal year is $6,618,000,000. The total amount available for expenditure by the War and Navy Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, will be $16,656,000,000, providing we give them everything they ask for. If we add a $300,000,000 supplemental budget request, not in the Budget but now before us, they will have approximately $17,000,000,000 available for expenditure in 1948. A 10-percent cut would give us a $1,700,000,000 reduction. A 15-percent cut would save $2,550,000,000 and leave the armed forces $14,460,000,000 available for expenditure during the fiscal year 1948. Yet General Eisenhower, Secretary of War Patterson, Secretary of the Navy Forrestal, and others are broadcasting over the country that they cannot take this cut without wrecking national defense, crippling the Air Corps, and scuttling the Navy.

Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest respect and affection for General Eisenhower, Admiral Nimitz, Secretary of War Patterson, and Secretary of the Navy Forrestal. However, spending $46,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' hard-earned money is not a matter of affection but is a hard-boiled business proposition with me. I want to say very emphatically to President Truman and his administration, "If you cannot operate this Government during the third year after the war with less than $46,000,000,000 available for expenditure, you and your administration ought to get out and let someone else try it"—see footnote B.

I say to Secretary of War Patterson, Secretary of the Navy Forrestal, General Eisenhower, and Admiral Nimitz that if you cannot give us an adequate national defense during the third year after the close of the war with $14,400,000,000 available for expenditure, without wrecking the Air Corps and scuttling the Navy, you ought to step aside and give someone else a chance. I mean just that.

CAN THE ARMY TAKE A $1,500,000,000 CUT IN 1948?

I did not like to take any straight across-the-board cuts as some of you know. I like to put my finger on just where I think we can make the cut and in connection with my own field, War Department expenditures, I believe I can do that. From here on I want to discuss the War Department and the War Department only.

While I believe we can make considerable savings in the Finance and Quartermaster Departments of the Army, I am not discussing these departments. I shall make certain that there are adequate funds to pay, feed, clothe, and house an army of 1,070,000 men including 400,000 for the Air Corps. Any figures that I give or discuss will be costs outside of these items in the Quartermaster and Finance Departments of the Army.

GOVERNMENT AND RELIEF IN OCCUPIED AREAS

First. The War Department asked my committee for $500,000,000 for Government and relief in occupied areas for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947.

Second. The House of Representatives acting upon the recommendations of the Appropriations Committee cut this amount to $350,000,000. The other body put the item back to $500,000,000. The Army used every argument then that is being repeated now. We were told we must give them this $500,000,000, or increase the armed forces in Japan and Germany; that if we did not give them this money there would likely be a revolution in Japan and Germany.

Third. A House-Senate conference committee gave the War Department $425,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, for that purpose and the bill passed the Congress with that amount.

Fourth. According to the budget, the War Department spent $107,269,000 or $21,400,000 a month out of this fund during the first 5 months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, leaving $318,000,000 for the last 7 months.

Yet the War Department is right now asking our committee for $300,000,000 more in spite of the fact that it only spent $107,000,000 during the first 5 months of the year and has $318,000,000 left.

If this appropriation is granted, the War Department will have $618,000,000 or more than $88,000,000 a month for the last 7 months of 1947 as against $107,000,000 or $21,400,000 a month for the first 5 months of this fiscal year. It is asking for a total of $725,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and another $725,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, or a total of $1,450,000,000 for the 2-year period—see footnote A.

Let us analyze this further. Five months of the 2-year period are gone and it has cost us $107,000,000 in these relief funds. If we granted the entire amount for the 2-year period as presented by the budget, the War Department would have $1,343,000,000 for the last 19 months of the 2-year period. Yet the rate of expenditure for the first 5 months was at the rate of $21,400,000 a month, or $264,000,000 a year, or $528,000,000 for the 2-year period. If the War Department continues spending for this 2-year period at the same rate it spent during the first 5 months, it will have $922,000,000 left at the end of the 2-year period. If it doubles its rate of expenditures, it will have more than $400,000,000 left. In fact, budget figures show that if we give them the additional $300,000,000 they are asking for government and relief in occupied areas, they will carry over into the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, or the fourth year after the war, with a balance of $549,000,000. I, for one, do not propose to give them all of this money. I believe we can cut from a half to three-quarters of a billion dollars from this item.

AIR CORPS

First. Total appropriation for the Air Corps for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, was $1,199,500,000.

Second. Total spent during the first 5 months of the fiscal year $338,850,000.

Third. Rate of spending was $67,500,000 a month, or $810,000,000 annually, and remember we are reducing the armed forces from 1,889,690 to 1,070,000 during this fiscal year.

Fourth. The Air Corps will have $389,000,000 unspent if it does not exceed—and it should not exceed—the rate of spending during the first 5 months of the 1947 fiscal year.

Fifth. The amount asked for in the 1948 budget is $850,000,000.

Sixth. If we allow the budget figures, the amount available for expenditure during the fiscal year 1948 will be $1,566,000,000, or $130,000,000 a month, as against $67,500,000 a month during the first 5 months of this year.

Let us assume that the Air Corps will spend at the same rate in 1948 as in 1947. If it does, it will spend $810,000,000 and have an unexpended balance of $756,000,000. The Air Corps budget contains $440,000,000 for construction of new airplanes. I am told the amount for new construction by commercial airlines during the next 3 years totals only $300,000,000. The unliquidated obligations at the end of the fiscal year, if we carry out the program as proposed, will be $416,000,000. For my part I question the advisability of spending $440,000,000 on new airplanes at this time, airplanes some of which will be obsolete in 2 or 3 years. I believe we ought to tool up to produce these planes, produce a certain number of them so our men can learn how to fly them. I do not think we should go into mass production at this time, but we should be ready to go into high speed production on short notice. While the thousands of wartime planes we now have might be considered obsolete when compared to some of these later planes, they are still good fighting planes and I am wondering just who in the world has anything that is better or equal. I want a modern Air Corps. I want to be ready to jump into mass production by tooling up. I want enough modern planes to train our men to try these planes and take the bugs out of them. But I believe such a program can be carried out for less than $440,000,000.

Here is still another point, for illustration. The Air Corps contains money for the Air Transport Command which will have 27,000 officers and men in 1948. I have before me maps showing permanent Army and Navy transport lines both in the United States and overseas. The Army and Navy are duplicating air transport lines across the United States to Alaska, down almost to Australia and into the Dutch Indies. Is there any reason that we should have air transport command lines to Dakar, Monrovia, Cairo, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, and Tehran in Africa and Persia, undoubtedly maintaining airports and crews at those points? While I feel we must have air transport planes, I question advisability of having the Army and Navy duplicating commercial lines, plus the operation of weekly routes all over the world. I believe we can make a great deal of saving here without wrecking the Air Corps.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS

First. The total amount appropriated for engineers' service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, was $816,044,000. The Engineer Corps spent $210,625,000 during the first 5 months of this fiscal year.

Second. Rate of spending during this period was $42,000,000 a month or $504,000,000 a year.

Third. There will remain $312,000,000 in this appropriation on June 30, 1947, if the Engineer Corps is not permitted to spend more per month during the last 7 months than it spent during the first 5 months when we had a large Army. Is there any reason we cannot use this $312,000,000 to reduce the 1948 budget without wrecking the national defense or the Air Corps?

Fourth. The original budget request for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, was $365,000,000 or approximately $30,000,000 a month for Engineer Corps. Total amount available for spending through 1948 if this request is granted, will be $623,000,000 for the year. In addition to this there is a supplemental estimate of $125,000,000 for engineers' service and $100,000,000 for the construction of military posts, making a total of $848,000,000 available for expenditure in 1948. Here we have a department asking for a supplemental appropriation of $225,000,000 before we have even begun to hold hearings on the regular appropriation. If we grant all its requests, its rate of spending during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, will be more than $70,000,000 a month as against $42,000,000 a month for the first 5 months of the present fiscal year, an increase of almost 100 percent. In this budget we find $229,000,000 for maintenance of structures and operation of facilities. I have before me two books, one the program of War Department installations and the second the report of the War Department Installation Board. I have gone over them rather hastily and find that out of 1,300 installations in the United States the Board has recommended that only 88 be unconditionally declared surplus. No wonder whe have $229,000,000 for maintenance and operation of these facilities. It is time to get rid of more of them and cut down the costs. If we allow this department the same rate of spending that it used during the first 5 months of 1947, it will spend $504,000,000 a year. But it will have available $843,000,000, leaving a carryover of $343,000,000. Surely we can make a saving here.

MILITARY AND CIVILIAN PERSONNEL

On July 1, 1946, the War Department had 1,889,690 officers and men. These were to be and are being reduced to 1,070,000 on June 30, 1947, a reduction of 483,000 men, or 32 percent.

On December 31, 1946, it had 162,515 officers and 1,156,968 men, or a total of 1,319,483. Its report shows that on June 30 of this year it proposes to have 146,152 officers and 923,848 men. Between December 31, 1946, and June 30, 1947, it will reduce the enlisted men by 233,120, or 20 percent, and officers from 162,515 to 146,152, a reduction of 16,363 officers, or 10 percent. There will then be 1 officer for every 6⅓ enlisted men, or 3 officers for every 19 enlisted men. I believe we can cut these officers at least 20 percent and take another 16,363 officers from the Regular Army. We have a large pool and will continue to have a large pool of Reserve officers from which to draw. I believe we can safely cut at least an additional 16,000 officers from this list and replace them with enlisted men. In my judgment, the ratio of officers to enlisted men is completely out of balance in making up the over-all strength of 1,070,000.

COST OF ARMY PERSONNEL

According to the Budget, it will cost us $5,713 a year for each of the 63,689 Air Corps officers and $5,383 per year for each of the 82,463 officers other than Air Corps. It cost us $2,800 in 1946 and will cost us $3,150 in 1948 for every soldier for pay, allowances, food, clothing, medical care, and maintenance of quarters. No wonder the captain who wrote a story appearing in last week's issue of the Saturday Evening Post said he could live the life of Riley, have servants, and still save $300 a month. His income was $5,700 a year. I recall a captain named ENGEL who served in World War I, who is now talking to you. He was paid $2,400 a year, 10 percent for foreign service, and paid $60 a month for rations and quarters, and he did not live the life of Riley, with servants, while he was in the army of occupation in World War I, and, of course, there is nothing sacred to him about cutting off a few dollars from occupational forces to take some of the Riley living costs off the backs of our taxpayers.

CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

First. On December 30, 1946, the War Department had 629,194 civilian employees, 189,961 of whom were overseas and 439,233 in the United States.

Second. The War Department proposes to have 469,000 civilian employees in the Army in 1948 or more than 1 civilian employee for every 2 enlisted men in the Army. Of these, 105,000 will be overseas and 364,000 in the United States. This does not include the thousands of civilian employees who will be paid out of the military government appropriation. If we pass this budget as the War Department asks us, the Army will have the following personnel:

Officers	146,152
Civilian employees	469,000
Total	615,152
Enlisted men	923,848

We will have six officers and civilian employees for every nine enlisted men in 1948. When you try to cut them, they say you are wrecking national defense and wrecking the Air Corps.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion let me repeat the budget figures I started out with. If we give the President what he asks for, there will be available for expenditure in 1948, 3 years after the conclusion of the war, $46,200,000,000, or nearly one-third the assessed valuation of the United States in 1939. The Government will spend $36,698,000,000 or more than $3,000,000,000 a month. It has spent during the first 5 months of the fiscal year 1947, $14,000,000,000 or at the rate of $2,800,000,000 a month. It now expects to exceed that rate of expenditure by $200,000,000 a month.

The War Department will have available for expenditure $10,038,000,000 and the Navy Department $6,618,000,000. If we add the $300,000,000 supplemental for government and relief in occupied areas, the two Departments will have available for expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, nearly $17,000,000,000. A 15-percent reduction would amount to $2,550,000,000, the exact amount of reduction the Budget Committee had in mind. If the Navy budget is analyzed as I have the War Department, I believe we will be able to increase the saving by at least half a billion and still have a fully adequate Army and Navy to back up our foreign policy.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, let me say this: This is my eleventh year on the War Department subcommittee, the most critical period in the history of our Nation. I go back and think of the days of Dunkirk when I saw our country turning what little ammunition and the few guns we had over to England to prevent the collapse of the British Empire. That was before we had entered the war. A few of us on the subcommittee sweat blood during that time when we were trying to convert a shotgun ammunition capacity to a wartime need. I do not want to go through that period again and I want no one else to go through that experience. There is no one who wants adequate national defense more than I do. I believe we can have that adequate defense and a sizeable saving, too, by honest and sincere cooperation between the War and Navy Departments and Congress, cutting off every unnecessary dollar and giving us a dollar's worth of national defense for every dollar we spend. That is all I am asking. If we do it, you will be amazed at the saving.

Footnote A: It takes time to obligate certain new appropriations. It is for this reason that I prefer to consider all estimated expenditures against all available expenditures for any given year.

Footnote B: The total assessed valuation of every piece of property in the United States as fixed by local assessing officers was only $150,000,000,000 in 1939.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee will indulge me to talk on a nonpartisan basis for a few minutes on this business of trying to get some good, common business sense into the management of our fiscal affairs.

The reorganization bill, which was the child of about 90 or 100 Members of Congress, was supported by more than two-thirds of the Members on both sides of the aisle. It has been supported thoroughly by the Republican leadership, by our Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], and by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and others in the House. The Senators on the Republican side in the Senate have given far more than lip service to this step forward, which was designed to strengthen the hand of the Congress in the handling of the job the Constitution placed upon it. What weakening of the act thus far has not been by their encouragement, but has largely occurred through lack of understanding—or an unwillingness of Members or committee chairmen to live up to its provisions.

I am glad the Budget was brought in. I am not ready to stand here on the floor and say that the legislative budget, which I consider to be one of the major achievements of reorganization, is a failure. The very fact that we here today are discussing the merits and the demerits of the first attempt to provide a legislative budget has caused more comment, more joint study, and more consideration of the two most important items of fiscal affairs—how much money do we have coming in, and how much money do we expect to spend—than has ever been occasioned in any entire session since I have been here. Only by relating these two all-important items in one congressional action can we approach a real fiscal policy or carry one out.

My worry, however, is that this first budget is an experiment. It is new. We have had no signposts to go by, no past experience of the joint committee at work. Worse than that, we have had no staff work going on for 6 or 7 months to help us to know how and where we can effect these cuts.

If there was any one motivation behind the Legislative Budget in the fiscal section of the reorganization bill it was to try to get away from the meat-ax method of slashing without regard to the effects it would have on the operation of Government. We hoped that we could effect hundreds of economies in a business-management way, with auditors, with specialists, with skilled men searching with a surgeon's knife to take off the excess in the many, many, many places that you and I know have waste and duplication in this vast Federal enterprise of ours that costs between thirty and thirty-seven billion dollars.

I cannot blame the Budget Committee that brings in this report except to say that I doubt that they realize the importance the Nation is attaching to the action we take here in adopting a Legislative Budget today. This budget is not a pious hope, a well-intentioned guess, or a New Year's resolution as some older Members have characterized it. It must be, as the Reorganization Act intended, a well considered, reliable, and responsible estimate by a responsible Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman think it would be advisable under the circumstances to defer the matter for a few weeks and afford an opportunity for the accumulation of data on which to base an authoritative conclusion?

Mr. MONRONEY. I am glad the distinguished minority member asked me that. In the original bill on reorganization, as it passed the Senate, the date for consideration of the legislative budget was fixed at April 15. The bill came to the House with that date in it and it was only at the positive insistence of the members of the Committee on Appropriations that those of us that had to do with the bill in the House compromised and said, "We will put it up to February 15," knowing at the time it would probably be a premature date.

Mr. CANNON. The Appropriations Committee took no such position officially. I am certain I did not concur in any such change.

Mr. MONRONEY. I do not intend to attach any blame, but perhaps after we have had a year or 2 or 3 years' experience we might take the February 15 date.

But this year is an unusual situation. My friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] says that if we err we should err on the side of economy. Gentlemen, I am afraid we are looking at this in the wrong way.

I think if we err this time in fixing a ceiling, let us err on the side of fixing a ceiling that we can live under. The people of America expect Congress to be a responsible agency in the handling of the fiscal affairs of this Nation, and if we pass irresponsible and unreliable Budget figures now which we cannot come within 2, 3, or 4 billion dollars of living within when we finish the individual appropriation bills the blame will fall on the Congress itself. The blame will not be only on the majority party, but on the entire Congress, which we tried to strengthen by passing the Reorganization Act.

I would far rather, as we start this new and useful budget mechanism, to set a spending ceiling figure high enough so that when the session is over we will not only have lived up to our pledge to stay within it, but we will have a margin of safety left. The Congress would then stand in a better light with the people we represent as being responsible. What extra margin that we might be able to cut under our own spending ceiling—set in advance of the minute examination of appropriation requests, would be hailed as an extra windfall for economy, and perhaps could add to the reduction of the public debt, rather than be lost forever in the form of a tax reduction.

I strenuously object to the manner in which passage of the resolution is being handled here today in its first trial. I don't think closed rules, limited debate and waiting points of order to be good legislative practice, particularly on a bill of this great national importance. Surely the majority have the votes to work its will without binding the House to accepting the violation in spirit of the Reorganization Act. By the closed rule and waiver of points of order, we are not permitted the opportunity to even vote for amendments concerning a figure some of us could support. Those of us who oppose the $2,200,000,000 reduction on the national defense appropriations are not given an opportunity to amend the act to place this unwise reduction back into the bill.

Those of us who favor a definite fixed amount of mandatory debt reduction are not permitted to insert that into the resolution despite the clear intent of the Reorganization Act to provide for it. I believe, sincerely, that if points of order had not been waived by the rule, a point of order would lie against this entire business—because of the failure of the joint committee to make any specific or definite recommendation as to the amount of debt retirement we are providing for.

Section 138A:

If the estimated receipts exceed the estimated expenditures, such report shall contain a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt.

Surely it is not my understanding that the language of the report on page 5, paragraph 6, of the summary and recommendations, which read:

"The committee recommends that a portion of excess receipts over expenditures be applied to the public debt," fills this requirement in the act. I do not think this vague statement that a "portion" of the excess will inform the millions of American bondholders, or others who are worried about our record-breaking public debt of $260,000,000,000, of what we really intend to do about debt retirement. I think these people would like to know that we intend to reduce this debt, and do it by as much as we possiby can. What portion of this excess will be devoted to debt retirement—one hundred million, a billion, two billion, or the suggested six and one-half billion? Only paragraph 6 informs us "a portion of the excess of receipts over expenditures be applied on the public debt."

Mr. Chairman, we are, indeed, making a very bad start in the use of a valuable mechanism in the conduct of the Nation's fiscal affairs. The irresponsible use of this mechanism—the Legislative Budget—will not only discredit the Congress, should our estimates prove to be irresponsible—as I firmly believe they will—but will also discredit the mechanism of the legislative budget itself. Irresponsibility of our estimates will cause the Nation to eventually believe that the mechanism, as well as the Congress, is unable to handle our fiscal affairs in a sound business way.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to have this time to add a few words to the debate on this highly important subject, which relates to the attitude of the Members of Congress upon the subject of economizing or reducing the cost of our Government. I was greatly alarmed when the vote was recorded upon the rule on this measure. On that vote, if I mistake not, every Member on the minority side voted against the rule, which was a vote against the consideration of the pending House Concurrent Resolution 20, today; while, on the other hand, every vote on the majority side was cast for the rule, and for the consideration of the pending concurrent resolution, and for the consideration of economy in our Government. That forms a direct and a positive issue upon this subject. May I say that the people of this Nation are deeply interested in economy in our Government; the people are demanding that economy be practiced; they want those economies put into effect at the very earliest moment, and they want those economies practiced to such an extent that the people will secure some relief in their taxes and their obligations to their Government.

Mr. Chairman, it is not the purpose of this resolution to practice economy at the expense of our national defense or our security as a Nation. We recognize that the people want an adequate national defense, and they will have that defense for the security of the people.

All appropriations which are necessary for our national defense will be promptly granted, and with the adoption of the pending resolution, which is merely an expression—an expression which will materialize into a reality, I am confident—when the Army and the Navy come before the Appropriation Committee and ask for money, they will merely make a showing of the amount to which they believe they are entitled, and when those requests are sustained by the facts, they will receive that to which they are entitled. However, may I say in passing that with approximately 1,000,000 civilians upon the pay roll of the military and naval forces, there is ample room for a cut—a deep cut—in those appropriations; there are more civilians upon those pay rolls at the moment than we had on the pay rolls in all departments and agencies of our Government during World War I. We happen to be at peace, at the moment; yet those civilians are retained on the pay roll, and they will be so retained until the end of the present fiscal year, which will not expire until June 30, 1947.

Therefore do not be misled by the argument that the passage of the pending resolution will cripple the Army or the Navy. That will not happen. We will maintain our national defense, and we will maintain the security of our Nation. The reductions proposed will be made in the agencies and in the departments of our Government in which there are too many employees and in which too much money has been expended and wasted. We must get down to business in our country, and we must operate in a businesslike manner, if we are to save our country.

Mr. Chairman, as this debate proceeds, let us distinctly remember that the appropriations already made, and which appropriations are available for use in every department of our government, until June 30, 1947. There is no way that those appropriations can now be disturbed. They are fixed, and the agencies of our Government have access to that money, and that money will be available until June 30, 1947. The resolution, now pending, relates to the appropriations for the next fiscal year, commencing on July 1, 1947, and ending on June 30, 1948. This same fact applies to every department and agency of our Government, including our military and naval forces. This point must be made crystal clear, so all may understand the period of time which the appropriations already made will apply, and the period of time to which the pending resolution will relate. I am convinced the people will want to know that fact, as it is pertinent in this discussion.

Mr. Chairman, I am convinced many of the Members, here present, want to economize in the future. We have witnessed the "spending period," and this period of spending will be a loadstone upon the necks of the people now here, and to those not yet in being, and this resolution is, in a measure, to assure us, and the people, that there will not be any recurrence of that area. The people of every walk in life are demanding that this Congress economize, and that all spending be limited to the actual needs and necessities in our Government. The people so expressed themselves upon that issue at the last general election, and they are still expressing their feelings upon that issue by written communications and by and through the public press. The people know just what they want. This is their Government. They are the paymasters. And, may I say, that in every agency and department of our Government I expect to use my efforts to reduce the funds available for their use to the very minimum—to that which is absolutely necessary for the maintenance of that agency and department of Government, without waste and without extravagance—and I am certain every Member should subscribe to that doctrine.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, when we give an expression, such as we will do on this resolution, we are merely conforming to the requirements of the provisions of the Reorganization Act, which was passed when the majority was on the other side of the aisle—on your side—on the Democratic side of the aisle. We are merely complying with that law, passed by you, and it is my hope that you, now of the minority, will give this question fair and just consideration, before the final vote comes, and express your views upon the subject of your belief on the question of economy. Remember, a vote for this resolution will announce that you are in favor of practicing economy to the extent of $6,000,000,000, and a vote against the pending resolution will announce that you are not in favor of expressing yourself as being in favor of practicing economy, as indicated, and thereby giving the overburdened taxpayers a break at a time when they need help. In order to maintain our national defense we must remember that we must have a sound and strong financial structure; we must have and maintain a strong and forceful Nation behind the line of the Army and Navy; we must have a people able to cope with any situation which may confront us in the future. This can never be accomplished if the very substance of our Nation and our resources are sapped away by a ruthless and needless waste and spending program. We must face this problem, and we must face it realistically and without fear or favor; we must do those things which will redound to the ultimate benefit of our Nation and to the people.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Texas, our former Speaker, spoke of the need of feeding starving people of the world. We should realize that every time we lay off one Government employee we can feed a dozen or more starving people throughout the world.

Mr. Chairman, I shall support the resolution which reduces the President's Budget for the next fiscal year by $6,000,000,000. The longer we delay the cutting down of this tremendous Government, the more difficult the task will become. Wartime agencies and the wartime expansion of regular agencies of Government became more permanent in character day by day. The only way to reduce expenditures is to make less money available for expenditures.

The President has recommended to the Congress that our expenditures be $37,000,000,000. This exceeds the cost of World War I. It is more than 60 percent of the average national income during the period of the New Deal prior to the war. It is more than three times the Federal Budget for 1940.

Mr. Chairman, it is my belief that the essential functions of Government can be carried on and that a number of meritorious undertakings can proceed on this reduced Budget. The American people have a right to expect the size of our Government to be cut down, the elimination of waste, and full value for every dollar that they pay in taxes. It is regrettable that the War and Navy Departments are not today fighting side by side with the Congress to prevent waste in those departments. We would then have a stronger national defense. I hold no brief for the pacifists who would cripple our defense in this critical period. The way to make our defense strong is to compel these departments to do an honest, efficient job, and give the taxpayers more per dollar than they have ever done before.

Can you find any American who has observed the operations at an Army or Navy base who did not find a gross waste of building materials, automobiles, trucks, gasoline, tools, equipment, and property generally? Can you find such a citizen who will not testify as to waste of manpower, overstaffing, duplication, and needless civilian employees?

The majority of the people living in the district that I have the opportunity to represent do not want the air forces crippled, or any other vital branch crippled, but they are confident that the War Department can get along without a lot of chauffeurs, attendants, escorts, and equipment for officers. The people of America are intelligent. They know that the Navy can stop spending millions of dollars for the most expensive silver finger bowls and still not have it cripple the striking force of the United States Navy.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. HALLECK. I agree that we want to do what is proper and necessary for the armed services, but I have two telegrams which I think are very pertinent at this point in the debate. One is from Boston, Mass., and reads as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., February 19, 1947.
Hon. CHARLES A. HALLECK,
House of Representatives:

Navy request bid on approximately 140,000 pieces of hollow ware, including 80,000 finger bowls and plates. All in expensive design with gadroon mounts and many with fluting and piercing, which adds substantially to cost. Some of salt and pepper shakers of cut glass estimated to cost four times that of ordinary pressed-glass construction. One item, approximately 5,000 sugar bowls, is for the article to be made by plating on 18 percent nickel silver base metal with gadroon mounts. War Assets Administration is continually selling same items as included in current Navy order and within the month circularized us asking for bids on surplus sugar bowls made for Navy during war on brass base without mount; perfectly good for use now. We estimate Navy will pay for sugar bowls in this latest order approximately 10 times what Government will receive for those being sold through War Assets Administration. My guess is this is just a sample of what is going on, and why I think we can have adequate national defense at less than the cost called for in the Budget.

SINCLAIR WEEKS.

The other telegram from Meriden, Conn., is as follows:

The Honorable CHARLES A. HALLECK,
House of Representatives:

Following Sinclair Weeks telegram Navy request here bid on approximately 140,000 pieces silver-plated holloware included in which 38,000 finger bowls and 80,000 plates for same. All in expensive design fluting and piercing and gadroon mounted border adding substantially to cost. Also included 23,000 salt and peppers with cut-glass linings. Cut-glass linings today are very expensive. Other items also. Understand War Assets Administration offering surplus items made for Navy during war apparently good for current use. My guess is this is just sample of operations which make me believe we can have adequate national defense at less than the cost called for in the Budget.

ROY C. WILCOX.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Sinclair Weeks is no pacifist. He served with distinction in the United States Senate as did his father. His father served also as Secretary of War. Mr. Sinclair Weeks is an open advocate of a strong Army and Navy and he is for peacetime military training. Three of his sons and two of his sons-in-law served in World War II.

If an honest attempt is made to bring about economy, there is no good reason why this $6,000,000,000 slice in the Federal Budget should cripple the national defense or any other needed and desirable function of the Federal Government.

The businessmen of my State are harassed and hampered by mimeographed pamphlets and bulletins appearing in the mail from the Department of Commerce. They offer to the businessmen a lot of services that the businessmen do not want and which would not be any good if they used them. The cost of franking this mail is the small portion of it, but the cost of the research men, the publicity artists, the stenographers, typists, messengers, writers, editors, and others, as well as the rent on the office space used in carrying on such unwanted and unneeded programs is tremendous. What I have said of the Department of Commerce can be said of a lot of other Government agencies. These agencies should stop trying to force their services on the American people.

My own State of Nebraska has Federal offices that ought to be eliminated. For instance, during the war, employment offices had to be set up in many, many communities to solicit needed war workers. Those offices do not handle agricultural labor, yet they remain. The number of these offices should be greatly reduced. Every effort should be made to take the Federal administrative hand out of the affairs of State government. It not only costs the Federal Government more but it makes State government more costly. The maximum amount of local self-government that can be had is not only the sure way to perpetuate freedom but it is the most economical way to operate.

The administration of the disposal of surplus property is a national disgrace. An individual in whom I have great confidence writes that he has been in the warehouses of the War Assets Administration in New York, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Dayton, Indianapolis, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Omaha. He says:

In every case they have 100 percent too much help. Their records are lousy, incomplete, and invariably inaccurate. They have a lot of chair warmers and few competent and experienced men, and Washington ties their hands with red tape.

Mr. Chairman, when the Joint Committee on the Budget meets next year, a better job can be done. The shortage of time has prevented that committee from giving proper consideration to this huge, burdensome, staggering Budget of the President's for $37,000,000,000, which is the product of a Government bureau of 700 employees. This cut of $6,000,000,000 represents a determination on the part of this Congress to take the Government off the backs of the people and reduce it in size so that it can be tolerated and paid for.

If the Federal expenditures are ever to be reduced, the Congress must reduce them. If the affairs of this Republic cannot be financed in the next fiscal year with $31,500,000,000, the people may rise up in their righteous wrath and elect a Congress that can operate this Government economically.

The time has come for honesty and forthrightness in government. The bureaus may fool the Congress, but they cannot fool the people. Last April, when the demand was being made for a pay raise for civil-service employees, the Civil Service Commission and the Bureau of the Budget stated that by June 30, 1947, the number of employees would be 1,710,000. The President's budget, which is prepared by the Bureau of the Budget, calls for an average employment for the fiscal year which begins July 1, 1947, of 2,100,000 employees. Can it be that Government figures are different for different occasions?

The people have every reason to expect great things from the Eightieth Congress. The founding fathers devised a system of government that gave to the Congress control over the purse strings. If our Government is to be cut down, the debt reduced, and taxes lowered, the Eightieth Congress must make the start. If we fail, the result will be far-reaching and disastrous. During recent days, I have been studying the history of our national debt. Our Republic had to assume an obligation for considerable sums when it was organized, but this debt was more or less gradually reduced until the Civil War and following it. For many years following the Civil War, we had an unbroken record of debt reduction. The debt rose a little in the period of the Spanish-American War.

I want to give you some details concerning the history of the debt since the turn of the century. The Fifty-sixth Congress ended in March 1901. The per capital national debt in that year was $15.71. The Fifty-seventh Congress, ending 2 years later was controlled by the Republican Party. They reduced the per capita debt to $14.40. The Fifty-eighth Congress was another Republican Congress and they further reduced the per capita debt to $13.60. In the Fifty-ninth, Sixtieth, and Sixty-first Congresses, the Republicans controlled both the House and the Senate. They continued a program of debt reduction and when the Sixty-first Congress ended in 1911, the per capita debt was $12.28.

In the Sixty-second Congress, which ended March 1913, there was a Republican majority in the Senate but a Democratic majority in the House. That Congress reduced the per capita national debt the sum of 2 cents. The Democrats controlled both Houses of Congress in the Sixty-third Congress, which ended March 1915. They reduced the per capita debt by 43 cents. For that year, it was $11.83.

The Sixty-fourth Congress was a Democratic Congress. It ended in March 1917 and the per capita debt for that year had risen to $25.87. The Sixty-fifth Congress was the World War I Congress. Both Houses were controlled by the Democratic Party. The national debt in 1919 had risen to $240.09 per capita.

The Republican Party controlled the Sixty-sixth Congress. It came to a close in March 1921. The per capita debt for that year had been reduced to $221.09. The Republicans also controlled the Sixty-seventh Congress which ended 2 years later with a reduced per capita debt of $200.09. The Sixty-eighth Congress was a Republican Congress. It ended its labors in 1925 with the per capita debt reduced to $177.82. The Sixty-ninth, Seventieth, and Seventy-first Congresses were likewise controlled by the Republican Party. These Congresses ended with the per capita national debt being reduced to $156.04, $139.40, and $135.37 respectively.

The Seventy-second Congress was from December 1931 to March 1933. The Democratic Party gained control of the House of Representatives and when the Seventy-second Congress adjourned, the national debt had risen to $179.21 per capita.

In the Seventy-third, Seventy-fourth, Seventy-fifth, and Seventy-sixth Congresses, the Democratic Party had substantial majorities in both Houses. The per capita debt rose steadily, it being at the close of each Congress $213.65, $261.20, $285.43, and $368.08, respectively.

The Seventy-seventh Congress was the first World War II Congress. The Democratic Party had a clear majority in both Houses. The national debt at the time it closed had risen to $540.68. Likewise, the Seventy-eighth Congress, which ended January 2, 1945, was a war Congress and controlled by the same party. The per capita debt had then risen to $1,486.

The Seventy-ninth Congress came into being on January 3, 1945. Eight months later World War II came to an end. The last 16 months of the Seventy-ninth Congress were months of peace. Retrenchments should have been in order and vast sums of money recovered from the sale of surplus property. The per capita debt, however, at the close of the Congress was $1,831.

The men and women who believe in America, who hold her bonds, fight her wars, and pay the taxes are concerned about the trend of our national debt. The Eightieth Congress will determine that trend, Mr. Chairman, what are we going to do?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I am a new man in this House. I came here with the idea of seeing legislation passed that would benefit the people of this country. I came here with the idea of going into legislation with my eyes open and voting as my conscience dictated to me. I did not come here as a Democrat necessarily, because we have only an insignificant number of Republicans in my district, so I do not have to vote along partisan lines. I vote as my conscience tells me to vote and I do not intend to go into this thing blindfolded.

The action of the Republicans in reporting this reminds me of a bunch of blind hogs in a bowling alley—they know they want to get out of the door but they do not know where it is or how to get to it. For six long weeks 102 men on this committee have been working together over here in an attempt to cut the Budget that the President reported in a clear, concise businesslike itemized form. You are trying to cut that budget, and at the end of six long weeks, after listening to the remarks and after hearing the testimony of experts and after getting the opinions of the distinguished economist—the gentleman from New York—and others, you come out and report a little bill that says, simply, "Let's cut it down to $31,000,000,000—cut it $6,000,000,000." Well, I do not know in what direction you intend to go, I do not know what you are going to cut or where the cuts are coming, and I cannot follow you on that. Are you going to cut soil conservation and leave some useless agency untouched? Or are you going to cut the useless agencies and leave soil conservation untouched?

We are all in favor of cutting out useless bureaus and we are in favor of cutting down the personnel of those useless bureaus, but let us be sure they are useless rather than indispensable before we swing the ax.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, the membership of this House is today acting under a mandate of the reorganization law commanding that the Congress shall establish the ceiling for Federal expenditures and appropriations for the fiscal year 1948. The law requires that this be done in February. We Republicans and some of our Democratic friends are supporting the resolution recommending a $6,000,000,000 reduction in the thirty-seven billion five hundred million sum requested by the President for the operation of the Federal Government for the fiscal year 1948.

A majority of our Democratic friends seem to be elated and overjoyed with the thought and conviction that the New Deal in its 14 years of taxing and taxing and spending and spending has created such a multitude of new offices and turned loose such swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out their substance, and has piled such a debt on the backs of the people that we cannot reduce expenditures, cannot lower taxes, and cannot make a payment on the national debt.

We Republicans are today voting in obedience to an emphatic mandate from the people who sent us here to cut the Budget and to bring it into balance with the Federal income.

In 1932, Candidate Roosevelt promised to reduce the expenses of the Government 25 percent, to end deficit spending and to reduce taxes. His promise was honored more in the breach than in the observance. When he entered the White House his campaign pledges went out the window.

When he became President the national debt was $19,500,000,000. When Pearl Harbor came on December 7, 1941, the Nation's debt under Roosevelt's New Deal had risen to $66,000,000,000. The New Deal spending spree grew speedily into the world's greatest orgy, and saturnalia in the dissipation of the Nation's wealth. F. D. Roosevelt spent more money than all of 31 predecessors combined.

The utter abandon, the unfettered prodigality of the New Deal spenders exceed that of the prodigal son. They could, if they would, learn a lesson from him.

In the fifteenth chapter of the Gospel according to Luke is the parable of the prodigal son:

Then drew near unto Him (the Saviour) all the publicans and sinners for to hear Him. * * *

And He said, A certain man had two sons, and the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living.

And not many days after the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living.

And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want.

And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him unto his fields to feed swine.

And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat; and no man gave unto him.

And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger!

I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee,

And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants,

And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.

And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son.

He repented and was forgiven. Unlike our friends on the other side of the House, the prodigal son came to himself, repented, sought forgiveness and asked only to be as one of his father's hired servants.

And there is this further fact in favor of the prodigal son—he wasted his own substance. The unrepentant cut purses of the Republic—wasted not their own money in their riotous maladministration—they dissipated the hard-earned money of the taxpayers.

They want to keep on spending and spending and spending with the abandon that made Washington unique among the cities of the earth. All roads lead to Washington. It is the only capital in the world where things are given away. In the heyday of the Roosevelt spending, he scorned the suggestion that some security should be had from Russia and other recipients of our generosity. He flippantly and gaily asked, with a toss of the head and a flick of his cigarette, "Who cares about the silly old dollar mark?" Thus billions of the people's money burned while presidential cigarettes to ashes turned.

A majority of the American people came to themselves on November 5, 1946. This Nation spent in waging this war and in aiding allies who have since turned against us the unprecedented sum of $400,000,000,000. Our national debt today is $262,000,000,000. The Republican Members of this House last fall entered into a solemn contract with the people who sent them here to preserve our system of free enterprise by freemen and freewomen in a free country. To do this, we must keep this country and the Federal Government solvent and strong.

The citizens who own $90,000,000,000 of United States bonds, the banks, the insurance companies, the trust companies who own billions of dollars of these bonds must be paid the interest on their bonds as it accrues and the principal amount of these bonds when they mature.

I know what my people expect and are demanding. The businessman, the industrialist, the banker, the farmer, the man in the street, in the factory, in the mines are of one mind. They want this senseless, unnecessary spending of money we do not have for things we do not need and can do without stopped. Now is the time to stop. The way to reduce is to reduce.

That President Truman's proposal to spend $37,500,000,000 in the fiscal year 1948 can be cut $6,000,000,000 and reduced to $31,500,000,000 is supported by the report of the House Special Committee on Postwar Economic Policy and Planning filed on December 12, 1946.

This committee was composed of the following distinguished and able Members of the Seventy-ninth Congress: Jere Cooper, Francis E. Walter, Orville Zimmerman, Jerry Voorhis, John R. Murdock, Walter A. Lynch, Thomas J. O'Brien, John E. Fogarty, Eugene Worley, Democrats; and Charles L. Gifford, B. Carroll Reece, Richard J. Welch, Charles A. Wolverton, Clifford R. Hope, Jesse P. Wolcott, Jay LeFevre, and Sid Simpson, Republicans.

I quote from the eleventh report of the committee, pages 66, 67, and 68. In its report the committee said:

All those who have studied fiscal policies of the Federal Government, however much they differ on other views, agree that during a period of high employment and income there should be a surplus in Federal revenues to apply toward reduction of the debt. It forebodes danger for the future if we cannot under these very favorable conditions handle the fiscal affairs of the Government in such a way that the Budget can be balanced. The committee, therefore, strongly urges that additional efforts be made to reduce expenditures during the remainder of the fiscal year so that the Budget can be brought into balance and a surplus created.

The Budget for the current year represents 25 percent of the national income, whereas in 1939 the Federal Budget was only 12 percent of the national income, and prior to 1931 it was less than 5 percent. The Budget, therefore, has much more significance to the whole economy than previously. It should be realized that an expenditure of $41,000,000,000 by the Government affects not only the amount left to the individual to spend for himself, but, insofar as it is spent in goods and services, reduces the amount of materials, factory space, and workers who are available to produce the goods for which there is great demand.

The committee calls attention to the slow progress which is being made in the reduction of the number of civilian employees of the executive branch of the Government. From a total of 2,920,000 reached in August 1945 the force had been reduced to 2,150,000 in October 1946, but it is still more than double the August 1939 level of 909,000.

In its fourth report the committee estimated that the cost of the Federal Government in 1940, if reduced to the basis of cost per family of four, was $180. If a postwar Federal expenditure of $20,000,000,000 were assumed, it estimated the cost would be increased to $570 per family, and if the cost of State and local governments were added the total would be about $900 per year per family of four.

With the Federal Budget at the $41,000,000,000 level, the cost of the Federal Government per family of four is $1,130. If the cost of State and local governments were added it would bring the burden up to $1,430 per family. The serious effects of such a burden should be obvious. The committee wishes to reiterate more strongly than ever the necessity of reducing expenditures substantially. It realizes that we cannot reach the $20,000,000,000 level during the next fiscal year. It would, however, urge serious consideration to reducing expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, to $30,000,000,000, with further substantial reduction during the following year, but with the objective of a $20,000,000,000 budget at an early date.

I have never yet seen a calf or a bureaucrat who when threatened with weaning but that bawled and screamed. Let us go ahead and apply the knife. It hurts, but it will do us and our friends good. Many of us were raised under the old dispensation where our fathers and mothers gave us castor oil under a closed rule, a gag rule. It did us good. If it takes a gag rule to administer this medicine of economy, well and good.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS] may be allowed to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Chairman, I enjoyed the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT]. He described how he, as a veteran and a man active in veterans' affairs, felt that a sound economy was most essential for our Government. I entirely agree with him, and I believe that every veteran on the Democratic side of the House is also in favor of a sound economy. But, Mr. Chairman, what we are opposing today is not sound economy, but an ill-conceived act which might result in more veterans—the veterans of World War III.

The gentleman from California [Mr. JACKSON] has asked me if I sincerely think that he or the other Republican veterans would do anything to weaken or endanger our national security. I hasten to state emphatically, no, of course they would not do so deliberately or intentionally. But this cut in the armed forces appropriation is a matter of judgment. Whose judgment shall we accept in this case, that of the war veterans on the Republican side, most of whom had distinguished military records, but most of whom will certainly agree that they are not better qualified to pass on what constitutes adequate national defenses than General Eisenhower, Admiral Nimitz, or such distinguished civilian experts as Secretary of War Patterson or Secretary of Navy Forrestal?

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] released to the press a speech in which he called for a reduction of expenditures for armed forces by 15 percent or for the resignation of Secretary Patterson, Secretary Forrestal, General Eisenhower, and Admiral Nimitz. That is a bold-faced admission that the Republicans expect to cut the armed forces appropriation by $1,750,000,000. It is obvious that they expect to cut into national defense. During the war we had 11,000,000 men in the armed services. Today we have less than 1,500,000, and on top of that these gentlemen on the left side of the aisle propose to cut the appropriation by $1,750,000,000 and further reduce the number of men in the services. Obviously such a cut will cripple our national defenses and world prestige.

I am further opposed to this cut, for it is uncertain, vague, and indefinite. This cut might easily wreck the Federal Housing Agency, the rivers and harbors development, old-age assistance program, Federal education program, soil-conservation program, and others that are vitally necessary to our economy.

I am for economy, but not blind meat-ax economy, where no bill of particulars will specifically indicate where the cuts will be made. Every useless, excessive Federal employee and all outmoded, purposeless Federal agencies should be eliminated immediately. I certainly want economy and lower taxes, but not to the extent where they weaken Secretary Marshall's position at the conference table and endanger our national defense.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, we have been doing a lot of talking about cutting the Budget today but, of course, we know that no one here is silly enough to believe today that that is what we are doing. We are talking about a sort of Ladies' Aid Society resolution which it has been explained by various learned Members of this body has no legal effect whatsoever. It is just a sort of effort to bind you in your conscience so that some day if a bill comes out, a bill that you know nothing about at the present time, that you will vote for it sight unseen. I have been here for some 12 years and more, and I will say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to my good friends on the Republican side, that many times I have voted to reduce appropriations, but I have never yet done it sight unseen. Never yet have I been willing to be gagged and blindfolded at the same time. I have never been willing to surrender the keeping of my conscience to somebody else and agree months in advance to some unknown proposition. That was not what I promised to my people in Missouri that I would do when I came down here; and I am not going to start now.

I remember one afternoon a good many months ago there was a bill before this House seeking to appropriate $75,000,000 to buy free lunches for the children of America when their parents were perhaps better able to pay for them than they had ever been before in history. I came down in this well and pleaded with the Members on the Republican side as I did with my friends on the Democratic side to save that money and vote against the bill. Imagine my surprise when you gentlemen who are today so economy-minded walked down into this well by the dozens on a teller vote and voted to spend that $75,000,000. When the time comes, and actual appropriation bills come before the House, a good many of you are going to do the same thing that you have done in the past. You are not voting on them today. The only thing you are doing is what the old Greek sailor, Ulysses, did some two or three thousand years ago. You probably remember the story. He knew his ship was going by a certain dangerous rock and on the dangerous rock there was a siren, a very alluring lady. He did not trust himself. He was just worried that maybe he would give way to her charms and he could not handle his ship. So he called his strong men in and said, "Bind me to the mast so I cannot help myself when the time comes." That is what you gentlemen are trying to do today. You are trying to bind yourselves to the mast so that when the free-lunch bills come up again you will be helpless, you will not be able to vote for them as you have in the past.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS].

TIGHTENING OUR BELTS

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, our Nation is in the throes of acute debt indigestion.

From every quarter of the country there comes a demand that we reduce governmental spending, cut the Budget, balance the Budget, begin to pay off the debt, and reduce taxes all along the line.

At the same time there continues to pour in from abroad demands for help; warnings that if we do not continue to feed, finance, and generally support the peoples stricken by war, that starved old people will die; starved middle-aged people will linger on into a horrible old age; and that undernourished children will grow up to become a vast Old World criminal class who will bring on an era of reckless anarchy in Europe and the Orient.

Meanwhile, every project that has been started or talked about has its proponents, who do not want their own proposition disturbed by withholding of appropriations.

The people at home continue to want all of the multifarious services the Federal Government assumed and performed for them through governmental agencies over the past 15 years.

We knew when we went into the war that the continuing cost of that war in veterans' benefits would be staggering. That is a national problem from which there is no escape and from which we do not desire to escape. When men and women are called from their homes, and their peaceful pursuits, and their plans for careers, and are sent across the seas to fight in the most horrible war—there is no way in which we who stayed at home can ever repay those men and women for the suffering they experienced, and the memories they will carry with them to their graves.

Certainly no one questions the wisdom or the justice of the Nation making up to those who were on the fighting lines as much as possible in benefits for the lost opportunities, the interrupted or blasted careers, the human agony, and the physical suffering they endured and which many of them must continue to endure. That is a part of a dreadful war and a responsibility this Nation took on, and will always take on, whenever it calls on its people to engage in war.

We are told that we are heading into a very serious situation because of the teaching staffs of our schools being underpaid. They are underpaid. They are disgracefully underpaid. But this question, like many others, involves a further problem which we must solve. That problem is whether or not we are going to continue to set up systems of Federal grants in aid which will allow centralized government at Washington to assume control of our very lives or whether we are going to try to work out a system whereby any grants in aid can be equitably distributed among various States, to be controlled by the States, and still be safeguarded against an attitude on the part of some of the States that they can be as extravagant as they like because it is not their money.

A good many of the States have sizable working balances in their own treasuries. Over the last 15 or 20 years, however, the Federal Government has assumed more and more of the functions which the States and local governing units used to perform for themselves, the Federal Government began more and more to invade and take over the tax resources of the States and local governing units. Finally they became mendicants, as it were, at the door of the White House and on the steps of the United States Treasury.

It is time we stood off and took a frank look at our situation. We cannot have our cake and eat it too—stereotyped as that phrase may be.

We cannot have economy in Federal spending; a balancing of the Budget; payment on the debt; and a reduction in taxes, and at the same time continue all of the spending, and all of the extra-governmental functions which the Federal Government has been performing.

Either the American people are going to pull in their belts, and prepare to deny themselves some of the governmental services they have enjoyed heretofore, or else there will be no balanced budget; there will be no reduction in Government spending or in taxes.

There are tremendous readjustments which must be made by everybody in this country. Industry, agriculture, all groups, and all sections, must prepare to adopt the most rigid economies, if we are to get America back on a sound, prosperous peacetime basis.

These readjustments are going to be painful. Retrenchments, whether individual, family, or national are always painful.

There is no opiate so dangerous to a people, and to governmental units such as States, and to the Federal Government itself, as the opiate of deficit spending. Pay day has a way of catching up. When pay day comes around, then the pain of readjustment has to be faced.

What we need to do—what we have got to do—in this country is to resurvey our local, State, and National Governments, the functions performed by each, the bureaus which exist under each, and determine which of these functions and bureaus shall be abolished.

Functions do not perform themselves. Whenever the Federal Government, or a State government, takes on a function, there must be created a bureau or a commission, or a department, to perform the function. Each time such a bureau or commission, or department, is created, a new agency for spending public funds comes into action; and we are one step further along the road to national bankruptcy.

There is a strange, but not curious, danger involved in this business of the Federal Government taxing the people and then carrying on services for the people which either local governing units or the people themselves should be performing. In that curious danger lies the secret of growing governmental extravagance and a growing arrogant bureaucracy.

When the member of a family or a clan is in need and is being taken care of, his immediate relatives and friends have him constantly under surveillance; and they see to it that he does not become so accustomed to being cared for by others that he becomes indolent and shiftless. Their criticism keeps him spurred up to efforts of his own to help take care of himself.

When individuals in a community have to be taken care of at public expense, or when bridges have to be built at local expense, or sewer systems have to be constructed at local expense, the local taxpayers know the source of the money. They know the cost of the project and are able to watch the operation. They are conscious of the drain on their own pocketbooks. They are able to keep such expenditures on something like an economical basis, within the bounds of their capacity to pay. In other words, they can confine themselves to expenditures which they can afford.

The moment, however, the Federal Government begins to tax the people and then to hide those taxes in prices of goods and services, in income taxes and inheritance taxes, and in taxes on business which, in turn, must be passed on to the ultimate consumers, the people begin to lose touch with the cost of the projects and the drain on their own pocketbooks. They begin to get a sense of receiving something for nothing at the hands of the Federal Government. As soon as this feeling becomes fixed over the Nation, pressure groups and sections begin to vie with one another as to how much they can get out of the Government at Washington.

Motivated by this sense of getting something for nothing, the people submit to the Federal Government taking over State tax sources, with the final result that the States, counties, and municipalities find themselves dependent upon the Federal Government to hand back to them some of the dollars taken from them.

I was forcibly impressed by a resolution recently adopted by the Eighty-fifth General Assembly of the State of Indiana. I think it contained a message that ought to be pasted on every billboard and published in every newspaper, and adopted by the people of every State in the Union. In plain, forcible language that resolution adopted by the Indiana General Assembly said in part:

> Indiana needs no guardian and intends to have none. We Hoosiers—like the people of our sister States—were fooled for quite a spell with the magicians' tricks that a dollar taxed out of our pockets and sent to Washington will be bigger to us when it comes back. We have taken a good look at said dollar. We find that it lost weight on its journey to Washington and back. The political brokerage of the bureaucrats has been deducted. We have decided that there is no such thing as "Federal" aid. We know that there is no wealth attached that is not already within the boundaries of the 48 States. So we propose henceforward to tax ourselves and take care of ourselves. We are fed up with subsidies, doles, and paternalisms. We are no one's stepchild. We have grown up. We serve notice that we will resist Washington, D. C., adopting us.

There in a very few words is the best statement of America's No. 1 problem, and its solution, that could be devised. "So we propose henceforth to tax ourselves and take care of ourselves." What a grand challenge to the bureaucrats who for 15 years have preached and practiced the doctrine that the American people must be ruled by officials at Washington, D. C.

That sentiment is a healthy and wholesome return to the philosophy of that immortal statesman, Abraham Lincoln, whose birthday we have just celebrated. He clearly saw the danger of the Federal Government extending a policy of paternalism over the States to their detriment when he said:

The legitimate object of government is to do for a community of people whatever they need to have done, but cannot do at all, or cannot so well do, for themselves, in their separate and individual capacities. In all that the people can individually do as well for themselves, government ought not to interfere.

I wish every State legislature in the Union may heed the call of Indiana. That House concurrent resolution adopted by the assembly said in its last paragraph:

Resolved further, That we call upon the legislatures of our sister States and on good citizens everywhere who believe in the basic principles of Lincoln and Jefferson to join with us, and we with them, to restore the American Republic and our 48 States to the foundations built by our fathers.

Yes; cuts in appropriations must be made if this country is to remain economically sound. A starting place is offered us today. By our votes we indicate our earnest desires and intent to begin such reductions in Government spending that will permit this Nation to regain a solid financial footing.

In the recommendation of a $6,000,000,000 estimate of hoped-for reductions in expenditures, we do not desire nor do we intend in any way to impair the efficiency or operation of our armed forces or other agencies of Government. I am one of those who conscientiously believe that our Government departments can and will be able, with reduced funds, to carry on all their necessary functions. I shall wholeheartedly support the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this debate has decidedly gone along the line of national defense with the inference on the part of the Democrats that the Republicans may be overlooking national defense. I see before me a number of Members with whom I served during the past 8 years on the Committee on Military Affairs. I think that they will bear with me when I say that we worked very hard on that committee in those 8 years to build up national defense, and we have not lost sight of that fact over on the majority side for 1 minute. I see Members with whom I worked very long and hard in building up a strategic stock pile, intelligence and information service, and any number of other bills, such as research and development and also an adequate training program.

I just want to assure the minority side that in my own judgment we can go far in the direction of economy without crippling national defense. I do not think for 1 minute that it would discourage General Marshall in his future deliberations as Secretary of State if we provide more efficiency and economy in the Army and the Navy. I have a vivid picture of the need for some good and workable plan for weeding out the unfit in the officer force of our Army. I have not forgotten the failure of section 24 (b) of our National Defense Act to eliminate inefficient and unqualified officers between World War I and World War II and the consequent reduction of efficiency and economy in our national defense. I assure you that anything I can do to maintain adequate national defense will not be overlooked by me, even though I am now serving on the Ways and Means Committee and am no longer a member of the Armed Services Committee. I have tremendous confidence that the Committee on Appropriations and this new Congress will go after this matter of improving and making more efficient and economical our national defense. Our national defense will not fall down with this attention on the part of the Committee on Appropriations and the Congress itself in the years ahead. I would dislike very much to be put on the spot where I have to earmark each item of economy months ahead of the time these bills come before the Committee on Appropriations and the House of Representatives for consideration. This is an over-all limitation and a very wholesome one, and again I assure you of one thing, there is no disposition on the part of the Republicans to cripple our national defense. With that situation before me at this time, I wholeheartedly support the $6,000,000,000 saving provided in the bill now before us.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. TEAGUE].

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I do not have more than 2 minutes, because 2 minutes is entirely inadequate to cover this subject. We have heard today from the Marines, the Navy, and the Air Corps. I think you should hear a few words from the Infantry also.

In December 1942 I was assigned to an Infantry battalion. Two years later, in December 1944, after 6 months on the front line, after a number of wounds, I was forced to leave that battalion. At that time there had been 300 men killed and over 500 wounded. If I voted for any bill which I believed would weaken national defense, I would feel like a traitor to those men and to every American who sacrificed anything in this war.

The question is, Will it weaken national defense? I have heard nothing but statements, no proof in any form or fashion that it will not weaken it. What evidence do I have that it will weaken it? While we were fighting we believed that we had the greatest leadership in the world in General Marshall, General Eisenhower, and Admiral Nimitz. Those men say today that it will weaken national defense to a dangerous degree. As far as I am concerned, their opinion is good enough for me. If you will cut $200,000,000 or $300,000,000, I will vote with you, but when you cut so much that it is a definite detriment to national defense, then I will not vote with you.

I would like to take 1 minute to read a letter from a Republican up in Connecticut. All of you received this letter. I hope you read it. This man lost three sons in the war. He should have a right to speak.

The above are photos of my boys, and I am speaking to you as their representative and that of millions of other boys who gave their lives for you and me and in thousands of cases because of our inefficiency and pure selfishness.

You or your predecessors failed to provide proper police protection, and as is always the case, Hell broke loose.

One of these or all three of these boys might have been your sons, or might be your sons 5, 10, or 20 years from now. Bear that in mind as you read the following results of your or your predecessor's bungling of selfishness in connection with our national safety.

Bud (F. L., Jr.) was the first to go at Avon Park, Fla. Reputedly a fine flyer, a fine pilot instructor on the early B–26 (commonly called Widow Makers), he brought in a B–26 on its belly without a scratch on the crew. On Sunday, February 28, 1943 he was killed—one plane cut off the tail of another in mid-air. Whose fault—yours and mine for not providing in the years 1920 to 1940 adequate amounts for training of personnel and proper equipment. The reasons given were necessary speed-up with too little training. Are you going to let this happen again because of lobbying of selfish interests from all walks in life.

I heard a so-called educator lobbying over the air against military training. He spoke of refusal of educational funds where they did not have ROTC and of such military training being proposed by our Army personnel to build a military hierarcy to get us into the next war. He did not mention his own personal selfish interest or his own communistic leanings and teachings under the guise of education.

Personally, I am a Republican, a great believer in college education, a believer in higher pay for educators and teachers—and especially if we can weed from our entire educational system communistic windbags of this type who have taken the education received at the expense of taxpayers of a free democracy to undermine that democracy in the minds and thinking of our younger generation.

Frank Lloyd Wassell, Jr., might probably be here today with many thousands of other fine, upstanding, patriotic, democratic, right-thinking young men who should be our future leaders. He loved life, the people around him, his home, and his country.

You are representing these young men, and especially the youngsters they left behind. In the names of those men and regardless of your political affiliations, examine what we have suffered in the past through our failure to provide means of self-defense. We know what happened twice in the past. We do not know what the future holds, but we know that criminals do not attack in broad daylight from the front. They attack in the dark and from the rear.

In later letters I will give you two additional true stories from the lives of my two other boys whom you will have to represent since they are not here to represent themselves.

I firmly believe that President Truman is first an American and second a Democratic Party President. As an American thinking in terms of the protection of its interests through compulsory military training, he should be given the unselfish and nonpolitical backing of every Member of Congress.

Remember those who gave cannot speak for themselves.

Sincerely yours,

F. LLOYD WASSELL.

We have just paid over 300,000 American lives and billions upon billions of dollars for our way of life in the United States, and it was a bargain at that price.

It is my belief that had the Congress of the United States seen fit to spend a few of these billions in the twenties and thirties we would not have had to pay the price we have for our freedom today.

Much is said about waste.

The greatest waste in World War II was the waste of American lives because adequate defense which would have prevented World War II was not provided.

It was noted in one paper that research would be cut, and an American scientist recently said over the radio that Russia has many more scientists than we have, and they have 10 times the governmental backing that we give our scientists in the United States. If we stop research at this time, Russia will pass us, and it will be impossible to catch up.

I believe in economy in Government; I believe there are many governmental agencies which should be completely eliminated; but I also believe a weak national defense is the greatest false economy there is. Also, it is said the Department of Agriculture will receive a $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 cut, and that the Soil Conservation Service will receive a large part of this. This is also false economy, as soil conservation is insurance for our children in years to come.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I think the majority of the Members of the House know of my interest in national defense and my standing with organized veterandom. They know that many weeks ago I was separated from active service with the United States Navy and returned to Congress. Since my return to Congress, I have been deeply concerned with appropriations affecting national defense, veteran expenditures, and the economy of the country in general. When I desire definite and authentic advice in regard to national defense, one of the Members conferred with is the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], whom I have known for many years. Another is the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], whom I have likewise known for many years and whose opinions I hold in high regard. Today the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] this question:

> In other words, the gentleman and his committee can assure the Congress and the country that the Military Establishments, both the Army and the Navy, will be given every dollar they can justify as being in the interest of national defense?

To that question the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] replied:

> That is correct.

Several days past the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] made this statement about the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]:

> Just as I said, the gentleman from New York always gives an honest answer.

So I am taking the answer of the gentleman from New York, JOHN TABER, confirmed and supported by the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOHN MCCORMACK, as my position in regard to the adequate appropriations for our national defense. It is for that reason I am supporting the $6,000,000,000 reduction in the national budget as far as it concerns national defense.

With respect to the Budget and its effect on appropriations for the Veterans' Administration recently I conferred with several leaders of organized veterandom, not presently identified as active officers of any of the major veterans' organizations. We discussed the question of economy. We found we were in complete accord with respect to giving the veteran 100 cents on the dollar when he receives a pension award. Today the veteran receiving a $50 pension is actually not receiving that specific amount because of the shrinkage in the value of the American dollar. We concluded that it is to the best interest of our country in general and the veterans in particular to take a stand in support of sound economy, reduced Federal expenditures, and decreased taxes. Such a position would certainly be in keeping with the patriotic aims of all veterans' organizations.

It was the consensus of opinion among the veterans present that the veterans' organizations of the country should give serious consideration to the need of supporting a sound national economy, which would include reduction of taxes, curtailment of national expenditures, thus permitting a genuine start toward reduction of the national debt.

Like the majority of you in Congress today, I was sent here with a mandate from the people of the Twenty-second Congressional District in Pennsylvania to support a program of sound economy in the administration of governmental affairs. I intend to discharge this obligation without regard to fear or favor.

A sound American Government is the best guaranty to the American people that we will be financially able as a nation to support the needs of our national defense.

Every agency of the Government who can show the actual need of appropriations for practical purposes need have no fear of the pruning of the National Budget, as every dollar actually needed will be forthcoming.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, today we have our first opportunity as Members of the Eightieth Congress to take a stand on the all-important question "Should the Federal Budget be reduced?"

I promised the voters of the First Connecticut Congressional District last fall that I would do everything any one Member of Congress could do to bring about a reduction in the cost of Government. I intend to keep that promise.

There is one fact that we should all keep in mind and that is the fact that here in the United States we cannot continue working one-third of our time simply to earn enough to pay the cost of Government. We cannot continue that practice if we intend to maintain our present standard of living.

There is bound to be some misunderstanding about just what we are doing here today under this new reorganization bill procedure. We are not passing an appropriation bill. We are not adding or taking away from any department of the Government a single dollar. By voting for this resolution we simply say that we want the Federal Budget reduced by a minimum of $6,000,000,000.

The new Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget has told us that the budget can be reduced by as much as $6,000,000,000 without decreasing the efficiency of our Government and without interfering with the program of the Army and Navy. I am convinced that this Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget has done a marvelous job in the time available to them. They have worked unofficially since the day after election and officially since January 3 of this year in trying to determine how much of a cut could be made in the President's $37,500,000,000 budget.

I have great confidence in the members of this joint committee. They are patriotic men, and they know a great deal about the fiscal operations of our Government. I intend to follow their recommendations.

I am not satisfied with the $6,000,000,000 reduction, and I fully expect that when the various departmental appropriation bills come to us, we will be able to obtain a greater reduction. This $31,500,000,000 is a ceiling and not a floor.

It has been said on the floor of the House today, and we find the same thought expressed in the minority report, that the passage of this resolution will embarrass Secretary of State Marshall when he goes abroad for the important conference he is about to attend. It has been said that he will fly abroad with a broken wing.

This suggested ceiling of $31,500,000,000 should not embarrass Secretary Marshall. He knows, the American people know, and the people with whom General Marshall will confer know that his is the voice of the United States and behind him he has not $31,500,000,000, but every asset and resource possessed by the people of the United States.

It has been said that we cannot reduce the budget of the Army and Navy without interfering with their proper functions. There is not a Member of this House who does not know there are extravagances in the operation of our Army and Navy that should be eliminated.

It has also been said that we cannot reduce the budget of the Veterans' Administration. There are many Members of this Congress who served in the armed forces either in World War I or World War II. They, and other Members of the Congress, will be insistent that our war veterans will not be deprived of benefits we have already voted for them. I yield to no man in my determination that the returning veteran be fairly, yes generously, treated. It is for the future welfare of our veterans pretty largely that I am so deeply concerned. If we continue on year after year with an unbalanced budget, or with a budget of twenty-five or thirty billion dollars, the day will surely come when the checks we issue to our disabled veterans will not be worth much more than the paper on which they are printed.

The same is true of our desire to aid the distressed people abroad. Unless we get our own house in order, or unless we protect the value of the American dollar, we will not be able to do the things abroad that we want to do, and that we should do. We have reached the point here in the Congress, when we must determine that every dollar we appropriate is absolutely necessary to the successful operation of our Government.

In the future when new undertakings are proposed in this Congress, I am not going to ask myself "Is this a good program?" but rather I will ask myself, "Is this an expenditure that we can safely postpone for some time?"

Today we have an opportunity to stand up and be counted, and the American taxpayer will watch the votes we cast today with deep interest.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. RIVERS].

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, the action of the Budget Committee placing a ceiling on the money to be appropriated for all Government bureaus, departments, and agencies for the next fiscal year is to be regretted. This in itself is tragic, but the gag rule making silent every Member of the Congress in his effort to alter the recommendations of the afore-mentioned committee astounds and horrifies me beyond any ability to express myself on this occasion.

There is a difference of opinion as to the effect of the $6,000,000,000 reduction in the President's recommendation to Congress. Some say the action of the committee is binding morally on the several committees of the House to effect a $6,000,000,000 cut. Others, including myself, feel that it is not only morally binding, but it is legally binding, and I quote from section 138 (b) of the Reorganization Act passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress, which reads as follows:

SEC. 138 (b). The report shall be accompanied by a concurrent resolution adopting such Budget, and fixing the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year. If the estimated expenditures exceed the estimated receipts, the concurrent resolution shall include a section substantially as follows: "That it is the sense of the Congress that the public debt shall be increased in an amount equal to the amount by which the estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year exceed the estimated receipts, such amount being $——.

It will be my purpose to cooperate with the majority or the minority in reducing expenditures for all Government agencies, wherever humanly possible, but I cannot distort my thinking or perjure my conscience in weakening our armed forces or breaking the promises we have made to the farmers and to the recipients of rural electrification throughout the years. You know and I know that I have joined on many occasions with the majority partly in curtailing needless expenses. This will be my policy in the future, but today we are bound, gagged, and forced to swallow a fanciful figure.

The section above referred to clearly says that the reports shall be accompanied by a concurrent resolution adopting such budget and fixing the maximum amount to be appropriated for the expenditure in such year.

This is clearly a mandate and clearly places a ceiling over which we dare not morally or legally transcend. The only excuse we have to vary from this restriction placed by the Budget is that the national income shall exceed the estimate.

I know that the outcome today will be a clear-cut majority on the part of the majority party, but I wonder how each of you will feel when Marshall faces Stalin in Moscow, when MacArthur faces the hungry, seething mob in Tokyo, or when McNarney faces the unrest of the German occupation on one hand and the Russian encroachment on the other, with funds running low, and occupation forces being withdrawn.

I wonder if we realize the great potential powder keg that is Korea, with the Soviets on the north and the small American forces on the south and the onward sweep of communism unchecked and unabated.

What we do today will not be felt tomorrow, but may plague us in the years to come. What we do today will have its effect many years hence.

What are we going to say to the veteran who won this war when the promises we have made to him are unfulfilled? What are we going to say to that maimed and dependent veteran when no longer his education or his training is continued?

The answers are with you, my colleagues. As for me, I propose to have no part in weakening our national security, deceiving the able and disabled veteran, or cutting Marshall down from behind.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND].

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to buy a pig in the poke. As a member of the Ways and Means Committee, I am also a member of the Legislative Budget Committee, and while I have attended the only two meetings of the Legislative Budget Committee that were held and have sat on the floor of this House all afternoon, today I have not yet been able to learn where and how the cuts will be made that will make possible a reduction of $6,000,000,000 in the budget submitted by the President.

I believe it is only fair that Members of this House should know how and where cuts are to be applied before they go on record in support of this $6,000,000,000 cut.

It is doubtful, in my mind, that more than three or four members of the so-called Legislative Budget Committee have any knowledge of the basis for these proposed cuts.

It is true that the Legislative Budget Committee is composed of 102 members and thus is a very unwieldy one. It is for that reason that a subcommittee of 20 was appointed to survey the Budget and study the necessity of the various appropriations included therein. But what has happened? The subcommittee held only three meetings and heard only two witnesses. The figure of $6,000,000,000 was arrived at by an unofficial subsubcommittee of about three Republicans, and they ask us to accept their judgment without revealing to us the facts upon which their judgment is based. For that reason I shall have to vote against this resolution.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, earlier today when the vote came on ordering the previous question, I voted against it and thus did what I could to open this matter up for discussion and amendment. That vote failed and therefore I shall vote to recommit this bill when a sensible motion to recommit is offered, as I know it will be offered. If the vote to recommit should fail, I shall certainly vote against this bill.

It may be said then that I am not in favor of economy. No, it does not necessarily follow that a vote against this bill is a vote against economy. I am in favor of the right kind of economy, and I do not know of a Democratic Member of this House who is not in favor of the right kind of economy. To pass the bill before us today may and probably will be the most blundering economy that this Congress ever attempted. When you ask me whether I favor economy, indicating it by such a proposal as this before us by saying "yes" or "no," I and all Members of this body are put in about the same position as a man who is called on to answer "Yes" or "No" to the question whether he had stopped beating his wife.

Another simile comes to my mind. Suppose we have a crying, hungry baby here and also a filled bottle with well-suited nipple is conveniently near, shall we give the bottle to the baby? Would you? Can you answer me "Yes" or "No"? I would suggest, however, in that case it would be well to inquire what is in that bottle, for it might be sweetened poison. It is a crude illustration to show the danger of an act with good intent. Yes, you say, "Here is an economy measure, to save the American people $6,000,000,000. Do you not want to economize?" But I say it is imperative that one know on what we are going to economize before answering that question.

I have heard it said that nobody has any intention—certainly not the Republican majority—of cutting on our armed forces or jeopardizing our national security. It is my solemn opinion that such assurances will mean nothing if this measure passes today at this critical juncture in America's international affairs. It has been significantly said that to pass this bill simply sends Gen. George Marshall flying to Moscow with a broken wing. The leaders of Europe cannot read your minds; they will read only the provision in this measure with its implications. Other nations will read a meaning into this in connection with the Republican attitude in the former postwar period toward the outside world, and they will not believe the leopard can change his spots.

Ah, but you say, "We're simply carrying out the mandates of the law as passed in the last Congress, and also the mandates of the American people expressed at the polls on November 5 last. I do not believe this is necessary to carry out the new law, and as for mandates, I would suggest to my Republican colleagues that they read carefully all, and particularly the latter part, of the words of a great Republican Senator uttered yesterday in the other body in regard to mandates of the people. I refer to Senator AIKEN of Vermont, in one of the finest speeches recently delivered in the Senate of the United States.

It is true that the people want economy and should have it, but with a huge Republican majority in both Houses surely the Republican majority can secure effective economy by trimming appropriation bills according to the evident real needs of the governmental departments as such bills are presented. Is the Republican majority afraid of its own leadership? And must the majority by such a measure as this tie the Congress up into a moral obligation? In my judgment, there is a way of meeting the requirement of the Reorganization Act without placing Congress in such a strait-jacket as this which is offered us in Concurrent Resolution 20.

You say you do not intend to cut to harm the armed forces. I sincerely hope not. But if you do not greatly reduce the Army, or the Navy, or the Veterans' Administration, or the Department of State, or relief for the starving people of Europe, or the fixed charges on the public debt, or all of them put together, where are you going to cut the President's budget $6,000,000,000? I know and everybody knows where you will attempt to cut it, and there is not that much there to cut. You will attempt to cut it out of such things as soil conservation, public roads, flood control, reclamation, school lunches, and such other governmental benefits which we have been carrying on. Many of these are national investments and others, like school lunches, while not reimbursable, are as proper and legitimate objects of public expenditure as those that we feel duty bound to spend abroad.

I want particularly to ask what this Congress intends to do about carrying out the agricultural program under the Steagall amendment which was designed to protect the American farmers for 2 years following the war? Perhaps you intend to cut that out either by repealing that law or rendering it ineffective by lack of appropriation. But even if you cut out all the things I have enumerated, the sum will total less than half of the six billion which you are pledging the House in advance, and without knowing the facts, to trim the President's budget. Not only is this a serious mistake from the international standpoint, but from the standpoint of our domestic economy, this, in my judgment, is a most serious blunder. We ought to have the facts, and in the absence of facts we cannot make any wise economies.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped for a report with a resolution that would make it possible for me to join in an effort to reduce Government expenditures. I had, indeed, prepared some remarks in advocacy of such a course.

But in consideration of the subject, what do we find or have presented to us? Nothing but a "pig in the poke."

Public Law 601, Seventy-ninth Congress, chapter 753, second session, in section 1389, on the subject Legislative Budget, reads:

> The Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, or duly authorized subcommittees thereof, are authorized and directed to meet jointly at the beginning of each regular session of the Congress and after study and consultation, giving due consideration to the budget recommendations of the President, report to their respective Houses a legislative budget for the ensuing fiscal year, including the estimated over-all Federal receipts and expenditures for such year. Such report shall contain a recommendation for the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year which shall include such an amount to be reserved for deficiencies as may be deemed necessary by such committees. If the estimated receipts exceed the estimated expenditures, such report shall contain a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt. Such report shall be made by February 15.

And subsection (b) reads as follows:

> The report shall be accompanied by a concurrent resolution adopting such budget, and fixing the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year.

This resolution is then offered on the floor of the House:

> That it is the judgment of the Congress, based upon presently available information, that revenues during the period of the fiscal year 1948 will approximate $39,100,000,000 and that expenditures during such fiscal year should not exceed $31,500,000,000, of which latter amount not more than $24,000,000,000 would be in consequence of appropriations hereafter made for obligation in such fiscal year.

Now what is reported to the membership of the House? If we are to solemnly resolve that expenditures should not exceed $31,500,000,000, we should know where cuts are to be made. The report gives no information on that subject. It is only a discussion of over-all receipts, expenditures, and appropriations without any information or specific report as to any items, activities, or functions proposed to be reduced, or eliminated, other than a proposed reduction of civilian employees, not saying in what department, and deferring unspecified public-works projects.

It has been said, not in the report but by a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that the reduction in expenditures contemplates the following as to agriculture: Agricultural cuts, over-all, from $947,000,000 to $553,000,000; school-lunch program, $75,000,000, to be eliminated; $100,000,000 cut in the AAA program; elimination of all of the $19,000,000 for agricultural research.

This may be a sample of a proposal and purpose to harmfully reduce and arbitrarily eliminate most important and most needed appropriations for the public welfare. These referred to would be disastrous. If we had a report with specific information we might find others just as ill-advised.

I cannot accept the explanation that this resolution is not binding. If we vote for it we shall be in all honor bound to do that which the resolution says should, or ought, to be done.

To the Members of the House, not on the committee, this is a shot in the dark. The report should have reported, that Members might know all the facts.

How can one satisfy his conscience, regard his responsibility to the people with the slight information furnished? In the situation we find ourselves, I cannot support this resolution, however much I would like information on which I could act and vote otherwise.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may require to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. DOUGLAS].

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, we have before us a concurrent resolution which, if passed, will cut the President's budget by $6,000,000,000.

The concurrent resolution does not tell us where the cuts are to be made.

The majority has talked here for hours, but they have not yet told us where they intend to cut the Budget. They have talked all around Robin Hood's barn. We have had their thinking on many subjects, but their Budget cuts are still a secret.

Why? Could it be that they themselves do not know what cuts they will make? Could it be that they are just grabbing a figure out of the dark? Could the majority party be so reckless, or is the majority party shrouding itself in secrecy because it hesitates to place in one piece before the American people the Republican budget for 1948? Would a disclosure of the Republican budget also disclose the Republican mind? Is that, perhaps, what it is afraid of?

Mr. Chairman, at this point it might be helpful to have the figures of the President's Budget before us.

Five billion dollars for interest on the national debt.

Two and one-tenth billion dollars, refunds due under the tax laws.

Eleven and two-tenths billion dollars for national defense.

Three and five-tenths billion dollars for international affairs and finance.

These five items—interest, refund, national defense, international affairs, and veterans require expenditures of $29,200,000,000 or almost four-fifths of the total budget.

Do the Republicans propose to cut these items?

Why do they not tell us what they propose to cut?

Now, we come to the domestic program for which the President's Budget recommends, in all, $8,300,000,000.

What in the domestic program do the Republicans propose to cut?

They have talked much today about a stable economy. We are agreed we must have a stable economy if we are to have security at home and peace in the world. But we insure nothing but disaster if we follow the same old McKinley policy which led us to the agony of 1929.

Let us take note that in this year of our Lord, under Democratic leadership, more people are working and business is more prosperous than at any time in our history, and that after we have just come through a global conflict which has left one-half of the world in ashes.

We are healthy today, Mr. Chairman, because under Democratic leadership, we had the vision and the faith to invest in the future of the American people.

Why are the Republicans attempting to blindfold the American people? Down what road are they attempting to lead us?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY].

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, no Member of this House desires more earnestly than I to reduce Government expenditures. I realize that, unless the Federal budget is balanced for the fiscal year 1948, and a substantial payment is made on our national debt, we are headed for economic chaos.

I am unwilling, however, to vote for a reduction of $6,000,000,000 in expenditures at this time under a gag rule when I know that figure was plucked out of thin air; that it is thoroughly unrealistic; and that it will eliminate many vital services of this Government and tremendously weaken the national defense.

Let us for a moment be realistic. Included in the $37,500,000,000 of expenditures, as recommended by the President, is one item of $5,000,000,000 for interest on the public debt. That is a fixed item. It is a contractual item in which there can be no reduction without impairing the faith and credit of our Government. In addition there is a fixed item of $2,065,000,000 for refunds of taxes and customs to those who have paid more to the Government than the amount of their liability. That item cannot be reduced because it is a debt which the Government owes to its citizens. Deducting these items leaves a balance of $30,000,000,000 to which the cut must be applied.

Included in this amount is an item of $7,343,000,000 for veterans' services and benefits. Is it conceivable that the people of this country have so soon forgotten their obligations to the men and women who fought to preserve our freedom and our American way of life, and the widows and orphans of those who made the supreme sacrifice, that they are willing 2 years after the war to begin to curtail the services and benefits which were promised to them under the GI bill of rights? Deducting this item leaves only $23,120,000,000 to which the reduction can be applied.

The President's budget recommends expenditures of $11,256,000,000 for the national defense. General Marshall, General Eisenhower, and Admiral Nimitz, have all issued warnings to the American people that any substantial reduction in this item will jeopardize the safety of America. If, however, that item is eliminated the balance to which the reduction may be applied is only $11,864,000,000.

Of this amount $3,510,000,000 is for international affairs and finance. We have already agreed to a loan for Great Britain and have made commitments to the United Nations and the International Bank. If we refuse to appropriate these funds we will be repudiating our international obligations just as we did by refusing to enter the League of Nations and the International Court after World War I. If, however, this item is deducted there is left a balance of only $8,354,000,000 for all of the remaining governmental services. To attempt to cut this balance by $6,000,000,000 would be ludicrous.

I cite these figures merely to show the absurdity of the proposal now before the Congress. This analysis plainly demonstrates that if the budget is reduced there must be unreasonable slashes in the appropriations for the national defense, for veterans and for international affairs and finance.

Frankly, I think there can be some cuts in all of these items. I voted for a reduction of $4,500,000,000 in the Joint Legislative Committee and I am ready and willing to vote for that figure today, but under the gag rule which has been forced upon us, and which does not permit the offering of any amendment to this resolution, my only choice is to vote for or against the $6,000,000,000.

I know that if there is a cut of $6,000,000,000, the rural electrification program, which has meant so much to the farmers of our country, will be greatly curtailed and possibly eliminated; that the soil-erosion and flood-control program will be threatened; the work on rivers and harbors will cease; the appropriations for public roads will be curtailed; the school-lunch program will be discontinued; services and benefits to veterans will be decreased; and the national defense will be threatened.

It has been said on the floor of the House today that there is no danger of any other nation attacking the United States at the present time. I think that is true. It was also true immediately following World War I, but in those fateful years we laid the foundations for World War II. I am unwilling in this year 1947, 2 years after the cessation of hostilities, to begin to lay the foundations for World War III.

We cannot afford to gamble with destiny at this uncertain and critical time in world affairs. We tried it after World War I and lost. Moreover, if we desire to check the spread of communism throughout the world it cannot be done by witch hunting here in the United States when we weaken our influence abroad and open the door to Russian aggression and domination.

I shall, therefore, vote against the pending resolution, but when the various appropriation bills come before this House, after a careful review by the appropriate committees, I shall vote to eliminate every unnecessary penny and to curtail expenditures to the maximum extent that sound judgment dictates and the national security will permit.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE].

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, I know that nothing which I might say will sway the majority party in their determination to pass the resolution under consideration at this time on the joint committee recommendations of reducing the Budget from the amount recommended by the President by the sum of $6,000,000,000.

However, Mr. Chairman, knowing that it will be futile to raise my voice in protest, I do most vehemently protest against this action and will vote against adoption of the resolution for the reason that it has been announced that the reduction is made principally at the expense of national defense; that is, appropriations for the Army and Navy, and at the expense of reducing the funds for many other governmental departments that are indispensable and invaluable to the people and our country. I do not have to reiterate all of these items which serve to give some benefits to our own citizens in so many ways as the same have been mentioned by most of those who have the same views which I have, and who have already covered the same when they preceded me here in registering their protests and objections to this proposal.

Mr. Chairman, coming from a predominantly agricultural district, naturally my obligation is to protect that industry to the limit of my ability, and I do here and now reiterate my interest and the fact that I am solicitous and always concerned with the protection and welfare of my constituents engaged in this great and important industry, and that I am concerned with the reductions assessed against the various departments of our Government dealing with the benefits, treatment, progress, and future of this industry, many of the products of my district and Louisiana which are peculiar to our climate and soil, and of such necessity and importance to the balance of our great country.

Mr. Chairman, the reductions in the proposed Budget limitation not only affects this most important segment of our national life but also many other activities connected with the welfare, prosperity, security, and happiness of our people, but of greatest importance of all, in my opinion, the very lives, fortunes, and freedom of the people of our great country, and even the welfare and future of our veterans are involved in reductions in this Budget made to attain a flat, arbitrary cut of $6,000,000,000 without full and deliberate consideration.

Mr. Chairman, there is no use of my naming all of the governmental programs which will be hampered by restricted appropriations under the proposal here, as they have been enumerated in detail by some of my colleagues, and a discussion of same will only be repetition, and while I appreciate the fact that there are many opportunities for retrenchment and economy in our Government, I feel that my record in the Congress will disclose that I was one of those that time and again called to the attention of this House the waste and extravagance in this respect, and while it is too late to do anything about the matter now, I do not think it is right to penalize our countrymen for these mistakes.

Mr. Chairman, when I was first a candidate for the Congress I promised my constituents that, if I was elected that my country would never be caught unprepared again as we were caught in the last two wars, if I could, by my vote prevent it. While there is no detailed information available as to exactly what items of the recommendations of the President will be reduced it is generally understood that the majority party intends to reduce the appropriations for the Army and Navy, and if so, I am apprehensive for the future of our country in these unsettled and troublesome times.

I have stated time and again that, I am in favor of retaining all of the islands and bases in the Pacific for which our boys shed their blood, and in addition, I am in favor of acquiring by purchase, negotiation, or otherwise, all of the bases in the Atlantic and elsewhere which are required to build an impregnable ring of steel around our country, and that we should maintain a strong air force, a strong Army and Navy, and a trained reserve in order that we may be prepared, at all times to defend our country.

Mr. Chairman, can it be that the Members of this Congress and our country have already forgotten that at the beginning of the last war how totally unprepared was this country. German submarines roamed the high seas and sank our ships at will? Do they not remember how a German submarine cruising leisurely within a mile of Jacksonville, Fla., in full sight of the population on shore sank a fine ship carrying supplies to Europe. We had nothing to defend our ships or shores.

I remember that more than 100 merchant ships were sunk off the coast of my State—87 at the mouth of the Mississippi and 14 at the mouth of the Calcasieu River off the shores of the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. Chairman, certainly, we all should not have forgotten that on the top of this magnificent Capitol Building and on the top of the office buildings of the House and Senate, and on the tops of all of the other buildings of our National Capital, all that we had to repel an air raid was wood anti-aircraft guns with wood soldiers.

Mr. Chairman, I visited Nome, Alaska, during the war and I was told by the people there, and I observed that the statement was correct, that if the Japanese had followed up the invasion of the Aleutian Islands and attacked Alaska there, all that the people there had for protection were a few shotguns and Eskimo whaling spears. Such conditions existed nearly everywhere in our country. Is this Nation going to permit itself to be caught in this position again?

Mr. Chairman, I have read and listened to all the debate in regard to the atom bomb and I have wondered if this country would be foolish enough to give this secret away. Last night I viewed a preview of the picture entitled "The Beginning or the End," which portrayed the creation and development of this terrible weapon, and I wondered then if this country, after spending billions of dollars to produce this weapon, would stop appropriating funds for further scientific research to produce weapons for the defense of this country.

I am not a warmonger, nor am I an isolationist; I hope and pray that the United Nations will be a success and that we may obtain peace through that organization, and I am in favor of the full cooperation of this Nation to that end, but we have witnessed in this generation on two occasions that treaties and covenants mean nothing and that the only nations which have survived are those that were able to defend themselves.

Money spent for the defense of our country is good economy and, in my opinion, will save lives and money again in the future. Waterways are part of national defense, and money spent for the development of rivers and harbors pays handsome dividends, to say nothing of protecting lives and property, yet I understand that under the proposed resolution limiting the budget for the next fiscal year that there is practically no provision for this item. We have spent money lavishly in other countries, yet we do nothing for our own country.

I find that in regard to flood control since this Government accepted responsibility for this important and necessary function that we have only expended approximately something over $3,000,000,000 over the entire United States.

But, Mr. Chairman, at one swoop over $4,000,000,000 was appropriated to another country on a so-called loan agreement.

Do not you think it is long past time for us to do something for the United States?

Of course, Mr. Chairman, we are all in favor of reducing the expenses of government which necessarily entails reductions in taxes, and I sincerely believe that it is possible to reduce taxes by economy in government, but I have the confirmed opinion that, if taxes cannot be reduced without the appropriation to our armed forces for the defense of our country that, our people would be willing to continue to pay high taxes for some years to come rather than place our country in the position of being at the mercy of another aggressor or agressor nation and be caught for the third time as we have been on two occasions during this generation.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that this question is submitted for consideration without any opportunity to offer amendments, and while I know that the resolution will be adopted here in the House, I sincerely trust that when the resolution reaches the Senate that full and careful deliberation and consideration will be had on this vital matter, and that due consideration will be given to all of the problems which have been discussed here in the House today and that when a final determination is made in conference that full provision will be made for appropriations to insure, at least, the proper defense of our great country.

I will not vote to sell America "short."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I have not been in the House nor in politics long enough to develop a full appreciation for supporting or opposing matters solely because they have party leadership approval. I do some of my own thinking. I believe that the vast majority of the Members of this House are motivated by a desire to promote the best interest of our Nation irrespective of partisanship.

I deplore the type of rule submitted to this body today. It is contrary to my concept of democracy. I confess my ignorance on parliamentary procedure, but I believe I know something about the wishes and needs of my constituents.

It is not on a partisan basis that I oppose the rule, nor on a partisan basis that I shall oppose the resolution. It seems to me that our entire approach is wrong. I do not believe that there is in this House a more stanch advocate of efficiency in Government than I, but when I vote for or against any Federal expenditure I want to know what agency is affected. Surely there must be numerous Federal activities with which we could dispense without doing injury. Our national defense program is not one of these. Perhaps greater economy could be practiced by both the Army and Navy without reducing efficiency, and the simple expedient of cutting the Budget by no means assures such an outcome. I shall vote against the resolution—not against efficiency and economy—but against the haphazard and indiscriminate approach to a problem that needs to be worked out in detail and on a sound, sensible basis to assure that our national welfare will not be placed in jeopardy.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, budget statistics available today point out that any cuts in the 1948 Budget ought to be cautious and moderate insofar as the armed forces are concerned.

There should be an orderly and progressive demobilization and reduction of our armed strength over a period of more than a year instead of a drastic slash in one year.

The statistics do not imply that no cuts should be made—but that what cuts are made should be considered with deep study and care.

To arrive at some fanciful figure and pull it out of thin air without any substantiating reason to back it up is foolhardy.

I am opposed to any abitrary figure for the mere purpose of its political effect to substantiate previously unwarranted claims and statements that are now hard to support with facts.

Hanson W. Baldwin has today in an article in the New York Times, described the situation perfectly. The article entitled "A Warning on Budget Cut" follows:

A WARNING ON BUDGET CUT—STATISTICS OF ARMED FORCES SHOW NEED FOR CAUTION ON PLANE, RESEARCH FUNDS

(By Hanson W. Baldwin)

WASHINGTON, February 19.—Congressional advocates of a $1,750,000,000 cut in the defense budget will find little aid and comfort in certain budget statistics that became available today.

These statistics support in general the argument of the armed forces that cuts in the 1948 Budget ought to be moderate and careful, not wholesale unstudied slashes. The figures must be read, too, against the background of the service desire for an orderly and progressive demobilization and reduction of the United States armed strength throughout a period of years, instead of a sudden major cut in 1 year.

The statistics do not imply that no cuts ought to be made; indeed, it is certain there are many areas in the service budgets that can and should be cut, but they do indicate fields in which cuts ought not to be made.

Aircraft procurement is one of them. The Navy's budget as submitted to Congress by President Truman would provide funds for the procurement of only 579 planes (exclusive of experimental planes) during the 1948 fiscal year. The Bureau of Aeronautics originally asked for funds for some 1,600 planes; this figure was reduced to about 1,100 by the Navy Department, and the Bureau of the Budget further pared that to 579. If the $1,750,000,000 cut is made even this number—one-third of what the Bureau of Aeronautics originally estimated as its needs—will be cut in half.

RISING COSTS ALSO A FACTOR

The Army Air Forces find themselves in a roughly comparable position. Their 1948 budget, as submitted to Congress, contains funds originally estimated as sufficient to procure 900 new planes of all types, but the increasing unit costs of aircraft will probably limit the number that actually can be procured to about 800. If the projected $1,750,000,000 slash is made, this number probably will be reduced further.

Thus the Army and Navy together will be able to procure in the 1948 fiscal year if—and it is a big "if"—Congress makes no cut in the requested funds for aircraft procurement only about 1,400 or 1,500 planes. This is half the 3,000 that a postwar study indicated was the minimum number of military planes that must be procured annually by the armed services to maintain a healthy industry.

The second statistic concerns research and development, admittedly a field that ought not to suffer any serious cuts. For the current 1947 fiscal year, some $45,000,000 was appropriated for the Office of Naval Research.

About $23,000,000 is being expended through some 100 university contracts for basic research that cover an extremely wide range of scientific problems and that help, incidentally, in the training of young scientists. The Office of Naval Research had hoped, during the 1948 fiscal year, to obtain a little bit more than the $45,000,000 appropriated for this fiscal year, but if the $1,750,000,000 cut is made, a reduction of about one-third in this research budget will be necessary.

The Chemical Corps of the Army offers another statistic that shows a region where no cut ought to be made. In the 1947 fiscal year, this corps, which has charge of two of the most terrible and most important weapons of modern war—weapons that incidentally offer many byproducts of great therapeutic value to mankind—received about $6,000,000 for research and development. This supported all of the national research into chemical warfare (gases) and in the dreaded bacteriological or biological warfare.

FLEET SCRAPPING OPPOSED

For the 1948 fiscal year, the Chemical Corps for its researches and development of gas and biological warfare (including extensive and important medical research) asked for about $8,000,000 but this figure was cut down before the budget reached Congress to about $5,800,000. If the $1,750,000,000 over-all cut is made, the tremendously important researches may be cut still further.

One other statistic will show another field where cuts can be made only with difficulty. Congress has stood firmly since VJ-day against scrapping the great modern fleet built during the war. To preserve a great number of fighting ships not needed in active operation and to save money, the Navy laid up hundreds of ships, carefully "pickling" them against corrosion and deterioration.

Even when the job is complete, perhaps a year or more from now, it is estimated that 25,000 to 35,000 of the Navy's officers and men will be required permanently to maintain and guard the thousands of laid-up fighting ships that are being kept as a form of national insurance.

This is a high overhead, and some naval officers think that perhaps the United States is keeping too many ships in the "moth-ball" fleet. But that overhead cannot be reduced without scrapping some of the ships Congress has insisted be retained. Here, then, is another area in which cuts perhaps can be made, but they must be made with caution.

The service budgets can and should be cut, for there is excess "fat" and some waste and empire building in the armed forces. It is true, too, that special pleaders in all phases of military activities will cry out against cuts of any sort. But this merely points up the need for great congressional responsibility and care. Congress must find by wise and patient exploration of those fields where cuts can be made, and also must ascertain those fields where cuts must not be made under any circumstances.

UNIFICATION BILL STALLED

About five legal drafts of the so-called unification agreement recently reached by the armed forces have been prepared, and each successively has been criticized and amended. The final draft was endorsed completely and wholeheartedly by the War and Navy Departments and then sent to other Government departments for comment.

The Bureau of the Budget, which has been assuming an increasing power in executive government, found some fault with the legislation, and it has been held up. Its chances of passage at this session of Congress are dwindling with the delay in introducing the bill, and unless it reaches the Capitol Hill soon with the full support of all affected departments and agencies behind it, it probably will be on the unfinished business calendar when Congress adjourns in the summer.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY].

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I favor drastic reductions in Government expenditures. An examination of my record during the 8 years I have served here will show that I have constantly supported measures to effect economy and have opposed measures to increase public spending. When the congressional Reorganization Act was adopted, I hoped the provision for the legislative budget would go a long way toward stabilizing our expenditures. However, we now come to the first experience under that act and, if this is an example of the manner in which we are to function, we should repeal the provision for a legislative budget. The proposal before us is not a budget in any accepted meaning of that term. The very term contemplates an estimate of anticipated revenue and an allocation of that revenue to the various expenditures and savings. Here we have nothing but a round figure stated to be the judgment of Congress as the limit to be placed upon Government expenditures. There is no statement of the amount or percentage of the total to be expended for each of the various functions of government.

Every Member should be morally bound by the legislative budget if he votes to sustain it. He should be bound to an honest attempt to keep each department and each function within the limits specified in the budget. Under this proposal, there is no means by which any Member can know the limit to which he can go on each appropriation bill as it comes before the House. Each Member is likely to find himself, after some or most of the appropriation bills have been passed, to have exceeded by his votes the over-all amount pledged in this resolution. He must then decide whether to appropriate nothing for essential functions of government or exceed the budget. Some have pointed out that the adoption of this resolution will not legally prevent the appropriation of funds in excess of the limits herein provided. However, this is the first time we have attempted to operate under the legislative budget provided by the Reorganization Act. If this Eightieth Congress establishes the precedent of exceeding the amount fixed in the budget, that precedent is established for all time. The budget will amount to nothing, not even the pious hope of which some Members speak.

The adoption of this so-called legislative budget means, for all practical purposes, that we will not accomplish the good for which we hoped in providing for it. It means a continuance of the old system of spending without any forethought or coordination.

A little reflection will show that this Budget, if observed to any extent, will call for reductions in one place and one place only. That is the place where we cannot afford such a drastic cut in these troublesome times. That cut will be in national defense—the Army and Navy.

Veterans' benefits are fixed by law and cannot be reduced. Interest and servicing of the national debt cannot be reduced. We all know that the representatives of the great agricultural areas, and they sit on both sides of the aisle, will see to it that none of the agricultural programs will be curtailed. Flood control, reclamation, rivers and harbors, and all of the other public works, constitute local projects. No locality will agree that its own project be eliminated or curtailed. Resort will be had to old-fashioned logrolling. Members on both sides of the aisle will vote for projects to garner support for their own. By the time that process is completed, practically all of the local projects will be intact. Where then will the cuts come in order to be within this Budget? Only the armed services will remain. Only the Army and Navy will suffer any material reduction. The men who led us through the war have all told us of the disastrous effects of a reduction such as is contemplated by this budget. All of those now representing us in our contacts with foreign nations, in making the peace treaties and making the United Nations work, have given us fair warning.

Surely none here subscribe to the idea of unilateral disarmament for this country. We have already disarmed to the point that our representatives are practically impotent in dealing with other nations. We have contemplated an Army of only 1,070,000 men for next July 1. This Budget will reduce that figure to approximately 750,000, with the occupation of Germany and Japan still to be carried out. To those who take the position that mass armies are no longer necessary and that scientific research and development must be stressed, let me say this Budget means the curtailment of research and development. As an example, the President's budget provided for only 900 new airplanes of all types for the Army Air Forces during the next fiscal year. Where will this reduction leave that small number? Does anyone know? Surely the House has not been informed. Does anybody care? This cut means the drastic curtailment of aviation development and experimentation by the Army.

Let the legislative budget be a budget in fact. Let us here, as the responsibility of the House, allocate the funds to be expended. It is not enough that some members of the committee say they have decided where the cuts should come. It is not enough that some members may say they have been informed by officers of the Army and Navy that such a cut may be made, but they cannot disclose their identity. This proposal contains none of the characteristics of a budget. Its adoption as a budget means the death of the new provision for a legislative budget. It should be defeated.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RILEY].

Mr. RILEY. Mr. Chairman, I have just learned that the program for the Reserve Air Corps training has been drastically cut because of the reduced Army budget. I understand that other needed defense programs are to be reduced because of this budget reduction.

I am distressed to learn of the cuts in the appropriations needed by the armed services to maintain a reasonable security of this country. The men who know the situation best—General Marshall, General Eisenhower, Admiral Nimitz, General Spaatz, Secretary Forrestal, and Secretary Patterson—whose interest at this time is to see that the advantages of the victory so recently won, at the shocking cost to this country alone of more than $300,000,000,000 in wealth and more than 300,000 in precious lives, is not dissipated by the practice of false economy are likewise alarmed at the proposal. Those of us who served in the First World War vividly and sadly recall that this same pattern of leaving unguarded the security of our democracy, encourage the ambitious totalitarian leaders of Europe to try again by force of arms to conquer and regiment the nations of the earth. The situation seems to me to be analogous to an incident in the life of a friend of mine. He was visiting in one of our large cities and as he walked down a more or less deserted street a gunman stuck a "rod" in his ribs and demanded, "Your money or your life!" "Take my life," said my excited friend, "I am saving my money for my old age."

We have just fought and won a great war for the preservation of liberty. We all know that there are influences developing in the world that would use the fruits of our victory for the advancement of their own selfish interests, which in turn will mean the strangulation of that very liberty which we sought to maintain. We should always be mindful of the fact that we are dealing with an uneasy and confused eastern world, taught for generations by bitter experience to respect only those countries which are militarily strong, and that we will neither attain worth-while recognition, nor friendship, unless we are in position to command their respect. I am convinced that both the psychological and practical effect of any such cut in the appropriations estimated to be needed for the armed forces, as is proposed, would be to weaken our position in the negotiations which are shortly to take place abroad. Throughout history civilization has been called upon to pay dearly, in wealth and in life, in ever-recurring installments for the preservation of that civilization simply because there has been no adequate policing of those who are ambitious and lustful, and no adequate information or education for those who do not understand democratic principles.

Certainly the majority of us want economy in Government—and I am convinced that there are many places in which economies can be effected—but insofar as our defenses are concerned there is a point beyond which we dare not go if we are to maintain ourselves as a great and successful democratic nation. It appears to me to be a question of whether we shall spend a reasonable amount of money now to try to maintain our security and ideals of government, or whether we shall spend an unreasonable amount of blood later to preserve our security and our ideals.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

REDUCING FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, as you know, the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget voted in favor of reducing by $6,000,000,000 the President's budget estimates of expenditures for the fiscal year 1948. This will reduce proposed expenditures for 1948 from $37,500,000,000 to $31,500,000,000. As a member of the Legislative Budget Committee, I voted for the proposed reduction for two primary reasons:

First, I have always been an advocate of economy in government and believe that Government expenditures should be held to a minimum. The proposed expenditures of $37,500,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948 exceed by a wide margin the expenditures in any other full peacetime year, with the single exception of the current year. If Federal Government expenditures are ever to be brought down, I believe a start must be made now.

My second and primary reason for advocating an expenditure reduction for the fiscal year 1948 is my desire to maintain the credit of the United States. Only by reducing expenditures to a minimum in a period of high tax collections will it be possible to make any sizable reduction in our enormous debt, currently estimated at more than $259,000,000,000. On the basis of the figures of the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget, receipts for the fiscal year 1948 will amount to $39,100,000,000 and expenditures to $31,500,000,000. Most of the difference between this receipts figure and the estimate of $35,700,000,000 appearing in the President's budget can be accounted for by the assumption that the reenactment of the present excise-tax rates will occur. On the basis of the Senate's action this last Monday, this now appears to be a certainty. With these receipts and expenditure estimates, it would be possible for the Federal Government to have a surplus of $7,600,000,000. I believe this should make it possible to make a real reduction in the debt. Only by strenuous efforts of this type, when business is good and incomes are high, will it be possible to have any permanent effect on the debt. Token reductions now are likely to mean no reductions later when the business activity is on a somewhat lower level.

It has been suggested by several persons that although they are in favor of reducing expenditures, the $6,000,000,000 proposed by the Legislative Budget Committee is too drastic. To a large extent, I believe this is based upon the report that the Legislative Budget Committee intends to reduce the over-all expenditures of the War and Navy Departments by $2,250,000,000. While this was suggested as one possible way of reducing expenditures, the report of the Legislative Budget Committee clearly states that no one is bound to reduce any specific expenditures by any amount. Permit me to quote two sentences from page 4 of the committee report bearing on this subject:

> Details of the over-all reduction which will be ultimately effected will manifestly unfold as and when the various appropriation measures are presented and processed from time to time by the two Houses of Congress. Of course, if the accompanying resolution be adopted there is no commitment as to any reductions in specific items contained in the Budget.

It is the duty of the appropriating committees to determine where the reductions should be made. I believe that the appropriating committees will be able to make some reductions in military expenditures without impairing the national defense, which I shall definitely and determinedly oppose as no one is more in favor of adequate national defense than myself.

Moreover, there is plenty of room for reduction in nonmilitary expenditures. These are shown in the Budget as amounting to over $26,000,000,000, only a little over a billion dollars less than in the current year, and $7,500,000,000 more than in 1946. Such an expansion of civilian functions at this time appears to me to be wholly without justification. The highest level of expenditures in civilian functions in any prewar year was reached in the fiscal year 1939, when such expenditures amounted to nearly $8,000,000,000. This figure must be multiplied by three and one-third to reach the level of proposed civil expenditures for the fiscal year 1948.

While I recognize that we are faced with increased expenditures for such items as veteran benefits and interest payments on the debt as a result of the war, I believe that total expenditures in the fiscal year 1948 can be held to a level of $31,500,000,000, largely by eliminating waste and inefficiency and by limiting the expansion of nonmilitary functions to a minimum. If we are ever to check profligate spending on the part of the Government, the time to act is now when incomes are high, and the need for relief expenditures is low. It is only through such fearless action that we can maintain the credit of the country and make a sizable reduction in our national debt.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REDDEN].

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to voice my opinion that the budget submitted by the President can very substantially be reduced, and I expect to support a reduction in certain respects at the proper time.

In the current resolution now before the House which we are asked to support I find this statement:

> That it is the judgment of the Congress, based upon presently available information, that revenues during the period of the fiscal year 1948 will approximate $39,100,000,000, and that expenditures during such fiscal year should not exceed $31,500,000,000.

If I should support that resolution I should find myself in the position of saying to the people of America that upon the best information obtainable we do not need more than $31,500,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948. I cannot so state. The majority leadership, I am informed, held only two meetings on the budget which has lasted altogether only a few hours, that only two witnesses were heard and they gave very little testimony. This testimony has not been made available to the Members of the House. There has been no information made available to the Members of the House upon which the Appropriations Committee ask that the House of Representatives approve this resolution. We know only what we have read in the papers. This includes statements from the head of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the head of the American Legion, and Admiral Nimitz and General Eisenhower, and including also General Marshall, who should know as much as any man in this Nation about our needs, all to the effect that this budget is not sufficient to assure the safety of this Nation. How could I say upon this evidence and this alone that it is my judgment "upon presently available information" that $31,500,000,000 is sufficient. I would be going contrary to the judgment of the highest military authorities in the Nation, contrary to the leadership of our veterans' organizations, contrary to the leadership of our greatest diplomats and resolving out of pure opinions of politicians against such an array of learned men.

I understand the Republican leadership gave their freshman Members a pep talk within the last 2 or 3 days to be sure they would support this resolution. I can understand why they might not support it without a pep talk. I wonder how in good conscience they can support it at all because no information has been made available to them upon which to make such a finding.

When the appropriation bill is reported out of the House Committee, I shall vote to remove every dollar from the budget which I believe should not be there; but to tie myself now to any figure without any information seems to me like making a blind date with destiny. I am unwilling to take such an unjustifiable position.

I agree with many Members of this House that a large number of Government employees can and should be removed from the pay roll, many agencies should be abolished and that other economies should be effected, and I expect to support action in this respect at a later date during this Congress, but again repeat that I am unable to go along with the majority party in their contention that Members of the House ought to blindfold themselves and vote the way they are requested so to do without any evidence to support their position and against the opinion of the top military leaders of our Nation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, this is a rather broad subject to attempt to discuss or cover in the length of time that we have available. First, I certainly know that I am for economy in government. I have supported such a program and expect to vote to reduce appropriations just as much as possible consistent with the national good.

No hearings have been held on this $6,000,000,000 reduction. No basis for this action is offered. We do not have to take this hasty action. When these appropriation bills come up we can cut where they should be cut.

We know this six billion contemplates reductions of approximately $1,750,000,000 in the armed services just on the eve of the Moscow and other peace conferences.

I know the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] will work unceasingly and untiringly to cut out waste and extravagance in the War and Navy Departments and I have no doubt real reductions can be made. I have supported such reductions in the past, but I say to him he should wait until he has the witnesses before him with all the evidence, then he could apply the cuts in such places that the world will know we have not weakened the national defense. But, today, without any showing as to where such cuts are to be applied to the armed services, our action will go out to the world as a retrenchment in our military preparedness; the world will believe that we are withdrawing our support from our armed services at a time when our distinguished diplomatic corps is ready to go to the Moscow Conference and other peace conferences, where we know they must keep up a determined front and need to have full support behind them. The Republican Party, which brings that reduction to you, has a history in this country. We all remember after the last war your voting records on preparedness and we are asked to make a reduction today which does not point out where it will be applied, and that will be taken as a move to isolationism, a drawing into our shell just as this Nation, with your help, did after the last war. Now, what is the effect of this bill on the domestic front? A few days ago figures were submitted to members of the Subcommittee on Agriculture as to how this cut would be applied. Attention was called to the fact that the Department of Agriculture could stand a cut, by those responsible leaders whose word will likely become the law of this land when this appropriation bill is passed. It was pointed out that that appropriation would probably be cut from $947,000,000 to $553,000,000. These proposed cuts were submitted as follows:

Seventy-five million dollars to be cut from the school-lunch program, thus eliminating such program. Yet just a few months ago when all were soliciting votes this program was approved by the Congress.

One hundred million dollar reduction in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, just after we prevailed upon the farmers of the Nation to deplete their soils if necessary to meet the food quotas needed by the world, and the records show that many, many millions of acres of our soils have been practically exhausted as a result. Furthermore, commitments have been made to the farmers of the Nation for this year, based on these funds.

The entire sum of $19,000,000 for agricultural research is to be cut out. Yet the Hope-Flannagan bill passed the Congress last year by an overwhelming vote. Of course, at that time the Republican majority was anxious for the farm vote. I firmly believe that to delete this item is one of the most short-sighted actions the Congress could possibly take. All recognize that the farm problem in the next few years will become one of the most serious we have. What to do with surplus commodities, how to maintain reasonable prices—all will be facing us. Why today we have the Commodity Credit Corporation, with a capital stock of $4,000,000,000, with authority to spend it if necessary to support farm prices. Is it not foolish not to carry forward research in the use of farm products, thereby creating demand and possibly alleviate to some extent the cost of supporting prices by buying up farm surpluses, or I wonder if such Republican leaders do not contemplate the removal of support prices for farm products. It is time for those who have the interest of the Nation and of the Nation's agriculture to wake up and take notice. As I stated yesterday:

> Are we to eliminate research, that great boon of mankind? John Deere took an old saw, made a mould board for a plow that would cut Midwest soil, making possible development of Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska. McCormack, with his reaper, made possible the wheat of that section. Eli Whitney, with his cotton gin, made cotton king. And all these did more to make the United States we have than did all the statesmen, so-called. Swift said, "He who has made two blades of grass to grow where one grew before, or two stalks of corn to grow where one grew before, has done more for the good of mankind than all the race of politicians put together." Carver with his peanut is an illustration. Are you to develop the atomic bomb to destroy mankind, and deny money to develop and enlarge natural resources of the Nation? Will you build a great army, yet deny lunchrooms to nourish and build the boys and girls who make up the real forces on which we must depend? When they ask for a fish will you give them a serpent; when they ask for a loaf of bread will you give them a stone?

Gentlemen, we must not do that. Never let it be said that the Congress of the United States would be so short-sighted.

These Republican leaders contemplate a reduction in the Rural Electrification Administration of $394,000,000, which includes a reduction of $125,000,000 in loan authority for the next fiscal year. Thus this great program which has meant much to the rural inhabitants of this country, which is doing much to help keep folks on the farm, is to be curtailed. The local cooperatives, which charge rates whereby they can and have repaid the Government for the funds borrowed, so that practically all are up to date in their repayments, will be restricted in bringing the same service to the millions who did so much for the war, wanted electricity then but were told to wait until after the war as the war effort required the materials necessary for their extensions. Thus it goes.

A $50,000,000 reduction is contemplated in the Farmers Home Administration; now that hundreds of thousands of veterans are clamoring for the opportunity it would afford to pay for a farm and a home, a $10,000,000 reduction in roads and trails, which are used in getting lumber out of the national forests for the veterans' home program, reductions in the Soil Conservation Service, and so on through the activities of the Department. And this without and prior to any hearings, after commitments to the American farmers.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that under some circumstances we have to do without many things that are essential. I have had to do it to pay debts, and most of the members of this committee have had the same experience, but I say to you this is not the purpose of the Republican majority in this instance. They have talked here continuously about sustaining the solvency of this country. If that be their desire and if that be their purpose, we gave them two opportunities to say so and make certain this reduction would go to such purpose.

We offered an amendment to this resolution which would have provided that any savings in reduced expenditures as a result of this budget cut would be applied to the national debt. Did they vote for it? No. They voted it down. Then we tried to get through another amendment which would provide that $3,000,000,000 that might be saved should be applied to the national debt. That was voted down. It was voted down because in the November election of last fall twofold promises were made by the Republican Party. They promised to reduce public expenditures and they promised to reduce taxes. How? Along the line of the Knutson plan, which would mean that a man with $100,000 would have a take-home pay increase of 70 percent and the man who made a thousand dollars would have his take-home pay increased 2.1 percent. So when you say you have saved all this money to maintain the solvency of this country, will you not have the courage to admit that your party voted against applying it to the public debt? That they refused to provide in this resolution that such reduction would go toward payment of the public debt? When the people face you on the ground that you have not provided for public roads and trails and eliminated the school-lunch program; when you have reduced the AAA and the REA, will you not tell them that you did it to get the money to pass the Knutson bill, which would give the benefits of these savings not toward paying on the debts of the Nation, which are serious, but to give most of those benefits, through your Knutson tax bill, to those already enjoying the larger incomes and not in giving tax relief as we would by increasing exemptions so those needing it would get relief.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I expect to support real cuts in appropriations based on testimony and on hearings, but I oppose this action here today, which would have much more merit if the savings were to be applied to the national debt. We can do without many things to pay our debts, but this is an effort to cut out worth-while programs not to pay our obligations but to give the money to those who need it least.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, this is a happy day for me; it is the first time since I came to Congress that we have considered how much money we should spend for the operating of our Government before we started to spend. If you will look back over the record you will see that I have advocated it back in 1933–34–35–36–37–38–39–40 and up to this time. It is a very sensible procedure in Government operation. If I want to build a home of my own, I talk it over with my wife and we decide we will spend $10,000 for our home. During our construction we figure on getting the best home we can for the money; we from time to time change our plans, ever keeping in mind the cost. If we can build for $9,700 so much the better, but if it costs us $11,000 we know, if we only had $10,000, we must borrow the extra $1,000 and we have that debt to pay at some future time. Oh, it is sensible to plan, it is wise to plan, it is good business to plan.

What have you been doing the past 14 years? Spending, squandering, and ruthlessly getting our Nation into a terrible situation by creating the greatest debt in all history, by this or any other country. The New Deal increased the debt from twenty-one billion until today it is two hundred and sixty-nine billion. A travesty to any good, sound people. You have increased our taxes since 1933, 16 times—think of it 16 tax bills in 14 years, New Deal taxes. The people are sick, tired, and disgusted with their heavy taxes. The New Deal is at fault for this. I want to reduce taxes but I must reduce expenses first. This is the beginning of cutting down expenses. I am for it. It is not going to be easy. There will be more propaganda to spend for this and for that. It will require lots of intestinal fortitude to do the job. I expect to do a good job in this respect if I have the health and strength to do it.

We can cut expenses of Government. We can clean out some of the bureaus and some of the bureaucrats.

Just think, there are 75 bureaus dealing with transportation. Why?

There are 12 Federal retirement systems. Why?

There are 15 agencies dealing with public housing. Why?

Labor relations are spread over eight departments and agencies. Why? A dozen departments deal with public lands. Why? Oh, there is much that can be done in consolidation, streamlining, and elimination.

We have talked and talked about cutting down on expenses, but with some it has been a jest. Your vote is what counts. I do not like a hypocrite—the fellow that talks one way and votes another.

It is about time we look after America and stop trying to pay for running the world. I said before and I say now, we will soon be the worst-hated nation on the face of the earth because we are sticking our nose in other people's affairs.

Now for the Army, Navy, and other branches of the armed service; I do not want to weaken our strength. I want to squeeze some of the excess water out of this sponge. It is full of it. We can do wonders in creating efficiency, eliminating waste, and cutting out duplication. We can and must do it.

Now we Republicans can and must do this job; the New Dealers are too hungry for jobs and cash to stop any spending. They got us in the mess and we must dig the American Government out of the morass. A bankrupt nation is useless. So let us strengthen our national defense by creating a solvent, safe, sane Government. Our people want it, the national solvency demands it. You were elected to perform it. So let us go—vote for the resolution. As the days go by and the appropriation bills come on the floor, remember our promises.

As we stick together as Republicans we win—if we lose, the Nation falls. I will do my part. If what the minority leader says is true—we have a hard job—we can expect no help from him or the New Deal. We must count on any Jeffersonian Democrats and Republicans. Cut down Government expenses, save taxes, eliminate functions of Government, consolidate departments, get rid of Communists, and run out the radical bureaucrats from the pay roll.

We can do it. We must do it. We will do it if we would save our form of government.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, any budget, in public or private business, is merely a preliminary guess, but it is important to sound business to make such a guess as accurately as possible, and then to follow it as closely as possible. I have attempted in the past few weeks to go over at least the high spots in the 1,434-page Budget the President has sent to Congress. Radio and newspaper commentators are able to say exactly what this Budget should be. I receive letters from people who, I am sure, have never gone through the Budget, but who tell me just what size it should be. My study reminds me of the old song: "You don't know how much you have to know in order to know how little you know."

I do not know yet just how much we must spend this year or just how much we will collect. I suspect the President does not know, either. Even though it is called the President's budget, we all know that it is compiled, not by the President, but by his hired help. It totals thirty-seven and five-tenths billions. On the other hand, the congressional Budget of thirty-one and five-tenths billions was compiled by distinguished Representatives and Senators, whom I know and respect. I happen to know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] have spent months on this Budget, working day and night, consulting with officials, high and low, in the Government. In the words of Resolution 20, which is now before us, "It is the judgment" of these gentlemen and a majority of the 102 Members of the House and Senate on the Joint Budget Committee "based upon presently available information, that expenditures should not exceed $31,500,000,000" next year. As between these elected officials and the unknown bureaucrats who compiled the so-called President's budget, I am giving a vote of confidence to my colleagues.

It is now my judgment "based upon presently available information," including the opinions and conclusions of our congressional committee, that expenditures should not exceed thirty-one and five-tenths billions this year.

As more information becomes available I will vote on each appropriation bill as it comes up, to preserve our national security by maintaining our national defense and our national free economy. In considering each bill, however, I shall remember that our country must stay solvent to stay safe.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, after observing the tears shed on the Democratic side of the House over this bill, I have begun to suspect that the crocodile has replaced the donkey as the national emblem of the minority party. So many of these tears have been shed for the rural areas of the United States—as is the custom—that I am constrained to rise and say that I represent in this Congress a district which is almost entirely agricultural. I know what my people want. They want economy and they said so unmistakably on November 5 of last year. There were some California Congressmen who represented rural areas before that date who did not come back because they held to the theories expressed by the Democratic side of this House today. When I go home next time, I am not concerned that I will be asked why I voted for a cut of six billions; I am very much afraid I will be asked why it was not a larger cut.

One concern on the part of the Democrats seems to be about soil conservation. "What are you going to do," asks the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] "about soil conservation?" I will tell you. We are going to ask why $32,000,000 is needed for the administration of the Soil Conservation Act and $38,000,000 for the administration of the AAA Act when they are largely duplicating administrations.

We are going to ask why so much money is to be taken from section 32 funds for some of these agricultural subventions, when in my opinion there is doubt about the need for that much money and greater doubt about the propriety of using their funds for the purpose.

"What are you going to do," cries the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] "about the REA?" I will tell you that too, as one who has supported the extensions of rural power. We are, I hope, going to ask why the REA should go into the district of my neighbor, the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD] and build a power line which duplicates the existing private line, and install a Diesel plant, when it is admitted that the power cannot be sold from that plant as cheaply to the ranchers as the power from the private company. We will ask if tax money is being used for this same purpose, as I am informed, in other States.

"What are we going to do," wails the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] "about school lunches?" I do not know what the gentleman is going to do, but I will tell him what I have already done. A few days ago the Governor of California, whom I consider one of the outstanding governors in this Nation today, was here in Washington. I mentioned the school-lunch program. I pointed out that the Federal Government was $260,000,000,000 in debt, and that the State of California was about $400,000,000 in the clear. I would like to ask those gentlemen who have beaten their hands today against the Democratic Party's wailing wall, if their States do not also have surpluses in their treasuries. We must, in the Congress, weigh relative urgencies. If school lunches are as desirable as I think they are, then I hope my State will weigh that urgency against some of the other things for which the spending of the State surplus is being asked. The way to convince me that a school-lunch program, or a program for farm-to-market roads, is as urgent as we are told, is for the States to appropriate from their own funds for those programs, rather than use the money for subventions to other taxing agencies, or for purposes which, desirable as they may be, could wait a while in this time of national crisis.

So I hope we are going to investigate the Department of Agriculture, just like the other departments—not against the farmers, but at the request of the farmers. I could give other illustrations, but I desire to use my limited time to say to the gentleman from Texas, our distinguished former Speaker, that I am probably—and I say it regretfully—more familiar with Moscow than I am with any city in the great State he represents; and therefore I say to you from personal knowledge that when General Marshall goes to Moscow he should go, after the vote today, with encouragement and a strengthened point of view which he did not have before. It would be good news in Moscow if they were to learn that the United States planned to continue its pathway toward bankruptcy. It will be good news for the United States to have him say in Moscow that we have decided to stop our travels on that pathway and that from now on the Congress of the United States will defend the integrity of this Nation, the integrity of its currency, and the integrity of that form of government under which it became possible for us to support the rest of the world.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a number of telegrams. They are largely from patriotic organizations throughout the United States, and from the ladies' auxiliaries of these organizations. The people have been reading the press and listening to the radio and they are fully informed as to what is going on in the United States and what is going on in the world. They are people whose integrity cannot be impugned. I wish to read you just one telegram. It is very short. It is from one of these patriotic organizations:

> Our organization strongly urges you to oppose any reduction in the appropriation for the armed forces or veterans' affairs which may be effected in the proposed slash in the Federal budget.

I read that for the reason that these people representing patriotic organizations throughout the country do not want me to abdicate my functions as a legislator. They want me to stand here and see that the armed forces are properly provided for and that the veterans are properly handled in reference to appropriations.

As I conceive my duty today, I feel that a vote to slash $6,000,000,000 off the budget when there remains unanswered adequately the proposition as to whether or not this is going to cripple the national defense is an abdication of my duties as a Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, I have served on the Armed Service Committee of the House.

I have had a chance that these people have not had to listen behind closed doors to some of the troubles that are menacing the world today. I have had the opportunity to know the weaknesses of our own defense and the strength of the defenses of other nations. This is no time to scuttle our defenses.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of economy. I intend to vote to eliminate waste and extravagance. I intend to vote to eliminate unnecessary governmental functions and to generally cut down on expenditures. I want an opportunity to decide myself as to what is necessary and what should be eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE].

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I want to pose the query, Are the pressure groups at work now? An employee of the War Department whose name I understand is Miss Symonitz, secretary to a Mr. Young, legislative and liaison officer in the Pentagon Building, Extension 71865, called my office at noon today and stated that she was calling from the War Department to say that the Air Reserve training program will be discontinued at the Tulsa Municipal Airport due to fiscal limitations in the 1947 budget.

She further stated that the 70-unit program will be reduced to 41 active Air Reserve training detachments.

Why the call today while this resolution is before us for consideration? It sounds like New Deal bureaucratic reprisal because a number of other Members have had similar calls or warnings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MACKINNON].

Mr. MACKINNON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the hopes and prayers for the future of the vast majority of workers, farmers, housewives, business and professional people in this Nation are tied to the favorable passage of this resolution. These citizens of our Nation have their eyes on us today seeking the answer to the question how much of their hard-earned money are we going to permit them to keep?

This resolution is the first step in answering that question. It is not the final step because by the very nature of the situation any act of Congress is always subject to subsequent amendment. But while it is not the final step, neither is it an "idle gesture," as has been charged. And, may I add, the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle know that it is not an "idle gesture." That is why they are opposing it. It is not an idle gesture but a menacing gesture aimed squarely at the heart of a bureaucratic and wasteful Government. Since that Government contains so many friends and appointees of the opposition it is natural for them to rise in opposition to this move to return sanity to Government.

This resolution is not aimed at the armed forces and veterans. It is aimed at the swarms of "billion dizzy bureaucrats" and tax eaters who are unwilling to readjust themselves to the voice of the people at the last election.

Now, what is the choice here today? What alternative figure does the minority offer? Thirty-five billion? Thirty-four billion? Thirty-two billion? Do they offer thirty-seven and one-half billion—the President's figure? No. Believe it or not but they offer no figure. They do not even support their President. With all the resources of their administration at their command the minority report claims they do not possess sufficient information to arrive at any figure. So they come before this body and admit they have not done their home work and ask that the Reorganization Act be amended so as to give them more time.

So between this definite figure and the request for delay, the opposition offers no real choice to this House or to the country.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat my belief that the hopes of this Nation are tied up with our favorable action in support of this resolution to cut $6,000,000,000 from the administration budget.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] as he may desire.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the proposed budget cut of $6,000,000,000 for the reason that it is unsupported by finding of fact and moreover because it is arbitrary and may be impossible of fulfillment except at great risk to our national security and to the public services. The fact that it is not based on any disclosed figures makes it dangerous and dubious. Means, too, that the benefits of deserving veterans including hospitalization may be hopelessly endangered. It is known that I am particularly anxious about the armed services and veterans' appropriations since I tried specifically to exempt these two items from budgetary or appropriation cuts. The fact that the majority steam roller without any disclosure or debate crushed the motion, gives cause for apprehension and suspicion of secret and sinister plotting against our veterans and the armed services which means our national safety.

It is charged, and quite properly so, that the $6,000,000,000 figure was taken out of thin air and applied to an already irreducible budget submitted by President Truman and that moreover it is meaningless in that it is not binding upon the Appropriations Committee and the Congress. The proof of this is to be found in the recorded statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], when he said in referring to the magnificent cut and without being prodded that it was just a pious hope and not binding upon us to actually pare the budget as the public is being led to believe.

Mr. Chairman, I believe in sound governmental economy and will go as far as anyone to really reduce unnecessary expenditures, but I want to know where, when, and how big the reductions are to be. I want a bill of particulars, not a nebulous figure taken out of the sky by some Member from provincial Swink, Minn., or Podunk, N. Y. All of this tremendous slashing was done arbitrarily without any public hearings, without the minority of the Budget Committee being present or consulted when the decision was made.

As a member of the Joint Congressional Budget Committee I served on the subcommittee of 20 members and I feel I am entitled not only to know how and when the figure was determined but also to have a part in arriving at a safe and sound amount which the House can accept and the Nation can support with confidence. The $6,000,000,000 figure was a complete surprise to most of the members of the Joint Congressional Budget Committee. We Democrats, of course, were excluded from the inner councils. That is in accord with the autocratic policy of secret and star-chamber proceedings of the Republican Party, temporarily in control of the Congress, but we were as surprised as many Republican Members were shocked to learn that they too were excluded and that only the most faithful among the Republicans were admitted to the inner and secret chamber where sat the wise men from the bucolic hinterland and in the sanctity of the Sanhedrin did sanctimoniously decide against the prodigality of the Army, the Navy, yea, even against the defenders in war of our country, the veterans, so it is admitted in whispers. We hear from the underground and are apprehensive about these eliminations and meat-ax cuts performed in the dark without benefit of any expert advice or testimony of competent witnesses. These mysterious moves will endanger or wipe out school lunches for our needy school children.

Cuts in the appropriations for repair of war-torn highways, the moneys in some instances already allocated as is usual in such highly efficient organizations as we have in our Michigan highway department, will have to be canceled. Rivers and harbors improvements, delayed or curtailed to the danger point during the war, mean nothing to some people living in and representing a dust-bowl constituency. These reduced appropriations might mean strangulation or the death of Great Lakes shipping upon which depend not only our prosperity and security but also that of the Nation. Delayed indispensable public improvements previously authorized and contracted for are doomed. In many instances partially completed projects are deteriorating at an accelerated and costly rate. They will become a total loss unless completed at an early date. For the farmers the cut may be only a Republican gesture and nothing to fear for those representing the farm belt. They will get their usually liberal share of the expenditures first even though the spokesmen for the needs of the rest of the country have to be thrown to the wolves.

Mr. Chairman, my views in the matter of the budget coincide with those of Senators ARTHUR VANDENBERG, CHAN GURNEY, and WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND and strangely enough square with the idea of ROBERT TAFT about a reduction of approximately $4,500,000,000. I go a step further in this regard, however—I don't want any proposed cut to be a mere and

"pious hope." I want it to be a real cut, not a hoax. I want the figure to rest upon factual findings of unnecessary and wasteful spending and concededly there must be a considerable amount in both categories. Such savings moreover should then be applied first to the reduction of our war debt in a fixed and substantial amount. Tax reductions in the order of need with priority for liberalized dependency exemptions should be the next order of congressional business. Secrecy in these fiscal matters should be forthwith abandoned and public hearings in the good old democratic American way restored. To vote blindly on this proposal is like taking a pot shot in the dark at a cat in a bag. It is dangerous and may be injurious to our own best interests. Ill-considered cuts approved in haste may mean untold losses and subsequent deficiency appropriations. It is not always best to cut most unless the operation is performed expertly with care and knowledge. No Republican has as yet been able to disclose any specific figure as to when or where reductions are to be made. The majority leadership was not at all confident of being able to pan off this cat in the bag upon its own Members and had to call a Republican caucus and was forced to do some plain talking and some whipping to make the boys tractable and responsive.

Why shouldn't there be grave apprehension on all sides and among our military leaders when the plan to cut the budget by $6,000,000,000 really contemplates an over-all reduction for the armed forces alone of $2,225,000,000, in utter disregard of the Nation's safety. Gen. Douglas MacArthur expressed confidence that there would be no move which would prejudice fulfillment of occupation objectives. This may be father to a wish, for he realizes the danger to our youthful forces in the midst of millions of disappointed and depraved Japs who may revert to cannibalism, as they feast upon our forsaken Army. I am not sloppily sentimental about our former enemies. I am following the advice of our experienced and battle-tried leaders who tell us that whatever we might save in nonmilitary and other occupational costs will have to be replaced with other expenditures to cover doubling or tripling our forces in Germany and Japan. I am sure that the parents of our American boys would prefer to keep them at home.

The Director of the Budget reduced the Army and Navy figures substantially before submitting them to the President for his approval. It is said they are the irreducible minimum figures and barely sufficient to maintain our armed forces at safe and efficient levels. Further cuts are considered unjustified and dangerous. They are opposed by Chief of Staff Dwight D. Eisenhower and Fleet Adm. Chester Nimitz, who believe our national prestige and security would be endangered at this time in proportion to the budget cut.

Defense appropriations are not in themselves necessarily sacrosanct, but it is argued they should be held inviolate for the time being for psychological if for no other reason. We must do nothing to weaken or undermine Secretary of State Marshall on the eve of the important Moscow Conference. If we appear strong and determined Joe Stalin will understand, for it is the only language that will register and make an impression. A good deal made at Moscow now will permit us in all probability to recapture even more at a later date than the amount of the present proposed defense cut. Any cut, large or small, could be justified, however, only upon the signing of agreements guaranteeing peace and security. The present proposed reduction comes prematurely and at the wrong time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PASSMAN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. RABIN], and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] be permitted to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to convince anyone on this floor by my remarks, and because I can fail to convince in a short time as well as in a longer one, I shall not ask for any extended time in which to make this statement. I make it, however, so that my position on this resolution will be known.

If this resolution expresses merely a hope that we can cut tne budget by $6,000,000,000 I would like to amend it so that such expression of hope be increased to at least twice that sum. If it indicates, however, a real possibility of cutting the Budget by such sum, then I submit it is incumbent upon the proponents of the resolution to show where the Budget can be cut, and by how much it can be cut in each instance. That has not yet been shown. I cannot vote for this resolution—much as I would like to cut the Budget—until it is shown how it can be reduced without endangering essential Government functions and without curtailing progress in furnishing essential and necessary social services.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have, as a Member of Congress, serving the people of the Fifth District of Louisiana, sought to carefully consider all phases of the important question now facing us—the proposed $6,000,000,000 Budget cut.

I realize, and I recognize, that it is not at all impossible to affect a tremendous saving in our National Government by judicious and wise elimination of wasteful and extravagant expenditures on the part of some of the agencies of our Government.

I must confess that I am not unduly exercised over reports from the War and Navy Departments. These and other departments can be run on smaller budgets than those proposed, without affecting the strength or efficiency of any of them.

But, seeking to represent my people, and bring back to them sound and economical administration of their Government, I find that the proponents of this resolution have brought this resolution to the floor with a closed rule as to where these Budget cuts will be applied. There is to be no examination of the facts. Cuts are to be made at will and without the slightest consideration of all of the representatives of the people.

So far as I know, all public-works expenditures, including funds for flood control so vitally needed in my district, may be omitted. This may also apply to agriculture and to the free school-lunch program. I certainly could not support a measure that may eliminate from my district all of these just benefits.

I had until today made up my mind that the Budget cut was justified, but when I am denied the right to cast an intelligent ballot for lack of information, then I feel it my duty to my people to oppose this strange method of budget adjustment. I shall cast my ballot against this reduction.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I include the following telegram and letter regarding the resolution under consideration:

CHARLOTTE, N. C., February 20, 1947.

Hon. HAMILTON C. JONES,
House of Representatives Office Building:

Charlotte Chapter, Reserve Officers' Association of United States, is strongly opposed to proposed reduction of national budget allowances for the armed services, the immediate and lasting effect of which will be seriously to endanger our capacity for essential defense and accomplishment of our occupation mission. We urge your continued opposition to measures which repeat so soon the near-fatal mistakes made after World War I.

E. A. TERRELL, Jr.,
President, Charlotte Chapter, R. O. A.

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
February 16 1947.

Hon. HAMILTON C. JONES,
House of Representatives,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Three and one-half million men who fought our country's two world wars know from first-hand experience the value of national security and the folly of unpreparedness.

These veterans are righteously alarmed at the prospect of further reducing the strength of our armed forces. Such reductions are implied by the Joint Legislative Budget Committee's irrationally recommended $6,000,000,000 cut in the national budget.

They vigorously oppose the reported slice of $2,250,000,000 for the armed forces, including a cut of $750,000,000 which would destroy the naval reserve training program and preclude further developments in naval aeronautics; the proposed slash of $500,000,000 intended to feed the starving people in occupied countries whose behavior might otherwise necessitate the expense of additional troops; the terrific hacking away of Air Force funds, and the $200,000,000 reduction in the Veterans' Administration appropriations. They are appalled to learn that their Government contemplates sabotage of the proposed universal military training program, recommended by high Government officials and demanded by the public, through a $1,000,000,000 cut in Army appropriations.

Are we to discard already the lessons learned in the last war?

After each war we have adopted the penny-wise, pound-foolish philosophy which has reduced our armed forces to impotency. Our token forces in occupied countries are now dangerously near tourist strength. Through our weakness after each war we have invited aggression. These world wars created the heavy taxes which Congress is now trying to reduce. Wars are responsible for the enormous public debt.

For more than a century and a half America has refused to make the small sacrifices in peacetime which would have prevented such great sacrifices in men and money. As a result this Nation, whose people cherish peace, has found itself regularly at war.

Must we again confess our guilt in weakening ourselves in the eyes of the whole world and rendering ourselves incapable of securing in peace our wartime victory?

Are we to ignore our international commitments to the extent that our representatives at peace parleys become the targets for contemptuous mockery by nations which have remained strong and influential?

In this critical and turbulent hour a world of nations watches us to see what action we will take to maintain our leadership in world affairs. There is a solemn and sacred obligation upon America to remain strong until a permanent, feasible peace plan is established.

We must not permit America's insurance policy to expire at this uncertain hour.

The American Legion has always been a proponent of economy in government. It detests red tape and bureaucratic bungling that penalizes taxpayers and prevents good government. The American Legion is confident, however, that economy achieved at the expense of security or veterans is no economy at all.

May I respectfully remind Congress that it is directed by the United States Constitution to provide for the common defense of the several States.

If the issue involved must be resolved by guaranteeing citizens their constitutional rights or fulfillment of campaign pledges, there can be only one American answer.

Sincerely yours,

PAUL H. GRIFFITH,
National Commander.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] may extend his remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, once in a while we read an editorial in a newspaper with which we thoroughly agree. On yesterday my attention was called to an expression in the Christian Science Monitor editorializing on the resolution which is now before the House. As we all know, this newspaper is not and never has been isolationist. It has always believed in and advocated strong national defense and an adequate Army and Navy. In these circumstances its utterances on budget cutting are particuluarly pertinent. The editorial of February 15, 1947, to which I refer reads as follows:

THE BUDGET WILL BE CUT

It is absolutely essential to take a positive stand on the question of reducing Federal expenditures. We therefore welcome the news that the House-Senate Budgetary Committee has voted to cut President Truman's budget by $6,000,000,000.

The Committee rejected a plan to keep hands off the proposed appropriations for the armed services. This is common sense, for military expenses ought not to be considered sacrosanct. This newspaper has urged great care in cutting provisions for the Army and Navy. Congress will do well to give the most serious attention to the warnings of General Eisenhower and Secretary Marshall about the dangers of weakening the United States' military-diplomatic position in the world.

But it would be foolish to assume that there are no unnecessary expenditures, no extravagances by the armed services. Indeed, considering the fact that proposed expenditures per man are about $1,000 more for next year than at present and will exceed even the naturally wasteful wartime rate, the burden of proof is rather on the other side. We have great sympathy with the feeling of the Army and Navy that they are neglected in peacetime and then called upon suddenly to do the impossible. But the next five years are likely to be the safest in the coming quarter century. With materials short, military construction should be kept to a minimum.

The plan of the budgetary subcommittee to slice $1,750,000,000 off military expenditures looks rather like a meat-ax gesture. But some definite limit has to be fixed. The services themselves would undoubtedly find places for saving if they found they had to do it. We hope Congress will not cut recklessly, but we are glad to see a determination to cut.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would not vote for a $6,000,000,000 cut that I thought was going to destroy our national defense or weaken our position in bringing about that which I hope will be a lasting peace. I would not vote to cut the Budget by any specific amount simply because someone in my party made personal commitments during a political campaign. Under the new Reorganization Act it is mandatory that the House-Senate Budgetary Committee report to Congress a tentative budget for the coming fiscal year. This does not mean that the hands of the Congress are tied or that the Congress is prohibited from appropriating more than the amount estimated in the Budget report if, in the wisdom of the Congress, after more mature deliberation, it is thought that the welfare of the country demands that the Budget ceiling be raised.

In short, $6,000,000,000 is the amount which the Budgetary Committee feels can be eliminated from the Presidential estimate for the year 1948, and still provide sufficient funds for the national defense and the carrying on of all essential activities of the Federal Government. Maybe this committee is wrong, but I am not ready to say that it is wrong until I have some proof to that effect. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in voting for this resolution I am not casting a political vote. Neither am I precluding myself or the Congress from appropriating every dollar that is later found essential to our national defense and our national well-being. There is a vast difference between desirable activities on the part of the Government and essential activities. Fine furniture and eloquent drapes add much to the looks and the comfort of the home, yet these things are entirely out of place unless there is something in the pantry and unless the kitchen larder is stocked with the essentials of life. This principle of sane, budgetary housekeeping must be applied to our Government and the declarations contained in the resolution now before us expresses an intention and a determination on the part of Congress to adopt this common-sense philosophy of economy and thrift. I shall, therefore, vote for this resolution. I hope that the $6,000,000,000 cut is possible, but, remember, this resolution makes it an objective and not a fixed amount from which we cannot deviate.

Yes, this is an objective to be devoutly hoped for and I, for one, shall do what I can to accomplish the purpose, conditioned only on the necessities which I have just suggested.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. REEVES].

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Chairman, I give my full support to the pending resolution to reduce the proposed budget by $6,000,000,000 and to limit expenditures during the coming fiscal year to $31,500,000,000.

I wonder how the frugal Jackson, whose birthday the Members of the minority party used to celebrate so expensively, would vote on this economy issue if he were in this House today.

Every Member of this House has a personal budget. He knows that he is obliged at the beginning of each year to estimate his income and to plan to limit his expenditures. I see no reason why that principle, which I have been taught all my life is a sound one, cannot be applied to the business and activities of the Federal Government. It will be, with the adoption of this resolution.

Not one Member on the majority side has advocated or favors any limitation upon the budget which would in any degree weaken the armed forces or prejudice our national security, and yet from the Democratic side of the aisle has come a veritable tirade of charges that the object of this resolution is to take away from the United States that security which every one of us who has seen service in her behalf would lay down his life to protect. No man who has looked at the white crosses over American graves in foreign lands, or who has seen and shared in the bitter hardships and the tragic losses in American lives overseas would vote for any measure which in any degree impaired the efficiency of our defenses. Mr. Chairman, I would not do so under any circumstances.

The tumult of protest from the other side of the House is calculated to terrify the people into believing that the budget cut proposed by this resolution will leave the Nation virtually unarmed and helpless. Nothing could be further from the truth. But their real objective is to distract attention from the myriad extravagances and wasteful expenditures which require careful scrutiny and drastic action by the Congress.

No, Mr. Chairman, the people of my district and the people of the United States will not feel insecure if we fix a budget ceiling which contemplates elimination of Navy expenditures for the specially designed silver sugar bowls and the fancy cut glass we learned about a few minutes ago. Nor will they feel imperiled if we undertake to find out why the War and Navy Departments need two civilian employees for every three men who are in uniform. As of January 1 last there were in the two services 1,100,000 civilian employees and 1,600,000 men and women on duty in uniform.

The basic mistake of the minority in the debate today is their position that this resolution fixes ceilings upon particular appropriations. Obviously it cannot, and it does not attempt to do so. The amounts to be made available to the several executive departments, including the War and Navy Departments, can only be determined by the appropriation bill ultimately enacted by this House after the Appropriations Committee has considered all of the information furnished by the departments as to their requirements. What we are doing today is fixing an over-all limit within which we shall strive to contain our total expenditures for all purposes. After the profligate spending which became a habit during the New Deal it is no wonder that that seems like a strange and inconvenient procedure to the gentlemen on the other side.

The thirty-one and five-tenths billion dollar budget which will result from this resolution is still a terrible burden for the American people to carry.

The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, the minority whip, has warned us that trimming the budget to that size will cause headaches and will hurt. Of course, it will. What else could be expected in this morning after the long night of reckless and unrestrained Government waste and extravagance?

The people have demanded economy. Common sense requires that there shall be far more than a token cut in the cost of government, and that the first application of the savings shall be to the reduction of the gigantic national debt. We cannot approach economy timidly, nor can we afford to temporize or compromise with extravagance.

With the conviction that neither our national defense nor our diplomatic position will be endangered by the proposed budget ceiling, I urge the adoption of the resolution. By that action we shall fulfill our covenant with the American people that our Nation shall be secure and our economy shall be strong.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTS].

Mr. POTTS. Mr. Chairman, during the last election campaign I pledged to the people of the Twenty-sixth Congressional District of New York, which is in Bronx County, that I would work for drastic reduction in the size, cost, and power of the huge bureaucracies which are bossing the people and wasting their money.

The people of my district elected me on that program. That district had been represented by Democrats for the previous 26 years. My constituents felt so strongly about what was happening to their country that they felt constrained to reverse that custom. They expressed the wish for economy in government and I intend today to redeem the pledge which I made last November to the people who sent me here to do just that.

There are 12 Republican platform planks which I held out to the people. I take pleasure in checking another one off today. The others will follow in like procedure.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR.].

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Chairman, I suspect that in some quarters on the minority side a concern for the pending fate of some constituents about to be lopped from the pay roll, or for some pet projects about to be reduced, lies concealed beneath an asserted concern for the national defense. I am inclined to question whether the real concern of my friends on the minority side about this resolution is in national defense or local political fences.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman should not lump them all in; there are a lot on that side that are with us.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Those that are with us, of course, we welcome. We are glad to have them.

There are two points of view here: One, those who favor economy, and, two, those who favor economy—but. I am taking my stand on the side of those who favor economy, period; and I shall support this measure. So many persons have protested that they voted with us in the past to reduce appropriations that one wonders why, with so much help we are supposed to have had, why more of these appropriation cuts proposed by Republicans when we were in the minority were not successful. Had you Democrats helped us then, the budget would not be so great a headache now.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COUDERT].

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, certainly the most important business before this Congress concerns budget and taxes—the sinister siamese twins which so disturb the peaceful sleep of all sincere statesmen.

It is futile for us to bleat pious platitudes about freedom and liberty, the Bill of Rights, and so forth, if we are unable or unwilling to establish the conditions of economic freedom within which alone political and social freedom can exist with security. Without economic freedom, political and social freedom soon becomes meaningless. Witness the examples of Communist Russia, Nazi Germany, and Fascist Italy.

Economic freedom will not long survive the appalling burden of wartime expenditures and taxes. If these are continued indefinitely at present levels, then economic disaster, to be followed by some kind of a totalitarianism, in the not too distant future, is almost inevitable.

The newly created Legislative Budget Committee has made a valiant start in the direction of cutting down Government outlay. This is no time to repudiate that committee and its component members in the most thankless and painful of all public tasks.

On the contrary, the Budget Committee and our own House Appropriations Committee, under the leadership of its distinguished chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], are entitled to an expression of confidence from the House and a fair opportunity to prove their case. That opportunity will come with the individual appropriation bills. At this stage of the proceedings there should be only cheers.

We have no right to assume that the Appropriation Committee will be unmindful of the essential necessities of our Military and Navy Departments. Nor on the other hand have we any right to abdicate our own power over the national purse by giving the Army and Navy, or any other department of Government, a free hand to fix their own appropriations. This House cannot escape that ultimate responsibility, and I am confident it can be safely counted upon to provide adequate funds for the essential services of national defense.

This resolution should be adopted.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, President Truman, in his annual message and budget, told the Congress that it would require $37,500,000,000 to carry on the activities of the Federal Government for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947, and ending June 30, 1948.

In the Legislative Reorganization Act, passed last year and approved by President Truman August 2, 1946, when the Democrats had a majority in both Houses, it was provided that the House and Senate set up a joint committee on the legislative budget. It also provided that this Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget should make a careful study and determine what the Federal revenues would amount to for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947, and the necessary expenditures to operate the Government for that fiscal year. It required this committee to make a written report to the Congress not later than February 15 of each fiscal year. This Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget was named. It was made up of 102 Members of the House and Senate. This committee appointed a subcommittee of 20 members from the House and Senate. Five of the high-ranking and long-experienced members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House and five from the Finance Committee of the Senate, five from the Appropriations Committee of the House and five from the Senate made up this subcommittee. We know all of these members well. Each of them have had many years experience on matters of revenues and expenditures of the Government. After hearing the representatives of the various departments and agencies of the Government, they filed their report with the full committee of 102 members and the full committee, after further consideration, submitted the report of the full committee and directed that there be introduced a resolution setting forth the approximate amount of revenues and the amount of expenditures during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947. This report of the full committee was adopted by a vote of nearly 2 to 1.

Pursuant to the report of that committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, introduced House Concurrent Resolution 20. The report and the resolution declare that the revenues collected by the Federal Government for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947, will approximate thirty-nine billion one hundred million and the expenditures of that fiscal year should not exceed thirty-one billion five hundred million. The President, in the Budget submitted by him to the Congress for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947, asserts that the expenditure will amount to thirty-seven billion five hundred million. This Joint Legislative Budget Committee declares that expenditures will not exceed thirty-one billion five hundred million. In other words, the Budget Committee insists that President Truman is asking for six billion more than is necessary. At the conclusion of the debate and the disposition of the motion to recommit, if the minority should desire to submit such a motion, we shall be called upon to vote for or against reducing the President's budget by six billion, or in other words, voting for a budget of thirty-one and a half billion or thirty-seven and a half billion.

Our Democrat friends have made many speeches against the cut of six billion but so far as I have heard, they have not indicated the amount, if any, they would cut from the President's budget of thirty-seven and a half billion. We are now confronted with a condition and not a theory. We have admitted national obligations of two hundred and sixty billion. We also have many, many billions of contingent liabilities. We have the highest taxes that this country or any other nation has ever had. We have had 17 consecutive years of deficits. The President has told us that there will be a deficit for the present fiscal year, which began July 1, 1946, and which ends June 30, 1947, of approximately two billion. The present fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, is chargable to the action of the last Democratic Congress and the present Democratic administration. The Eightieth Congress will now provide for the revenues and expenditures for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947. What business concern could survive with 17 consecutive years of deficits?

The Democrats got control of the Congress March 4, 1931, and the executive branch in 1933. They have been warned again and again of the results of this persistent and consistent spending in excess of our income. We well remember how Mr. Roosevelt and the Democrats denounced the heavy expenditures of President Hoover. President Hoover's administration in no year, even in the worst depression this country ever saw, expended approximately four billion in a single year. In at least three of the years of his administration, he spent approximately three billion each year.

President Roosevelt, in his most extravagant years of spending and wasting, never did expend more than about thirteen billion in any one year in peacetime. Now President Truman says he must have thirty-seven and a half billion to spend in a peacetime year, and he and his Democrat supporters in the House claim that if we reduce his budget request, that we will interfere with the efficiency of the Government and injure our armed forces. If we cut one and one-half billion as charged by the Democrats, the armed services with the money they now have will have at their disposal over 15 billion for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947. This sum is three-fourths of the cost of World War I at time of signing of the Armistice. Are not our Democrat friends more alarmed over loss of a million political jobs? The useless officeholders are also alarmed.

Many well-informed persons say that his budget could be cut ten billion. The Republicans in the 1946 elections promised the American people that they, if given control of Congress, would cut expenditures, pay something on the national debt, balance the budget and reduce taxes. Many, many Democrats, in order to allay the feelings of the American people, also promised to cut expenditures, balance the budget, pay something on the national debt, and reduce taxes.

In letters and public addresses I made such a promise to the people of my district and I shall vote for the six-billion cut in order to carry out that promise to the people of my district and in response to the mandate they gave to me and to the Republicans elected to the House and Senate.

INSOLVENCY AND INFLATION

It does not take a wise man to see that if we continue to spend more than we take in, the inevitable results must be an insolvent government, the destruction of the faith of our people in our Government, accompanied with uncontrolled inflation. If we cannot reduce our expenditures, balance the Budget, and begin paying on our national debt in this period of prosperity, when can we hope to do this very thing? But for the reckless waste and extravagance of the Democratic administrations through the years and their persistent practice of being the Santa Claus for the world, our country would not be in its present deplorable condition.

The American people have seen their tax burdens and their national debt increase year by year. They have seen their tax and bond money squandered and wasted on boondoggling projects to promote the political fortunes of their party and nominees, and they now propose that the Republicans follow that same course. In this, they will be sadly disappointed. The American people have voted for a change, not merely of officeholders, but a change to economy, honesty, and efficiency in government. They want their Government placed on a solvent basis. They want their debt decreased and not increased. They insist that their tax burdens must be reduced. They insist that waste and inefficiency must stop and that the money paid by them to the Government, through toil and sweat, be not wasted, or to continue to be the Santa Claus for the world.

They are now trying to alarm the people. They say we now have an emergency. In fact, the New Deal administrations have been experts in creating emergencies in the public mind. Every time we attempted to reduce the tax burden and stop going into debt, they pulled an emergency out of the hat. They now say that we propose to weaken our armed forces in this cut of six billion. It is the desire and purpose of every Republican to vote for such sum or sums as may be necessary to provide adequately for our armed forces. Everyone in a position to know does know that there has been a great deal of unnecessary waste in our armed forces. They are engaged in civilian activities of every kind and character in this country and throughout the world. They have hundreds of thousands of civilian workers. Most of them are unnecessary. They are pouring out the American people's property and money with a lavish hand to various groups and nations throughout the world.

While this Nation has been very generous in dealing with needy people, the American people are beginning to wonder if this is to continue forever. We have been borrowing the money with which to act as Santa Claus. We are having very little trouble with the people of Japan, Germany, and Italy—our enemies in World War II. We are pouring out these billions to countries for which we gave so much American blood and treasure, but who now insist on raising insurrections, carrying on revolutions and warfare among themselves and even threatening our own country. Is it now about time for us to say to these people, "We came to your rescue; we saved you; we have helped you for 2 years or more since the end of war to get on your feet. Now, you must quit fighting and raising hell and go to producing for yourselves and relieve our country of those burdens." We cannot continue to carry these burdens for the people all over the world.

We already have the largest debt of any country in the world and the heaviest tax burden. It will take the American people a hundred years to liquidate the debt that we now owe. If this debt is ever paid and we avoid insolvency, inflation, and finally, repudiation, we must put our house in order. The time was when we only had a few million income-tax payers in this country. We now have approximately 40,000,000. An overwhelming majority of these are wage earners, teachers, and others working for wages or salaries. The cost of collecting the taxes from millions of these wage earners and salaried workers is more than the taxes received, but, it does furnish jobs for thousands of office holders. These persons should be cut from the tax rolls and these unnecessary office holders cut from the pay rolls. We have at least a million of useless office holders. We not only have to pay their salaries but we pay hundreds of millions of dollars annually in expenses incurred by them. In fact, they cost us now about $7,000,000,000 a year.

We must turn our backs on the policy of "Tax and tax, spend and spend, increase and increase our national debt." If we continue to go into debt and sell more and more bonds, what will happen one of these days when the people finally lose faith in the solvency of this Government and there is a mad rush to cash the hundreds of billions of dollars worth of bonds and securities that are now outstanding? We must reduce taxes so as to encourage people to invest their money in productive and job-making enterprises. Who wants to risk his money in job-making enterprises under present conditions? Therefore, let us reduce the expenditures by six billion and thereby balance the budget, pay a reasonable sum on our national debt and reduce taxes. This is the only sane, safe, and honest course to pursue. We must put our own house in order. Any other course threatens the very life of our Nation and the welfare of the 140,000,000 American people, and, of course, this includes our defenders and their dependents, the workers, the needy, our farmers, and each and every one of us.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. ST. GEORGE].

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, as a woman, I would like to speak on the subject of Government economy from the angle of the average housewife. The women of this country realize the plain fact, that political economy is simply household economy on a large scale. First, they realize fully that money is money, whether you are dealing in dollars by the hundreds, or by the billions.

Money is nothing but a token representing the sweat and toil of some individual. The fallacy that Government can give food, jobs, or anything else, is the biggest hoax that has ever been put over on mankind.

Every cent of Government money is taken from the people through taxes; every cent of that money has been earned by the people, and belongs to the people, and should be accounted for, to the people.

This budget, the largest peacetime budget ever offered to a civilized nation, can well be cut. In my humble opinion it can well be cut more than the $6,000,000,000 which the Republican Party is asking for.

This budget can be cut by doing just two things; eliminating waste and extravagance in all Government services. No service need be curtailed, the efficiency of no service needs to be in any way jeopardized. After all, our last peacetime budget under the late President, who was by no means famous for economy, was $13,500,000,000.

And now, the present members of the late President's party in this House, tell us that it is impossible to render the necessary services to our people with a peacetime budget of $31,500,000,000.

The women of the United States know enough about household economy to realize that this waste and extravagance must stop. As a result, no one will suffer. Waste and extravagance never produced efficiency.

We can have efficiency, we can have a balanced budget, we can make substantial payments for the retirement of the debt.

The housewives of America, regardless of party, know this, and I believe they are demanding it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEARNEY].

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Chairman, with the assurance that the appropriations which are necessary and justifiable for the armed services will be taken care of, I shall support this resolution.

Mr. Chairman, my stand on national defense, not only the present and future but also the past, is well known to the majority of the membership of this House and to organized veterans. For many years it has been my good fortune to be privileged to serve my State and Nation as a member of the New York National Guard. As a past commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, it has also been my high privilege to have assisted in the formation of their programs for many years, a program dedicated to the policy of an adequate national defense.

I am deeply concerned with adequate and justifiable appropriations not only for the Regular Establishments but also for the National Guard and Reserve. To my mind this is no time to be lacking in an adequate national defense, and while speaking in behalf of such adequate national defense, I also speak out against the tremendous waste of funds which from time to time appears on the surface and the careless and bungling manner in which the administration of some programs are carried out. It certainly does not make sense to me that during the time we were waging war there were some 10,500 colonels on active duty in an Army of over 8,000,000 while today, with the Army a little over 1,000,000 men, there are still some 6,500 full colonels on active duty.

Today I am supporting the resolution before us on the grounds that justifiable appropriations will be granted to the services and also for the reason that even with these appropriations, we will still be able to save the taxpayers of this country billions of dollars. Too much money has been spent in a wasteful and vicious manner during the past 14 years and the time has come to retrench.

During my campaign last fall I promised support to a program of sound economy in governmental expenditures and this promise I intend to carry out. With a sound economy program in expenditures, we will be able to support the program of an adequate national defense. To carry out such an economy program, every request for funds from any source whatsoever must be scrutinized to the limit.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote to support this resolution which seeks to fix a limit on Federal expenditures of $31,500,000,000. My only regret is that the amount is not lower, but it is my hope that the Appropriations Committee will find it possible, as the hearings continue, to effect savings to a point where the limitation will not be in excess of $25,000,000,000. It can be done; it should be done.

There has been a lot of talk here today, Mr. Chairman, to the effect that the adoption of this resolution will impair the military services. I have heard no reliable statement from the Democrats as to just how this would happen. We do have, on the other hand, the positive statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] that cuts can be made in the budget for the military without hurting the efficiency of the services one iota. Our colleague from Michigan is the best informed man in the country on the military budget, and we can rely on his statements. When he tells us that the military budget, including civilian functions, can be cut $1,500,000,000 and still provide an Army of 1,070,000 men, plus an Air Force of 400,000, I will take his word for it, because he knows what he is talking about. A few days ago General Spaatz, Chief of the Air Force, is reported to have said:

> Well, if ENGEL says we can have an efficient Air Force with the money allowed us in the Budget, then I am satisfied we will have.

What greater testimonial can a Member of this House receive? I recommend that all Members read the statement of our distinguished colleague as he gave it here today.

We can cut some more, Mr. Chairman, and I am sure that the great chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], and his coworkers will show the country that we intend to reduce the cost of government and at the same time make adequate provision for the armed services and implementation of our foreign policy. It can be done; it must and will be done.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TWYMAN].

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Chairman, as I have said, I am a veteran of both World Wars. Furthermore, my son volunteered for military service and is a private in the Army Air Forces. My family has a continuous record of service in the armed forces from Colonial days. I am intensely interested in national defense. However, we can reduce the Budget by $6,000,000,000 and still maintain adequate defense and carry on all of the essential functions of our Government. As a matter of fact, I believe that we are being entirely too generous and that we are not cutting the Budget enough. I believe and I hope that this is just one step toward reducing waste in Government and unnecessary expenditures. The people of this country are tired of carrying such a heavy tax burden.

I am mindful of the fact that the people of my district sent me to Congress because they want economy in Government, elimination of wasteful bureaucracy, a substantial payment on the national debt and a reduction of personal income taxes. The same can be said for the majority of Members in the Eightieth Congress.

Of course, we want adequate funds for national defense. In providing these funds, we believe that we can eliminate some of the frills that are unnecessary to national defense. I spent 7 years of my life as an officer of the United States Navy. I have a high regard for the Navy. At the same time, I had occasion to see waste in the Navy and know that economy can be effected which will enable the Navy to operate more efficiently.

I believe it will have a wholesome effect on the rest of the world when they learn that the United States of America has come to its senses and intends to return to some sort of frugality which has made this country strong. By our action today in indicating our desire to effect sensible economies, we shall regain to a slight extent the respect of other nations. We are starting, I hope, on the road to solvency and turning away from the path that leads only to bankruptcy. Let us hope that this will give notice that our country is returning to some degree of sanity.

As I have previously said, the people of this country want us to reduce the staggering debt, reduce taxes, return to industry some of the vast number of people unnecessarily on the Federal pay roll and get back to a sound economy. As long as I am in Congress I shall work to this end and urge others to do the same thing.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM].

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to any blanket reduction in the Budget which will effect any arbitrary cuts in the national-defense program.

As a member of the Armed Services Committee, I have made it my business to familiarize myself with our defense requirements and our program for meeting those requirements.

So far as the Army and Air Forces are concerned, I am convinced that the War Department's program for 1948 does not even begin to meet the real requirements of defense based on a realistic appraisal of our world situation. They are skating on very thin ice indeed. Their safety factors have been cut so low that any further reductions—particularly arbitrary ones without specifying exactly where and how reductions are to be made—would be little less than suicidal.

This is a strong statement, but I earnestly believe it is supported by the facts. Let us look at these facts for a moment.

The Ground Army is furnishing the occupation governments. Some 125,000,000 aliens are being administered in all phases of national government by 350,000 Army personnel. General MacArthur has said, "Send me men or send me food." If we are going to starve these people, we are going to have to govern them by force, or we are going to have to pull out of there.

Now, the way to pull out is to pull out, not to give lip service to full nonpartisan support of our international commitments and our foreign policy and then cripple our forces abroad by voting for this blanket reduction which, I understand, will necessitate a reduction of both the men and food which General MacArthur and General Clay say they must have to do their job. If this body is going to belie its words by its action, I will not be a party to such action.

The way this cut is proposed gentlemen can say, "Oh, we do not propose to cut the men and food for the occupation." Now that is just what I want to know. If you are not going to cut the feet from under our foreign policy by cutting the occupation where are you going to cut?

The Ground and Service Forces of the Army are almost 100 percent in support of the occupation mission and in support of the Air Forces. We are almost literally without any ground combat reserves. There are fewer men under arms in this country today than there were a year before Pearl Harbor.

If you are not going to cut the occupation but insist on imposing this blanket reduction, I will tell you where you are going to cut. You are going to cut the Army Air Forces and scientific research and development—those are the only places left to cut.

Now, I have the greatest faith and confidence in General Spaatz and General Eaker. I think that our Army airmen make up one of the finest body of men the country has ever seen. When they tell me that this cut will reduce the Air Forces in this country to only three groups, I believe them. And when they tell me this cut will stymie the modernization program of our Air Forces, I believe them. If we cannot believe these men who saved our skins in 1943 and 1944, who are we going to believe?

Now, if you believe them, are you still going to vote for a measure which will take our greatest military advantage—air power—and throw it out of the window? I, for one, refuse to do so. I have never talked to a single military expert who did not believe that air power will be the decisive factor in any future world conflict. It can be the means of preventing the early possibility of any such conflict. Are we going to deliberately tear up that insurance policy? I, for one, refuse to do so.

If we do not cut the occupation and do not cut our air power, what is left? Scientific research and development. Gentlemen know that our scientific research coupled with our air power brought about an early end to World War II. Gentlemen know that there is an international race for supremacy in the scientific weapons of the future. Today we have the advantage in that race but we can lose that advantage tomorrow if we deliberately take away the money from our military-scientific research teams. The present Budget figure for this purpose is already alarmingly low. Any further cut here represents a criminal disregard of the lessons of the fall of France, Pearl Harbor, and Hiroshima and Nagasaki. I, for one, refuse to be a party to any such blind recklessness.

Now, if we do not cut our occupation or our air power or our research and development there is very little left to cut. Doubtless economies can be effected by increased efficiency and we should insist on those economies. But the way to effect that is by a critical analysis of each item, not by any blanket cut which—applied to already dangerously low defense programs—must of necessity cripple those programs.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that anyone who has the security of this country at heart and who understands our military requirements and program will vote as I will vote against this dangerous and arbitrary proposal.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS].

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, today is a fateful day in the history of the United States and of the world. The overwhelming Republican majority in this House has decided without benefit of debate, by employing the gag rule, to arbitrarily slash the budget of the Government of the United States in the amount of $6,000,000,000. Today is indeed fateful, and possibly even tragic, because the action comes in spite of and in the face of warnings by the great leaders who now control the affairs of our Army and Navy and State Departments. It comes in spite of the fact that the majority of the people have expressed grave doubts and fears about its advisability. It comes at a time when all the rest of the world is facing economic chaos and when the British Empire, which has been one of the bulwarks of free enterprise and free government is crumbling throughout the world, and while France and western Europe totter on the brink of communism. It comes at a time when aggressive and expansionist Russian ideology directed by the Red rulers of the Kremlin is on the march everywhere in the world.

It comes, too, without benefit of hearings or without the essential testimony that must be gathered to determine whether it be wise or unwise.

Throughout the capitals of the world it can only be interpreted as a return to traditional short-sighted, war-causing, Republican isolationism. When this vote is taken this afternoon and the gentlemen of the majority have voted in favor of the cut, the message goes out to the capitals of the world, to the peoples who still have a flicker of hope in democracy, as well as to those who are dedicated to its destruction, that the voice and the power of this great democracy is being silenced. It goes out as a message to the world that we are back on the way to stupid, ill-advised, ill-conceived disarmament, and that the beautiful, hopeful, dream of peace may not be realized. Specifically and immediately it takes from General Marshall, our magnificent Secretary of State, his greatest weapon when he meets in Moscow a few weeks hence and attempts to bargain with the men of the Kremlin who understand power, and power alone.

It is not surprising that the first real action of this Republican Congress should be to return America to isolationism and to destroy the power of America. Our Republican colleagues are being consistent. After all, does not history record the sad fact that immediately following the First World War they scuttled the peace machinery that was established? Is it not a fact that they immediately set up the most outrageous tariffs and trade barriers that the country had ever known, so that trade and commerce were stifled throughout the world and our ships lay idle and our ports were desolate? And as a result, hunger and starvation and unemployment soon stalked the world, breeding the dictatorships of Europe which brought about World War II and its train of death, destruction, and despair? Is it not a fact that the same Republican leadership which advocates destroying the power of America here today gave us the phony prosperity of 1929 and the bleak, desolate, despairing depression that followed? Is it not a fact that this same leadership fought every constructive measure to bring America out of that depression? And is it not a fact that this same leadership told us in 1940, after Hitler had conquered practically all of Europe, after France and the Lowlands lay under the despot's heel, that selective service was not necessary, that lend-lease was not required, that all of the measures essential to the welfare and to the protection and preparation of this Nation should not be enacted? Yes, my colleagues, this is that same blind, unthinking leadership in action. But it is difficult to believe, and I for one do not believe, that the American people, confronted with the awful realities of atomic power, guided missiles, and aggressive and expansionist communism, will tolerate the step that is being taken here today.

It may be good that it comes now, because America has the opportunity to recognize once again its false leaders, who in their mad desire to protect special interests would again destroy the security of this Nation, bring about economic chaos everywhere, and make possible the unbelievable calamity of a Third World War.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] made the statement that if he erred in his vote today he wanted it to be on the side of national economy. If I err on my vote today, I want it to be on the side of national security. Only a few minutes ago we witnessed a demonstration of what I regard as the inconsistency of our Republican friends. The distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE] arose and complained bitterly that the War Department had only today advised him that the Air Reserve Training program in his own city of Tulsa was to be discontinued.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to yield so early in the course of my remarks, but I will.

Mr. TABER. The idea, which I do not think the gentleman stressed, is that this call from the War Department was received today. That was the point.

Mr. THOMASON. May I say to my friend, the gentleman from New York, as long as a month ago, I believe all the members of the Committee on the Armed Services were advised that the War Department was then prepared to abandon some 30 or 40 Air Reserve posts, and one of them happens to be in my own city of El Paso, Tex.

I make no serious complaint about it if that, in the judgment of the War Department, is necessary to come within the Budget and also to meet adequate requirements for the national defense. My feeling today is that if we ever bought a pig in a poke, this is it. If there was ever a shot in the dark, it is happening today. I yield to no man in my desire for economy. I am for eliminating all unnecessary bureaus, discharging all unnecessary personnel, doing away with all war agencies that have served their purpose, but I repeat, I am not for injuring or damaging the national defense, which I undertake to say this measure will do if you carry out your threats and intentions.

No man here received a mandate from his people at the election last fall to cripple national defense at this critical time. No man received a mandate from his people to vote against all appropriations for soil conservation, rural electrification, meritorious dams, harbors, flood control, and things of that sort. We did receive a mandate that we should practice economy in this Congress, and that is exactly what I expect to vote for, but I demand a bill of particulars. I do not propose to vote blindfolded.

You would think from some of the speeches today that this country is just about broke and in bankruptcy. You would think that the Government of the United States was set up as a money-making enterprise, a profit-making business. Government is established to serve its people, provide educational facilities, transportation, communications, national defense, postal service, roads, parks, and things of that character.

Speaking of the country being almost broke, as some would have us believe, I undertake to say that the country was never so prosperous in all of its history. There never was no much money in the banks; there never was so much employment; there never was so much prosperity and, in fact, too much easy money and high living. People are riding in new automobiles; most people wearing good clothes. As one of my colleagues commented today, the women spent $200,000,000 last year for hats alone. We are living in a country where no enemy bomb was dropped and no property destroyed. We are the only country in the world today that has not suffered the ravages of war in the sense of not having been attacked. Now, the Republican leaders bring us a proposition that we shoot in the dark and say that this Budget shall be cut $6,000,000,000, and nobody dares say where or how.

I admire the courage and frankness of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], chairman of this great Committee on Appropriations, because I know that when this resolution is passed, as it probably will be, he is going to stand pat and cut this appropriation $6,000,000,000 if he can, but he knows he will not. I also admire the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY], who said that he expected to vote to put into effect the $6,000,000,000 cut if it passes the House. As my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], said, I shall look forward to the time when some of these appropriations come in, to see how you vote on your own pet projects, just as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE], complained so bitterly about his air reserve post a few minutes ago.

The leaders in the other body, headed by Senator VANDENBERG, Senator MILLIKIN, and I believe Senator TAFT, are already on record that they will cut this bill down to $4,500,000,000. So there is something haywire somewhere. In other words, it is nothing but politics, insincerity and a gesture at keeping their campaign promises of last fall. We should cut out all unnecessary activities of the Government. We ought to reduce personnel to the point where we have only those left that we actually need. But when we come to the question of national security I do not know anybody that we can better follow or trust more than General Marshall, General Eisenhower, General MacArthur, General Clay, and our Secretaries of War and Navy.

Let me tell you briefly the situation as it exists today. I happen to be a member of the committee which is dealing with the subject. Not only that, but our committee in the last 2 weeks has had executive sessions with high authorities in both the Army and the Navy who said we had already reduced our armed forces by 90 percent. We had during the war approximately 11,000,000 men in the Army. We have cut them down now to 1,070,000. So I would just like to ask anybody who says this is not going to cripple national defense and national security to tell the House where he is going to cut $1,750,000,000, as the Republican leaders have proposed.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] was quoted in the press as having said they would cut the War Department a billion dollars. That does not include civil functions. He said further they would cut the Navy Department $750,000,000; and then I believe they would take from General Marshall his $500,000,000 to feed the starving people of Europe.

Let me pause to ask somebody to tell us just where you are going to cut a billion dollars out of the Army. I undertake to say you cannot do it, and you will not do it; but I will go further than that and say that in my deliberate judgment there is no more chance of cutting this Budget $6,000,000,000 than there is of taking wings and flying unless you cut some $2,000,000,000 out of our armed forces, and I do not believe the people will stand for that.

Nobody has said where they would cut, whether it would be rural electrification, whether it would be rivers and harbors, whether it would be public buildings, whether it would be soil conservation, or whether it will be the Army and Navy. When anyone asks where and what the cut will be, the reply is, "We are not going to cut your project; we are going to cut somewhere else." Is that the way we are going to legislate in this Congress?

I am not one who believes we are on the verge of immediate war. I am not willing, however, that we return to pre-Pearl Harbor isolation days. I want us to remain strong because there are some people in the world who only respect force. We have reduced our Army from 11,000,000 to 1,070,000. We now have only 140,000 men in Europe and 175,000 in Japan and Korea. General MacArthur has said that he cannot operate with safety in Japan and Korea with fewer men than he has, 175,000. The same is true of General Clay in the European theater. He is having plenty of trouble there with only 140,000 men to carry out his task—but in marked contrast—and I make this remark because the record bears out my statement—in Russia today they have over 5,000,000 men under arms. They have not compulsory military training, they have universal compulsory military service where every young man has to serve in the army from 2 to 5 years. In Russia today they have 12,000 aircraft as compared to our approximately 4,000 aircraft. The War Department budget carries only about 900 modern airplanes. Are we going to cut that item? I can understand how some gentleman like the gentleman from New York, [Mr. KEARNEY], and the gentleman who just spoke a few moments ago would say that if you are not going to cripple national defense, then I am for this. But nobody has or can give them that assurance. I think they are being misled.

It is also of interest that every veterans' organization I have heard from, be it national, State or local, has said that under no condition do they believe we can with safety cut this budget for the Army and the Navy. We are hearing the same story over again that we heard in 1940 and 1941. Many of our friends today who are leading the fight for this bill today were opposed to every single national defense measure before Pearl Harbor.

I do not know whether we are drifting back to isolationism or not, but as far as I am concerned, I want to be lined up with men like General Marshall, General Eisenhower, and those men who know the conditions and who know the situation. We trusted those men with our boys to fight the war and they won a great victory. We still live in a chaotic world. We can take no chances. The next few months will probably determine if we are to have another war or permanent peace.

Mr. Chairman, to me it would be absolutely unfair and outrageous to cut this Budget until we have a break-down and know what we are doing. You ought to file a bill of particulars. You ought to give us a little time, and I hope somebody will offer a motion to recommit so that this matter can go back to the committee in order to have some hearings and let us act intelligently and in the best interest of the country.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MORRIS. This resolution provides that it is the judgment of the Congress that the Budget be cut $6,000,000,000. Now, how can we form a judgment as to the specific amount to be cut until we are furnished with some information?

Mr. THOMASON. Well, the question answers itself because nobody can say what we are going to cut or where you are going to cut or how much. This House has always had facts and figures before it. The bills have been based on hearings before some committee to show how much we are going to cut. I repeat that it is politics, a wild hope and an empty gesture.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman then is not satisfied with what Members on that side of the House did. I suppose he has read the Colmer report?

Mr. THOMASON. I have read that report but it has nothing in it that recommends any such cut or action as you propose in our armed forces.

Mr. REED of New York. It put a ceiling of $30,000,000,000 on national expenditures.

Mr. THOMASON. There is nothing in the Colmer report that favors a reduction in the armed forces, such as this bill provides.

Mr. REED of New York. Does the gentleman repudiate the men on his side who were members of that committee?

Mr. THOMASON. No; but the report does not show what the gentleman tries to indicate. You will find in the hearings in the Committee on Appropriations, that every high official in the Army and Navy, together with men like General MacArthur and General Clay, has said that under present conditions they cannot operate with such a reduction.

Mr. REED of New York. Did you not try to wish 200,000 men on MacArthur and he sent word back that he did not need them?

Mr. THOMASON. No; I do not know anything about that and I do not believe the record will substantiate that statement. I do know that he and General Marshall and General Eisenhower are hoping and praying that the cut you propose will not be adopted.

Mr. REED of New York. The record will substantiate it.

Mr. THOMASON. General Marshall leaves in a few days for Moscow. What is done there will likely determine if we are to have permanent peace. We should uphold his hands. We can take no chances. I beg of you not to cut the Army and Navy by $2,000,000,000. That, I am certain, would endanger our national security.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN].

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this resolution. It seems to me that if we will find the issues, there can be no difficulty in coming to the right decision. The arguments in the newspapers, their columnists, and even in the mails opposing this bill constantly say, "Do not cut the armed services. Do not cut our defense. Do not weaken our security in these perilous times." Of course, everyone agrees with these "dont's," and there is no issue.

However, if they would go further and say, "Do not cut extravagance, waste, and unnecessary expense in our armed services" we would be getting down to the real issue. Or, if they would say, "There has been no extravagance, waste, and unnecessary spending in our Government for the last decade, and, therefore, you can accept the President's Budget," they would be getting down to the real issue, and these are the issues that should be debated.

It has been abundantly shown in the debate that on the basis of the real issue, the opposition has no meritorious defense, and, therefore, it centers practically all of its ammunition on the aforesaid nonrelated issue of impairing our defense, for which no one contends.

The real issue of cutting unwarranted expense is in itself a vital one in our security. The American people have been told by our great leaders and have themselves known since the beginning of our history that as long as we maintain our form and fundamentals of government we can never be destroyed from without. That if destruction ever comes, it will come from within, and our security is in far greater danger from within than it has ever been in our national history. Unless we reduce spending, we are surely threatened with financial and economic collapse.

On the floor it has been said that our potential danger can come from only one source—from without. It is my firm belief that with the force that we possess at the present time we need not fear that danger for a decade or more.

However, it is also well known that that same source of potential danger is working with Trojan horses within our gates. It is also known that continued budgets of $37,500,000,000 in peacetime are their greatest hope for the threat of destruction from within. Unless we can keep our production and economy as secure as it was in the last war, the gallantry of our military forces will be of little avail. We cannot keep our economy secure by a continued doctrine and philosophy in which we tax and tax and tax, spend and spend and spend, elect and elect and elect.

To balance our national budget, to cut down our national expenditures, and to rebuild a healthy economy is more necessary in the next decade than to prepare for a military attack, although, of course, the latter cannot be lost sight of.

To accomplish this objective for our security will require the combined effort of the American people, including our armed services, to cut out, insofar as is possible, every extravagance, waste, and unnecessary expense.

That this resolution seeks to accomplish, and unless we can accomplish it, as I said before, we will succumb to the forces within which, unless stopped, will more surely destroy our Government than will a military attack from without.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, when I was in the military service in World War I, I recall an Indian who was a private in the Army. After he had gone through the usual squads right and squads left, someone said to him, "Sam, how do you like the Army?" He said, "Me no like." He said to him, "Why not?" He said, "Too much salute; not enough shoot."

That has been the trouble with economy. There has been an awful lot of verbal saluting. There has in the last 14 or 15 years been very little shooting. The people want some forthright shooting on this issue. They are not interested in a congressional debating society, and my good friends over on this side can go home and say you have been gagged by those mean Republicans, but the $64 question will be, What did you do for economy?

Now, there is one thing that you need and that is the will to economize. That is the one thing that is needful. You remember when Martha, the sister of Lazarus, was fretting herself about all the household chores and the fact that Mary was not helping to get ready for the entertainment of the Galilean, He, with that benign countenance said to her, "Only one thing is needful." Only one thing is needful for economy, and that is the will to economize, and all the escapes and all the pretty speeches that you have made today are going to avail you nothing when finally you must make answer to a real abiding demand of the American people. They insist that solemn and serious pledges be redeemed.

Now, you say to us today that this is a gesture. Then why are you so concerned if this is a gesture? If this means nothing, why not save all the rhetoric today? Why not husband your energies for some better day?

Evidently you are concerned that this is something more than a gesture, and we mean to make it more than a gesture, even though in the language of section 138 of the Reorganization Act it must necessarily be a recommendation to the Congress. The Congress can give and the Congress can take away. The Congress can approve and the Congress can take off the ceiling. But make no mistake and find no refuge in the fact that this is going to be a gesture. We cannot afford to take action that is not purposeful.

You say we shall fail. Is it not much better to be like Galileo who said, "Why should we who have lived in the dark refuse to keep our eyes upon the stars?" We can come today with a recommendation for $1,000,000,000; we can come with a recommendation for $2,000,000,000. Do you think it will be satisfactory to the millions of people in this country who have been feeling the crush of expenditure for, lo, these many years? Suppose we do fail. Suppose when the record is written at the end of the year we have saved only $4,000,000,000 or $4,500,000,000 or $5,000,000,000? It shall be written to the everlasting glory of the party that we had our eyes upon the stars. But you on the minority side can do the magnanimous thing by aiding in achieving this reduction.

But, on the other hand, my good friends, it may be that we can eclipse that ceiling and make it $7,000,000,000 or $8,000,000,000. There is a settled body of opinion in the country that perhaps the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget should have gone further. That, of course, will be determined when hearings are held on the various appropriation measures.

You say to us that there will be sadness in the world when this action is consummated. Oh, yes; the debtor is always sad when the creditor decides that he is no longer a good risk. We have been pretty open-handed in our largess. We have scattered money into all the corners of the earth. When I was in Tunisia somebody said to me, "Why, your people do not pay taxes in the United States, do they?" Marvelous. They think money grows on plum trees here.

So, there comes a day when for our own fiscal integrity there must be a reckoning and there will be a happy day in this country when we can give that assurance to our own people that we have reduced expenditures, we have reduced taxes, and we have reduced the public debt.

You say we send General Marshall to Moscow and take the edge off his sword. Oh, I think the sharpest sword, the shiniest sword, and the best weapon we can give him is an efficient Army and an efficient Navy, with the fat and the water squeezed out, predicated upon a solid fiscal economy back home that is conducive to an atmosphere that will make the very genius of America in the field of production flower. That is the kind of a sword with which to send him to Moscow and then, of course, they will listen. His best weapon is an America where freedom flourishes and incentive is preserved. They can be preserved by what we here propose.

Now then, we sent Secretary Byrnes up to Lake Success along in August, and you know, something happened at that time. Let me read you the letter the President of the United States sent to Secretary Forrestal dated August 2, 1946, which is 5 months ago. President Truman said in that letter:

> I wish, therefore, that you would forthwith take the necessary action to adjust the current naval programs that the total expenditure in the fiscal year 1947 will not exceed $5,150,000,000. This will necessitate a reduction in prospective expenditures of $650,000,000.

Did you raise your voices at that time, when your own President took $650,000,000 out of the Navy budget, when they were fighting the battle of Lake Success and the Waldorf Hotel with Mr. Molotov and all the rest? Where were your voices and your concern and dismay at that time? No word was uttered, and it was safely done. Where was the impairment in the national security? Did you say then that the edge was being dulled on the sword of Secretary Byrnes as he contested with Molotov, Gromyko, and Voroshuloff?

On that same day, when the Secretary of State was up there battling with the Soviet Commissars on disarmament, atomic-energy control, and other vital matters, the President of the United States wrote to the Secretary of War, and what did he say to him on that day? Quoting President Truman:

> This will necessitate a reduction in prospective expenditures of $1,000,000,000.

The President took $1,650,000,000 out of the defense budget as late as August 2, 1946. Where was your concern? Did you hear Mr. Forrestal raise his voice? Did you hear Secretary Patterson raise his voice? Did you hear them say, "National security will be impaired"? Oh, no, indeed; no, indeed. Yet you say to us today we would impair security. We are as much interested in security as are you.

You say today, "What has been happening over on the Senate side?" You say Senate Republicans do not see eye to eye with us on this matter. I am like Mrs. Murphy. I prefer to hoe in my own garden here in the House of Representatives rather than look at what the Senate is doing. That will be their business, not ours. We have a responsibility of our own.

You say communism is stalking over the earth, and if we should cut some of these funds for foreign relief, there will be sadness and sorrow and that perhaps the shadow of Red fascism will move even further. There will be a harvest in Europe when they start spending this money. This becomes effective on the 1st day of July 1947. There was a partial harvest in 1945. There was a harvest in 1946. There will be a harvest in 1947. Shall we cajole them in their occupational complex, which becomes a settled part of their thinking until they depend always on this country? Is that what we propose to do? As for Red fascism, better known as communism, let me tell you that today we have $750,000,000 invested in the French Republic, but their Minister of War this good hour is a Communist, and Red fascism is engulfing that ancient Republic that had a great tradition for liberty.

We gave Tito $363,000,000, and did it make any difference in the march of totalitarianism that has engulfed that country until there is no freedom whatsoever?

Shall we continue a futile effort to halt communism with hand-outs of American cash?

No; the best answer we can make in this rather sad hour is to be strong at home. That is the way the 140,000,000 people in America can best serve the peoples who are living in misery amidst the rubble and debris of World War II.

You say to us today that we bring you no detail and no break-downs. We bring you no detail? What difference would it make if we had brought you detail? Take a look at this Budget. There are 1,448 pages in this Budget. There are hundreds of thousands of items. If we brought you detail, we would be here until next Christmas, and you know it. So you have been making pretty speeches here about giving you details. You know why you want detail—that is the sacred cow. "Oh, it is all right to cut agriculture, but do not cut flood control." "It is all right to cut rivers and harbors, but do not cut the Soil Conservation Service." You want to take the "me" out of economy. Well, economy, my friends, is a pretty painful business when the virus of spending has become so thoroughly engrafted in the corporate body of the Republic. So when you ask for detail, we could give you detail and give you a break-down, but section 138 of the Reorganization Act does not require any detail. Go back and read the law. It says we are to report a ceiling figure. That is what it calls for. So where is this argument about detail except to string it out for a long, long time and to accomplish nothing. The people want a little shooting on the subject of economy and a little less saluting.

Now, you say to us that we have reached into thin air and made a guess. Here is the first volume of data that was prepared at the request of the gentleman from New York, JOHN TABER. It was prepared by the Budget Bureau. Everything is there—the rate of expenditure in the fiscal year 1947, the availability of funds, the amount we are asking for in 1948, how they propose to dispose of the new appropriations. It is all there in detail. There is the unliquidated contract authority. We have been working on this subject for weeks. But the trouble with our good friends of the minority is that they think you can do this business in committee meetings. You know there is a presumption that when you are elected a Member of the House of Representatives that you do a little individual work. And we have been working at it. I assure you the gentleman from New York, JOHN TABER, has worked day and night, far into the night. The gentleman from Massachusetts, DICK WIGGLESWORTH, has fairly neglected his family for weeks. I have gone all through the Budget. I have been through that Budget over five times and have checked the Army and Navy accounts many times. Other Members have done likewise. Besides, it is not very nice, my friends, for you to reflect upon those Members who for years have been serving on the Committee on Appropriations working with the Army and Navy budget. Do you not give them some credit for the years of service on the subcommittees for the War Department and Navy Department? Do you not give them credit that they know a little something about it without having to have the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy come up every 25 minutes? They know what it is about. They have years of background. For many years, many members of the committee have been working on the needs and requirements of Army and Navy. They know the needs of the services. They also know waste and extravagance when they see it. Does experience count for naught?

Consider the clerks of these committees who have worked on these budgets for years. They have a wealth of background. Finally let me say that John Pugh, who until recently was clerk to the full Committee on Appropriations, is an old Navy man who for many years has served the committee and is one of the real experts in the Nation on this matter. Does that mean nothing?

You say we have acted arbitrarily. Let me tell you here in public that when we marked up the rescission bill in June and took millions out of the Navy Department we asked one of the high officials to come down. We said, "We have finished our hearings. We have determined what we are going to take out. Is there any more to take out?" Then, without any abashment, he said, "Gentlemen, I am of the opinion that you can take out another $1,250,000,000." We took out another one and one-fourth billion without a line of testimony. So, you see, we know something about this business. We did not reach out into thin air. We have been going through the mill. We have been particularizing. We have been laying out schedules of economy: What can be eliminated, what can be reduced, what can we cut back on projects, can we cut back projects that are in process at the present time?

The guide lines are all in this report. Do not let anybody fool you as to whether this was such a rough and ragged guess after all. No indeed. We had the services of people from the outside. The Brookings Institution let us have one of their best men. We had available to us some of those who are working with the Postwar Tax Policy Commission, headed by probably the outstanding tax man in the United States, Mr. Roswell Magill, who was appointed by a Democratic President as the Under Secretary of the Treasury. We have had many things at our disposal. So as we have gone through it, combing items here and there, examining on those that could be eliminated, those that could be cut back, those that probably ought to be cut back to 1940, and a great many other items, I say to you on my own responsibility in behalf of the subcommittee that prepared this report and then managed to secure a vote of 50 to 22 in a closed session of the full committee last Friday all day, that it represents no thin guess.

Finally, let us see how close we are going to come to it. A chairman of a subcommittee said before the Budget Committee when the gentleman from New York, JOHN TABER, convened them for all-day sessions, every member of the subcommittee, both Democrats and Republicans, having an opportunity to come in, the chairman of one subcommittee made his estimate and it was put down. Part of the bill that has been prepared is already marked up. It will come to this floor perhaps next week or the week following. How well did that subcommittee meet the estimate? I will tell you. They estimated a saving of $61,000,000 in that portion of the bill, and the saving will be over $80,000,000. So they are doing better than the estimate after full hearings. So this is pretty well prepared. I commend to you, in the interest of the American people, that this resolution be enacted by a resounding majority so that we may have our hands upheld to hold it at the $6,000,000,000 level. For years the subject of economy has been idly saluted. Today it calls for some real shooting. This job can, and it must, be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

The debate provided on the resolution in House Resolution 103 having been completed, the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARNESS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Concurrent Resolution 20, pursuant to House Resolution 103, he reported the same back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the resolution?

Mr. CANNON. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON moves to recommit the concurrent resolution to the Joint Committee on Legislative Budget with instructions to report back to the House and Senate by April 15, 1947, with recommendation of such amounts of reduction as can be made in the Budget, based on their findings and in accordance with the facts deduced from their hearings and investigations.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 231, not voting 35, as follows:

SENATE

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1947

(Legislative day of Wednesday, February 19, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We recognize, our Father, as George Washington saw so clearly, that "no people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the Invisible Hand which conducts the affairs of men more than those of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of providential agency."

Believing that the Hand that hath brought us thus far will not forsake us now, but if we are willing will lead us on into further inspiration and service to all mankind, we would join our prayers this day with those of Christian women all over the world in this day of prayer. With so many souls united in intercession for our own beloved country and for all mankind, may there come an outpouring of Thy Spirit into our hearts and minds, that we shall feel it, and all men may know it.

"Lift us above unrighteous anger and mistrust, into faith and hope and charity, by a simple and steadfast reliance on Thy sure will."

We pray for some evidence in what is said and done here, that Thou hast been permitted a vote, and that men yielded to Thee. In Jesus' name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, February 19, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the Senate, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB], heretofore designated for that purpose, will read Washington's Farewell Address.

Thereupon Mr. REVERCOMB advanced to the desk and read the Farewell Address, as follows:

To the people of the United States:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest; no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and, every day, the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently, want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans, by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation, and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquility at home; your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that, from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed; it is of infinite moment, that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can, in any event, be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have very inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth, or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess, are the work of joint counsels, and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they addressed themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest.—Here, every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The north, in an unrestrained intercourse with the south, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter, great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise, and precious materials of manufacturing industry.—The south, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the north, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the north, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength, to which itself is unequally adapted. The east, in a like intercourse with the west, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The west derives from the east supplies requisite to its growth and comfort—and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions, to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the west can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength; or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined cannot fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts, greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations; and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union, an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalship alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues, would stimulate and embitter. Hence likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments, which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is, that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind and exhibit the continuance of the union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its hands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations,—northern and southern—Atlantic and western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head; they have seen, in the negotiation by the executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the general government and in the Atlantic states, unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain and that with Spain, which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were proceured? will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances, in all times, have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a constitution of government, better calculated than your former, for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and maintaining within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.—But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power, and the right of the people to establish government, presuppose the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency.—They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system; and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments, as of other human institutions:—that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country:—that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion: and remember, especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular references to the founding them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind.—It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and, sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind, (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit or party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils, and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchial cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasion of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern; some of them in our country and under our own eyes.—To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the constitution designates.—But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes, that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object (which is always a choice of difficulties,) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice towards all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions, to the favorite nation, of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinon, to influence or awe the public councils!—Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, (I conjure you to believe me fellow citizens,) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove, that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith:—Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collusions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon, to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view, that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations, but if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far, in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have, at least, believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe; my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both houses of congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound, in duty and interest, to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without any thing more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity towards other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress, without interruption, to that degree of strength, and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration, I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors and dangers.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate by the President pro tempore and referred as indicated:

A resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Georgia; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Georgia, and the same is hereby resolved by authority of the same, That there exists at the present time a great need for an immediate and thorough investigation by the State of Georgia and the United States Government into matters concerning great frauds that have been and are now being made by certain building contractors against veterans of World War II, and whereas,

"Be it resolved, That an immediate and thorough investigation be instituted immediately into the affairs concerning veterans of World War II who are being defrauded by unscrupulous building contractors throughout the State of Georgia and the Nation as a whole; and whereas,

"Be it resolved, That the clerk of the house of representatives is hereby requested by said resolution to transmit a certified copy of this resolution to the Attorney General of Georgia, to the Attorney General of the United States, to the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Senate of the United States, and to the Veterans' Administration."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Utah; to the Committee on Armed Services:

"Senate Joint Resolution 12

"Joint resolution of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Utah State Legislature, memorializing the Congress to direct the Federal Public Housing Authority to cooperate with Salt Lake County, Utah, in the reconversion of Camp Kearns, Utah, into a temporary housing project for veterans in order to alleviate the critical housing shortage in Salt Lake County, Utah

"Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah:

"Whereas there is a critical housing shortage in Salt Lake County, Utah, and that many veterans and others are unable to find suitable housing accommodations; and

"Whereas the outlook for immediately alleviating such shortage due to the unavailability of materials and labor is remote, and that normally new construction processes will not provide the necessary housing for a considerable period of time, perhaps several years; and

"Whereas Camp Kearns, Utah, located near Salt Lake City, has been declared surplus by the proper Government agency having authority to act in such matters; and

"Whereas the majority of the buildings now existing at Camp Kearns, Utah, were constructed to house personnel in the armed forces and civilian workers and thus can be easily and readily converted to provide temporary housing for veterans, who are badly in need of housing accommodations in the metropolitan Salt Lake City area: Be it therefore

"Resolved, That the Congress direct the Federal Public Housing Authority to immediately effect the necessary arrangements with Salt Lake County, Utah, and the appropriate Government agency having jurisdiction over said Camp Kearns, Utah, to immediately proceed to convert Camp Kearns, Utah, into housing accommodations under the provisions of the Lanham Act relating to temporary housing for veterans; be it further

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"Senate Joint Memorial 4

"Joint memorial relative to the development of the waters of the Missouri River and its tributaries for irrigation and other purposes

"To the President of the United States, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress Assembled, to Each Member of the Congressional Delegation From the State of Montana, and to the Governor of the State of Montana:

"Your memorialists, the members of the Thirtieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, respectfully represent that—

"Whereas the Congress of the United States has authorized certain reclamation projects for the development of the land and water resources of the Missouri River Basin; and

"Whereas the general welfare and economic stability of the people of Montana and all States of the Missouri River Basin is in a great measure dependent upon a continuous program of reclamation development; and

"Whereas reclamation projects meet a present need for providing means for a living for veterans during the construction period, as well as opportunities for their future homes; and

"Whereas reclamation projects lead to the production of new wealth and their benefits extend widely to large sections of industry, transportation and trade; and

"Whereas their construction costs are repayable to the Federal Treasury and their operation and maintenance costs are paid by the water users and are, therefore, not a continuing public expense; and

"Whereas because of the aforementioned facts we believe that the need for curtailment of public expenditures should not seriously affect the prosecution of this development program: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Thirtieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the Senate and House concurring), does hereby respectfully petition and request that the Congress of the United States provide adequate appropriations for the construction of the authorized reclamation projects described in this memorial and this development program be continued in an orderly manner; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be mailed by the secretary of state of Montana to the President of the United States, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, to each member of the congressional delegation from the State of Montana and to the Governor of the State of Montana.

H., requesting that appropriate steps be taken providing for reapportionment of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii in accordance with the spirit and intent of section 55 of the Organic Act; to the Committee on Public Lands.

PROTEST AGAINST UNNECESSARY SPENDING OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received a timely letter from L. A. White, 1227 North Green Street, a leading businessman of Wichita, Kans., protesting against the unnecessary spending of public funds by the Government. I ask unanimous consent to have this letter printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WICHITA, KANS., February 17, 1947.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This is to let you know how I feel about the budget. If it is ever to be cut, now is the time. I have been hoping for a Republican Congress for a long time, and that they would really get down to business and cut the unnecessary spending that has been going on in Government.

It is beginning to look as though each Senator and Representative is hoping to get something for his district. It is about time to think of us little taxpayers and get rid of unnecessary Government job holders.

Yours respectfully,

L. A. WHITE.

LEGISLATIVE FARM PROGRAM OF AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a statement by Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, which he presented before both the House and the Senate Committees on Agriculture, setting forth the legislative farm program of that organization.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. We believe the present basic agricultural legislation, which includes the conservation of soil, water, and forest resources, acreage adjustments and marketing quotas when needed, commodity loans, and surplus disposal programs should be retained and strengthened.

2. We insist that the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation be extended, with sufficient funds provided to carry out loan, support, and other authorized programs. We oppose the use of these funds for consumer subsidies.

3. We insist that the Government's price-support commitments for agricultural commodities be maintained for the 2-year period. Support prices for Steagall commodities must be maintained at not less than 90 percent of parity or comparable price, adjusted for seasonal, geographic, and grade differentials in the market place at all times during the marketing season. The support-price programs may need to be contingent upon compliance with production quotas or other mechanism to prevent excessive production.

4. We urge studies designed to develop long-time programs for agriculture which are more nearly self-sustaining and which correct the basic causes of disparity between agriculture, labor, and industry.

5. We urge the strengthening of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act and its extension to other commodities.

6. We favor the continuation of crop insurance, but insist that it be on a sound actuarial basis.

7. We urge programs for developing new uses and new markets for agricultural products. A positive program for regaining and maintaining our fair share of the world's markets should be developed. Section 32 funds should be retained, and Congress should provide that these funds remain available until expended for their intended purpose.

8. We believe that the parity concept is basic to the welfare of agriculture. For the Steagall support-price period the present parity formula should be used in administering the support-price programs for most agricultural products. For certain nonbasic commodities, such as livestock and dairy products, some revision is needed in the parity formula for administering the support-price program. At the end of the Steagall support-price period the parity formula should be modernized.

9. Duplication, overlapping, and unnecessary expense in Government operations must be eliminated. It is imperative that farmers have a voice in developing and administering farm programs. A minimum of centralized control from Washington and a maximum of decentralization in administering agricultural programs is absolutely essential. Programs must be developed to meet the needs and local conditions in the various agricultural areas. The Secretary of Agriculture should consult with representatives of bona fide farm organizations in establishing agencies responsible for carrying out agricultural laws and programs.

10. We urge a program of conservation of soil, water, grazing, and forest resources designed to secure a maximum of conservation with a minimum of expense. We reaffirm our previous position on coordination of agricultural conservation agencies. We urge decentralization of program planning and operation on a grant-in-aid basis of conservation programs, with responsibility placed in bona fide local, district, and State farmer committees.

11. Steps must be taken to make the farm credit system fully cooperative—farmer-owned and farmer-controlled. The Farm Credit Administration and the direct Government lending agencies should be placed under the direction of an independent national bipartisan board. The present maximum loan rate of 65 percent of the normal agricultural value of land in farm-mortgage loans by the Federal land banks should not be increased, unless some program of insurance is established within the system to assure financial integrity of the Federal land banks. The present limitation as to amount that may be loaned to one borrower should be eliminated. We believe improvement of farm housing can best be met by utilizing the existing credit agencies under the Farm Credit Administration.

12. We favor a national soils fertility program which will encourage the fertilizer industry to increase its production of both low- and high-grade phosphate and potash. Farm organizations should acquire adequate natural reserves of phosphate and potash for developing a reasonable percentage of needed plant capacity for the production and distribution of high-concentrated materials. Tennessee Valley Authority should be authorized to acquire reasonable phosphate reserves in the Florida area and to construct an experimental blast furnace phosphate plant in the Mobile area to develop new processes and new forms of concentrated fertilizer, but definite provision should be made for the disposal of this plant to a private agency within a reasonable period. The test demonstration program should be expanded under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the land-grant colleges and the TVA, to a reasonable number of farms. A program should be developed for the conservation and utilization of phosphate and potash resources in the intermountain area for the benefit of farmers.

13. We oppose the transfer of the farm-labor program from the Department of Agriculture to any other Federal agency. This program should be administered at the Federal level through the Extension Service, and at the State level through the State extension services, or, in any State where the extension service does not desire to administer this program, some other State agency created or approved by the State legislature for this purpose.

14. We urge the President and the Congress to make available by appropriation the full increment authorized for the Extension Service under the Bankhead-Flannagan Act and the full increment authorized for agricultural research in the Bankhead-Jones Act and the Marketing and Research Act of 1946.

PROPOSED TAX REDUCTION—LETTER FROM HENRY L. SHATTUCK

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have received from a prominent and thoughtful citizen of Massachusetts, Hon. Henry L. Shattuck, of Boston, a letter which I desire to read. Mr. Shattuck is well known as a philanthropist; he has a remarkable record of public service; and is possessed of a wide knowledge of affairs. His letter is as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., January 27, 1947.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, Jr.,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CABOT: I am glad to note from receipt of newspaper reports that the plan for a flat across-the-board reduction in taxes will probably be abandoned.

I believe that any reduction which it may be found possible to make should be made principally by increasing exemptions in the lower brackets. I believe that this would have a strong tendency to cut down increased wage demands. It would also tend to relieve State and local governments, as a large part of the pressure for increased wages and salaries is due to the heavy deductions on State and municipal pay rolls: As the take-home pay forms the basis for discussion of wages and salaries, the deduction is virtually a tax on the State and municipalities.

I have seen a reference in the newspapers to a bill introduced by Senator MURRAY, of Montana, providing exemptions for single persons of $1,000 and for heads of families of $2,000 plus $500 for each dependent. This may perhaps be too liberal, in view of the needs of the Government, but it seems to me to be along the right lines.

Yours very truly,

HENRY L. SHATTUCK.

Mr. President, I have stated that after Congress has balanced the budget and begun a systematic retirement of the public debt we should reduce taxes. The method proposed by Mr. Shattuck, coupled with an easing of so-called "taxes on ambition," is, I think, clearly the way to begin.

INTERIM REPORT OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE TO STUDY AIR SAFETY

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I ask permission to file not later than Monday next, February 24, 1947, an interim report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of an investigation of the matter of air safety made by a subcommittee of the said committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

H. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to operate vessels until July 1, 1947; without amendment (Rept. No. 33).

By Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. J. Res. 27. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the terms of office of the President; with amendments (Rept. No. 34).

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES RELATING TO CIVILIAN PERSONNEL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD an additional report made by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, and a statement prepared by me with reference to Federal civilian personnel.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HARRY BYRD, OF VIRGINIA, CHAIRMAN, JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES, TO THE UNITED STATES SENATE WITH REFERENCE TO FEDERAL CIVILIAN PERSONNEL

During the month of December 1946, for the second successive month, general decreases in personnel continued throughout the Federal Government, according to reports submitted to the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures by the various agencies. Total employment, both inside and outside the United States, dropped 46,487 from the November total of 2,330,467 to the December total of 2,283,980.

Largest decreases occurred in the War Department, which dropped 23,996 employees; the Office of Price Administration, which dropped 16,794 employees; the Navy Department, which dropped 3,497 employees; the Department of Agriculture, which dropped 2,776 employees; and the War Assets Administration, which dropped 2,320 employees. The only large-sized increase during the month was in the Veterans' Administration, which took on 5,136 employees and now has a total of 226,896 workers. This approximates 1 employee to every 66 of the 15,000,000 veterans of World War II.

It is gratifying to the forces of economical government to find reductions at last taking place. However, these are but a token appeasement of economy. Actually, 6 of the 10 departments have increased employment since the peak of VJ-day—Commerce, Interior, Labor, Post Office, State, and Treasury. Twenty-three other agencies have also increased during the same period. And seven postwar agencies have added over 60,000 employees to the Federal pay rolls. There are still almost 300,000 civilian employees stationed outside the United States, while inside the United States there are 439,000 War Department employees and outside the United States, 190,000, three and one-half times as many employees as there were in that Department in 1939. The Navy Department shows a similar increase.

It remains for the Congress to make further reductions mandatory.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES, CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, PURSUANT TO SECTION 601 OF THE REVENUE ACT OF 1941, ON FEDERAL PERSONNEL, NOVEMBER-DECEMBER 1946

FEDERAL PERSONNEL IN THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH, DECEMBER 1946, AND A COMPARISON WITH NOVEMBER 1946

(All figures compiled from reports signed by the heads of Federal establishments or their authorized representatives)

According to monthly personnel reports submitted to the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, Federal personnel within the continental United States during December decreased 36,186 from a total of 2,023,994 in November to 1,987,808 in December. Excluding the War and Navy Departments, personnel decreased 17,748 from the November total of 1,240,378 to the December total of 1,222,630. The War Department within the United States decreased 15,922 from the November total of 455,145 to the December total of 439,223. The Navy Department inside the United States decreased 2,516 from the November figure of 328,471 to the December figure of 325,955. (See table I.)

Outside the continental United States Federal personnel decreased 10,301 from the November total of 306,473 to the December total of 296,172. The majority of these employees are industrial workers. (See tables II and IV.) Exclusive of the War and Navy Departments, there was a decrease of 1,246 from the November figure of 56,019 to the December figure of 54,773.

The consolidated table presenting data with respect to personnel inside and outside the continental United States shows a total decrease of 46,487 from the November total of 2,330,467 to the December total of 2,283,980. Excluding War and Navy Departments' reductions of 27,493, there was a decrease of 18,994 employees in the executive branch of the Federal Government from the November figure of 1,296,397 to the December figure of 1,277,403. (See table III.)

Industrial employment during the month of December decreased 16,670 from the November total of 659,757 to the December total of 643,087. The War Department decreased 8,582 outside continental United States and decreased 5,142 inside the United States in the industrial group, making a total reduction of 13,724 employees. The Navy Department showed a decrease of 2,727 industrial employees. The term "industrial employees" as used by the committee refers to unskilled, semiskilled, skilled, and supervisory employees paid by the Federal Government who are working on construction projects such as airfields and roads and in shipyards and arsenals. It does not include regular maintenance and custodial employees. (See table IV.)

BONUS ON WHEAT AND CORN

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr.

JOHNSTON], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and myself, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for the payment of a bonus of 30 cents per bushel on wheat and corn produced and sold between January 1, 1945, and April 18, 1946.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 669) to provide for the payment of a bonus of 30 cents per bushel on wheat and corn produced and sold between January 1, 1945, and April 18, 1946, introduced by Mr. LANGER (for himself, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, Mr. WHERRY, Mr. BUSHFIELD, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. CAIN, Mr. THYE, Mr. STEWART, Mr. MALONE, Mr. HOEY, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. AIKEN, and Mr. ELLENDER), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

EQUAL RIGHTS CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], the Senators from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN and Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], the Senators from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG and Mr. LANGER], and myself, I am proud to ask unanimous consent to reintroduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution proposing to the Constitution the so-called equal-rights amendment, which would give women full justice under the law. This proposed amendment will some day soon, I hope, take its place in the Constitution beside the woman-suffrage amendment as its logical successor.

It is with added pleasure that I introduce the joint resolution proposing the amendment because its first sponsor in the United States Senate was my colleague, Senator Charles Curtis, of Kansas, later Vice President. He had my support at that time. Furthermore, the first Representative to introduce the equal-rights amendment in the House of Representatives was another Kansan, Daniel R. Anthony, nephew of the great Susan B. Anthony. The day will soon come when everyone who believes in justice will understand the need of securing an equal constitutional status for women.

The equal-rights amendment has made great progress. Both the Republican and Democratic Parties approved the proposed amendment in their 1944 national platforms. The President of the United States has given his support to the amendment. The governors of 30 States have declared for it. The chairmen of both political parties have endorsed the amendment, and during the Seventy-ninth Congress this measure was voted on in the United States Senate, receiving a majority vote. Furthermore, a large number of important national women's organizations have voiced their approval of this measure.

It should not be forgotten that the Charter of the United Nations declares in its preamble for "fundamental human rights—the dignity and worth of the human person—the equal rights of men and women." The United States will take the necessary steps toward equality and justice through the adoption of this amendment.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 76) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to equal rights for men and women, introduced by Mr. CAPPER (for himself, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. O'CONOR, Mr. HAWKES, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. MYERS, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. WATKINS, Mr. YOUNG, and Mr. LANGER), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEGISLATIVE BUDGET—AMENDMENT

Mr. GREEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NOMINATION OF DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Senate proceeds with the consideration of the unfinished business I should like, if I may, to speak on another subject. I shall take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Massachusetts may proceed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement regarding the confirmation of Mr. David Lilienthal's nomination as Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission—which he has been heading since January 1—for a 2-year term, at which time the whole issue will again be before us.

After careful study and analysis I have come to the conclusion that the accusations made against his character and patriotism are without proof and without foundation.

I also have satisfied myself that he is the only man in the United States who has ever administered a project anywhere near so large and so complex as that which he will be required to administer as Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, and that therefore he is exceptionally well trained and well qualified.

I shall therefore vote to confirm his nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The routine morning business is closed.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish briefly to state to the Senate my viewpoint regarding the pending business. I have the greatest respect for the courageous recommendations of the Joint Congressional Budgetary Committee as presented by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I applaud this drive upon swollen Federal expenditures which dangerously threaten to persist unless they confront a sturdy, relentless crusade to force them back toward fiscal sanity. But the actual over-all budgetary figure upon which we shall ultimately agree is less important than the fact that we shall, for the first time in history, set an over-all legislative limitation upon our appropriations for the next fiscal year. This is an epochal innovation, pregnant with hope for the long-suffering American taxpayer. I heartily applaud the principle and I shall realistically support it.

Whatever the final outcome of our debate respecting specific figures, it seems certain that we shall pledge ourselves to a cut of at least four and a half billion dollars in the Presidential budget. This represents major and unprecedented economy, if, Mr. President, we subsequently vote on actual appropriations as we now vote on the far less painful issue of their abstract, total boundaries.

Therefore I have no quarrel with any of my colleagues as to the actual over-all figure we should set. I personally favor the $4,500,000,000 gash as proposed by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], for reasons which I shall briefly explain. But I have complete respect for those of my colleagues who would set the gash at $6,000,000,000, so long as they do it with a conscious purpose to match their personal zeal with the ultimate fortitude which their prospectus will require of them in the tough days to come when these economies must be given actual and specific application.

I favor promising an over-all reduction of $4,500,000,000 in the Presidential budget, and then striving to make it $6,000,000,000 if we can. The pledge of $4,500,000,000 in no sense precludes the achievement of $6,000,000,000 if the facts warrant and if our fortitude persists when we face actual and specific appropriations. I do not vote against $6,000,000,000 when I support the Millikin amendment. I only vote against a pledge which, on the basis of the joint committee's work sheets, I do not believe to be attainable without serious threat to the public welfare.

I take judicial notice of the fact that any figure named today, in the absence of supporting testimony, is a gigantic speculation.

If subsequent facts justify $6,000,000,000, then $6,000,000,000 it should be; and $6,000,000,000 it can be, regardless of contemporary pledge that we shall cut at least $4,500,000,000. If subsequent facts do not justify $6,000,000,000, I prefer—and I think the people would prefer—present commitments more in keeping with future performance. And, Mr. President, since the committee's work sheets apparently plan to take something like two and a quarter billion dollars of the $6,000,000,000 out of national security at home and abroad, and since I cannot hereafter conscientiously vote all of this particular reduction because I deeply fear it jeopardizes our winning of the peace, it is obvious that I must support the Millikin amendment if my own commitment and my own performance are to harmonize.

Before coming to the latter part in great detail, I wish to make one further over-all comment. Mr. President, there are still 16 Senators here who were here in March 1933, when the Roosevelt administration took power. I am one of them. I have poignant recollections of what happened at that time. It will be remembered, however reluctantly, that a key pledge of the original Roosevelt administration was to cut Federal expenditures 25 percent. It will be remembered that the President, in his first address to Congress, eloquently said:

> Most liberal governments are wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy: we must avoid this danger.

Mr. President, it will be remembered that the first major action of the Congress at that time was to pass the drastic economy bill. There was no guesswork about that one. It sank the ax into the very heart of specific appropriations. Nearly everyone, in the preliminary zeal of a great emotion, voted for the economy bill, myself included. The country rejoiced. We were heroes, pro tempore. Soon the slashes began to take effect. Great sectors of the country began to groan. Economy in the concrete was far less popular than it had been in the abstract. Representatives and Senators began to sweat. Our orchids began to wilt. It was not long before Congress was whittling at the Economy Act, and it was not very long before the 25 percent reduction promise was out the window; and when it flew out, the biggest spending spree in all our history flew in.

Mr. President, I am not seeking to precipitate a political debate. I am simply speaking historically. I do not remotely suggest a prospective parallel today. Neither do I deny that the Economy Act of 1933 required remodeling in many particulars. I am simply saying to the Senate that Senators will not have saved so much as one thin dime by the passage of this concurrent resolution today in respect to the generalities of economy. The votes that will count will be the votes on the subsequent reduced appropriations themselves. If Senators cannot vote for the latter, I beg of them not to vote for the former. I feel reasonably sure that we can subsequently vote to take $4,500,000,000 out of the Presidential budget, although I can promise you, Mr. President, that even this will not be easy in the pinches. Therefore, I shall vote for the $4,500,000,000 cut. I shall be glad to join in striving for still more. I hope we can do still more. I shall be very happy if we can reach a cut of $6,000,000,000.

I agree that Republicans came out of the last campaign under special mandate to heavily reduce Federal expenditures. I propose to keep that pledge to the maximum degree. But, Mr. President, I do not believe it is any more prudent to overpromise than it is to overspend.

I have a particular reason, Mr. President, for being unable to join in promising that last $1,500,000,000 in reductions in order to reach the $6,000,000,000 cut. According to the joint committee's work sheets, as I understand them and as reported in the press, $2,225,000,000 of the proposed $6,000,000,000 cut is contemplated as a reduction in appropriations for the Army, the Navy, the Air Corps, our occupation forces abroad, and food for the American occupied areas in Germany, Korea, and Japan. I shall have to say it bluntly, Mr. President: I cannot escape the conviction that this may prove to be sheer folly. At this critical juncture in world affairs, when there are great powers which think only in terms of force, I do not believe we have any right to speculate, to indulge in guesswork—and that is all we are doing here today—at the expense of our national security in this restless and unpredictable world. In my view, this is the year of all years when we must hold the line.

Mr. President, I reread two sentences from Washington's Farewell Address, to which we have listened today:

> As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it.

Mr. President, I wish to be plainly understood. I do not for an instant deny that, under the impact of war, the armed forces have been prodigally extravagant and wasteful. War is that way. I do not deny for an instant that it is possible to dig out repeated exhibits, here and there, to hold the Army and the Navy up to scorn, even to ridicule, in their procurement programs. I do not deny for an instant that the War Department and the Navy Department should contribute to reasonable economy in the fiscal year 1948. I do not for an instant pretend that the Army and the Navy should be untouchables in this campaign for economy—to borrow a word from the able address given last Wednesday by the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], whom I have always supported in his notable economy drives.

But, Mr. President, I beg of all Senators to remember that the President cut the original estimates of the Army and the Navy by several billion dollars. I beg of them to realize that when we support the Millikin amendment, putting the present over-all estimate at $4,500,000,000, we are voting for another cut of $750,000,000 in these items for the armed services and the national defense, on the basis of the work sheets of the joint committee. That is not "hay." That does not leave them either untouched or untouchable. I beg of the Senate to remember that the war is not over for us until we have safely finished with our occupational responsibilities in middle Europe and the Far East. It is not over until we have won permanent peace. Discount their testimony as you please; call them "brass hats" if you wish; but listen, at least for one monitory moment, to what the responsible military and civilian heads of the national defense and America's foreign policy have to say about what their share of this contemplated $6,000,000,000 cut may threaten in respect to the necessities which they must serve.

Mr. President, this is what they say is at stake:

First. The possibility of reducing our air power to that of "a second-rate air force, largely equipped with obsolete planes within 3 to 5 years."

Second. The possibility of laying up most of the Atlantic and Pacific Fleets.

Third. A reduction in the over-all strength of the Army by from 200,000 to 300,000 men—below the minimum force required to occupy former enemy countries in Europe and the Far East, and to cut the strength of the Navy below the minimum level of 425,000 enlisted men and 46,000 officers.

Fourth. To bring inevitable starvation in the occupied areas by reducing the already low civil ration, and that is definitely and specifically the prospectus on the work sheet in respect to the funds available for this particular purpose.

On this point I remind my colleagues of Secretary Marshall's statement:

> If the Army is deprived of adequate funds to provide funds for these people who are so sorely in need, a practically impossible situation is created for our troops and our Government in its international commitments.

I also remind the Senate that under similar circumstances General MacArthur once wired home, as follows:

> Send me food or send me soldiers.

And it is proposed that we take both away from him!

Fifth. It radically reduces vital research and development for both ground and air weapons at the very time when science is writing new mass-destruction prophecies with a rushing pen.

Sixth. It curtails by 50 percent the strength of the National Guard and Organized Reserves; reduces procurement of modern combat planes from 900 to 500; curtails pilot training; requires disposal for scrap of large numbers of ships valuable as a security reserve.

Mr. President, we may discount all of this as we please, cut it by 50 percent, cut it by 75 percent, or cut it by 90 percent, but what is our vindication for what we do? Upon whom shall we depend for guidance in a matter of this utterly vital concern? Even though we take off the greatest percentage we may wish, so long as we leave a single factor threatening the national security of the United States at a moment like this in the history of the world, in my humble opinion, and with the greatest respect for those who may do so, I think they are taking an unjustified and unwarranted action.

Mr. President, I simply do not believe that America can afford any part of such a hazard. In my view it would duplicate the tragic error we made by our unshared idealism after World War I. Until the United Nations demonstrates itself to be a wholly dependable alternative reliance, we must continue to rely upon ourselves. Until we get universal disarmament on a disciplined basis, we cannot afford to disarm alone; and, if we do disarm alone, we shall lose all our influence and all our authority in creating any sort of effective international disarmament agreements on the part of other nations.

The war is not over for us, Mr. President, until German and Japanese occupation is over. Any lapse in our purposes or resources in this connection will be an open invitation to Soviet Russia to fill the vacuum.

Economy which produces any such results is penny wisdom and pound foolishness of the bitterest and most expensive sort.

This year of all years, when the chips are down in the most important postwar developments on the diplomatic front which this Nation ever encountered, it is my relentless view that we dare not present to the world the picture of a pacifist America hastening to retire into her vulnerable shell, a picture of Uncle Sam with a chip on each shoulder and both arms in a sling.

Mr. President, perhaps my colleagues think that I vastly overemphasize my challenge. Perhaps I do. Perhaps General Eisenhower, Admiral Nimitz, General MacArthur, Secretary Marshall, Secretary Patterson, and Secretary Forrestal are all wrong about this matter; perhaps it is safe to dismiss these warnings in favor of our own uneducated speculations, but why take the chance? Why is it necessary even in the name of economy to take the chance? Why close the door upon our own congressional effort to deal with these factors as events themselves shall recommend? Why not fix this over-all figure at $4,500,000,000, and then if facts presented to our Appropriations Committees subsequently warrant further reductions at the expense of the Army and the Navy, let the additional cut then be made as the facts justify. Thus, if it is safe, the $6,000,000,000 figure may be reached just as surely, just as easily, as if we committed ourselves to an unknown equation this afternoon.

If we develop the proof in passing upon actual appropriation bills this spring that we can safely cut deeper than $4,500,000,000, I for one will earnestly join those who favor that in the economy drive, but in a matter of this transcendental importance, why not await the proofs? The economy drive does not end today. It only just begins.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of these remarks a telegram from Paul H. Griffith, national commander of the American Legion, supporting every word I have said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 16, 1947.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Three and one-half million men who fought our country's two World Wars know from first-hand experience the value of national security and the folly of unpreparedness.

These veterans are righteously alarmed at the prospect of further reducing the strength of our armed forces. Such reductions are implied by the Joint Legislative Budget Committee's irrationally recommended $6,000,000,000 cut in the national budget.

They vigorously oppose the reported slice of $2,250,000,000 for the armed forces, including a cut of $750,000,000 which would destroy the Naval Reserve training program and preclude further developments in naval aeronautics; the proposed slash of $500,000,000 intended to feed the starving people in occupied countries whose behavior might otherwise necessitate the expense of additional troops; the terrific hacking away of Air Force funds, and the $200,000,000 reduction in the Veterans' Administration appropriations. They are appalled to learn that their Government contemplates sabotage of the proposed universal military training program, recommended by high Government officials and demanded by the public, through a $1,000,000,000 cut in Army appropriations.

Are we to discard already the lessons learned in the last war?

After each war we have adopted the penny-wise, pound-foolish philosophy which has reduced our armed forces to impotency. Our token forces in occupied countries are now dangerously near tourist strength. Through our weakness after each war we have invited aggression. These world wars created the heavy taxes which Congress is now trying to reduce. Wars are responsible for the enormous public debt.

For more than a century and a half America has refused to make the small sacrifices in peacetime which would have prevented such great sacrifices in men and money. As a result this Nation, whose people cherish peace, has found itself regularly at war.

Must we again confess our guilt in weakening ourselves in the eyes of the whole world and rendering ourselves incapable of securing in peace our wartime victory?

Are we to ignore our international commitments to the extent that our representatives at peace parleys become the targets for contemptuous mockery by nations which have remained strong and influential?

In this critical and turbulent hour a world of nations watches us to see what action we will take to maintain our leadership in world affairs. There is a solemn and sacred obligation upon America to remain strong until a permanent, feasible peace plan is established.

We must not permit America's insurance policy to expire at this uncertain hour.

The American Legion has always been a proponent of economy in government. It detests red tape and bureaucratic bungling that penalizes taxpayers and prevents good government. The American Legion is confident, however, that economy achieved at the expense of security or veterans is no economy at all.

May I respectfully remind Congress that it is directed by the United States Constitution to provide for the common defense of the several States?

If the issue involved must be resolved by guaranteeing citizens their constitutional rights or fulfillment of campaign pledges, there can be only one American answer.

PAUL H. GRIFFITH,
National Commander,
the American Legion.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. When the Appropriations Committee enters upon its deliberations, if the facts should warrant the conclusion that a $4,500,000,000 cut would not be safe, the Senator from Michigan takes the position, as I understand, that the cut should be less than $4,500,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; the Senator from Michigan takes the position at all times that the cut must not be at the expense of the honest public welfare, and that today's pledge under any circumstances is secondary to the public welfare.

On the other hand, the Senator from Michigan takes the position that when we set our sights today at a particular target, we are morally committed to make every possible effort we can make, even under the travail which our souls will have to sustain, in order to try to reach that target, if it does not interfere with the public welfare.

Mr. MORSE. I completely agree with the statement made by the Senator from Michigan, but I think it should also be made clear that the same authorities he has cited against a $6,000,000,000 cut have not said we can safely make a $4,500,000,000 cut.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have been asked by four or five Senators to yield. It is perfectly obvious that if I yield to one I shall have to yield to all who have requested it. I ask, therefore, that I be permitted to proceed. My remarks will not be lengthy, and I must decline to yield at this time.

Mr. HAWKES. Does the Senator decline to yield for one moment?

Mr. TYDINGS. Because I have five requests, I would not care to yield to one without yielding to all, and I hope the Senator from New Jersey will appreciate my predicament.

Mr. HAWKES. I do, and I shall not ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, at this fateful hour in the affairs of nations and men there is no greater service to be rendered to the people of the United States, or of the world, than to maintain in this country an adequate national defense. It is now, and will likely remain for some time to come, our greatest national need. All other propositions are secondary to it. There is no other need which remotely approaches it in importance.

Without an adequate national defense, no bond of this Government may be worth the paper it is written on. The Budget of our country could be forever out of balance. The currency system of our Nation could be torn to shreds. Our American way of life could disappear. The world could be involved in the greatest war of all times. In sum, our national and individual existence rests more firmly on an adequate national defense than on any other single element with which our Government has to deal.

Men, in this Chamber and out, view with alarm the expansion and the potential power of the Russian Government. They fill our ears daily with the dangers of communism. They point to countries which they assert live under the oppression of the Russian yoke. They demand that Russia withdraw from Korea, or China, or Azerbaijan, or Poland, or the Balkans. They tell us that the Russians are working day and night, and moving with might and main, to learn the secret of the atom bomb. They say that once this secret is learned it may conceivably be loosed against us and the world. They picture the great world chaos resulting from such a war. They say that never again will there be the luxury of time to get ready. They say that a nation is either ready or it is devastated and defeated. They say if we are not prepared America will go down in ashes, our system lost, our treasury depleted, and 155 years of national existence will be wiped out and our people exterminated. They say that here is the great Gibraltar of democracy, the home of freedom, the land of opportunity, the rallying point for liberty, and the strongest citadel for the dignity of the average man, for the years that are to come.

And yet, having said all these things, they stand here with the broad-ax, the rapier, and the sledge hammer, ready to shower tragic and ill-considered blows of disaster upon the one thing that above all others will save the things we hold dear. In sum, they are willing to vote to cut off, without the most searching and careful examination of the facts—and over the combined protest of the greatest military leaders this Nation has ever produced—the sum of $2,250,000,000 of the estimated needs for an adequate national defense during the coming year.

Men who do not know the bow from the stern of a battleship say battleships are not needed in the next war. Men who have never been out of their own country can glibly pass over the conditions that exist in other lands. Men who have forgotten the tragic moments following Pearl Harbor, their quickened pulses at the hazardous landings on the beaches of France, the great naval battle that for a time hung in the balance in the Philippine Sea, or the dark moments in the dead of winter when the Battle of the Bulge was taking a heavy toll of as fine men as the world will ever see, now seem satisfied with just-so-so national defense.

Cassino, with its agonizing months of assault; the rivulets of blood that mixed with the muddy waters of the Rapido in Italy; the daring and dangerous feat of blasting the Ploesti oil fields; the dark, somber and desperate days of Dunkirk—all are as nothing now. Here but a few months after the greatest war of all times has ended, with confusion still existing everywhere, with hundreds of thousands of displaced persons, with transportation systems yet disrupted, with food scarce among most of the people of the earth, with giant armies still bearing their wartime equipment, they have so soon forgotten the fear-filled moments of but yesterday.

Every man here knows that when war comes it costs an unprepared nation a hundredfold more in men and money to get ready than it would have cost had it kept reasonably prepared. Yet, even after the last war, which largely because we were not ready has left us with a national debt of $260,000,000,000, there are those who would put the Nation in the position where we would have to spend $100 where we might have spent one, as we move forward into the war-clouded skies of the future. And all of this is done in the name of economy—the most abused word, in the instant case, that has fallen from the lips of man since I have been in this Chamber.

With the great, smoldering fires from World War II still burning, gentlemen would diminish the amount of fire insurance which they would carry on the United States of America and its 140,000,000 people. And they would do this in the name of economy.

Mr. President, I assert that a $2,250,000,000 cut in the appropriations for the armed services is as gross a piece of extravagance—viewing the world as it really is at this moment—as has ever been considered by any parliamentary body in the history of mankind. In essence, it is the very antithesis of economy. While it embraces open-handedly greater extravagance in the long run, it embraces open-handedly, too, sharper danger in the long run.

Of course economies can be effected in the armed services; they can be, and they should be; but there is no military genius in this body, nor financial expert for that matter, who can say that $2,250,000,000 could be cut off of the military appropriation, without courting the risk of spending a hundredfold more in the end and exposing the Nation and the world to catastrophe.

Now let me prove these contentions by hard and cold facts. Wednesday, the eminent and able Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], who is deservedly recognized for his great service in this body, made the following statement:

> The average cost of maintaining a member of the armed services, his pay and subsistence, is estimated in the next Budget at $3,100, as compared to $1,386 in 1940, about 2½ times as much.

Let us take these figures and see where the blame for any so-called extravagance lies. First, the pay of a private in 1939 was $21 per month. The pay of a private in 1947 is $75 per month. Here is an increase of 3½ times in the cost of pay alone in 1947 as compared with 1939. Who made this increase of 350 percent? It was made right here in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. It was made by the Congress itself. Then why blame the Army for this enormous increase, as my eminent friend from Virginia has done in the sentence I have quoted, when, as every Senator knows, the blame, if any, belongs here in this Chamber.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I do not blame the Army at all. I thought some economies could be effected in the cost of $3,100 a year for the maintenance of each member of the armed forces; and I still think there can be some economies.

Mr. TYDINGS. The total pay cost for Army personnel alone; that is, for military personnel, in 1948, will be at a per capita cost of $2,339 for the next fiscal year as compared with $897 in 1939. Again, in 1939 the total pay cost of the military personnel in the Army was $166,000,000, while in 1948 the same item costs $2,503,000,000, or 15 times as much.

Now take the question of Army subsistence. In 1939 with the Army nearly all quartered in the United States, the cost was $162 per capita, while in the next fiscal year it will cost, with 500,000 soldiers overseas, $327—nearly twice as much. In other words, when food prices were down and when food was available next door to the camps in this country in 1939, and when refrigeration and huge supply houses were not essential, it cost $162 per man. However, now with large forces overseas and food prices greatly increased and with added transportation costs, due to the long distances, it costs about twice as much. Does any Senator feel that in this day of high prices, when a soldier's food costs $327 a year, there can be, in spite of isolated cases, any great waste in this item or any place where it can be reasonably reduced?

Three hundred and twenty-seven dollars a year is the cost and the allowance for feeding one man in the armed services during 1947. Considering how our armed forces are scattered, the mystery to me is how in the name of common sense they can do it and feed them so well.

Now let us take the item of travel, which in 1939 was only $3,000,000 a year. With our troops overseas, many on short enlistments necessitating replacements, it costs $158,000,000 for travel in 1948. Can much economy be effected here? If so, how?

Let us take the question of medical and hospital care, which in 1939 cost us $2,000,000, while in 1948 it costs $78,000,000. There are still 9,000 wounded men in the military hospitals of the Nation. This item includes, of course, the maintenance of hospitals abroad, because of the more dangerous character of present-day soldiering over all the earth for our troops, as compared with the conditions which prevailed in 1939, when nearly all of them were quartered in this country. How much can we cut down on the medical and hospital department of the Army? Perhaps to some extent, but who is going to cut the appropriation for the sick and wounded materially, considering the conditions to which our troops are exposed, which did not prevail in 1939.

Let us take another figure—and all these figures pertain only to the Army, but a similar comparison can be drawn for the Navy—the cost for the Army personnel in 1939 was $415,499,000, or $2,242 per man all told. Then they were practically all in the United States. The war had just begun and was then on a small scale; food was plentiful; our troops were at home; costs were down. But next year it will cost $6,385,000 to maintain these troops, or an average of $5,967 per soldier. This is a little more than twice as much as it cost 8 years ago. These men are in Germany, Japan, China, the islands of the Pacific, Alaska, as well as home, and the turn-over is more rapid than it was in 1939. The figures I have given the Senate are all for the Regular Establishment. They do not include the National Guard, Organized Reserves, or ROTC. However, the figures for the Army make up nearly 60 percent of the total estimated military budget of $11,000,000,000.

Let me repeat, I do not believe that Congress is going to reduce the pay of the men serving in the armed forces—if any gentleman thinks Congress is going to reduce their pay I should like to see him, for I would have great respect for his fortitude—or their subsistence, or their clothing, or their hospital and medical requirements, or their travel, to any great extent, if at all. And when items such as these are eliminated from the Budget, where in the world are we going to make a two and a quarter billion dollar cut in the remainder of it when it is estimated that the Army alone will need $6,000,000,000? And if a cut of two and one-quarter billion dollars is made there will only be three and one-half billion dollars left in which to make a billion and a half dollars of savings.

There is no doubt in my mind that we can by careful scrutiny compel the Military Establishment to cut out everything in the program that is not vitally necessary to the Nation's defense and cut out everything in the military program that may be termed "extravagant" or "wasteful," or even "inefficient." But, after we have done this, mark my words, as the figures I have presented will show, there is not going to be any cut of two and a quarter billion in the armed forces unless Congress, in contrast to the many prepared speeches I have heard here, is willing to say that now there is no danger of war; that now we do not have to be prepared; that now we can forget about world affairs pretty much altogether.

May I call the Senate's attention to the fact that Senator after Senator in this very Chamber has criticized the Russion occupation of Poland, or of Hungary, Austria, Yugoslavia, and other countries. They have criticized the Russians for not withdrawing promptly from China. They have criticized the Russians for not withdrawing promptly from Azerbaijan. They have criticized the Russians for the attempts to grab the Dardanelles. They have criticized the Russian occupation of Korea. They have criticized Russian actions in the United Nations.

Does any man in his right mind think that Russia will take a kinder attitude in the future toward these and other problems if our Military Establishment is so weakened that its ability to maintain world stabilization, as well as our own defense, is called into question? Many men who have spoken on Memorial Day, at American Legion rallies, Flag Day, Lincoln's Birthday, Washington's Birthday, Jefferson's Birthday, and repeatedly on the floor of the Senate have declaimed "This must never happen again: we must never be unprepared again, for the next time there will be no time to get ready."

Have these patriots of the naked word forgotten the speeches of but yesterday? Do they now repudiate all the patriotic fervor and emotion with which they declared this would never happen again?

Are they content to pace the floor at night, having learned much of the secrets and potentialities of the atomic bomb, and with cold fear at their side whispering into their ears that an atomic bomb war is possible and that unless the world can be organized for peace, America, if unprepared, is gone? Do they propose to be prepared but slash nearly one quarter of the estimated Army and Navy requirements for reasonable national preparedness?

But yesterday our great generals and admirals were acclaimed deservedly as heroes—Marshall and King, Eisenhower and Nimitz, MacArthur, Bradley, Patton, Clark, Halsey, and others. What a strange metamorphosis has taken place since the shouts and the cheers on their return have died. I am astounded to learn now that Eisenhower knows nothing about world matters, our military requirements, and is incompetent to tell us about the need of our own national defense; while the grand old man of the Navy, Admiral Nimitz, is secondary as a military strategist in naval requirements to the bemedaled and epauletted Senate admirals who, from the quarter-deck of their desks, are now planning the strategy to avert all dangers from whatever quarter they may come.

With a feeling of solemnity and a saddened heart I say that the 32,000,000 human souls who were killed and wounded in two great world wars seem to have taught us little, if anything. The amputees, the blinded, the wounded—the real debt of this recent great holocaust—no longer are expert witnesses in the trial of America's critical future. It was to such as these that we said, "It will never, never happen again." We meant it when we said it, but the question is, Do we mean it now?

It may interest some of the Members of this body to go back and read the debates of 1929 on the 15-cruiser bill. Then Hitler had not been heard of. Then Mussolini was just beginning to strut across the stage. Then Japan was a far-off, isolated country. I can hear those speeches now, and see, as clear as day, the Senators who made them. "There will never again be another war! It is a waste of money to build 15 new cruisers for our Navy. All we have to do is to sound the horn and men with their rifles will come down from the hills and form overnight an invincible army that will sweep back all opposition." Letters and telegrams piled up in our offices. Those of us who advocated the program then advocated for the Navy were denounced as militarists, as being under the domination of the Army and Navy clique, the brass hats. That is what the wise-crackers, the boys who molded public sentiment, the boys who knew it all, uttered in that day 18 years ago.

After Pearl Harbor, Mr. President, the 15 cruisers then authorized after weeks and weeks of debate in this body were the only thin remaining line holding the Japs at bay and protecting the shores of our country. Those 15 cruisers became the nucleus of the Navy that afterward went forth and finally dispatched the enemy on the high seas and in the air.

Those cruisers then—and mark well this fact—did not cost one-fourth as much as they would have cost had they been built during the course of World War II; and if we had not had them, the price we would have paid would have been a thousandfold more than their original cost of construction.

I likewise am astounded that because we have invented the atom bomb, men think the last word in weapons has been attained. Scientists tell us that it is possible to invent a new atom bomb 1,000 times as devastating as those we have already learned about.

Do Senators, who represent the sovereign people of this free Republic, not know that there is in the not-far-distant future the prospect of success in developing a plane which will fly more than 1,000 miles an hour? Do Senators forget that when the atom-bomb tests took place at Bikini more than 300 flights, some of them in giant 4-engine planes, were made without a single man being in any of those ships? Do Senators forget the flying bombs of Hitler which covered hundreds of miles and almost brought London to its knees?

Do Senators forget that the proximity fuze self-exploded the shell at the desired point upon an unseen target? Do Senators know that scientists are now working on harnessing and developing cosmic rays, which are even more formidable than the atom bomb? Do Senators know that there are able and sound-thinking men high in our Military Establishments who feel that the day is not far distant when guided missiles can be fired across the ocean?

Or are we living in a dream world, still watering the flowers of sweet innocence in the peaceful garden of yesterday?

Would we rather cut these military estimates and make an unusually large temporary saving, only to spend 1,000 times more later because of these cuts? Would it not be appropriate respectfully to suggest to the President of the United States that his best admirals and generals are in this Chamber? For here we have men who could have won the war more quickly, more efficiently, and under whose wise leadership not a single pound of butter would have been wasted. The war would have been ended months before. Hitler, Mussolini, and Tojo were really nothing to worry about. Amateurs like Eisenhower and MacArthur, Nimitz and Halsey, just did not know how to conduct a war as we could have conducted it from the floor of the United States Senate, and as we propose to conduct the preparedness program if the suggested cut is made.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator has stated the amount of the budget for the armed services; he has also stated what, in his opinion, are certain irreducible expenditures; and he has further stated that a $2,250,000,000 cut in the armed-forces appropriation is out of the question. If this be the proper time to ask the question, Has the Senator made any estimate as to what would be a reasonable and safe cut in military expenditures?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am coming to that very point now. I thank the Senator for suggesting it.

This is the consideration upon which this whole debate should really turn: Concededly, laymen like ourselves, after thorough and careful examination, can cut the military estimates. We can lop off some millions of dollars here and millions of dollars there without impairing the efficiency of the armed services. We may, without hurting our Military Establishment, even approach a cut of $500,000,000. Indeed, it is conceivable that after we balance all the factors we might make a billion-dollar saving in the military budget, without the serious disapproval of those who, unlike us, have the real responsibility of springing to instant action when the hour for fighting comes.

I am not contending against such action. What I am attempting to develop, and the point upon which our decision should turn, is this: Is it wise so to cut military expenditures as to jeopardize the world's peace, weaken the hands of our representatives in the peace councils, weaken the potential bargaining power of our Nation in the United Nations Security Council, and weaken the chance of obtaining what our President is valiantly fighting to secure, namely, gradual and proportionate world disarmament in all nations?

Let us look at it from another angle. Will the saving of an additional billion dollars, from the drastic cutting of military estimates, really conduce to the peace of the world, a long-time reduction in our national debt, and a lightening of the burden of taxation? I do not believe we will aid world peace or serve the welfare of our own people, unless we approach a reduction in military estimates with caution and care. Viewing the circumstances which now confront the world, it seems to me a dangerous thing to make larger cuts than safety considerations indicate are wise.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I shall therefore support the proposal of the Senator from Colorado to cut the Budget but $4,500,000,000 instead of $6,000,000,000. In doing so, I feel I am making the greatest contribution to the financial stability of this Nation, to the perpetuation of its free institutions; to the retention of its system of free enterprise; to the peace of the world; and to an ultimate greater reduction in all taxes. In my own humble way, I think I shall be keeping faith with the millions of dead in all lands who have unnecessarily made the supreme sacrifice, because democracies never seem to learn, even though they are taught in the school of blood, sweat, and sacrificial experience.

If it be said that there will be no time to get ready when the next war breaks out, then it is self-evident we must be better prepared than we have ever been before in our history.

If it be said, as some have said, that the next war will be so rapid that it will simply be a matter of push buttons, then we must have the push buttons and the men ready to press them, and the missiles which they will send forth at a moment's notice.

If it be said, as many have said, that unless we are ready our great industrial cities, wherein live millions of our people, will be wiped out in a few hours or a few days, then we must have available the means to prevent this catastrophe.

If it be said, as many have said, that the next war will be a war employing science and invention on a scale never before witnessed, then we must have the research laboratories operating and the discoveries therein made translated into material things or we shall face national extinction.

If it be said that we must not repeat the mistake of the Naval Disarmament Conference of 1922 when the United States practiced disarmament by example, then we must keep up our armaments while other nations keep up theirs or we shall by too drastic a cut in the military estimates in effect embrace disarmament by example all over again.

If it be said, as many have said, that the next war will be an atomic war, then we must have the atom bomb and supporting weapons, the men, the planes, the factories, the fields, and the equipment to protect America on an hour's notice.

If it be said, as many have said, that the financial stability of this Government depends on drastic reduction of Government expenses, then we must make up our minds to make most of these reductions outside the Military Establishment; for there can be no financial stability in America or the world if we are not strong enough by our might to make it conceivably disastrous for any nation to break the peace. A breach of the peace may mean doubling the size of our national debt, doubling the taxes that all must pay, surrendering many of our freedoms, and, indeed, defeat and national disaster.

Mr. President, I shall favor every reasonable cut in the budget of the armed services which prudence and caution make wise. I shall not favor any cut in the military estimates which endanger the security and the welfare of my country; and I know from a partial examination of the facts that no such cut as is contemplated by the proposed $6,000,000,000 slash in the budget estimates can be achieved without impairing the defenses of the country we all love.

For these and other reasons, I shall vote against the $6,000,000,000 cut and support the $4,500,000,000 cut, believing that by so doing we shall have achieved the maximum economy possible and still kept our Nation reasonably prepared in a troubled world for any emergency that may conceivably arise.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Maryland has quoted facts upon which he bases the statements and arguments he has made here today. May I inquire of the Senator where he obtained those facts?

Mr. TYDINGS. I have before me, and I shall ask permission to insert in the RECORD at the close of my remarks, a statement of the War Department showing the break-down for the entire $6,385,000,000 of the Army's part of the defense appropriation. The figures from which I quoted were in the columns for 1939 and 1948, which I used for comparison. The total in the column for 1948, $6,385,000,000, includes pay of more than $2,500,000,000, which leaves only $4,000,000,000 for subsistence and all the other items that go into our military department. Therefore, if $1,500,000,000 were cut from the Army appropriation it would take from the $4,000,000,000 remaining, after eliminating the cost of paying the troops, about $2,500,000,000 for all the other ramified activities, which I shall not discuss at this time.

Mr. LUCAS. If I correctly understand the Senator, he has devoted his own individual effort and time to obtaining the exhibits and this information upon the basis of which his address has been made.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the Senator from Maryland, through his own initiative, obtained these facts, and could find nothing in connection with the report which was made by the Legislative Budget Committee which would give him any information whatsoever upon which he could make the speech he has just made on this question?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. I should like to conclude, inasmuch as the Senator has asked me a question, with one other figure; and I hope Senators will keep in mind the two figures I am now about to mention.

Of the total of $11,200,000,000 for both the Army and Navy, the amount requested for the Army amounted to $6,573,000,000. Keep that figure in mind. In the Army food, clothing, and pay alone cost more than $3,000,000,000. Therefore, if we subtract $3,000,000,000 from the six and one-half billion there is only $3,500,000,000 left; and if we make a cut of a billion and a half dollars in the Army appropriations, as has been frequently proposed, it would mean taking away almost half of the total remaining appropriation for equipment and all the other services which the Army deems vital.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have two columns of the table which has been under discussion inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Average cost per military person during fiscal years 1939 and 1948

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator from Maryland has made a very full and able argument as to why he does not wish to cut the appropriations for the armed forces or does not believe it is possible to cut them more than a billion dollars at most, and probably less than that. He has stated that he will vote in favor of a reduction of four and a half billion dollars in the President's budget.

Has the Senator made a sufficient estimate of the other $3,500,000,000 or more to warrant a moral commitment on his part as to that reduction?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator himself several times has gone over the budget submitted by the President. It is a very complicated document, and the Senator from Maryland has not the capacity to penetrate the ramifications of all the departments and bureaus.

I may say that I approve, with all the force at my command, what the able President pro tempore, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] said earlier in his address. I am shooting at the $4,500,000,000 figure. Not that I think it is sure to be attained, and not that I think it can be done, but I am shooting at it as a possible objective which we might hope to reach. Likewise, I am opposing the $6,000,000,000 cut, because I do not believe it is attainable. But if I find on subsequent examination, in addition to that which I have already made or which others may suggest, that it is possible to go as far as $6,000,000,000, I should like to go to that extent. But I do not think it is possible to go to $4,500,000,000, if the Senator wishes my honest opinion, unless we leave the armed services in a position where world peace will perhaps be jeopardized, where world disarmament will be jeopardized, and where conceivably riots and uprisings may break out abroad due to things which may grow from small bonfires into conflagrations. It is conceivable that inadvertently we might have to expend many billions of dollars for purposes which we did not have in mind when we made such economies.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall yield in a moment to the Senator from Illinois. I yield first to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, in the early part of his address, the Senator from Maryland referred to the cost of maintaining a man in the Army, either per annum or month; I forget which. Does the Senator from Maryland recall what those figures are?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Senator repeat them now?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall repeat them, briefly. For pay, alone, in 1939 it cost $897 per man. For pay alone in 1948 it will cost $2,339 per man. In 1939 a private received $21 a month. In 1948 a private will receive $75 a month, plus 20 percent, which we ourselves put into the law, for service overseas.

Mr. AIKEN. What is the total per annum?

Mr. TYDINGS. The total per annum is as follows: In 1939 it was $166,000,000 for pay alone. In 1948 it will be $2,503,000,000 for pay alone, without subsistence, without clothing, without medical supplies, and without transportation.

Mr. AIKEN. How much is that per man?

Mr. TYDINGS. It is $2,339 per man.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator from Maryland have any figures to show what are the maintenance costs per man?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I have them. Let me sum them up in this way: In 1939, for pay, food, clothing, and equipage, the cost was $210,000,000. In 1948, for food, pay, clothing, and equipage the cost will be $3,041,000,000.

Mr. AIKEN. How much is that per man? Does the Senator have those figures, as well?

Mr. TYDINGS. I can give the Senator the figures afterwards, and he can add them up. They are broken down.

Mr. AIKEN. I was simply asking for the figures, so that I might compare the cost of maintaining a man in the Army with the cost of maintaining a civilian employee of the War Department, because the War Department has greatly increased the number of civilian employees who are doing some of the work that men in the Army used to do.

Mr. TYDINGS. I explored that situation as far as I could. We can eliminate some of the civilian employees; but if we do not watch out, when we eliminate a civilian employee we shall find that an Army man is put in his place, and, of course, often the cost of maintaining an Army man is higher than the cost of maintaining a civilian employee.

Let me give the Senator from Vermont one example: We have 9,000 wounded men now in the hospitals of the Army, scattered all over the earth. We have civilian nurses who look after them; I believe they are called civilian orderlies. If we take those orderlies out of the hospitals, in many cases it will be necessary to have Army men take their places. If we do that, the net cost will be greater than it would have been if we had let the Army stay out of it, and had let the civilians run it.

So one who approaches this matter with a broadax or with a sledge hammer simply makes a fool of himself, as he will find if he examines the facts afterward. The time to use the sledge hammer is after we have examined all the facts.

Then we should use it where it can be used effectively.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator. I have asked for the figures so that a comparison can be made between the cost of doing the work with Army personnel and the cost of doing it with civilian employees.

Mr. TYDINGS. Lest I leave the Senator from Vermont under a misapprehension, let me say that I have no figures as to the work done by civilian employees. But I caution that we had better look forward before we have the work done by Army personnel, rather than by civilian employees.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I feel sure that I correctly understood the remarks of the Senator from Maryland, but I wish to ask a question. From the Senator's remarks, I know he is definitely in favor of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. That amendment proposes to cut the budget by $4,500,000,000. However, I do not think the Senator from Maryland wishes any implication to remain in the RECORD that in the event, after all the evidence is in, that the Appropriations Committee should determine that a cut of $4,500,000,000 will seriously interfere with an adequate national defense, he will still be in favor of the $4,500,000,000 cut.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true. As I have said, this resolution binds no one. I am willing to adopt it tentatively, and then in the Appropriations Committee see how close we can reach it in good faith; but I wish it distinctly understood that in voting for it I am not saying that I am sure it is a goal which we can attain.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to carry just a little further the point the Senator from Illinois has raised, because I think we should have a clear understanding of it. If I correctly understood the Senator from Maryland, he said he felt that we should endeavor to make a saving of $4,500,000,000, if possible. Now I understand, from his answer to the question put to him by the Senator from Illinois, that by voting for the Millikin amendment he neither thinks he pledges himself to a $4,500,000,000 cut nor does he think he is morally bound to a $4,500,000,000 cut, if upon further investigation of the Budget at appropriation time he believes that either the national defense or the public welfare in any other respect would be endangered or injured by such a $4,500,000,000 cut in the Budget. Is that a correct interpretation of the Senator's statement?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to answer the Senator affirmatively by saying that, of course, none of us, including the Senator from Maryland, will be bound by this resolution. However, we are morally bound to try to attain the ceiling proposed by the resolution through appropriate cuts in the appropriation bills. I might not be able to find more than $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000 of cuts which I could conscientiously support, but I shall try to reach the $4,500,000,000 point, and I think there is a remote chance that we might get near it. But I certainly would not wish to say that I am sure we can reach it or that I think we can achieve a $6,000,000,000 cut.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I think it very important that the RECORD should show our respective views on that point, because I agree with the Senator from Maryland that each one of us is morally bound to save every dollar that possibly can be saved. That is why I object to putting in the ceiling on the savings, as I think the Millikin amendment tends to do.

In my opinion, it should be clear that by voting for the Millikin amendment we are not pledging ourselves to save $4,500,000,000 because of a moral pledge of any kind, although today we find that the press is trying to give the American people the impression that if the pending concurrent resolution shall be adopted, the Senate will have morally bound itself to a $4,500,000,000 cut.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, we are morally bound to strive for it as an objective, but we are not morally bound to reach it, if good judgment shows that it is unwise.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further inquiry?

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield first to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. The inquiry I am about to make is based upon what I conceive to be the absolute accuracy and correctness of the Senator's position, as indicated in the statement he has just made. I should like to ask the Senator's permission to read at this moment the resolution to which the Millikin amendment refers, because it seems to me to make absolutely certain that there is no pledge, express or implied, by the adoption of the Millikin amendment, or the resolution as amended, that if any considerations of national welfare shall make it impossible for us to have a four and a half billion cut, we are bound nevertheless to have it. If I may have permission of the Senator from Maryland, I should like to read the resolution with the Millikin amendment:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the judgment of the Congress, based upon presently available information, that revenues during the period of the fiscal year 1948 will approximate $39,100,000,000 and that expenditures during such fiscal year shall not exceed $33,000,000,000, of which latter amount not more than $25,100,000,000 would be in consequence of appropriations hereafter made available for obligation in such fiscal year.

I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland whether in his judgment it is not true, as I understand it is his judgment, that the concurrent resolution, Senate Concurrent Resolution 7, to which the Millikin amendment applies, merely expresses the judgment of Congress, "based upon presently available information," as stated therein, and cannot by the slightest possibility indicate that if Congress should later on discover that the considerations of the national welfare make it impossible or unwise for $4,500,000,000 to be slashed from the appropriations, we are nevertheless obligated to proceed. Does not the Senator from Maryland thoroughly agree with that analysis of the resolution?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think it is only fair to assert that, of course, the four-and-a-half-billion-dollar proposed cut is based, as the resolution itself says, on presently available data and information. Naturally, as the various appropriation bills come up, there will be more and more information at hand which is not now available. So it is safe to assume that eventually we will know more about what we want to do than we know at the moment.

I do not see how a man can be bound to a contract, so to speak, when only half of the contract has been disclosed to him. That is a crude illustration, but it serves to make my point. Therefore, none of us could be bound, regardless of the effect on the welfare of the country and the circumstances involved, to make a four-and-a-half-billion-dollar cut when upon subsequent information we might find it would ruin the country to do it. It would be silly to say, "We adopted this, therefore we have to do it, anyway." I look upon the proposal before us as an honest effort to set a goal, which we hope is attainable, which we will try to make attainable, but which, in spite of our best efforts, we may find to be a little bit too high for us to reach.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Is it not a fact that the Millikin amendment proposes to do nothing else except change the figure "31.5" to the figure "33", to change the figure "24" to the figure "25.1"? Is it not further true that while we all agree, I take it, that in adopting the concurrent resolution, Senate Concurrent Resolution 7, we certainly express our present judgment, as therein stated—and I take it all of us will endeavor to carry out our present judgment if the welfare of the country will permit it—nevertheless, is it not true, undeniably, that the expression by the Senator from Maryland is sound and correct, as was the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Michigan, and, as I take it, that stated also by the Senator from Oregon? Is it not true, undeniably, that if conditions should arise under which the welfare of our Nation demanded the expenditure of more money than would be permitted under a four-and-a-half-billion-dollar slash, the hands of Congress, by the adoption of the resolution, would not be so tied as to injure the general welfare of our Nation?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator's statement is absolutely correct and cannot be successfully disputed by any sound-thinking man anywhere.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. AIKEN and Mr. MILLIKIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. If it is about my own remarks, I yield, but I desire to yield the floor.

Mr. AIKEN. My question is about the Senator's remarks.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Is it the opinion of the Senator from Maryland that if the concurrent resolution incorporating the $4,500,000,000 cut shall be agreed to, and Congress afterward finds it impossible to make a cut of $4,500,000,000, Congress will then be bound, morally or otherwise, to take any further action under the resolution, which we may soon adopt? Or will we just go ahead and make such appropriations as seem to be necessary to the welfare of the country, without regard to the resolution?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to put it this way: The able Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. When this concurrent resolution shall finally be agreed to—setting $4,500,000,000 as the goal for the cut—and he calls us together, he will say, "Gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations, you know that the Congress wants us to cut expenditures $4,500,000,000. Here is the first appropriation bill. We have to begin somewhere. This is a bill for such and such a department. It is quite obvious that if we are going to cut $4,500,000,000 we have to start in to cut wherever the needs of the Nation will permit." Therefore, we would start on that bill and we would then proceed with the next one. When all the bills are passed, we may have made cuts amounting to $4,500,000,000, or to $3,000,000,000, or $2,000,000,000, or a billion and a half dollars. But I would look on the resolution as a directive to me to do the best I could to meet the figure included in the resolution if it could be met without impairment of the essential services which a free people have a right to expect from their Government.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator from Maryland think any further action on the part of Congress will be needed after this resolution is agreed to?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I do not. I do not mean this by way of disparagement, but it is merely a New Year's resolution, which we may break on the 2d day of January.

Mr. AIKEN. I asked the question because it was suggested a few days ago that we might have to adopt a subsequent resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I believe implicitly the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Maryland. He is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, associated with me as a member of that committee, and I am sure he agrees that this budget estimate is something we believe should be realized if possible; that it is only an objective; that the final action will be dependent entirely upon the appropriation committees of the two Houses passing on the appropriations as they see their necessity, and submitting them to the Senate and House for action.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct. I shall conclude by saying that it is much like when either the Senator or myself runs for public office. We tell the people certain things we believe in and certain things we hope to do if we are elected. Quite often when we get into office circumstances have changed, conditions have varied, and we find that we have made too many promises. I have learned in the past 10 or 15 years not to make any election promises at all, and I no longer do, but before I learned in the hard school of experience, sometimes I would be catapulted into a promise; and that is exactly what is happening here. We make a promise, but it is understood the promise is not binding; the resolution means that we will try to fulfill it if it is humanly possible.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to suggest to the able Senator, in view of his statement, and the observation he just made, that those of us who have served on the Committee on Appropriations with him can be just as sincere in stating that we feel we should strive for a cut of six billion, as are those who believe that a cut of four and a half billion dollars should be made.

I say to the Senator, and I think he will agree, that I have always voted for the appropriations for national defense for which the military asked, and I quite agree with the Senator now that if conditions change and we need more money, there will be no doubt that the Committee on Appropriations will approve larger appropriations.

I ask the Senator, if there is no moral commitment, if this is merely something we are shooting at, would it not be a pretty good New Year's resolution to shoot at a reduction of $6,000,000,000 instead of $4,500,000,000, and still keep the faith with the people who have asked us, in making appropriations, to cut out every dime of waste possible?

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator believes a $6,000,000,000 economy can be effected, he should vote for it.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not believe it can be effected, so I am voting for the smaller amount, because I do not want to mislead the people.

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad the Senator made that explanation. I want him to know that as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I am just as sincere in telling the people of Nebraska and the people of the Nation as a whole that we can cut appropriations $6,000,000,000, if the Congress will have the will to go on and cut that much, and my moral obligation is met in the same terms of honesty as is the obligation of the Senator who says we can cut the appropriation only $4,500,000,000, or $2,000,000,000, or none at all.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. There has been much talk about this being no more than a pious hope and a sort of loose expectation. I simply wish to refer to section 138 (b) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, which says:

> The report shall be accompanied by a concurrent resolution adopting such budget, and fixing the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year.

I think that makes it very clear that we are to fix here the amount to be appropriated for the expenditures in the current year. I think it is also axiomatic that no Senator, by taking any current action, ever pledges himself to take action in the future that might destroy his nation.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true. I will conclude by saying that if tomorrow Congress were to pass unanimously a law saying that the Federal Government shall not expend more than $33,000,000,000 in the fiscal year 1948, 5 minutes after passing such a law we could pass another law fixing $40,000,000,000 as the amount; and such action would be perfectly constitutional and, without any disparagement of but keeping with the character of Congress.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. I am trying to give up the floor, because the eminent junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] has been trying to get the floor for a long while.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I shall not delay the Senator from North Dakota.

I have followed this argument with a great deal of interest, and I think it has been made quite clear on the floor of the Senate, certainly, that we are not, by the action taken here, fixing the amount of taxes or of appropriations, or taking any course that might affect the taxes imposed on the people.

However, the mail which I receive—and from discussions with other Members of the Senate I know it is true regarding the mail they receive—indicates that many people have a feeling that the fixing of a ceiling—a proposed ceiling on expenditures, I should say, as is proposed in this resolution—is a course of action directly affecting taxation. Of course it will affect it remotely, it will have a guiding influence upon it, in a way, but I think it should very clearly be made apparent to all the people of the country that when we fix a ceiling we do not have to attain that ceiling. The Congress can make its appropriations below it, and, I hope, far below it, in the operation of the Government; and when appropriations and expenditures are lowered, taxes will come down. There is no doubt in my mind, and, I take it, there is no doubt in the minds of other Senators, that the people of this country have insisted that taxes be lowered. The new Reorganization Act, placing a ceiling upon the Budget, or fixing a budget and placing a ceiling, a proposed and an intended ceiling, if I may say so, upon appropriations, as has been so ably said, contemplates a mark at which we shoot as a top figure; but there is a mark below that, just as far below it as we can go in making the appropriations to cover the expenditures of the Federal Government.

I hope that from these discussions the people of the country will derive an understanding that what we are discussing here is not the expenditures which will be made, but the limit which is to be fixed, unless, as has been said, unforeseen circumstances arise that require it to be changed. No man can see into the future nor can the Congress see into the future. May I close by saying that it is important our people understand that the action taken by the Senate today in adopting the resolution is not a fixing of appropriations, it is not a fixing of taxes. It is our hope, and certainly I express my own hope, that the appropriations will be far below the mark set as the limit of the budget, and that we may substantially reduce taxes generally.

Mr. YOUNG obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the junior Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, because of its bearing on the question of the Budget, which the Senate is now considering, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial which appeared in the New York Times on February 20, 1947, entitled "Confusion on the Budget."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONFUSION ON THE BUDGET

It has seemed at times during recent weeks that the Federal Budget must exercise some sort of hypnotic influence over many Members of Congress, an influence under whose spell the process of reasoning appears to become strangely inverted, causing its victims, as it were, to put last things first and first things last.

The first intimations of this phenomenon were manifested even before the Eightieth Congress foregathered for its first session. They were conspicuously exemplified in the public statements of Representative KNUTSON, the incoming chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. Hardly were the elections behind him when Mr. KNUTSON announced that the first business of the new Congress would be to slash taxes (including excises) by 20 percent. With that out of the way, it would then take up such matters as the balancing of the Budget and reducing the public debt. It was some time before the Minnesota Representative could be made to see that he had got the cart before the horse—that a balanced Budget came first, debt reduction second, and tax reduction last.

The same sense of confusion and unreality seemed to pervade the meeting last week of the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget and this week's meeting of the Senate Republican conference. At the first of these meetings it was agreed to cut the President's Budget from $37,500,000,000 to $31,500,000,000, or by $6,000,000,000. Certainly it is essential to cut the Budget substantially, but at this meeting no details were given as to where the cuts were to be made or how the particular total of $6,000,000,000 was arrived at. The implication which this seemed to convey, that the committee had more or less picked a figure out of the air and proposed to realize it by cutting all items uniformly and indiscriminately, regardless of their comparative importance, evoked expressions of apprehension from many commentators in and out of Congress. Did this break the spell? Did it bring any fresh information as to the methods to be used in reducing the Budget, or assurances that the $6,000,000,000 cut could be achieved without imperiling the Nation's military strength or its other international commitments? Not at all. It simply brought a new figure. Instead of cutting the Budget by $6,000,000,000, the objective, it was announced, would be $4,500,000,000. This, the theory seemed to be, would put an end to the disquieting possibility that the larger figure might require such a slash in Army and Navy funds as to endanger the country's security. Meantime House Republicans rallied solidly yesterday behind the $6,000,000,000 cut.

It is pleasant to be able to record that one member of the Senate majority, at least, was not befuddled by the proceedings. That was Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR., who left the meeting early, but paused long enough to observe to reporters that this approach to budget-cutting was "like a man wielding a meat axe in a dark room," who "might cut off his own head." Mr. LODGE omitted only one point to make his comparison complete. He might have added that in the dark a man's head could be severed by a meat axe with a 4.5-inch handle quite as effectively as by one with a 6-inch handle.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to have printed in the RECORD an article which, like the editorial submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts, is entitled to serious consideration in connection with the subject now under debate. I submit a newspaper article showing that the Red Army's budget is $4,000,000,000 greater than the budget for our national defense, and showing the total appropriations for the Russian Government, translated into dollars, to be $74,280,000,000.

Last year we reduced the total appropriation to approximately $34,000,000,000, and I, for one, want to state positively that I do not intend to vote for the $6,000,000,000 reduction, nor even for the $4,500,000,000 reduction, because I do not know what serious effects it may have on the security of our country and the continuation of our armed forces.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RED ARMY BUDGET TOPS OURS BY MERE 4 BILLIONS

Moscow radio, monitored by the Associated Press, said last night Russia's military expenditures during 1947 will amount to $13,400,000,000—nearly $4,000,000,000 more than the sum Congress is expected to authorize for United States defense in the United States Budget now being considered.

Arseni Zverev, Soviet Finance Minister, who submitted the new Russian budget of $74,280,000,000 to the Supreme Soviet for approval, said the 13,000,000,000-figure for national defense represented a decrease of $1,120,000,000 from the 1946 military total.

Under President Truman's proposed $37,500,000,000 Budget, $11,200,000,000 would be earmarked for national defense. The $6,000,000,000 slash approved yesterday by the House is understood to include a cut of $1,750,000,000 in the United States military appropriation.

Thus, should the reduction be approved by the Senate, only $9,450,000,000 would be granted the American War and Navy Departments for the new fiscal year. This means that the United States arms budget is approximately 29 percent less than the amount Moscow will spend for armed might.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, it is with a great deal of reluctance and in a very humble spirit that I follow on the Senate floor two of the United States Senate's most distinguished Members, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. I have only the greatest admiration and respect for the able manner in which the Senator from Michigan has represented the Republican Party, the Senate of the United States, and the Nation as a whole at the peace tables of the world. I wholeheartedly endorse their speeches in favor of the $4,500,000,000 Budget cut as against the proposed $6,000,000,000 cut.

Mr. President, Congress has pledged itself to a program of extreme economy. I am thoroughly in accord with that objective. It is time that we cut down from wartime levels of expenditures. It is time that steps be taken to eliminate unnecessary government controls, services, and outlays necessary to maintain its services. We should demand efficient and economical administration from every governmental department and agency. All requests should be subjected to an intelligent and exhaustive study, but it is with great concern that I view the steps that have been taken to arbitrarily slash the budget without that intelligent study necessary to determine where the cuts can be made and how much those cuts should be.

I do not understand how we can proceed on the basis of pure guesswork. To a considerable degree I am willing to accept the recommendations of those who understand how much is necessary to maintain our Army and Navy at a strength sufficiently large to meet our requirements. To a considerable degree I am willing to accept the recommendations and good judgment of our able colleagues—Senators VANDENBERG and CONNALLY—on military strength vitally necessary to back up our position at the world peace tables. It would seem to me if we are to preserve world peace—if we are to stop the aggressive spread of communistic Russian domination over all the nations of Europe and the Pacific—I believe a strong military force is of greatest importance. Apparently, military strength is the only language dictators understand.

Of course, there can be cuts in the military appropriations, and I am sure there will be—but this should not be done until after careful and intelligent examinations by both Appropriations Committees. As a farmer, coming from an agricultural State, I am naturally concerned about the welfare of agriculture. This should also be of great concern to every Member of this Congress, since there never has been any long-sustained period of prosperity in this Nation when farm income was low. Farmers everywhere—and particularly in the Midwest and West—are naturally concerned about reclamation, flood control, and irrigation. These worthy projects are not merely an expenditure, but, rather, an investment in the economic security of all who live within deficient rainfall areas.

These programs must not be abandoned. We cannot expose our resources, and our farmers to the drought, dust storms, erosions, and floods which have devastated our economy in the thirties. I cannot forget those years, but apparently others have.

The electrical power generated by the existing power projects provided the electricity necessary for our vast industrial power during the war. The potential power output from our projects now under construction will develop those areas where low-cost power is not now available.

Soil conservation is recognized as one of the most necessary programs in this Nation. It is a part of both the Republican and Democratic platforms of 1944. It is necessary, if we are to believe our economists who state that by 1970 this Nation will need double its present agricultural production. It is a necessity, if we want to save our agricultural productivity from the devastating soil erosion prevalent in many other countries. I need only mention the plight of Mexico, which was once a fertile land, and now millions of acres are incapable of even small production.

Two years ago, when the Bureau of the Budget drastically cut soil conservation appropriations, Congress reinstated the cuts with an implied 2-year guaranty; this was carried by the House, I understand, by approximately a 5-to-1 vote.

Farmers everywhere naturally assumed that this would be the continued program, and so adjusted their farm practices. It should be understood by this Congress that farm soil conservation practices are more than a 1-year program. Most of them involve 2- and 3-year practices. If this Congress—through cutting of soil-conservation appropriations—made necessary expensive farm-practice changes, there certainly would be just resentment on the part of all farmers.

The President's budget already has cut $100,000,000 from the $300,000,000 budget for soil conservation. If this Congress proposes to abandon soil conservation it should—in all fairness—give farmers at least a 1-year warning so that they could adjust their programs accordingly. The leaders in Congress, advocating a $6,000,000,000 cut in appropriations, generally have stated that such a program would call for drastic cuts in agricultural programs.

Certainly, anyone who has made a study of the proposed budget would have to admit that if the $6,000,000,000 cut is to be made—then all Government functions would have to share in the reductions necessary to reach this goal. I personally believe, after a careful study of the budget, a $4,500,000,000 cut is entirely possible, without bringing serious injury to any segments of our economy.

In fact, that difference of $1,500,000,000 may well have a great bearing on the national economy of this Nation in the next year, far and above the $1,500,000,000 saved.

The chairman of the House Appropriations Committee who, I believe, is absolutely honest in his views stated to the press, that REA appropriations would be reduced $100,000,000. Although this would be a saving, it could only be classed as a book saving, since the farmers have a record of nearly 100-percent repayment on REA loans. In fact, many of the REA projects have paid off their indebtedness well in advance of the scheduled time for repayment.

It would be most regrettable if this Congress saw fit to cripple the REA program. No one, except a farmer who has lived by the light of a kerosene lamp or a farm wife who has washed by hand or other inefficient methods, or one who has actually experienced all the hardship of kerosene lighting, could understand how close REA is to the hearts of every farmer. Surely this Congress will not wreck this best of all farm programs for the sake of a mere book saving, and to make the budget look better, at the expense of the misery and hardship of millions of people.

At the present time only 52.9 percent of all the farms in this Nation have electricity. In my own State it is only 10.4 percent. The farmers of this Nation have waited patiently through the war years, fully aware that materials were more urgently needed in the prosecution of war than they were for REA. It will be a bitter disappointment if they are denied the benefits of electricity now because Congress is so economy minded that it is unwilling to lend money on the best credit risk in the world. Compare, if you will, this nearly 100-percent repayment of REA loans by the farmers to that of RFC loans to business. As of July 1 their estimated accumulated deficit will be $7,862,694,000. I think in fairness it should be stated that much of this vast deficit is for subsidies to the food consumers of this Nation and, I might add, to pay part of their grocery bill.

During the war the Government courted the farmer. He was urged to expand and produce more and more food, and even now is asked to reach certain goals to win the peace. The farmer has responded by pushing agriculture production to an all-time high. He did this in spite of hardships such as shortages of labor and machinery. He produced by working harder and putting in longer hours, but he did not receive overtime pay. Instead, the Government put ceilings on the prices that he could receive for what he produced. The farmer accepted those ceilings because the Government promised to support agricultural prices for 2 years after hostilities ceased. Now there are many in this Congress planning to default on this promise by refusing to approve appropriations necessary to carry it out.

These prices were only to be supported at 90 percent of parity, and in figuring parity, labor costs were not included. We all remember the conditions of a few years ago in the agriculture industry when wheat sold for as low as 30 cents per bushel, and other farm products were on a comparable basis. I hope this Congress will not fail to fulfill its pledge to support farm prices, as provided in the Steagall amendment.

The Steagall amendment was specifically passed to insure the farmer of a fair income during that period when he will have to undergo expensive reconversion of his entire farm practices to a normal basis. It certainly would be unfair, and even unreasonable to ask that farm prices go back, to a supply-and-demand basis, when industry is able to constantly increase their prices to meet increased costs, and when labor has collective bargaining, minimum wages, unemployment compensation, social security, and other rights. The farmer would be forced to compete, without any protection, with the other two great segments of our national economy.

Such a policy would again bring disaster to all farming and eventually to the entire Nation. This Congress must—and I believe it will—before the Steagall amendment expires, write a long-term agricultural policy, a program that will give security to agricultural interests without any great cost to the Government. This, I believe, can be done by finding new commercial uses, and new foreign markets for agricultural products.

There has been considerable discussion in this Congress, among Republicans, as to what the Republican policy is. After a careful study of the Republican platform of 1944 and the platform adopted by the last convention of all Republican State chairmen meeting in Chicago last year—and I may add that I know of no other national conventions that have been held since this one—I can find no mention of the 20-percent straight-across-the-board income-tax reduction. I can find no mention of many other policies, now advocated as being those of the Republican Party, in the last elections. But I do find considerable reassurance to farmers in both of these documents. In fact, there are some very fine promises.

For the information of the Senate, I want to quote the following from the Republican platform of 1944 regarding agriculture. Under section 2 of agriculture, I find this:

> An American market price, to the American farmer and the protection of such price by means of support prices, commodity loans, or a combination thereof, together with such other economic means as will assure an income to agriculture, that is fair and equitable in comparison with labor, business, and industry. We oppose subsidies as a substitute for fair markets.

I wish to add also that many are of the opinion that subsidies, which cost billions of dollars, are paid to farmers. In fact, the subsidies are to the consumers of the Nation, and never to the farmers.

Section 8 reads as follows:

> To make life more attractive on the family-type farm, through development of rural roads, sound extension of rural electrification service to the farm, and elimination of basic evils of tenancy wherever they exist.

Section 10 reads as follows:

> A comprehensive program of soil, forest, water, and wildlife conservation and development, and sound irrigation projects, administered, as far as possible, at State and regional levels.

In this connection I wish to repeat that the President of the United States has already cut $100,000,000 from the soil-conservation program, which was a part of both the Republican and Democratic platforms.

Mr. President, this Republican platform contains many other good promises to the farmer that I shall not now take time to read. In the platform adopted at the Republican convention of Republican State chairmen, there is only a small paragraph dealing with agriculture but it in no way refutes the promises made at the previous National Republican Convention. The section on farm policy reads as follows:

> We have pledged stability of farm prices during the reconversion and readjustment periods. We will carry out those pledges. We will support sound, permanent proposals to give farmers expanding markets and their fair share of the national income. We reaffirm our long-standing support of soil and water conservation. We shall support measures designed to better rural living.

Mr. President, I believe it was on the basis of these promises that Republican Senators received such a great majority of farm votes. Knowing something of the integrity of the Members of the Senate, I am sure that neither Republicans nor Democrats will go back on their solemn promises, made through their campaign pledges as adopted by the national conventions.

After having made a careful examination of the Budget requirements I, for one, as a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, will support the $4,500,000,000 reduction, although I believe that even its limitations will make it difficult to fulfill our campaign pledges to the American people. This will still be a saving in the budget of a year ago of approximately $12,000,000,000, and I am sure that many additional billions can be cut from the Budget 1 year hence when we should be well on the way to peacetime economy.

Even this $4,500,000,000 reduction will require great reductions in almost every department of Government, the elimination of thousands of Federal employees and the curtailment, or even abandonment, of many worthy existing programs. In fact, it will require the strictest economy in all branches of Government. This I will support to the utmost of my ability.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KNOWLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Would it be a fair interpretation of the Senator's very able speech, for which I commend him, that he is somewhat fearful of drastic cuts in the Budget, so far as concerns the retention within the appropriations of adequate support for wealth-producing projects of the West, such as reclamation, soil conservation, and the development of the power resources of our streams?

Mr. YOUNG. That is true, based both on public statements made by Members of the House and Senate advocating that policy, and also on private statements which they have made to me.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator from North Dakota agree with the junior Senator from Oregon that these projects are in fact wealth-creating, and that to cut them would be a penny-wise and pound-foolish policy?

Mr. YOUNG. Very much so. There is nothing more important to the West than reclamation projects, which are an investment in the future security of the West.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator from North Dakota agree with the junior Senator from Oregon that the time has come for the farmers of the West, irrespective of the political party to which they may belong, to concern themselves with this whole budgetary problem as it may affect the interest of the farmers of the country?

Mr. YOUNG. I certainly agree; and I think there should be a new awakening among the farmers of the Nation to the fact that their economy, their life, and their happiness are more important than any political affiliation whether it be Democratic or Republican. Personally I believe the farmers greatest hope of economic certainty lies in the Republican Party.

Mr. MORSE. I want to say that I am in full agreement with the Senator's views.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I wish to commend the Senator from North Dakota for the very able speech he has made, with which I find myself in full accord. I also wish to inform the Senator that from the information which I have received, in arriving at the budgetary cut of $6,000,000,000 there was included $175,000,000 for the REA extension. I think the Senator's people in North Dakota know that that would affect their welfare.

Mr. YOUNG. In relation to that matter I have received hundreds of letters from farmers bitterly protesting such an unwise budget cut. I appreciate very much the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, for whom I have great respect.

Mr. AIKEN. I think the greatest service that can be performed for the people of the country is to make them aware of what this Congress is likely to do if they do not fight some of the proposals which are being advanced.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to commend the Senator from North Dakota for the very able speech which he has made, and I should like to ask him whether it is not true that in the last campaign Republican speaker after Republican speaker over the radio assured the farmers not only in North Dakota but throughout the West, that appropriations for reclamation, for REA, soil conservation, and school programs would not only be maintained, but would be increased, and that the people relied upon those promises on the part of Republican speakers, many of whom were sent out by the National Committee.

Mr. YOUNG. I wish to thank my distinguished colleague for that comment. In fact, I challenge any Member of the Senate to show a speech of his in which he advocated cutting any reclamation project or the cuts now being proposed in most necessary agricultural programs.

Mr. LUCAS obtained the floor.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I shall support the House of Representatives reduction of the President's Budget by $6,000,000,000 because I believe we can save $6,000,000,000 without impairing necessary Government functions or destroying the effectiveness of the armed forces of the United States.

There is a lot of hysteria and emotionalism pervading the atmosphere. No one likes to have his allowance cut, and it is perfectly normal for men to say in self-defense "we are doing an effective job now and we need practically all the manpower and materials we are asking for in order to maintain and continue the effective work we are doing." I have heard this same story repeated dozens of times during the course of my life, but always I have seen successful organizations find a way to do as good or a better job on less money when conditions made it imperative to cut expenditures in order to preserve the institution which was responsible for making the expenditures and paying the bills.

I shall not discuss statistics, as has been done so effectively by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and other Senators, to show the relative expenditures today as compared with those made in years prior to the war; but what a confession of weakness it is to say that the armed forces of this great Nation cannot maintain themselves in proper effectiveness on $9,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 a year. What a confession it is to those powers in the world whom some Americans fear. Think of us, a capitalistic nation, saying to those of different ideology and philosophy, we must spend more than $9,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 a year in order to maintain ourselves in a position to keep them from destroying us.

What could be more satisfactory to those foreign powers, if perchance, they are trying to injure or interfere with our progress, than to have us admit we must continue to do those things which will absolutely destroy our capitalistic system and thereby accomplish the objective which they might seek through other means.

There are two ways by which the United States of America can become a socialistic or totalitarian state. One is by the action of an external force having the power to make us subservient to its will. By this I mean war, as a result of which we would be conquered. I agree with Lincoln who said if we are ever destroyed, we will be destroyed from within, and will be guilty of committing national suicide. If we act wisely, I doubt the ability of any foreign foe ever to force its will upon us, and if we act honestly and under the guidance of God Almighty, I doubt that there will ever be any combination of foreign foes who will seek to destroy us. Our page in history is the brightest page in the history of the human family since the beginning of time.

The second way for us to destroy our American system of free men, or the capitalistic system, is to be profligate, careless of our morals, and prone to dissipate our substance in maintaining things which are not necessary at the moment, but which may become vitally necessary in 10 or 15 years from now. Let us not so weaken ourselves financially at this time that we will find ourselves unable to resist effectively and attain victory if the time ever comes when we must defend ourselves against a strong foe or foes. Remember, Mr. President, national bankruptcy or inability to meet our obligations, whichever one may wish to call it, is one of the surest ways to socialism.

No man knows that he is right when he says the cut in the budget should be four billion, four and a half billion, five billion, six billion, or eight billion dollars. But every intelligent man does know that the Congress is available for further action, and if anybody can prove a positive case, the Congress should admit its errors and take such action as will protect the vital interests, promote the welfare, and assure the safety of the people. Certainly if we set out to make a cut of $4,000,000,000, we shall not reach a $6,000,000,000 cut in expenditures even if, as I believe it to be, it is perfectly possible to do so without impairing any activity which is vitally essential to the welfare of the American people.

Mr. President, I ask Senators to stop, think, and contemplate about what human beings have done in life and what they are doing. When Ralph Waldo Emerson said, "Hitch your chariot to a star," he meant that if we aim low, the goal we reach will be low, whereas if we aim high, although perhaps we shall not reach the goal we seek, nevertheless we shall reach a better goal than the one we would have reached if we had not aimed high.

Mr. President, I do not go along with those who say that if we begin with a cut of $6,000,000,000 and achieve finally a cut of only $5,000,000,000, the people will condemn us. I would rather have the people's judgment of me based upon a $6,000,000,000 cut, even though we arrive at only $5,000,000,000 saving in the end than to attempt to make a $4,500,000,000 cut and, because of waste, inefficiency, and failure to stop spending the people's money uselessly, end up with a $3,000,000,000 cut.

Mr. President, I do not know of a Senator or a Representative who would not vote an additional $10,000,000,000 or $20,000,000,000 to protect the safety of the American people if an emergency necessitated such an expenditure. What I cannot get through my mind is the argument that if we set a goal—and that is all that is sought, namely, a goal which in good faith we must endeavor to attain—then, if an emergency arises, we cannot change it. The Congress is here to change it, just as it is here to set the goal in the first place.

Mr. President, a few days ago one of the ablest Members of the Senate said to me, "How do we know that General Marshall will not be strengthened instead of being weakened, when he goes to Moscow, if the Russian people realize that the Congress of the United States is decreasing its expenditures for the armed forces, rather than maintaining or increasing them?" I hold no brief for a contention of that kind, and I would not say that such action on the part of Congress might affect the conference favorably; but I do say that no one knows, and that those who are so positive that this thing cannot be done or that some other thing can be done are being swayed more by emotionalism than they are by knowledge of the facts.

So great an American as CHARLES A. EATON, chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, has voted for a cut of $6,000,000,000 in the President's budget. CHARLES A. EATON is the dean of the New Jersey congressional delegation, and he is one of the most respected men in the State of New Jersey. He was appointed by President Roosevelt as a delegate on the part of the United States to the San Francisco Conference, which ended in the agreements which brought forth the United Nations. He was again appointed by the President as an alternate adviser to Secretary of State Byrnes when he went abroad for the conferences in connection with peace and the peace treaties. No one can deny that CHARLES A. EATON is a great American, with almost a devout feeling for the welfare and safety of the American people. I talked with him this morning, and he is convinced that $6,000,000,000 of the people's money can be saved without in any way affecting the real, vital strength of the armed forces of the United States, and he so voted yesterday in the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I go even further, and I say that if the present Congress gives evidence of a desire to be thrifty and saving and economical with the people's money, procured through the power of taxation, it may be the beginning of a rebuilding of the moral fiber of the people of the United States. We have reached a point in this great Nation when few ever stop to think whence comes the money which has been spent so freely. Likewise, we have reached a time when everyone is beginning to say, "We want the waste stopped; we do not want to be working 30 percent of our time for the Government."

Mr. President, such a wasteful condition as that is not what made the United States of America the leader of the world, and it will not keep the United States of America the leader of the world. It is not what will make the United States so strong and powerful in the right that no other nation will ever attack her or attempt to destroy her.

Let us always remember that national solvency is our bulwark of defense. If, through waste and profligacy and failure to organize effectively, the financial strength of this Nation is dissipated, some of the younger Members of Congress will wake up some day to realize that the only effective defense of a capitalistic state against the inroads of socialism and totalitarianism has been destroyed.

We have won magnificent victories in two world wars. We had the money when World War I started, and, contrary to what everyone in the world thought we could do, we prepared ourselves and we defeated the tyrants. We had the money when World War II started, and we did then what no one in the world thought we could do: We started from scratch, and we succeeded in defeating the greatest military force on earth. When an emergency arises let us never find ourselves in the position of being impotent because we have destroyed our financial structure. Let us never find ourselves without the funds necessary to protect the American system of free men and free enterprise.

Mr. President, if I did not believe firmly that we can maintain all the power necessary in the armed services under a $6,000,000,000 cut, I would not vote for such a cut.

I shall vote for this $6,000,000,000 economy measure in the full belief that I am serving the best interests of the people of the United States from every standpoint.

I thank the Senator from Illinois very much for yielding to me.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, what I wish to say in connection with the proposed budget cut may be misunderstood in some sections of the country. I can see now, in certain newspapers, headlines that "Senator LUCAS favors no budget cut whatsoever"—which will be just as false as Lucifer, in the event that such statements are published by those who wish to do other than report the facts correctly.

In the beginning of my remarks, I should like to say that I am in favor of every conceivable kind of cut that can possibly be made in the President's budget, after witnesses have been heard, hearings held, reports submitted, and the arguments considered here on the floor of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, in my humble judgment the Legislative Budget Joint Committee which has been created by the Reorganization Act has not done its duty as required by the act, because it has failed to give Members of Congress the facts it could have given them at least upon one item of the President's budget, namely, national defense.

As a premise for this argument, and in order that I may keep the record straight, I desire to call attention to section 138 of the Reorganization Act, under the caption "Legislative budget." Paragraph (a) reads as follows:

SEC. 138. (a) The Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, or duly authorized subcommittees thereof, are authorized and directed to meet jointly at the beginning of each regular session of Congress and after study and consultation—giving due consideration to the budget recommendations of the President, report to their respective Houses a legislative budget for the ensuing fiscal year, including the estimated over-all Federal receipts and expenditures for such year. Such report shall contain a recommendation for the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year which shall include such an amount to be reserved for deficiencies as may be deemed necessary by such committees.

They are important words—

If the estimated receipts exceed the estimated expenditures, such report shall contain a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt. Such report shall be made by February 15.

The words "study" and "consultation" mean something. Those two words mean to take advice and counsel from someone. And, lo and behold, when we ask what was done by the subcommittee of the Legislative Budget Committee insofar as taking any testimony was concerned, insofar as any hearings were concerned, insofar as any of the Senators having the least bit of information upon which they could make an intelligent guess or reach an intelligent conclusion is concerned, there is not a single line, other than a report which has been filed by the majority, which is most innocuous other than what is contained in one section under the caption "Expenditures." They say:

In estimating those expenditures the committee availed itself of all possible information and conducted independent explorations in this field.

Where is the evidence of those independent explorations they conducted which the rest of the Senate should have in order to make an intelligent decision upon this great question? Then they say:

1. Conferences with the fiscal Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

2. Detailed statistical data on all available funds and rate of expenditure in the current fiscal year, which were prepared by the Bureau of the Budget at the request of the committee.

3. Conferences with all members of all of the subcommittees on appropriations of the House of Representatives.

4. Data from informed persons both in and out of Government.

Where are those data, where is that information, which the subcommittee tells us about in this report, upon which the subcommittee made its recommendations to the full committee? Not one line of evidence, not one report, is before the Senate upon which any other Senator might make an intelligent examination and arrive at a sane conclusion.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KNOWLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wanted to ask the Senator whether it could be that the proponents of this severe budget reduction were not taking the matter too literally, because if the newspapers are correct in expressing the views of some, it was intended to be only a sort of a pious hope anyway.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I do not know what the majority expected it to be, but if I understand the Reorganization Act aright, I take it to be more than a pious hope when I vote on this question today. That is why I cannot support either the $6,000,000,000 or the $4,500,000,000 cut as proposed. Having no evidence before me, it would be a mockery to vote upon either one. I definitely know that I could not support either under any circumstances if I thought the $6,000,000,000 or the $4,500,000,000 cut would interfere with the national defense.

Mr. President, that is what I fear. I doubt that a $4,500,000,000 cut can be made unless we slash defense expenditures now sought by the Army and the Navy. I do not want to go on record as pledging to the American people that I am for a $4,500,000,000 cut, and then later, when the evidence unfolds before the Committee on Appropriations, discover that such a cut cannot be made. That is why I shall not support either one.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I call the attention of the able Senator from Illinois to the fact that I noted on the 19th day of February, as appears on page 1173 of the RECORD, that the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], in commenting upon this matter and speaking about this budget, said:

We can only make an intelligent guess. We have no information before us as to the particular items of the $37,500,000,000 budget, in justification for the figure fixed by the Budget.

We only know it is requested. We only know the Budget Director has approved it, and the President has approved it.

I wish to ask the able Senator from Illinois if it is not his understanding that the various departments of the Government that make requests of the Bureau of the Budget present detailed figures, an itemization of the funds they seek, so that when the Budget Director made a recommendation to the President, and when the President approved a budgetary recommendation, the executive arm of the Government did have detailed facts and figures? I ask the Senator further, if the President did not submit to the Congress a factual budget based upon detailed facts and figures, carefully screened over months of hearings, and if it is not that kind of a budget, and that kind of responsible figures, the opposition is attacking with what at best is only an intelligent guess?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is eminently correct. There is no doubt about how the Bureau of the Budget screened all estimates for months and months before they finally arrived at the figures of the total expenditures which they sent to the Congress. The Senator well knows that the President of the United States cut the recommendations made by the Army and the Navy and other departments in tremendous amounts before he sent the estimates to Congress.

I agree with the Senator from Ohio when he said the other day that it would be impossible for the Legislative Budget Committee to sit down, in the length of time they had, and carefully scrutinize the hundreds of items which were before the President when he made up his budget. What I am complaining about—and I have a right seriously to complain about it—is that the Legislative Budget Committee never called Secretary Patterson, never called General Eisenhower, never called Secretary Marshall, or anyone else, to testify on the great question before the country and the world, and the most vital part of the budget—what is necessary for an adequate defense of this country. They never called these witnesses and had them testify and reduce their testimony to writing, so that the Senate might have a semblance of a notion, at least, as to what the military men were thinking about when the Republicans were talking about lopping off $2,250,000,000 from the national defense appropriations, which they now admit they will do if the $6,000,000,000 cut is allowed.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I ask the Senator from Illinois, in view of the unusual problems involved in effectuating the Reorganization Act, if the proper course of the joint committee, if it hoped to present something upon which intelligent men could base a rational judgment, was not to come back to the Senate and go back to the House and ask for an extension of time, or to endeavor to amend the Reorganization Act by providing another 30 days, applying the amendment to this year only, so that the committee could have submitted a budget on which we would not have had to make a guess?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Senator is correct, so far as the Senator from Illinois can judge, and his question illustrates what I am complaining about. Certainly the Senate would have given unanimous consent to an extension of time if the committee had wanted to hold hearings, to call witnesses, and to prepare some kind of a report upon this one question. I would not ask the members of the subcommittee to go into every detail. That could not be done. But involved here is a question which affects the security and the safety of our country, and what affects the security and safety of America affects the security and safety of the world.

Mr. McMAHON. And is not a proper subject for a guess.

Mr. LUCAS. Certainly it is not a proper subject for a guess. What I fear is that if I vote for a four and half billion dollar cut I am more or less morally bound to go along with it, and then I may be confronted with findings of the Committee on Appropriations, who may finally say that in order to cut four and a half billion dollars it will be necessary to slash materially defense funds. That is what is expected by those upon the other side of the aisle who seek a $6,000,000,000 cut. They say, "We can cut two and a quarter billion dollars from the national defense funds in reducing the Budget $6,000,000,000."

Mr. President, until the evidence is in, and the Members of the Senate have a right to cross-examine those who are responsible for the defense of the country, the Senator from Illinois is going to rely upon George Marshall, General Eisenhower, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy, rather than some armchair economic strategist in the United States Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. On February 18, at a time when budget reductions were being recommended, the first deficiency bill for the year 1947 was passed by the House and sent to the Senate. That bill appropriates millions of dollars of deficiency funds for almost every agency of government, including the Housing Authority, the War, Navy and Treasury Departments. I should like to ask the Senator, is it not his opinion that if such a budget ceiling as that now proposed is ever fixed we shall have not one deficiency bill, but many others after the Committee on Appropriations goes fully into the items of appropriations?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senate will be considering one deficiency bill after another, in my humble judgment.

Mr. President, I was not informed of the fact that there was no report on file until the minority leader rose the other day to make a statement on this budget cut. I had asked for a report, but failed to find one. The senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] raised my hope when on Wednesday last suggested that the vote be postponed because he understood the report would be printed on the morrow. When that colloquy occurred, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] rose and said there were no hearings; that only minutes of the meetings were kept, and he did not know where the minutes of the meetings were. When questioned as to how he reached his conclusion even as to the four and one-half billion dollar reduction, the Senator from Ohio stated he took the President's budget and went from one end of it to the other, and simply slashed here and there—as though he might be cutting a piece of pie in a downtown restaurant. It was easy for him to reach the $4,500,000,000 cut.

Mr. President, that cannot be done when the expenditure of billions of dollars in an orderly manner is involved. Senators cannot give to themselves or to the country an intelligent guess, without figures or facts before them. I fear that the people of the Nation are receiving a wrong impression about what is happening here in the United States Senate.

A great many election pledges were made last year, and many persons are still attempting to fool the American people by advocating a $6,000,000,000-debt reduction, in order to carry out those pledges. It is another promise. I hope that such promises can be fulfilled, and the Senator from Illinois will do everything within his power to cut the budget to the bone if necessary, but he will never be found doing it at the expense of the national defense, jeopardizing the safety of the country and the youth of tomorrow. I have seen this happen twice in the last three decades.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I find myself so much of the same opinion as the Senator from Illinois that I rise to ask him a question or two on the same point on which I have asked questions of some of the other speakers today, because I still think we ought to make our record crystal clear on the subject of moral obligations to which the Senator has referred.

The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] I think has made it clear for the RECORD that if we vote for the Millikin amendment there is no moral obligation upon us to cut the budget $4,500,000,000, if we should subsequently decide the public interest does not warrant our making such a cut. Am I to understand the Senator from Illinois to feel that if he votes for the Millikin amendment he would be under a moral obligation to cut $4,500,000,000 from the budget, irrespective of the effect of the cut upon the national welfare?

Mr. LUCAS. I seriously doubt the advisability of taking a definite position upon that proposition. That is why I am not going to vote for either the $6,000,000,000-cut or the $4,500,000,000-cut. I do not want to commit myself today on $4,500,000,000. I do not want to commit myself on anything related to this subject, because, frankly, I do not know what this is all about; and no other Senator on the floor knows what he is being called upon to do here. It is in reality a farce if I ever saw one; it is a snare and a delusion; and I am not going to vote for either proposed cut.

Let me further answer the Senator in this way: So far as moral obligation is concerned, that may rest in the opinion of the individual Senator. The answer to it is a good deal like the remark made by an old professor of a law college when he was asked a question which was a little difficult to answer. He was a pious old gentleman. He would raise his eyes to the ceiling and say, "Young gentlemen, there is much to be said on both sides of that question."

There is a good deal to be said on both sides of the question, but I will say to the Senator from Oregon, and to the Senate, that, as I see this matter, I cannot conscientiously vote either for the $6,000,000,000 or for the $4,500,000,000 cut, because I fear that if I did, I might be bound to the extent of voting something that would ultimately cripple the national defense. To vote now in favor of a $4,500,000,000 cut, and perhaps later on vote for appropriations which are not in conformity with that cut, would not only be inconsistent but could be too easily misunderstood. So I am not going to vote for it.

Mr. MORSE. That is the point I want to make, now. Does the Senator from Illinois fear, as I do, that the voting of the $4,500,000,000 cut will be looked upon by the public generally as a pledge to cut $4,500,000,000 from the budget?

Mr. LUCAS. They cannot help doing that. They have a right to look upon it in that way, as I see this debate developing.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am not quite sure at all that I agree with the Senator from Illinois. When Senators see a group, or perhaps a majority of this body, plunging headlong into disaster, we might say, with the proposal for a cut of $6,000,000,000, and we could reduce it to $4,500,000,000, I think there may be a responsibility and an obligation to take the lesser of the two evils and to reduce it as much as possible.

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot see any difference in principle. There is nothing upon which to base the cut of $6,000,000,000; there is nothing upon which to base the cut of $4,500,000,000; so, there being nothing upon which to base either, I shall not vote for either.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Was I correct in understanding the Senator from Illinois to say a moment ago that this entire proposal is a farce?

Mr. LUCAS. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Is it not a part of the legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, and during the early days of the present session did not the Members of this body plead that we might comply with the spirit of that act?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator does not understand what I am talking about. When I say it is a farce, I am talking about what the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget failed to do. That is the farce of this whole thing. That committee had an obligation under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

Mr. DWORSHAK. The committee was required to act.

Mr. LUCAS. Just a moment; I have the floor. That committee had an obligation under the act, and they failed, in the humble judgment of the Senator from Illinois, in the performance of that duty and obligation, in not giving to the Senate sufficient information of some kind and character upon which it might intelligently act.

There is no evidence here, there is not a word, there is not a report, upon which the $6,000,000,000 recommendation can be based. That is why I say it is a farce.

Mr. DWORSHAK. But will the Senator from Illinois concede that the committee acted strictly in accordance with the Legislative Reorganization Act?

Mr. LUCAS. I did not yield to the Senator, but I shall answer definitely in the negative.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Something has been said about the spirit of the Reorganization Act. The particular provision which is now under discussion contemplated that the Budget Committee would use some degree of intelligence to ascertain a reasonable figure at which to fix the ceiling in the Budget, after calling, perhaps, as the Senator has suggested, the Chief of Staff, the Secretary of War, and other witnesses. That would be in accord with the true meaning and spirit of the act and would make possible an intelligent recommendation to the Congress. When the Senator says it is a farce, he is not criticizing the act——

Mr. LUCAS. Not at all.

Mr. HATCH But he is criticizing and condemning the manner in which it has been observed.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from New Mexico is absolutely correct. I think the manner in which this matter has been handled by the majority is a snare and a delusion and a farce. That is the point I make. There was ample time for those on the Budget Committee to summon witnesses to testify upon the important question of national defense, and obtain information upon which all Senators could form some kind of an intelligent conclusion before casting a vote affecting the general welfare of all Americans.

Mr. President, I have listened in vain all through these debates for someone to give me information upon this point. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], for whom I have great respect, and who is my friend, the new Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, has utterly failed to give us a break-down. He has quoted facts and figures galore, but not one fact or figure has he given us on the break-down of the $6,000,000,000. He made an excellent political speech. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] spoke next, but said nothing about it. Then, Mr. President, in order to secure some facts upon which I could make my own record and in an effort to obtain adequate information which I might submit to the Senate I called up the War Department and the Navy Department. The departments were glad to give me the facts, which they would have given to the Legislative Budget Committee all for the asking, Mr. President. But no, the little coterie on the Budget Committee, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] said the other day, would not even invite some of the minority members to their secret sessions which they held in connection with finding the ways and means to cut $6,000,000,000 from the Budget.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have heretofore called attention to the fact, as the Senator has just quoted me as saying, that no one in the minority, even of the subcommittee of 20 which was selected out of the full Budget Committee of 102, was either invited to be present or notified that there was any meeting. We do not yet know that there was a meeting held. There was no report made by the chairman of the subcommittee or the full committee to the full committee with respect to any witness who was ever heard. We heard a rumor that General Eisenhower had been asked to come to the Capitol and have a personal conversation with the chairman of the committee and perhaps one or two others. I do not know how many individuals were present because we were never given any information about it, but the chairman of the committee never reported to the full Budget Committee that General Eisenhower was ever called upon to appear, or was ever heard, or ever said anything, or if he did, what he said or what he recommended. Nothing of that kind was ever revealed to the committee that was required to make up an estimate of the over-all Budget. So, Senators here on the floor are no more ignorant about the facts than the committee itself was ignorant when they passed on this $6,000,000,000 cut.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for his contribution. That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Illinois if it is not a fact that under the Reorganization Act all authorizations for both the Army and the Navy are combined in an armed services bill?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to say to the Senator from Illinois that a large number of authorization bills must be passed first before discussion can be had on the appropriations. For instance, an authorization must be made for the fleet reserve. We have a large fleet tied up. At the present time the Navy has a program of establishing some 110 fleet reserve units throughout the United States. The bill making such provision is now before the Armed Services Committee. It has never been acted upon because it cannot be decided until the authorization bill is passed. And here we are trying to write appropriation bills before the Armed Services Committee itself has had an opportunity to pass upon or to study a single piece of important national defense legislation.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for his contribution.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. JENNER. Does the Senator from Illinois assume that if the Budget Committee had called in the military and naval experts of the Nation they would have received any reliable information upon which they could have depended?

Mr. LUCAS. Whom else would we depend upon, I will ask the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. JENNER. I understand that the same authorities who the Senator said should have been called in and interviewed, in the past sessions of the Congress when we were in the midst of a great war could not guess within thirty-two billion dollars of what it would actually cost to prosecute the war. In my opinion the information furnished by anyone who cannot guess within thirty-two billions of dollars with respect to a budget would not be worth a dollar.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, as one vitally interested in an adequate national defense at this critical time in our history. I am deeply concerned over the action by the joint committee in recommending a 16 percent cut in the President's budget. Having been unable to obtain any satisfactory information from the subcommittee of the Legislative Budget Committee, I thought it necessary at least to obtain some facts from the Army and the Navy that the Senate and the country should have.

These facts which I am about to relate to the Senate could have been obtained by the subcommittee of the Legislative Budget Committee had the members thereof seen fit to do so.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois whether the cut of $32,000,000,000 in what it was estimated we would have to expend during the war was not made by reason of the fact that the war was brought to a close during that budget year?

Mr. LUCAS. I think perhaps that is true.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The war ended during the year for which the budget estimate was made, and of course we did not have to spend as great an amount of money as we would have had to spend had the war continued.

Mr. LUCAS. I assume the Senator is correct. I am not going to get into the debate between the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from South Carolina, but I hope the Senator from South Carolina will explain the situation to the Senator from Indiana in due course of time. It is quite easy to rise on the floor of the Senate and shout "Thirty-two billion dollars" in a debate of this kind when one is not familiar with the facts. If a figure of $6,000,000,000 can be pulled out of thin air, then a figure of $32,000,000,000 can be pulled out of the air just as easily.

Mr. President, a 16-percent cut contemplates a reduction of $1,000,000,000 in the military funds and one-half billion dollars in the civil funds requested by the War Department.

I wish to take this opportunity to express praise for the wonderful speech which was made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] today, as well as the speech made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I go along with them 100 percent upon the question of national defense, as so eloquently portrayed and debated by both. But I cannot go along with either in support of the four-and-one-half-billion-dollar cut, because I am not convinced, as I have said many times, that we can cut either $6,000,000,000 or four and a half billion dollars without materially slashing the national defense program.

Recently, Mr. President, the Secretary of War stated that a reduction of $1,000,000,000 in the appropriation for the Army would not only cripple our military forces to a degree which would jeopardize the reconstruction measures upon which the Army is currently engaged in Japan, Korea, and Germany, but would smash the very foundation of our future national defense. He has pointed out that the War Department budget, as submitted by the President, was the minimum our military leaders believed necessary for support of our occupational forces overseas and for reasonable guaranties for national security. The position taken by the Secretary of War is the same position that is taken by General Eisenhower, Chief of Staff, and by General Marshall, Secretary of State. Here are three men who were far in the forefront in winning the greatest war that civilization has ever known. We did not challenge their military judgment as one victory after another came to a free civilization. No one in the flush of great military victories was asking these men to resign if they could not get along with less than they had.

Now in this great reconstruction period, one that is unlike anything in the history of mankind, a period which marks the entry of the entire world into the atomic age, we find men here in the Senate of the United States who are willing to dismiss the pleas of our greatest military leaders as though they amounted to nothing.

Mr. President, it is inconceivable and fantastic to think that men in the United States Senate, with no facts or figures before them, could become economic strategists overnight and defy the men who have been on the front, both in peace and in war, during the past 10 years.

Mr. President, the War Department budget, as submitted to us, already represents a 40-percent cut in original estimates. It already necessitates large reductions in funds needed for scientific research and development. It already forces the closing of many stations which the Army felt should be retained in the interests of national security. It already means that the Army troop strength must be reduced by 80,000; that occupation forces must be pared to the danger point; that the Air Forces 70-group program must be reduced to 55; that field maintenance of equipment will approach an economically unsound level; that maintenance and repair of posts, camps, and stations will be reduced to levels 40 percent below wartime standards; that the activation, training, and equipment of our civilian components will be appreciably slowed down; that all new constructions must be eliminated; and that pilot training will be curtailed for lack of sufficient funds to provide necessary aviation gasoline and maintenance materials.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have been listening attentively to the able address of the distinguished Senator. I ask him if he intends to discuss the Navy?

Mr. LUCAS. I do.

Any further major reductions—and, Mr. President, here is a vital point—can be absorbed only by further major eliminations in the planned security structure.

I asked the Secretary of War what form these additional major eliminations would take. He responded that a further cut of $1,000,000,000 in the appropriations for the military functions of the Army would, in addition to the drastic reductions already made, compel a reduction of approximately 200,000 in the strength of the Army. Our occupation forces cannot be further reduced without depriving our overseas commanders of the necessary forces for carrying out their occupation missions. Our ground and service troops in this country are at a minimum to support the occupation forces. Therefore, the only place left for sizable cuts is in our Air Forces, and they must bear the brunt of this reduction.

Recently there was sent to me a copy of the American Press Magazine containing a poll upon some of the important current questions of the day. One question in that poll greatly intrigued me. It related to cutting the appropriations for the Army and Navy by as much as $5,000,000,000, as suggested by several Senate leaders. Only 23 percent of the people participating in the poll voted "yes."

On the question of cutting American occupation forces in Germany and Japan, only 17 percent of those participating in the poll voted "yes." This poll was taken through the country editors of the United States. It reached down to the grass roots of the population. I place in the RECORD the question for the information of Senators:

Cut appropriation for Army and Navy by up to $5,000,000,000 as suggested by several Senate leaders, 23 percent.

Cut American occupation forces in Germany and Japan, 17 percent.

To continue with the information furnished me by the Secretary of War, the second point which he made was that it would be necessary to cut our number of air combat groups from 55 to 35, of which only 3 would be located in the United States.

In addition, it would be necessary so to curtail our combat plane procurement program as to reduce our once powerful air force to a second-rate position within 3 to 5 years. That was the observation made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in his eloquent speech. Think of it. These men who are military leaders are telling us that under a two-and-a-quarter-billion-dollar cut our air force would be reduced to a second-rate position within 3 to 5 years. I shall never vote for a cut of that kind, in view of the commitments made under the United Nations Charter, which was passed almost unanimously in the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. In the state of the information which the Senator has, can he give me any assurance, or give the public any assurance, that the reduction in the case of the armed forces would be limited to two and a quarter billion dollars?

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator know that?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not. I can only say that that is exactly what the newspapers have stated. They have stated that those seeking a cut of $6,000,000,000 were hoping to lop two and a quarter billion dollars from the national-defense appropriations.

Mr. HATCH. They admit that that much would be lopped off, but does anyone have any assurance that the reduction would not be even more?

Mr. LUCAS. No one has any assurance on that score. No one knows what will happen before Congress gets through.

The Secretary of War further stated that a cut of this kind would—

Bring about the abandonment of as many as 50 Air and Ground Forces posts, camps, and stations;

Materially restrict progress in the fields of research and development and operate to nullify work done at the expense of large investments already made;

Cut by 50 percent the planned programs for our civilian components, the National Guard, and Organized Reserves, already at a low level.

I have before me a telegram from the adjutant general of the National Guard in the State of Illinois deploring any reduction in the Federal Budget affecting national defense. It reads as follows:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., February 19, 1947.

Hon. SCOTT W. LUCAS,
United States Senate:

Your aid to prevent a reduction in the Federal budget which will seriously impair the national security and the post-war National Guard reorganization program now in progress in every State is earnestly solicited.

LEO M. BOYLE,
The Adjutant General.

The adjutant general of the State of Illinois definitely believes that, once we agree to a $6,000,000,000 or $4,500,000,000 cut, the National Guard in his State will be affected. Judging from this telegram, he understands that what we are doing here today is to become the law of the land. Of course, he wants the National Guard continued, and rightfully it should be continued if we are to have the kind of defense we need.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Is it not the opinion of the distinguished Senator that those in charge of the Army and Navy are taking this proposal very seriously, and are now beginning to cooperate, upon the theory that this proposal might be agreed to, and that if it should be, they would immediately accept it as a mandate from the Congress?

Mr. LUCAS. The whole country feels that what we are considering at the present time is definitely a mandate or law.

Mr. MAYBANK. Is it not a fact that only yesterday it was necessary for General Bradley, the head of the Veterans' Administration, to discontinue certain transportation, and to recall large numbers of Veterans' Administration employees from the field, where they were trying in distant places to assist veterans who have no other means of assistance?

Mr. LUCAS. I think that is true. I read such a statement in the newspaper.

So far I have touched upon only those aspects of a reduction in appropriations for the military functions of the Army. But we have been told that the civil funds of the War Department are to be cut approximately $500,000,000. Do Senators know what that will mean?

Mr. President, the budget figures for the civil functions of the War Department stand today at slightly more than $1,000,000,000. This total includes seven hundred and twenty-five millions for food for the starving peoples within our occupied territories, two hundred and ninety millions for the river and harbor and flood-control projects of the Corps of Engineers, and small amounts for military cemeteries and for the Alaskan Communications System. Assume that not one dollar is authorized for expenditures other than for food. It is not a practical assumption, but let us make it. This would reduce the total appropriation by approximately three hundred million. To cut it by five hundred million means taking an absolute minimum of $200,000,000 worth of food from the destitute and starving peoples whose present lives and future hopes are our immediate trust.

Mr. President, if the Secretary of War is correct—and I must assume for the moment that he is—what he is talking about is what General Marshall was talking about recently. If we lower the food rations of these destitute and starving people, we shall be doing more to promote communism in these countries than any one thing I know of. We shall be playing directly into the hands of Joe Stalin, the individual whom so many Senators constantly condemn and criticize on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. With respect to food, is there not an agreement, which is carried into the United Nations agreement, between this Nation and our allies, and between various other nations and representatives of the United States? In other words, are we not breaking a written agreement and promise that has been made?

Mr. LUCAS. I am not sure of all the details of that agreement. The only definite information I have is the information which I have received from the Secretary of War as to the amount of food necessary to prevent starvation among the people who are in the occupied areas.

Mr. MAYBANK. Was there not an agreement between this Nation and the other powers involved that they would be responsible for seeing that those people should not starve?

Mr. LUCAS. I think the Senator is eminently correct in that statement.

Mr. President, if I had made some of the critical and condemnatory speeches that have been made here about Stalin, giving the implication to the American people that some men here fear and dread him, I would not be voting to cut the national defense, but, to be consistent, I would want to increase it. Yet some Senators who talk the loudest and the noisiest about communistic Russia and the fears they have of that nation are the ones who are loudest in their demands for a cut in national-defense appropriations.

Mr. President, disregard the human factor, if we will. Look at it coldly. People do not suffer the pangs of starvation in silence. The civil ration in our occupied areas is already dangerously low. To cut it further is to risk adding riot and bloodshed to the formidable problems confronting our occupation forces. Obviously, this will affect the strength requirements of our overseas garrisons.

Mr. President, what is true of the Army is true of the Navy also. A reduction in the amount of $500,000,000, which is approximately 16 percent, is contemplated under this $6,000,000,000 cut. The Secretary of the Navy says—and this statement is confirmed by Admiral Nimitz, Chief of Naval Operations—that a reduction in the amount of $500,000,000 would so greatly reduce the effectiveness of the Navy as to render it practically immobile and impotent as an instrument of national defense. Do not forget that. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] made a point of that this week. "Impotent and immobile as an instrument of national defense" means that it would not be ready to fight. That is exactly what the Secretary said.

In asking Secretary of the Navy Forrestal to expand further that statement and give to me the results involved under the cut, he replied as follows:

There will be a proportionate reduction of enlisted and officer strength below 425,000 enlisted and 46,000 officers—which are minimum requirements for 1948. When this reduction is made, the following will be the results:

First. Immobilization of the major portion of the Atlantic and Pacific Fleets.

Second. Abandonment of material salvage program.

Third. Inability properly to administer and train the Naval Reserve.

Fourth. Further inactivation of advance and continental air and operating bases.

Fifth. Serious curtailment of essential training of pilots; air and general service ratings of all branches.

Sixth. Revocation of educational commitments to officers transferred from Naval Reserve and enlisted categories to the Regular service.

Seventh. Breaking faith with enlisted personnel by forced separation from the service.

In addition to the above, there will be a drastic reduction in the Naval Reserve training program, reduction of the Marine Corps personnel, reducing the effectiveness of amphibious training and development of techniques for amphibious operations. There would be a drastic reduction in the naval aviation program and other matters involving research and development.

Mr. President, I have made a summary of what was submitted to me by the Secretary of the Navy, and I ask unanimous consent at this point to have placed in the RECORD this exhibit, the caption of which is "Effect of $500,000,000 reduction, fiscal 1948."

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EFFECT OF $500,000,000 REDUCTION, FISCAL 1948

1. Further reductions in the 1948 budget estimates as furnished to Congress by the President would seriously impair the effectiveness of the naval arm of national defense, not only during fiscal 1948, but also for several years to follow.

2. A reduction in the amount of $500,000,000 would so greatly reduce the effectiveness of the Navy as to render it practically immobile and impotent as an instrument of national policy. The information as to its impotency could not be kept from foreign governments.

3. There are set forth below certain of the drastic steps all of which would be necessary under a further cut of $500,000,000 together with an indication of the results involved.

(A) COURSE OF ACTION

Proportionate reduction of enlisted and officer strengths below 425,000 enlisted men and 46,000 officers (which are minimum requirements for 1948).

RESULTS

(1) Immobilization of the major portion of the Atlantic and Pacific Fleets.

(2) Abandonment of material salvage program.

(3) Inability properly to administer and train the Naval Reserve.

(4) Further inactivation of advance and continental air and operating bases.

(5) Serious curtailment of essential training of pilots; air and general service ratings of all branches.

(6) Revocation of educational commitments to officers transferred from Naval Reserve and enlisted categories to the regular service.

(7) Breaking faith with enlisted personnel by forced separation from the service.

(B) COURSE OF ACTION

Drastic reduction in Naval Reserve training program.

RESULTS

The effect of a drastic reduction in the Naval Reserve training program would mean practically the abandonment of the program as now planned, because, in addition to the drastic cut in Reserve funds, the Regular Naval Establishment will, under reduced budget, be unable to lend the necessary Regular Navy support to the training and cruising of Naval Reservists. The Reserve offers a means of maintaining the proficiency of personnel trained in war, and failure to maintain that proficiency will result in extravagant expenditure of much larger sums of money in the event of future mobilization.

(C) COURSE OF ACTION

Proportionate reduction of Marine Corps personnel.

RESULTS

This would reduce the effectiveness of the Marine Corps personnel.

This would reduce the effectiveness of the Marine Corps for carrying out commitments in support of United States policy outside the United States and reduce the effectiveness of amphibious training and development of techniques for amphibious operations.

(D) COURSE OF ACTION

Effect drastic reduction in force of Group IV (b) (supervisory) civil service personnel.

RESULTS

Further reduction of personnel for planning, design, research, contract termination, industrial mobilization planning, and surplus disposal which is inadequately provided for now under present ceilings. Backlogs of work already exist throughout the many activities of the Navy. This would lead to virtual inability to handle veterans' matters such as hospitalization information, and requests for information essential to veterans under the GI bill of rights. Would lead to separation of many civil service employees of long service and special skills peculiar to the Navy.

(E) COURSE OF ACTION

Proportionate reduction of BuShips funds.

RESULTS

(1) Such a reduction would reduce the volume of repairs to a low level which would not adequately care for the material condition of the fleet, and would almost entirely eliminate improvements in the nature of alterations.

(2) Inactivation of ships in the reserve fleet could not be adequately accomplished, and much damage would result to the material condition of those ships which are not yet inactivated. This reduction in funds for the reserve fleet would require the disposal for scrap of large numbers of ships valuable as a security reserve.

(3) The project under electronics was laid out on the basis of a modernization and replacement program of electronics equipment in the active fleet within a period of 5 years. The requests presented to the Budget, based on that proportional part of the $705,000,000 requested, reduced the rate of this replacement program to cover a period of 10 years. The amount of funds cleared by the Budget further reduced the rate of replacement to where it could be accomplished in about 15 years. Further reductions will prolong the replacement time still further, and a continuation of similarly small amounts in future years will result in the electronics equipment of the fleet becoming obsolete in about 6 years. If we are to retain any advantages in communication and intelligence equipment of this nature, further reductions are unrealistic and fraught with great danger.

(4) Further reductions in severely curtailed funds (under investigations and tests) would reduce any research and development activity to such a small amount that our improvements in technical fields will be minor. The benefits of research and development can only be realized in time of peace; after a war starts, it is too late to try to overcome the shortcomings of neglect in these fields.

(5) In the shore establishment, employment is based entirely on the support and maintenance of the operating fleet. The personnel is tailored to fit the minimum requirements of the workload resulting therefrom. It is estimated that a further reduction in funds available for this purpose will cause the discharge of very large numbers of men in naval shipyards, from numbers already inadequate to do the work in hand for the proper upkeep of the fleet. The obligation for this upkeep is large, whether the ships are active or in reserve. Naturally, the volume of the work can be reduced somewhat when fewer ships are active, but the workload cannot be eliminated entirely without unacceptable deterioration of material.

(F) COURSE OF ACTION

Drastic reduction in Bureau of Ordnance programs.

RESULTS

(1) Loss of services of personnel with invaluable know-how, with consequent inability to furnish adequate support to the fleet.

(2) Drastic curtailment in support of the Navy research program and further increase in cuts of few remaining programs due to lower production rates.

(3) Serious curtailment in production of antisubmarine weapons, and in manufacture of newly developed antiaircraft guns.

(4) Practically no manufacture of newly developed types of ammunition. (Schedule for segregation, overhaul, and reworking of ammunition on hand will have to be extended from 3 to 5 years, during which some ammunition will deteriorate to such extent as to render it worthless.)

(5) Loss of Government material now stored in private plants due to deterioration or disposal with consequent great loss in capital investment, and inability to meet mobilization requirements.

(6) Extensive inactivation, reduction to caretaker status, closing down, and leasing of Bureau of Ordnance shore facilities.

(G) COURSE OF ACTION

Drastic reduction in the naval-aviation program.

RESULTS

(1) Collapse of important segments of the aircraft industry due to cut-back in new aircraft, making impossible the meeting of the remobilization schedule. The air forces of the fleet would rapidly become obsolete and would be reduced in strength as normal attrition takes place.

(2) Maintenance and operation of aircraft would be curtailed and combat readiness of naval aviation would be seriously impaired. Fleet efficiency would rapidly fall off with resulting increased hazard. A large amount of valuable material would deteriorate.

(3) It would become necessary to make a marked reduction in the strength of the aeronautical organization with a consequent serious result on the effectiveness of the combat potential of the fleet.

(H) COURSE OF ACTION

Reduction of funds allocated to naval communications.

RESULTS

(1) Seriously reduce the Navy's share of the vital joint Army-Navy communication intelligence task, thus seriously undermining national security.

(2) Seriously interfere with the gradual improvement of the communication material in use by the naval service and force the use of other less modern and less efficient equipment.

(I) COURSE OF ACTION

Curtail intelligence activities to conform to reductions in funds.

RESULTS

Limited funds for defense preparations require that available funds be expended most efficiently for only those activities essential to meet prospective enemy operations, and consequently require more accurate intelligence during this period than is required when funds available permit preparations capable of meeting all contingencies. Budgetary reductions will impair the national security by curtailing essential intelligence.

(J) COURSE OF ACTION

Reduction in funds allocated to research and development.

RESULTS

Would seriously retard the development of new ships, aircraft, aircraft power plants, guided missiles, armament, electronics, and communication materials.

4. On September 1, 1946, the Navy completed a demobilization of unprecedented scale and speed. Incident to that demobilization the fleets, except for a few units on foreign stations, were immobilized and rendered impotent.

5. Because of the demands for manpower to care for surplus property, surplus bases, and surplus ships; and to lay up the valuable ships to be retained in reserve; the active ships and aircraft squadrons were left without adequate crews, and not until this spring will the so-called active fleets begin to regain combat efficiency.

6. The estimates for fiscal 1948 as submitted in September 1946 to the Bureau of the Budget by the Navy Department, requesting $5,790,000,000, contemplating an orderly shrinkage of the Naval Establishment. In December 1946, when the allocation to the Navy for 1948 of $3,654,000,000 was announced by the Bureau of the Budget, a drastic adjustment in the program was necessary. The adjustment was sufficiently severe so that the further demobilization required thereby will again reduce drastically the effectiveness of the fleet in a ratio which will be disproportionately large because of the cumulative effects during the longer time in which ships will be without adequate crews.

7. The effect of further large cuts in appropriations, particularly for uniformed personnel, will be destructive of the combat efficiency of the fleet because:

(a) Since ships transferred to the inactive fleet require large crews to lay them up, the brunt of any reduction must be borne for many months by the ships intended to be active.

(b) A cut in average strength by any proposed number requires a reduction of approximately twice that number by the end of the year in order to reach the required average.

(c) The men engaged in caring for property on shore, in training, in hospitals, and on terminal leave cannot be cut, which again causes the so-called active fleets to bear almost the total effect of any rapid reduction.

8. With time it will be possible to reduce naval strength without undue impairment of the effectiveness of the fleets at their reduced size. The personnel reductions already planned represent the maximum that can be accomplished without eliminating the Navy as an effective factor in our national security for the period involved.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. I do not know whether the Senator is going to speak of it or not, but I have understood that this cut would practically stop all ship construction.

Mr. LUCAS. I think that is correct. The exhibit which I have just placed in the RECORD I am certain explains the point that I wanted made.

Mr. MAYBANK. I have been told by the Secretary of the Navy that it would stop all ship construction. Is it not the Senator's opinion, from the experience of the past few years, that it is absolutely essential to keep up some construction of modern ships, because what may be modern today may be obsolete next year?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to ask the Senator another question. He has spoken of the Secretary of War. The Secretary of the Navy is a most able and successful businessman. He knows business from A to Z. He is not an Annapolis-trained man, but he is a civilian who made a great name and a great record for himself in private life, and he is as much interested in the taxpayer as is anyone else.

Mr. LUCAS. There can be no question about that. He is one of the most competent and able citizens of this country, and was one of the outstanding men in the business world before he became Secretary of the Navy. In my opinion, he has done a remarkable job while in that position.

Mr. President, I want it understood that I am for a cut in the Budget wherever it can be made. I hope that those who have pulled out of thin air this $6,000,000,000 figure will be able to make good when these matters are ultimately considered by the Appropriations Committee, but I predict now that they will not be able to do so, unless they severely cripple the armed services of this country at a critical time when we need to show strength to the entire world.

There is not one single line of evidence before this Senate that a $6,000,000,000, or even a $4,500,000,000, cut will not impair national defense or repudiate some of our international commitments made under the United Nations Charter and the laws that we have passed.

Mr. President, I for one am not willing in this hour of peril to toy with our national defenses in such a whimsical and carefree way. I am not one to toss six billion, or $4,500,000,000 around in thin air, with our national defense in danger, even though it were to carry out some political commitment that has been made. Until I have facts upon which to base an intelligent judgment and not a speculative guess, I cannot conscientiously support either of these measures. You who today indulge in this speculation are gambling with the destiny of the future of America. What we do here may undermine our prestige among the nations of the world, make our foreign policy less effective, play into the hands—and I repeat, play directly into the hands—of communistic Russia.

Gentlemen, you who propose to cut the armed forces budget carry a very heavy burden for your country. The world is in too critical a state for it to be otherwise. It is in too critical a state for the Congress to be carelessly pulling figures out of a hat and saying to the armed forces, the Budget Bureau, and the President, that in your judgment the national defense budget does not require expenditure of $11,200,000,000. That is particularly true when we in the Senate are called upon to vote for a cut of this kind without the slightest bit of evidence, without hearings of any kind, without reports of any significance.

Mr. President, other nations of the world are watching our course of action with absorbed interest. The effect of our national defense effort is a matter of vital concern to them. I for one do not propose to weaken our standing in the world by telling our military and naval leaders—great men that they are—great men that they were both in peace and war—that they are talking through their hats on national defense at a time when civilization is at the crossroads.

Call it what you will, the proposed 16 percent cut in the Army and Navy budget is a 16 percent cut in our security. It is a 16 percent unilateral disarmament. It is a 16 percent reduction in the backing this body is willing to give to General George Marshall, Secretary of State, and the Honorable Warren Austin, our American delegate on the Security Council of the United Nations. Instead of giving to General Marshall an ace in the hole, as he prepares to leave for Moscow to participate in the conferences that will affect the fate of the world, we are handing him a joker. The greatest thing that we in Congress could have done to strengthen the security of this Nation and advance the peace of the world would have been to say unanimously, "Yes, we are for cutting the President's budget to the bone, except for national defense, and on that we stand wholeheartedly and enthusiastically back of the President, the Army, the Navy, and the State Department." That is the least that could have been done until the evidence was unfolded and considered before the Appropriations Committee.

DEDUCTIONS FROM INCOME AND OTHER TAXES OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance I ask unanimous consent to report favorably, without amendment, House Joint Resolution 121, and to submit a report (No. 35) thereon. In this connection, I also ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate give immediate consideration to the joint resolution.

Let me make a brief word of explanation, Mr. President. This measure has been passed by the House of Representatives, and has been unanimously approved by the Senate Committee on Finance. Prompt action must be taken by the Senate on the joint resolution, because it exempts from taxation the gift of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., of approximately $8,500,000 for a site for the United Nations in New York City. The options on the property expire on February 28, and the whole plan will fall through if the options are not exercised in time.

Mr. President, this joint resolution is so drawn that it does not open the door to all sorts of gifts to the United Nations. It is so drawn that it is practically limited to this single gift, it being the opinion, at least of the Senate Finance Committee, that so far as all gifts of this type and all other tax features are concerned, each case should be considered on its own bottom.

So I hope action on the joint resolution may be taken without delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report on the joint resolution will be received, and the joint resolution will be read by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 121) granting, in the case of income, estate, and gift taxes, deductions for contributions to the United Nations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTINUATION OF AUTHORITY OF MARITIME COMMISSION TO OPERATE VESSELS

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 114, which I believe is at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A resolution (H. J. Res. 114) to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to operate vessels until July 1, 1947.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, let me say a brief word about this matter. I had introduced in the Senate a resolution in precisely the same terms as this House joint resolution. The House joint resolution was the subject of hearings by the House Committee on the Merchant Marine, from which the resolution was unanimously reported to the House. It was considered by the House, was passed by the House, and was sent to this body on February 17. I have been authorized by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to report the joint resolution to the Senate.

I may say, first, that it is a matter in which the President and his administration are vitally interested. The President feels that the continuation of the authority, as proposed by the joint resolution, is absolutely essential if we are to carry on vitally important trade of the United States in vessels of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the authority which is sought to be extended by the resolution expires within a few days; does it not?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. So it is important that the extension be made promptly.

Mr. WHITE. Yes; it is most important.

Mr. President, the first provision of the joint resolution extends for a period of 3 months, only, the authority of the Maritime Commission to operate vessels in the domestic trade.

The second section of the joint resolution authorizes for a period of 3 months additional, namely, to June 30, 1947, the use of what is called the operating fund of the Maritime Commission. That is used primarily in our foreign trade.

It is absolutely essential, so the President believes, so the Maritime Commission believes, and so all maritime groups and interests in the country believe, so far as I have heard, that this authority be continued if we are to service the needs of our own commerce, if we are to transport the coal and grain which are necessary for many peoples in many parts of the world, if we are to meet our military demands, if we are to service the movement of displaced persons, and if we are to carry on our coastwise and intercoastal shipping. So it is generally believed that prompt enactment of the joint resolution is imperative, and I very much hope that it may receive the approval of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 114?

There being no objection, the joint resolution to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to operate vessels until July 1, 1947, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYMENT OF ASSISTANTS, AND SO FORTH, BY COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I ask unanimous consent to report, with an amendment, Senate Resolution 75, authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to make certain expenditures and employ temporary assistants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 75), submitted by Mr. FERGUSON on January 29, 1947, which had been reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration with an amendment on page 1, in line 7, after the word "assistants," to strike out "as it deems advisable" and insert "for the purpose of investigating surplus property and its disposal," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That in carrying out the duties imposed upon it by subsection (g) (2) (B) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such investigators, technical, clerical, and other assistants for the purpose of investigating surplus property and its disposal.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $100,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, is there any Member of the United States Senate who does not sincerely desire to see our astronomical public debt reduced? I am sure there is not. I am sure no Member of the Senate enjoys paying the present high income tax, particularly if it were possible to reduce that tax substantially without danger to our country. I know the people of the United States want economy in Government. I know the people of the United States have borne a terrific, back-breaking financial load in helping with their dollars, as well as with their own energies, to win the worst, most terrible war in all history. I know these things as well as any other Member of the Senate knows them, as well as any of the many Pennsylvanians who have written me on this problem of Federal expenditures know them, and as well as the people generally throughout the country know them.

Consequently, I have no intention or desire to stand here today and say that the Federal debt should not be reduced or that Government spending should not be curbed wherever it is practical to do so. On the contrary, Mr. President, I want those things done. I do not plead for any blank checks.

During the war I frequently supported what amounted to blank checks to the President and to the military without knowing in all specific details how that money was to be used. The Members of the Congress generally all did the same thing. In the war we had to take the word of the men directing that war that they needed the money to win the war. Thank God they got that money. With it, thank God, the war was won. The best example I know of the blank-check appropriation in those days was the $2,000,000,000 adroitly slipped into a variety of appropriation classifications to buy us the atomic bomb.

That was a necessary method of fiscal operation in war. I do not think it a proper approach in peacetime. I say that because I want the record to be clear. I do not want a single agency of the Government to get a single dollar of appropriation unless the Congress knows what that appropriation is for and approves its use. That is one of our most important single obligations, as Members of the Congress.

On the other hand, Mr. President, while insisting that every appropriation be justified on its merits, I insist that every slash in the President's budget for the forthcoming fiscal year likewise be justified to the complete satisfaction of the Congress.

Today we are making an unprecedented decision. We are deciding, under the mandate of a new law, the magnificent La Follette-Monroney Congressional Reorganization Act, what our Nation's Budget should be. The spirit of this act is clear that the budget we adopt should be a thoroughly reasoned-out document, based upon facts, figures, and the very best information which it is possible for Congress to obtain.

I might say in passing, Mr. President, that I am more than a little concerned by the increasing number of violations of our own new basic congressional law which have already occurred in these few short weeks in which the act has been in effect, violations expressly sanctioned by the Congress—as it technically has the right to do despite the clear intent of the Reorganization Act—and other violations which have occurred, if not with the sanction of the Congress, then without the active opposition of the Congress. By the latter, I am referring specifically to the disposition on the part of the majority party to indulge with unseemly frequency in the holding of closed-door executive committee sessions when the Reorganization Act provides so definitely that committee meetings, with but few exceptions, should be open to the public.

The legislative budget we are now considering is a prime example of this disregard of the Reorganization Act, which has already become so commonplace in the Eightieth Congress. It is a good example in two ways of the disregard of the spirit, if not the letter of the Reorganization Act.

First, this resolution is a product of closed-door secrecy. It is legislation by a back-room cabal. I had thought that political candidates at one time were selected in that manner, but I never thought the United States Congress would legislate in that way.

We of the minority party, and I suspect that many of the members of the majority party, know practically nothing of how this resolution and the figures it contains were developed.

We have been told, in effect: "Here it is, take it. Ask no questions." We have been told that even if we asked any questions, they would not be answered.

Here, indeed, Mr. President, is an insult to the intelligence not only of the Members of the Congress but of the American people. It is understandable that we could not during the war have every citizen of the United States, or even every Member of the Congress, participate in a decision over whether there should be $2,000,000,000 expended for an atomic bomb. In a matter of such grave military importance, it was proper that the atomic-bomb development had to remain a secret not only from the citizens who were putting up the money for it but even from most of us Members of Congress, who were voting the money for it.

Is such secrecy either necessary or seemly in peacetime on a matter so simple but so important to every man and woman and child in the United States as our Nation's Budget? I do not think so.

Mr. President, the second violation of the act, of the spirit, if not the letter, of the Reorganization Act in connection with the resolution is that the framers of the resolution have admittedly failed to make any thoroughgoing study of the facts in reaching their decision, but have, in fact, reached into the thin air, above the smoke in that smoke-filled room, and have plucked out a figure of $6,000,000,000.

Mr. President, I realize that smoke in a smoke-filled room rises to the ceiling, and that it would be very difficult for anyone to reach above the smoke to find the thin air from which the $6,000,000,000 figure could be extracted. That is what makes this performance all the more remarkable; it violates not only the letter and the spirit of the Reorganization Act; it even violates the basic laws of nature. More, it seeks to get blood out of a turnip. It seeks to remove from the body politic an appendix, namely, governmental extravagance, but it proceeds to do that by chopping with a meat cleaver into the abdomen of Government itself.

Mr. President, if the patient is to be murdered on the operating table, can it not be done with a little more finesse, with a little less gore?

As I said before, I earnestly hope to see Government expenditures reduced. I should like very much to be able to vote in honest conviction for a legislative budget which would reduce Government expenditures.

I do not know, from the information I have received so far from the joint committee which has presented this resolution, whether the Budget can be reduced safely by $6,000,000, let alone $6,000,000,000. And that, Mr. President, is the trouble. Nobody knows. The members of the joint committee do not know. They said they hoped the Budget could be reduced by this mysterious figure of $6,000,000,000, a figure of uncertain parentage.

Hopes, Mr. President, save no money. Facts, Mr. President, if reliable, can open the way to great savings. Facts? There are no facts before us. There is a hope. It is a hope similar to the hope we heard expressed so often in Congres. 8 years ago by those who would have prevented us from getting ready for war, because it was their hope there would be no war.

We all have a hope that the budget can be substantially reduced, just as we all had a hope 8 years ago that war could be avoided. But, Mr. President, we are dealing with too important a matter now, as we were dealing with too important a matter 8 years ago, to let our hopes determine the law which governs our country and which protects our safety.

May I say here, Mr. President, that the fumbling in the dark which characterizes this approach to a $6,000,000,000 cut in the budget is to me painfully reminiscent of the fumbling in the dark which characterized the approach of some Members of Congress less than 10 years ago to the protection of our Nation's safety?

There were those then who felt that expenditures for military purposes were unnecessary, that our Army in its pitiful weakness in those days was sufficient to meet a challenge we were assured would never arise anyway.

There are those among the Members of the Congress today who insist that military expenditures described as necessary by the men most able to judge the need are in fact not necessary at all. Similarly, there is opposition to the use of funds to implement our great victory on the battlefield by aiding to bring about a more unified world in which civilized nations can work together for their mutual safety to prevent aggression.

There is also a belief among some of those who would cut our budget blindly that funds spent toward developing good will throughout the world for this great, rich, and therefore envied country of ours is also a waste of money.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator believe in reducing expenditures?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; I do.

Mr. BRIDGES. How much would the Senator reduce the Budget?

Mr. MYERS. I would not reduce the Budget blindly. I am a member of a committee on the economic report. We were supposed to file a report; we knew we did not have time to file a complete report, and we frankly admitted that fact. We filed merely a brief report. I think that is what the Committee on the Legislative Budget of which the Senator from New Hampshire is a member should have done. That committee should have filed a report asking for an extension of time; otherwise it should have done nothing. Instead, they have blindly groped in the dark. As has been said here today, this is nothing more than a New Year's resolution. For myself, I am not going to vote for a New Year's resolution on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BRIDGES. May I say to the Senator that it is very obvious to him and to me, then, that what he advocates is a disregard of the law? He supported the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, and he now advocates bypassing it and paying no attention to it.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator propose to submit a concurrent resolution, to accompany the pending resolution as a part of the committee's report, expressing it as the sense of the Congress that the public debt shall be increased by the amount of the excess, if the estimated expenditures exceed the estimated receipts?

The Legislative Reorganization Act requires the filing of such a concurrent resolution; that anytime the appropriations exceed whatever the Congress determines upon, another resolution shall be filed increasing the public debt by that amount. Does the Senator propose to submit such a resolution?

Mr. BRIDGES. If such an emergency should occur——

Mr. MYERS. No, not an emergency; the Reorganization Act requires it and demands it. The Senator is not complying with the Reorganization Act.

Mr. BRIDGES. Oh, yes; we are complying with the Reorganization Act.

Mr. MYERS. Oh, no, the Senator is not complying with it, and he does not propose to do so. I think the Senator is trying to hoodwink the American people. I shall come to that a little later, because I shall discuss some of the remarks of the Senator a little later.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator yield a little further?

Mr. MYERS. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Not referring particularly to the Senator from Pennsylvania, but referring generally, perhaps, to the remarks of my friend, the Senator from Illinois, as well as the remarks of certain other Senators who are present, the fact is that they are against reducing expenditures. That is the issue here, regardless of any effort to camouflage it. The fact remains that the Legislative Reorganization Act provides the method of making some correlation between expenditures and receipts of government, and, in good faith, with the Reorganization Act in mind, the committee made a recommendation. Now, so far as I can see, the opposition is against a reduction of expenditures.

Mr. MYERS. Why were the minority members not called in? Why was it a back-door proceeding? I would use the word "conspiracy" if the rules of the Senate permitted. Why was it that a few members gathered together, calling no witnesses? According to the report of the committee, two witnesses were called, and the committee then came forth with a mysterious figure of $6,000,000,000.

It is stated in the report that "data from informed persons both in and out of Government" were received. Who were those informed persons?

I am in favor of cutting expenses. I am in favor of reducing expenses; I am in favor of balancing the budget; I am in favor of reducing taxes; but I want to know how it is to be done. I do not think any Member of Congress should be obliged to take the word of a particular group that expenditures are to be reduced by $6,000,000,000, when we are not told how, and when the Senator from New Hampshire does not dare tell us how.

Mr. BRIDGES. Because, if now the Senator were told how, or if this figure were to be broken down, the work of the Appropriations Committees of the Senate and of the House would be immediately prejudged.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator means he does not dare to tell?

Mr. BRIDGES. No; I do not mean I do not dare to tell. Of course we can tell.

Mr. MYERS. Then why not tell?

Mr. BRIDGES. Because the law does not require it. The committee does not have to do that. That was not the purpose of the law. The purpose of the law was to arrive at an over-all ceiling, based upon the judgment of certain committees. Such a judgment was reached and the proposal submitted. The details will have to be worked out by the Appropriations Committees.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. McMAHON. The esteemed chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has just used the word "judgment" as being that which was arrived at. Webster defines "judgment" as—

> The mental act of judging; the operation of the mind, involving comparison and discrimination, by which knowledge of values and relations is mentally formulated.
> The power of arriving at a wise decision; discretion; discernment.

Has the Senator from Pennsylvania in his possession anything which would indicate that the committee went through any of these operations in arriving at the so-called judgment?

Mr. MYERS. I might say to the Senator that many Senators who signed this majority report say it is merely a guess.

Mr. McMAHON. Perhaps the members of the committee sent out for a Ouija board.

Mr. MYERS. They might have done that. One Senator said here, "Oh, well, really, it is nothing more than a New Year's resolution." Now, I do not know what we are voting upon, and I again call to the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire the requirement of the Legislative Reorganization Act.

Mr. BRIDGES. May I say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, if it is a New Year's resolution, is it not a great thing that, after 15 years of the New Deal, we do have now, for the first time, a New Year's resolution looking toward a reduction of governmental expenditures?

Mr. MYERS. No; I never make a New Year's resolution that I have no intention of keeping and know I cannot keep. I know the Senator is convinced that we are not going to cut the budget $6,000,000,000. I shall come to that, and I shall give the Senator an opportunity to interrupt a little later.

Mr. BRIDGES. Very well.

Mr. MYERS. But I submit to the Senator again that the Legislative Reorganization Act imposes the following requirements upon the joint committee:

First, that it submit a budget; second, an estimate of Federal receipts; third, an estimate of expenditures; fourth, a resolution for the maximum amount to be appropriated and recommendation for the reduction in the public debt; and fifth, a recommendation to be included in a concurrent resolution which accompanies the committee's report expressing the sense of the Congress that the public debt shall be increased by the amount of the excess if the estimated expenditures exceed the estimated receipts.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator misunderstands me. We do not estimate that there will be a deficit.

Mr. MYERS. Is the Senator going to submit such a concurrent resolution? That is what I ask him.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am not going to submit now a concurrent resolution for increasing the national debt when we intend to cut expenditures rather than to increase them. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania has become so accustomed during recent years to spending at the rate of up to $100,000,000,000 in 1 year, and then $30,000,000,000 and $40,000,000,000 a year, that he cannot forget that fact.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator inquired what I thought of the Reorganization Act; if I was in sympathy with the Reorganization Act, and I said "Yes"; but I said that I thought the Senator was only accepting a part of it. I ask the Senator, as representing the majority: Did the majority in the caucus or the conference determine to ignore the last provision of section 138 of the Reorganization Act?

Mr. BRIDGES. If it becomes necessary, when the expenditures of Government exceed the receipts of Government, then of course we shall make such a recommendation, but the belief is that the receipts will exceed the expenditures of Government and we provide for a cut in expenditures and a cut in appropriations.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before the Senator from New Hampshire leaves?

Mr. MYERS. I yield. I do not want him to leave.

Mr. LUCAS. I want emphatically to challenge the statement which the Senator from New Hampshire made concerning the Senator from Illinois a moment ago, either directly or by implication. I stated over and over in my address, and I repeat it again, that I am definitely in favor of any savings that can be made. What I said I could not do was to vote blindfolded either for a cut of $6,000,000,000 or of four and a half billion dollars without knowing that by so doing I would obligate myself to vote eventually for something which might impair the national defense of the country.

Now one further observation, while the Senator from New Hampshire is on his feet. Knowing him as I have all these years, and having a great affection for him, and having watched the way he has voted respecting national defense both before Pearl Harbor and during the war when Congress voted billions of dollars of appropriations for war purposes, which the Senator from New Hampshire always supported, I was more or less surprised, in fact I may say I was shocked to discover, through the press, that my good friend was advocating—and I am sure he did so, or he would not have been quoted to that effect—a cut of $2,500,000,000 in the national defense. It seems to me that is a considerable amount of Budget reduction for a Senator to ask when he knows nothing about whether it can be done or not. That is what I am complaining about, and that is all. I can understand how some Members of the Senate, in view of their past records, would follow such a course. But I had high hope when my friend from New Hampshire became chairman of the Appropriations Committee that he would continue on the high plane of statesmanship upon which he has been traveling all through the years he has been here, and during that time he was in the minority. I thought his statesmanlike qualities would now carry him to greater heights. But, alas, I was sorely disappointed in the first statement I read in the newspapers, quoting the Senator from New Hampshire with respect to the national defense program.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Illinois in his speech a few moments ago said:

> The War Department budget was cut 40 percent from the original estimates and it already necessitates large reductions in funds for scientific research and development.

I ask who made this 40 percent reduction at the start? Let me point out that the War Department must have come in with a budget 40 percent higher than the one the President recommended.

Mr. LUCAS. It had been cut twice.

Mr. BRIDGES. Of course, according to the Senator from Illinois, the War Department must have been right then; and the President must be wrong in cutting the War Department's estimate by 40 percent.

Mr. LUCAS. Not at all.

Mr. BRIDGES. How can the Senator make that statement? The War Department in the estimate it made at the beginning and the President in cutting that estimate 40 percent, could not both be right.

Mr. LUCAS. The only argument between the Senator from New Hampshire and myself, as I view this discussion, is that I am sure the President of the United States had the advice of all the experts and screened all the different departments carefully and cautiously before he finally arrived at his budget estimates. I am satisfied that the Army and the Navy thought they needed more to do a superb job, but they now say definitely, as the Senator knows, that the amount requested in the Budget is the least on which they can possibly get along and carry out their responsibility for the defense of the Nation in a way that will maintain our security and safety in an uneasy world.

Mr. BRIDGES. But they said to the President, to begin with, that they required the full amount of the estimate.

Mr. LUCAS. No; I do not know that they said that to the President. I do not know what they said to the President, and neither does the Senator.

Mr. BRIDGES. They would not lie to the President. They presented the case of their needs, and the President had to cut them 40 percent, and if they were 40 percent wrong then is it not reasonable to assume that they might be a trifle wrong now?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from New Hampshire can make any assumption he desires to make. All I am saying is that, so far as the record is concerned, I am willing to take General Marshall's statement, General Eisenhower's statement, the statements made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and the President in preference to that made by the Senator from New Hampshire, who admits that he does not know a single thing about the Budget.

Mr. BRIDGES. No; I do not admit any such thing. Let me tell the Senator from Illinois that I have a complete break-down of every department, as to exactly where I would cut the Budget. All I am trying to do is to cut a little of the fat out of the New Deal agencies and cut some of the fat out of the Army and the Navy. I do not want to cut the Army and the Navy in such a way as to endanger in the least degree the security of the country.

Mr. LUCAS. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not want to make a cut that would have such an effect. We hear much said to the effect that a cut in a certain amount would reduce us to the level of Honduras or some fifth-rate country. Such talk is bunk, in view of the fact that it is proposed to appropriate nine or ten billion dollars for the armed services. When the Senator's party came into power in 1933 our country was spending about a billion dollars a year. Mr. Roosevelt and the Senator's party said that sum was too great, and they proposed to cut it by 25 percent, or down to $750,000,000. Yet now we are spending not two times that amount or three times that amount, but more than ten times that amount. And that was in the days of Hitler.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator and I were not here at that time. We did not know anything about 1933.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am glad the Senator can so readily take himself out from under what happened then.

Mr. LUCAS. No; I am not taking myself out from under anything. If the Senator from New Hampshire had been present this afternoon and heard my speech he would not say that.

Mr. BRIDGES. I was in a committee meeting. I am sorry I was not present. But I thought so highly of the Senator's speech that I went into the room of the official reporters and read the speech and made longhand notes from it.

Mr. MYERS. Was the committee meeting which the Senator attended a closed meeting or an open meeting?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from New Hampshire does me great honor when he looks over my remarks. I am glad I have impressed someone by my statement.

If I can impress the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, who is the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, I feel I have accomplished a great deal this afternoon.

I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. If he has in his office the fine break-down of the budget of which he speaks, why was it not submitted to the Senate?

Mr. BRIDGES. Because that is against the theory of the Reorganization Act. The Reorganization Act calls for an over-all ceiling. It does not call for prejudging the work of the Appropriations Committees of the Senate and the House. The respective committees have work to perform after long study and hearings. But we do provide as a top ceiling a framework within which the committees shall operate.

Mr. LUCAS. I will say in closing that the Senator did prejudge the work of the committees.

I want to thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for yielding to me, and I apologize to him for the great amount of time I have used.

Mr. MYERS. No, Mr. President; no apology is necessary. I have enjoyed the colloquy immensely. Mr. President, I said before, and I repeat, that every dollar spent by this Government in the forthcoming fiscal year should be justified to the Congress. The time to decide whether expenditures should be lower or greater than the President has recommended for specific purposes is after the facts have been presented in full. No facts have been presented in connection with the pending concurrent resolution. I understand there are no facts to present, that the joint committee neglected to try to find any.

The chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, who was vice chairman of the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget, has told us that he knows how $6,000,000,000 can be cut from the Budget, but, he adds, he is not going to tell us how it can be done. It is a big secret. It is as big a secret, apparently, as the atom bomb, and that was the best-kept weapon secret since the days Hannibal led his elephants across the Alps.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator's approach to this question is entirely wrong. If the work of the appropriating committees of the House and the Senate is to be prejudged, as well as the work on the floor of the Senate and the House, by the action of making a complete break-down at this point, we might as well entirely eliminate those committees.

Mr. MYERS. I think the way this committee operated, it might have been much better to eliminate it.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am talking about further work.

Mr. MYERS. I am talking about the joint committee. If it is to operate in the future as it operated this time, I think it would be much better to eliminate it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that in the future the committee will operate in correct fashion, just as previous joint committees have operated. The Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] will have an opportunity to vote on economy measures in the Senate. We are to have some record votes, to see how Members of the Senate really stand on specific economies. They will not be able to camouflage their opposition to a general reduction by patriotic speeches on behalf of the armed services.

Mr. MYERS. I do not characterize this as a patriotic speech.

Mr. President, I have said that the atomic bomb was the best kept secret since Hannibal led his elephants across the Alps.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MYERS. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

I do not know where the Senator from New Hampshire and his colleagues think they are leading the GOP elephant as a result of this highly secret maneuver, but I definitely suspect that it is not in the direction of victory in 1948.

I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator talks about the secret of the atomic bomb being the best-kept secret. I may say that I was one of the four Senators who had knowledge of the atomic bomb, and I helped to provide the money for it.

Mr. MYERS. Perhaps that is the difficulty. The Senator is learned in the ways of secrecy, and he wants to continue that policy.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Pennsylvania will have to admit that the Senator from New Hampshire did a pretty good job in that direction, and he will try to do an equally good job in the future in connection with anything entrusted to him.

Mr. MYERS. I congratulate the Senator on keeping the secret of the atomic bomb, just as I congratulate him on many of his votes in the dangerous days before Pearl Harbor, when he saw the danger. But now I disagree with him, and I cannot congratulate him on his present position.

Unlike the Romans who were surprised by Hannibal's elephants, the American people have seen the elephant in action before. They had hoped, I think, in voting Republican majorities in the Congress, that the GOP elephant had learned something during the past 16 years; but they will know, if this irresponsibly conceived resolution is pushed through, that the Republican Party has learned nothing, and that irresponsibility is still the keynote of that party's policy.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I shall state why I can not at this time, and on the basis of facts available to me, support a resolution for a $6,000,000,000 slash in the budget, or even one calling for a reduction of $4,500,000,000.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator speaks about irresponsibility. He has been in the Senate for some time. Previous to that he was in the House. He knows that his party, the New Deal party, was in power for a great many years. Can he think of any party that could ever be built up in America that could better typify the word "irresponsibility" than his own party, based upon its record during the past few years?

Mr. MYERS. The Senator should get a little flag and wave it as he makes that speech.

The Senator has referred to 1932 and 1933. If he wishes me to take him back and compare present-day America with the America of 1932 and 1933, I shall be glad to do it some day when we have more time. At present I should like to devote my time to the question of the Budget.

I have said that none of us, with the possible exception of the Senator from New Hampshire, knows how the reductions would be made. Unless I know, I cannot vote for a reduction which may threaten the very lives and property of thousands of Pennsylvania citizens, and the economy not only of my own State, but of the entire Nation.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does not the Senator from Pennsylvania feel that his quarrel is with the Reorganization Act, which he supported, rather than with the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MYERS. Not at all. I am in perfect accord with the Reorganization Act. I deny the Senator's premise that gentlemen can gather in smoke-filled back rooms, prepare a budget without any figures, and say to the Congress, "Take it or leave it; we will not explain it." That is particularly true when the minority party is not even admitted into the secret chambers. I am in wholehearted accord with the Reorganization Act, but I do not believe that the committee has followed its mandate.

Mr. BRIDGES. Under the Reorganization Act would the Senator present a complete break-down showing in detail where reductions are to be made?

Mr. MYERS. I would give as much information as I could; but the committee has given us no information.

Mr. BRIDGES. Would not that be prejudging the work of the Appropriations Committees?

Mr. MYERS. No. The Senator's committee has given us no information.

Mr. BRIDGES. I can tell the Senator very simply where the cuts will come. They will come within every single department of Government, down the line.

I am not making a charge against the Senator from Pennsylvania, because I like him and respect him. I have great affection for him. But I am saying that most of the opposition is not particularly aimed at the Army and Navy.

Mr. MYERS. No; I am coming to that point.

Mr. BRIDGES. It is aimed at other things.

Mr. MYERS. A portion of it is.

Mr. BRIDGES. The other day it was reported to me that the great Secretary of the Interior was quoted as having said, "The boys on the Hill will not dare to cut my appropriation, because I can put too much pressure on them." That is the kind of arrogant bureaucracy we have in Washington, and that is why we must take steps in the direction in which we are going.

Mr. MYERS. I am coming to the other departments of government. Others have spoken of the armed forces.

All the discussion so far vouchsafed on this resolution by the majority party leadership has been restricted almost entirely to the contention that a $6,000,000,000 cut will not jeopardize our military security. There is so much doubt on this score among very prominent members of the majority party here that we are now being told that a four-and-one-half billion dollar cut is advisable in order to protect our military security. There has been absolutely no discussion about what happens under either reduction to the normal functions of government and to all the programs of government which the Congress has time after time approved and which the Republican Party, as such, time after time in recent political campaigns, and especially in the 1944 campaign and in last year's campaign, pledged itself to continue.

No one, leastwise the able Senator from New Hampshire, has dared—I use the word advisably—dared, I say, to tell us what happens to flood control, rivers and harbors, the farm price support program, which this Congress pledged itself to continue for 2 years after the war, the school-lunch program, the Federal-aid highways and airports program, veterans' housing, rent control, the taking of various censuses, including a business census so desired by many manufacturers, our mine-safety program, the conservation of natural resources, the development of atomic energy for peacetime purposes, the improvement of air safety equipment, testing, development, and research in many of the departments, including the Agriculture and Interior Departments, the prosecution of antitrust violations, the expansion of our instruments for foreign relations, our participation in the United Nations and our obligations under that participation, and so on, encompassing the myriad necessary functions of government. No one, I say, has told us what happens to these programs if the legislative budget here presented is adopted and obeyed.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. The reason for that is that all the departmental heads will have an opportunity to appear before the committee to present their case, and if their case is good enough their requests will be acted on favorably within the framework we establish in this legislative budget.

Mr. MYERS. Within the reduction of $4,500,000,000 or $6,000,000,000?

Mr. BRIDGES. Whichever is adopted. Within that framework we will make the cut and do it on its merits after we hear the evidence.

Mr. MYERS. I think it should have been done on its merits and the committee should have had the evidence before it established this mysterious figure.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I shall have to hurry on.

Mr. BRIDGES. I hope the Senator does not mind yielding for a moment. The Reorganization Act was passed last year. Congress convened on the 3d of January. The deadline was on February 15. The new committee set-up was not established until sometime after Congress convened. It was not a matter of weeks or months, but it was actually a matter of days that this joint committee had to work to establish the legislative budget. If it had gone into all the details, if it had heard everyone who wanted to testify, it would not have completed its work until perhaps next July. Believing that under the law we had to make a report on February 15, we did the best we could, and in my judgment we did a good job. We did it with work sheets before us showing a complete break-down. I differ with the Senator with respect to the obligation to present the break-down to the Senate. I think that would be a violation of the spirit of the law.

Mr. MYERS. In the absence of any indications to the contrary, I am afraid it would doom every flood-control project now under construction or in the planning stage. In my State, this means dooming the lives of perhaps hundreds of people in areas such as Williamsport, McKees Rocks, Punxsutawney, and other parts of Pennsylvania where floods have been periodic sources of real and sudden tragedy and where the homes and businesses and jobs of thousands have been wiped out by one quick, irresistible surge of water terrifying to behold and terrifying to experience. Are we voting to kill off these people and their jobs? The Senator from New Hampshire, by refusing to tell us how these reductions would be made should this Budget proposal prevail, leaves me no choice but to decide that should we agree to a cut such as has been proposed here, flood control definitely would not continue, even at the reduced pace which has marked progress in this necessary field in the past year.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. At what time does the Senator think we could get this legislative budget through, and how much work does he think we would have to do in the Senate, if the committee had reported that the Hungry Horse Dam in Montana was to be eliminated, and the So-and-So Dam——

Mr. MYERS. It could have been shown how much money was to be allotted for flood control in the Nation and how much was to be allotted for various agencies in the United States. I do not think it was necessary to specify the dams and river projects, but the committee could have said, "We are going to cut, and we believe that the Appropriations Committee could well cut flood control by a certain amount." But that was not done.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr OVERTON. About the only thing which is really definite in the report made by the Committee on the Legislative Budget is with reference to public works, which include flood control, in which the Senator very justly manifests so great an interest.

Mr MYERS. I am coming to that in my remarks.

Mr. OVERTON. I should like to refer to it now, even in anticipation of what the Senator intends to say.

Mr. MYERS. I am happy to yield for that purpose.

Mr. OVERTON. The report makes "boondoggling" of all public works, including flood control. Public works are to be deferred until unemployment again stalks the land, as it did during and after the Hoover administration.

The report provides for—

The deferment, other than planning, of public works projects—

That is all public works projects—

wherever this might be accomplished without substantial deterioration—

That is, deterioration of works then in existence, not new works—so that the benefit of such projects might be utilized in any subsequent period of unemployment.

That is mere "boondoggling," so far as public works projects are concerned.

The committee wants to emphasize it. The next paragraph, numbered 7, says:

The deferment, other than planning, of newly authorized public works projects, and their retention on the shelf for utilization in a period of unemployment unless such projects were esteemed vitally necessary.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish to ask the Senator from Louisiana if he does not think that is very sound policy?

Mr. OVERTON. No; I do not.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator and I differ. I am sorry that there is that difference of opinion. I cannot think of a sounder plan than that.

Mr. OVERTON. If the able Senator from New Hampshire considers this to be a sound plan, then I have lost the confidence which I have always entertained in his good judgment.

Consider the western irrigation and reclamation projects. They add to the wealth of the Nation; and when they add to the wealth of the Nation they add to national income, and the Federal Government receives greater revenue from income taxes on that account. Is it wise statesmanship to permit floods to sweep down the Ohio and cause disaster in Pennsylvania, and permit them to sweep down the lower Mississippi Valley and destroy crops, property, and lives, and defer work that will protect human life and save property until unemployment stalks once more through the land?

Mr. BRIDGES. Did not the Senator read that the committee recommended that vital projects be continued; and would not the terrible things to which the Senator refers come under the definition of "vital"? I agree with the Senator much more often than I disagree with him, but I think that he has not properly interpreted the report.

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly the lower Mississippi Valley is a vital project.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not want to go into that subject.

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly flood control on the Ohio is a vital project.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, as has been said by the Senator from Louisiana, in the cursory report issued by the majority members of the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget, the members say flatly that in arriving at an expenditure figure for the fiscal year the committee—that, is the majority members of the committee—had in mind certain considerations; included among which was—and these are the words of the report itself:

(6) The deferment, other than planning, of public works projects wherever this might be accomplished without substantial deterioration so that the benefit of such projects might be utilized in any subsequent period of unemployment.

(7) The deferment, other than planning, of newly authorized public works projects and their retention on the shelf for utilization in a period of unemployment unless such projects were esteemed vitally necessary.

Before I vote for any budget based on such a proviso, I want to know what it means to Williamsport, Pa., to Punxsutawney, to Pittsburgh and the whole Pittsburgh area, to Latrobe and Elk County, to the Wilkes-Barre area, to Sunbury, and to all the other communities in Pennsylvania which have flood-control projects now under way or in the planning stage, or projects which have been authorized by Congress.

These projects are all esteemed by the people in those districts and are esteemed by me, I may say, to be vitally necessary. But, Mr. President, that is no assurance that they could ever be undertaken under this program; for, in words made famous by another Member of Congress from Pennsylvania, I should like to know, should this budget be adopted: Where are you going to get the money?

We have the word of the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, as cited in the minority report filed by the distinguished minority leader, Mr. BARKLEY, that the proposed $6,000,000,000 Budget cut contemplates a reduction of one and three-quarter billion dollars in the military appropriations for the armed services and then about one-half billion dollars from such civil functions of the military as flood-control and similar work.

Mr. President, that is enough for me to know in order to hold this resolution suspect. The entire Budget for the flood-control program for next year, as proposed by President Truman, is far less than $200,000,000. How, then, if we cut $500,000,000 from Army civil functions will any flood control projects receive funds?

Again, Mr. President, we do not know. The majority members of the joint committee—those who profess to know—have no intention of telling us or the people of this country where the money and the cuts are to come from.

Will it come out of veterans benefits? We do not know. We do know it cannot and it will not come out of sums set aside to meet interest on the national debt—interest amounting to $5,000,000,000 a year. The veterans' program will take $7,000,000,000, an amount which is more than an estimate, for it is a sacred obligation and one which we cannot repudiate. Is there any Member of the Senate, Mr. President, who would vote for this Budget slash, knowing it was to come out of obligations we have solemnly pledged to the veterans of our wars?

Another obligation which is unavoidable and unassailable is one for approximately $2,000,000,000 in tax refunds. The people are entitled to their tax refunds; we would have as much right to deny them this money as we would have to repudiate the payment of war bonds.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, although I should like to hurry on.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Pennsylvania has been very generous in yielding, and I shall not impose on his time; but in connection with the item of $2,000,000,000 in tax refunds, which the Senator has mentioned, let me point out that the Senator has been rather generous in referring to guesses or estimates, and I should like to know how the Senator supposes the figure of $2,000,000,000 for tax refunds was arrived at.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I have taken the word of the minority leader that he or the minority members of the committee secured the information, because it is information which certainly should be obtainable, and I do not doubt at all that before the minority members signed the report they went to the proper source for that information.

Mr. BRIDGES. Of course, that figure is merely an estimate.

Mr. MYERS. But it is an estimate based on something. On the other hand, the majority have given us nothing to substantiate their estimate. Many Members of the Senate on the majority side of the aisle have said that the figure is nothing but a hope and a guess.

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly it is an intelligent guess.

From a common-sense viewpoint, will not the Senator from Pennsylvania admit that the expenditures of the Government should be reduced?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly I will. I say so definitely, and I have said it a dozen times.

Mr. BRIDGES. Then, why is not the Senator from Pennsylvania willing to vote for an over-all ceiling, reducing expenditures?

Mr. MYERS. I shall not vote for it, because I do not know what is proposed, and I wish to know.

Mr. BRIDGES. From a common-sense viewpoint, the Senator from Pennsylvania knows that Government expenditures should be cut substantially.

Mr. MYERS. But all the information should be made available to the minority members of the committee. This is the first time in my short experience in the Senate or in my 6 years of service in the House of Representatives that the majority members of a committee have gathered in secret session, behind closed doors, and have not even told other members of the committee what they are doing—not even daring to tell them, and frankly admitting that "We do not intend to tell you." That is not good business, it is not good legislation, it is not good government. Certainly when we were in the majority, we never acted that way, in my experience, in any committee.

Mr. BRIDGES. That is correct; because when you were in the majority, you never tried to cut expenditures.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the Senator knows that is not true.

Mr. BRIDGES. Oh, yes; it is perfectly true.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator knows that time after time the committee cut the Budget as submitted by the President. Let us be fair.

Now, Mr. President, let me continue my remarks.

The British loan and other international obligations amount to more than $3,000,000,000 in the next fiscal year. I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire will deny that. Do we renege? Can we afford to? Do we dare? We have heard so much in recent months about our bipartisan foreign policy. Are we to see that bipartisanship, to the extent it now exists, destroyed by a Republican repudiation of obligations made by a Democratic administration, made by that administration with the active support and assistance of Republicans such as our esteemed President pro tempore, who is regarded as the spokesman for his party on foreign affairs? Well, are we? Now is the time to know, if we are.

In any event, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] pointed out in his incisive minority report on this budget proposal, the irreducible items in our budget, such as those I have just listed, aggregate more than $20,000,000,000. There is no doubt that the Congress can pare here and economize there to reduce some of these individual items, but not much.

That leaves, then, approximately $17,000,000,000, altogether, subject to real and substantial budget slashing. Cut it by six billions, Mr. President, and as the Senator from Kentucky pointed out, we have eleven billions altogether for national defense and for all the other current, customary, necessary functions of Federal Government.

Yet the armed services alone maintain they need $11,000,000,000 for national defense, and many prominent Republicans contend that in the absence of proof to the contrary they must assume that armed services' estimates are approximately correct. That, then, leaves for the purpose of running our Federal Government exactly zero—nothing, Mr. President.

Before the Army and Navy get a dime, I want them to prove they need it, and prove it to the satisfaction of the Congress. But similarly, before the Army and Navy are cut a dime, I want them to have a chance to defend their requirements fairly, and I think most Members of Congress want to be convinced that the economizing can be done without economizing ourselves into disaster.

Right now I am receiving hundreds of letters on this issue of Government spending and the budget, and I suppose other Senators are, too. Generally, they run to a pattern: Cut the budget with a hatchet; cut it six billion or eight billion, or some other number of billions.

I say, certainly, let us cut that budget to pieces, when we know what we are cutting and where we are cutting.

I have received a letter from a lady in Oil City, Pa., urging a $6,000,000,000 cut because, she says:

It is my understanding that such a cut can be made without impairing our Army and Navy program.

Perhaps so. But I would appreciate it if this lady and others who have written me in similar vein would give me some of the facts as to the places where this $6,000,000,000 cut could be made without impairing the Army and Navy. Normally, one would expect the members of the joint committee making this report to give us those facts. Alas, it is a secret, Mr. President; and they will not tell.

Therefore, rather than take the word of a few Members of the Senate and a few Members of the House that it can be done, I would like to be shown.

And so, to the good lady in Oil City I must say that much as I should like to, I cannot do what she asks because, although I am a United States Senator, I find myself unable to obtain the information which she seems to possess, indicating we can have our Army and Navy, in the size we need, and run all the rest of the functions of Government, and do all this out of $11,000,000,000, which would be the total amount available for both purposes—for military purposes and for all the other normal functions of government, should this cut go through—and which also represents what the Army and Navy say they need exclusively for themselves.

I have a telegram from a gentleman in Philadelphia who urges a budget cut of $6,000,000,000 on the basis, as he puts it, of "Budget Committee assurance that national defense will not be impaired."

He has that assurance from the Budget Committee. Unfortunately, there is nothing in the Budget Committee's report or in its approach to the problem to give me any such assurance, and I feel sure the rest of the Members of the Senate similarly lack such assurance.

A couple in a small Pennsylvania community also wrote me urging a Federal budget, not of $31,500,000,000 but, if you will, of $25,000,000,000. However, they coupled their request for steep budget slashes with another: they say that while they want the budget cut so steeply, they do not want it to affect the old-age assistance or the blind pension.

That is one for the distinguished majority members of the Budget Committee to figure out; I am sure I cannot do it.

I have a card here from a constituent in Easton who asks for a budget cut of at least $8,000,000,000. That is another good round figure and as feasible, I believe, as the $6,000,000,000 cut. If we are going to do away with all the things I have listed: agricultural benefits, school lunches, flood control, our highways program, mine safety investigation, and all the other assorted expensive or inexpensive functions of Government, then we might just as well do away with the Army and the Navy, and devote our entire budget to pure research in how to create a perfect vacuum. Then we can live in it.

On the other hand, I have received a different type of letter. I have received many communications such as this one from Scranton:

DEAR SIR: I think the budget should be cut severely and our Government put on a sound, economical basis. Will you please use your influence toward that effect?

Sincerely yours,

_____.

To the lady who wrote that, I can say in all honesty and conviction: Yes; I think the budget should be cut severely, wherever it can be cut without endangering us all, and I shall gladly use my influence toward putting our Government on a sound, economical basis. Then I should like to have the Joint Committee on the Budget to help me do that by making a thoroughgoing investigation into the budget and the Government's needs and then telling us, in detail, how it thinks expenditures can be cut and where and by how much.

A nurse in Philadelphia wrote me and asked that I "use the power vested" in me "to see that the Federal budget is cut to the very utmost; that careful study and investigation be made of that budget so that all the padding and unnecessary items be eliminated." To that I say, "Amen." I say that young lady has a far more intelligent approach to this problem than the joint committee of Congress set up to consider it.

There have been many copies sent me, too, of another type of letter, and here again, I think, the people of this country demonstrate much more foresight than has been shown by the joint committee. A gentleman in West Chester, Pa., writes:

I am in entire sympathy with the program of the Republican Party to cut expenditures and to balance the budget. I cannot agree with the proposal that expenditures for national defense should be reduced approximately $1,500,000,000. To do so will jeopardize our position in international affairs and our present Military Establishment has been reduced to a point where our national safety is at stake. My purpose in writing you is to request your support for a budget reduction of not more than $4,500,000,000 and a complete restoration of the budget recommended by the President for the armed forces.

In similar vein, a Pittsburgh veteran of 4½ years continuous service urges me to vote against any budget cut relating to our national security. Says he:

Must we again start the vicious cycle of unpreparedness and sucker punches? We will continue to have Pearl Harbors if we follow the doddering old system of tearing down our best barrier against attack, and those barriers are the world's best Army and Navy.

He wrote me about seeing the sunken hulks at Pearl Harbor, and added:

I pray I do not have to go through it again, but I'll be damned if a few short-sighted politicians will cause me to see it again. Let's wise up. Vote against any cuts in defense budget. * * * The best way to preserve peace is to have strength enough to discourage attack against us.

This gentleman confides that in his opinion those who propose cuts in our defense budget would be the first to howl, as he states it, if any power were to pounce upon us.

To this gentleman I cannot give the complete assurance he asks. He asks that I vote against any reduction in the military budget estimates. To pledge that here and now would be as improper, I believe, as to go to the opposite extreme and pledge deep cuts without knowing what effect they would have. When the facts on military needs are presented to Congress in detail, then, only then, can I determine whether I will comply with this veteran's wish and vote against any cuts or whether I will let the facts dictate to me those cuts I can in good conscience support. Undoubtedly, in any budget of such size and scope we can find sizable savings. But I want to see them before I vote to make them.

There was another type of communication I received on the budget which to some extent flabbergasted me. I shall read one:

This organization strongly favors $6,000,000,000 budget reduction recommended by Joint Congressional Budget Committee and urges your support.

It comes from the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce.

The Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce is a very alert, active organization. Whenever anything affecting Pittsburgh's existence, her future, or her economy is before the Congress, this alert organization is right down here enlisting support—my support, along with the support of other Pennsylvanians. I am glad to give this organization all the support I can on matters affecting the city and the city's future.

Whether the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce realizes it, however, Pittsburgh's existence, her future, is bound up in this proposal for a six billion cut in the Budget. I am convinced there will be no money for the Conemaugh River flood-control reservoir in any budget which has been reduced six billion or even four and one-half billion under the estimates submitted to Congress by President Truman. I should think that would be obvious to any organization much less alert than the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce. And yet, I have in my hand the telegram from which I have just read.

It is only a year or so since the Pittsburgh Chamber was down here in alert self-interest for its city's future clamoring for $5,000,000 to get that reservoir under way. It is now under way, thanks to the action of the Senate in adding the funds to an appropriation bill after the bill had passed the House without the money. Since then, this reservoir has been a top priority interest of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce.

It may be the chamber has information which I, as a Senator, find denied to me, but frankly, Mr. President, I have no reason to believe that reservoir can be constructed under a budget such as has been suggested here. And without knowing how the Conemaugh Reservoir, and the Punxsutawney dikes, and the Williamsport dikes, and the mine-safety program, and the price-support program for agriculture, and the many, many, other Federal functions so important to my State are to fare under this suggested budget, I cannot possibly support it.

I was utterly amazed to read that the Pennsylvania Republican delegation in Congress had decided to support this six-billion cut without knowing the answers to these questions which bother me so seriously.

Have they had enough of flood control? Of rivers and harbors improvements—a term which was used so glibly in the last campaign? Have they had enough of soil conservation and forest management and mine safety and weather bureau forecasts and highway aid and public works advance planning funds, and all the other Federal functions which are of such vital importance to my State and to all the other States?

In similar vein to the telegram from the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce was one I received from the Bethlehem Chamber of Commerce. Bethlehem, like Pittsburgh, has a serious flood-control problem; Bethlehem, like Pittsburgh, has an extensive flood-control program.

Have they had enough of those programs? Do they not want them any more? Were this $6,000,000,000 cut to go through, or even a lesser cut, which left the military needs of the armed services untouched—a $4,500,000,000 cut, say—there would be, so far as I can foresee, no flood control for Pittsburgh or Bethlehem.

I know from personal study that the funds recommended by Presdent Truman for flood control and rivers and harbors work in the Nation in the next fiscal year will not begin to meet what I consider to be the need. The President has asked for $188,000,000—millions of dollars that is, not billions—for flood control, which would barely keep going the projects now under construction, and provide some funds for planning and for preliminary construction on some of the projects for which initial funds were just recently appropriated—projects in areas devastated in the past few years by rampaging floodwaters and subject to repeat tragedies in the foreseeable future if these projects are not built.

These projects, those in Pennsylvania, for instance, of which I have personal knowledge, are not pork, they are not extravagance, they are not governmental waste, they are not bureaucratic boondoggling. To my mind, they are not deferrable. If anyone thinks the Conemaugh Reservoir is boondoggling, or waste, or extravagance, or deferrable, he should ask the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, the same organization which seems to think it wants this budget cut to go through. If there is any disposition to think a proposed reservoir in Elk County, Pa., is wasteful extravagance, the doubters should talk to the good folks of Johnsonburg, Pa., who got swept out of any doubts they themselves once might have had by the rampaging East Branch of the Clarion River one day in 1942. Williamsport, with a diking project recently renewed after wartime lapses, was inundated as recently as last spring. I think they think these dikes are rather important. I know they think so.

Am I, Mr. President, expected to vote blindly for a blind arbitrary cut in the budget, without knowing how these towns and their projects are to be affected? Although the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce believes I should, I am afraid I cannot.

If I had not considered these projects, and the other functions of Government menaced by this cut, to be essential to our economy and to our poeple, I would not have voted for them in the first place. Neither, I am sure, would the other Members of the Congress. To reverse the will of Congress on these functions and on these needs by the simple means of refusing appropriations for them is, to my mind, the height of legislative dishonesty.

If the Republican Party means to repeal the flood-control program innovated by a Democratic Congress only 11 years ago, let it do it directly by legislation and not indirectly by fiscal subterfuge. Is the school-lunch program to go? Then repeal it, and follow the same course with regard to protection for agriculture and all the other matters I have mentioned. They should go only after careful study.

Mr. President, there has been much talk on the part of some of the Republican leaders to the effect that this proposed legislative budget actually means nothing, that it is merely—and I repeat—a pious hope; that it leaves the Congress free to decide on individual appropriations without being bound in any way by the adoption of this ceiling on expenditures.

To adopt this resolution on that basis would be sheer hokum, an attempt to deceive the earnest citizens now clamoring for lower governmental expenditures into thinking that it means something, while, out of the other side of our mouths, telling those who know the real needs of our Government that it does not mean a thing and not to worry.

I say such an approach is a flagrant violation of the spirit and the letter of the Reorganization Act. That act contemplates this budget should mean something; that it should set a definite ceiling on expenditures.

I firmly believe that, despite the protestations of some Republican leaders who want to eat their cake and have it, too; who want to stand now for economy but later feel free to boost any appropriations they favor regardless of the ceiling; that this Budget, once adopted, will, in fact, mean something.

One of the Members of the other House most able to do something about enforcing this ceiling, once adopted, the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, has stated flatly—and it is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for us all to read—that he will feel himself bound by this budget and will do all in his power to fit appropriations to it. He can have a lot to say about what the bills look like when they come here and when they come back again from conference. I warn now, Mr. President, that we are not voting on something which means nothing. And if we are, we should be roundly ashamed of ourselves.

No, Mr. President, I cannot vote to cripple flood control, soil conservation, and all the other Federal programs which we all know mean so much to the people of this Nation—programs we would not dare oppose.

I will not vote blindly and unknowingly to cripple our Army and our Navy or to sabotage and scuttle our program for real international cooperation for enduring peace. The price is too high, and the risk too great.

On the other hand, I do not want to be identified as one who blindly upholds any and all requests for governmental expenditures without knowing whether they are justified or not.

In short, Mr. President, I do not know and I have been unable to learn from the joint committee, whether the budget cut here proposed is practical or not, reasonable or not, proper or not. And so it has taken me long today to say what a young veteran from Pittsburgh in a letter to me put in very concise terms. This is what he said:

As a citizen of the United States, I am highly interested in efficiency and economy in government. But as a responsible citizen, I want no part of an economy achieved by sacrificing our national defense, by undermining the prestige of the United States, by welshing on guaranties given to other peace-loving nations, by breaking faith with those of us who served in World War II, particularly those who didn't come back, and by passing on to future generations the tremendous cost in blood and treasure which may be the consequence of a penny-wise, pound-foolish policy.

I further unqualifiedly condemn the attainment of such false economy when it is carried out, not for the sake of economy alone, but in fulfillment of an ill-considered promise of a political campaign.

Therefore, Mr. President, I cannot support the concurrent resolution.

I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in my remarks certain editorials and news articles.

There being no objection, the editorials and articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh Press of February 15, 1947]

NEW VETERANS' HOSPITAL

The decision to build a 1,248-bed veterans' hospital in the Pittsburgh medical center, despite the underlying mine tunnels which will make the foundation work expensive, is an important victory for Pittsburgh and for the veterans who will use the hospital.

Pittsburgh will benefit through the building and maintenance of this multimillion-dollar project and by the expansion of its medical center.

Much more important, however, is the benefit to the veterans. They will get better care through the interchange of ideas and facilities that will be possible in the medical center.

All too often, in the past, veterans' hospitals have been located in isolated spots, far from patients' homes and from centers of medical knowledge.

The medical staffs were on their own. Very often, competent physicians hesitated to take positions in such institutions because of their isolation and the lack of contact with medical-research activities.

Political considerations, rather than medical, dictated the choice of the sites. Bumpkin Crossroads hadn't benefited from any Government spending to speak of, so—give it a veterans' hospital.

Since Gen. Omar N. Bradley has been Veterans' Administrator, he has fought this tendency. He wants to locate as many veterans' hospitals as possible in or near medical centers.

He had a difficult decision to make on the Pittsburgh site. There's no doubt that the abandoned mines underneath will make the cost of construction high. But the proximity to the medical center apparently outweighed this disadvantage in his mind.

POUND FOOLISH

The United States learned its lesson after World War I, we have been told by Mr. Byrnes, Mr. VANDENBERG, and others, and this time we won't disarm alone.

That sounded very reassuring, until Congress got hold of President Truman's budget.

There is more than one way to disarm. One way is to sink warships and junk B–29's. Another is for Congress to fail to provide the armed services with funds sufficient to do their jobs.

We haven't sunk our warships, yet. But President Truman's 1948 budget, calling for an appropriation of $11,200,000,000 for defense activities, has gone under the ax of the Joint Congressional Committee on the Budget.

Included in a $6,000,000,000 budget slash, recommended by the committee, is a cut of $1,750,000,000 in Army and Navy operating funds

It would be interesting to know how the committee arrived at the figure for reducing defense expenditures. A minority of 19 House Democrats reports that the committee's budget decision came like "a court rendering a verdict without evidence."

The committee held only three meetings and heard only two witnesses, say the dissidents. Moreover, no itemized estimates of the proposed major reductions had been made available.

Could it be that the committee, keeping a sharp eye on the Republican pledge to reduce income taxes by 20 percent, cut the budget, including military appropriations, on a convenient percentage basis without regard to evidence?

Before a final decision is reached on a budget ceiling, Congress must be made aware of the dangers inherent in weakening national defense at this precarious juncture in world affairs.

The dangers have been pointed out by Secretary of War Patterson and Secretary of the Navy Forrestal.

"No one picks a fight with Joe Louis," said Mr. Patterson. He also recalled that General MacArthur, facing a food crisis in Japan a year ago, appealed to Washington to "Send me food or send me soldiers."

This country's military obligations do not stop with the maintenance of armed forces.

If we are to retain leadership in an atomic age, we must remain active in military research, in which to be penny wise and pound foolish could easily prove fatal.

If we are to avoid trouble in countries where we are controlling 100 million persons with fewer than 500,000 troops, we must keep the people of these countries fed, and do what we can to put them on a self-sustaining basis.

To fail in these tasks is to invite trouble far more costly than the amounts we are asked to spend now. It is practical economy to give the War and Navy Departments what the generals and admirals say they need. The word of high brass is not Holy Writ, but certainly military leaders know more about the situation than Congressmen so intent upon reducing taxes that they fail to hear more than two witnesses in a budget study.

We favor economies by Congress. But we earnestly hope that the advocates of moderation, like MILLIKIN, TAFT, and VANDENBERG, will show the way to budget reductions that won't be made at the expense of national security.

WASHINGTON CALLING — BACK-TO-NORMAL BUDGET TALK IS DANGEROUS AT THIS TIME

(By Marquis Childs)

WASHINGTON, February 17.—In the dispute over how much the Federal Government shall spend next year, neither side has talked about how the cutting is to be done. If you use a scalpel with patience, skill, and intelligence, you get one result. Using an ax, you get quite a different result.

Impetuous economizers of the type of Chairman JOHN TABER, of the House Appropriations Committee, are brandishing the ax. They are ready to hack away no matter what the consequences to the Government of America's position before the world.

Vital in the budget dispute are the eleven billions requested by the Army and Navy. Those who know the operation of government from long experience believe that with patience and persistence these requests might be trimmed without doing damage to either service.

But no one shows any sign of using patience and persistence. The arbitrary use of an ax will inevitably do great damage. That is why responsible Republicans, such as Senator GURNEY and Senator VANDENBERG, are determined to prevent a flat reduction in the appropriation for defense. They will have a hard fight, particularly when it comes to standing up to the Republican steamroller in the House.

There is a special sanctity about the eleven billions for defense. Even the ax-wielders pause when they realize that to slash the defense budget may radically alter the precarious balance now prevailing in world affairs.

But no such sanctity hangs over the items in the budget that cover the normal expenditures for our Government. And to use an ax instead of a scalpel can be nearly as disastrous when it comes to the regular functions of Government.

Representative CLARENCE J. BROWN, of Ohio, one of the most influential Republicans in the House, went back to his native State not long ago and made a rousing, old-fashioned economy speech. He compared appropriations for Government departments in 1939 with the requests made by the Truman administration for the fiscal year 1948.

This was an easy exercise in vote-getting aimed at 1948. It conveniently ignores two monumental facts. Fact No. 1 is that we are only just slowly emerging from the greatest upheaval in this history of the poor, battered, old human race. As a part of that upheaval, we are witnessing the liquidation of the British Empire.

That means the end of 150 years of order-keeping in the world. It means a political and military vacuum that will not long remain a vacuum. To shut our eyes to what is happening across the seas is to invite final disaster.

Fact No. 2 is our economic and technological supremacy over every other nation. Power also means responsibility. If we shirk responsibility, we shall certainly lose the power.

The ax wielders seem determined to close their eyes to these facts. They act as though nothing had happened between 1941 and 1946.

You get little idea from the political debate of how important and how delicate is this matter of the budget. If the slashes are too deep, they may contribute to the deflation that has set in as an inevitable reaction to the inflation of 1946. What is essential—absolutely essential—is to maintain the national income at a level of $150,000,000,000 a year. Should we fall substantially below that level, any hope of balancing the budget would be out the window. We should then face a struggle to meet the $5,000,000,000 of debt service and keep afloat some $80,000,000,000 of short-term indebtedness.

Talking about "back to normal" at this point is dangerous moonshine. Next year's budget will be nearer to normal. Some six to eight billions, connected in this year's budget with the termination of the war, will be eliminated.

When the economy-back-to-normal drive is questioned, the old-line Republican says: "Don't you know the people voted out the New Deal and all that spending on November 5?"

In part, at least, that is true. There was a revolt last November against something known vaguely as the New Deal. But one thing is certain. The voters on November 5 did not vote for a return to the Old Deal of pre-1933. Republicans who think they did may be badly fooled in 1948.

MIKE MONRONEY HAS MISGIVINGS ABOUT SNIPING AT REORGANIZATION

(By Charles T. Lucey)

Representative MIKE MONRONEY, Democrat, of Oklahoma, the man who, with ex-Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin, had most to do with the Congressional Reorganization Act passed last year, has serious misgivings about the way its success is being jeopardized.

When Messrs. MONRONEY and La Follette fought reorganization through to acceptance last year, the reform was acclaimed as one of the longest steps forward in years. Overlapping committees were consolidated, a means of providing a better legislative check on national spending was provided, congressional pay was raised, and better staffs provided.

THREE DANGERS

But as Representative MONRONEY sees it, three chief dangers to the effectiveness of reorganization have arisen.

First, he fears that Congress may not bring in a "responsible, well considered Budget that Congress itself can live within this next year." Some Congressmen, he points out, are saying the Federal spending ceiling to be set by the new Joint Legislative Budget Committee is only a "hope."

This Mr. MONRONEY denies. If the real intent of the act is to be observed, he says the outside budget figure to be set should be "reliable and responsible," and not something Congress can take or leave alone later. He says he fears the budget ceiling will be fixed so low it cannot possibly be observed in subsequent appropriations bills, and that because of this an attempt may be made to discredit the machinery provided in the new law.

Second, he opposes closed hearings of the Appropriations and Ways and Means Committees. He points out that 90 percent of legislation takes form in committees—before it ever reaches the House floor. The Reorganization Act provided open hearings but left committees with discretion to keep them closed for discussion of properly confidential information. The Republicans have stretched the provision to cover nearly all discussion.

"I THINK IT'S VICIOUS"

The Ways and Means Committee, Representative MONRONEY pointed out, announced it would hold closed hearings on the subject of tax revision, with representatives of the Treasury and Internal Revenue Bureau to testify. Presumably it would tee off on the proposal of Representative HAROLD KNUTSON, Republican, of Minnesota, its chairman, for a 20 percent across-the-board cut.

'I think it's vicious to act in closed hearings on one of the biggest issues to be before the Congress this year," said Mr. MONRONEY.

A third point on which the Congressman sees a departure from the intent of the reorganization law concerns committee staffing.

"There has been too much of a tendency," he said, "to bring in relatively unimportant clerical help rather than to obtain competent expert assistance that was contemplated in the reorganization plan."

Most of the opposition to the Reorganization Act has been below the top leadership level. Speaker JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Republican, of Massachusetts, has insisted that the La Follette-Monroney Act should be given a thorough trial before any move is made to change it. But there are many antireorganization snipers among both Republicans and Democrats.

"Nibbling at the act can do a lot of damage," Representative MONRONEY says.

On the budget question, Representative MONRONEY's belief is that the $31,000,000,000 set by the Joint Legislative Committee—$6,500,000,000 under the budget proposed by President Truman—is impossible of fulfillment. Many Republicans agree.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, in considering the pending concurrent resolution and the amendment, and in voting upon them, there are two things which it seems to me we all have in mind. The first is national solvency The people of the United States should not be required to support an expenditure of thirty-seven and a half billion dollars on the part of the Federal Government at this time. The burden of the taxes which must be imposed to support this tremendous expenditure is a load that the American people cannot and will not continue to carry.

The second is the matter of national security, national security in an unsettled, unstable world.

The proposed appropriations in the executive budget deal with three general classifications: The normal civilian peacetime agencies and services of the Government; national security; and fixed obligations. The third general classification is made up of debt service and such other fixed obligations as veterans' benefits. These cannot now be changed.

It is in the first two classifications that reductions could be made. It does not seem to me that the people want the ax of economy applied indiscriminately or equally in these first two broad fields, that is, in the field of general Government services and in the field of national security. While I am hopeful and believe that it may ultimately be possible to accomplish an over-all reduction of $6,000,000,000 in these portions of the budget it would seem that in making any reductions we must first concern ourselves with the recommendations for normal civilian peacetime agencies and services. Is there any sound reason why these could not be reduced to substantially what they were in the last peacetime year before the war—in the Budget for 1941? We could add to these items percentages representing increased costs and yet fall well within an adequate appropriation for all these agencies and services that we now find necessary. Even then, their cost would be far under the estimates and recommendations proposed for the same agencies and services in the President's budget. In other words, we can disregard in the executive budget the proposed appropriations for the national defense, and the estimated expenditures for veterans' services and benefits, interest on the debt, commitments for the United Nations, foreign loans and rehabilitation, and other already fixed obligations, and still find that the proposed expenditures for the remaining services and agencies of the Government—those I refer to as the normal civilian peacetime Government agencies and services—are approaching twice what their costs were in 1941.

Whether we set the figure at $6,000,000,000 or $4,500,000,000, we should first make reductions in that part of the budget that could not directly affect our national security or our obligations on the public debt or veterans' benefits and services, or foreign loans or the United Nations. If we were to set the figure at $4,500,000,000, there is an excellent prospect that we could accomplish at least that and probably more, too. We could then approach the question of waste and extravagance in the armed services. I have no doubt that substantial savings could and should be made there. But I firmly believe that we must not seek economies that might prove false economies. We must not now hastily risk the possibility of weakening our strength to preserve peace. If we set the figure of reduction too high and then, in order to achieve it, make cuts and slashes indiscriminately, we may find that we have seriously endangered our national security by making cuts in the armed services that our national security cannot endure.

It would seem far wiser now to recall the lessons we should have learned in the past, where relations with other nations were concerned, and be sure now that we do not make impossible adequate preparation for whatever the future may hold in store.

The fact that nearly 80 percent of the budget we are now considering is made up of items the cost of which is directly attributable to recent world wars should force us to pause and appreciate that we cannot afford, even from the financial viewpoint, to risk an action that could leave us insufficiently prepared to preserve peace.

This does not mean that we cannot make a drastic cut in the budget. I believe a reduction of $4,500,000,000, as suggested, can be effected without endangering our security, or crippling expected Government functions.

The amendment does not imply any weakening of our avowed determination to seek out waste and extravagance in every requested appropriation. It does not imply that we will grant any appropriation having in it provision for unneeded or useless governmental activity. It does not imply that our interest in debt reduction and tax reduction—both vital to our economy—has diminished in the slightest.

The amendment not only makes clear our determination to observe drastic economy, but our equal determination to recognize the possible price that might be set for world peace and national freedom.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment providing for a reduction of $4,500,000,000 will prevail.

Mr. FERGUSON obtained the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I inquire from the Senator from Michigan if he desires to proceed this evening. I had hoped that we might have a brief executive session and then take a recess until Monday.

Mr. FERGUSON. I ask unanimous consent that I be recognized at the opening of the session on Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Michigan on Monday.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 1301.)

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

Elliott Northcott 2d to be an ensign in the Coast Guard, to rank from the 5th day of December 1946.

EXTENSION OF INTER-AMERICAN COFFEE AGREEMENT

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the protocol, Executive B (80th Cong., 1st sess.), a protocol to extend for 1 year from October 1, 1946, subject to certain conditions, the inter-American coffee agreement signed in Washington on November 28, 1940, which was read the second time, as follows:

PROTOCOL FOR THE EXTENSION OF THE INTER-AMERICAN COFFEE AGREEMENT FOR ONE YEAR FROM OCTOBER 1, 1946

Whereas an Inter-American Coffee Agreement (hereinafter referred to as "the Agreement") was signed in Washington on November 28, 1940; and

Whereas by a Protocol signed in Washington April 15, 1941, the Agreement was brought into force on April 16, 1941, in respect of the Governments on behalf of which the Protocol was signed on April 15, 1941; and

Whereas Article XXIV of the said Agreement provides that it should continue in force until October 1, 1943; and

Whereas by unanimous consent the Governments signatory to the Agreement twice extended the said Agreement unchanged for one-year periods, these extensions being duly attested by two certified and signed Declarations passed by the Inter-American Coffee Board on May 12, 1943, and July 25, 1944, respectively, which were duly deposited in the Pan American Union on June 11, 1943, and September 11, 1944, respectively, in accordance with the provisions of Article XXIV of the Agreement; and

Whereas by a Protocol signed and deposited with the Pan American Union under date of October 1, 1945, the said Agreement was extended for one year from October 1, 1945, with certain changes recommended by the Inter-American Coffee Board.

Now, therefore, in support of a recommendation made by the Inter-American Coffee Board on August 16, 1946, the Governments signatory to the present Protocol, considering that it is expedient that the Agreement should be prolonged for a further term, subject to the conditions stated below, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1

Subject to the provisions of Article 2 hereof, the Agreement shall continue in force between the Governments signatory to the present Protocol for a period of one year from October 1, 1946.

ARTICLE 2

During the period specified in Article 1 above, the Governments signatory to the present Protocol agree that the provisions of Article 1 through and including VIII of the Agreement shall be inoperative, except that, under emergency conditions, such articles of the Agreement shall again become effective upon a motion approved by at least 95% of the total vote of the Inter-American Coffee Board.

ARTICLE 3

a. During the period specified in Article 1 above, the Inter-American Coffee Board shall undertake to complete by March 31, 1947, a thorough analysis of the world coffee situation and shall formulate recommendations for the consideration of the governments now participating in the Agreement and of other governments that might be interested in participating in a revised agreement regarding the type of international cooperation that appears most likely to contribute to the development of sound, prosperous conditions in international trade in coffee equitable for both producers and consumers.

b. Such recommendations shall take due account of any general principles of commodity policy embodied in any agreement which may be concluded under the auspices of the United Nations prior to the submission of such recommendations.

ARTICLE 4

The present Protocol shall be open for signature at the Pan American Union from September 3, 1946, until November 1, 1946, provided, however, that all signatures shall be deemed to have been affixed under date of October 1, 1946, and the Protocol shall be considered as having entered into force on that date with respect to the governments on behalf of which it is signed.

In witness whereof the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Protocol.

Done at the City of Washington in the English, Spanish, Portuguese, and French languages. The original instrument in each language shall be deposited in the Pan American Union which shall furnish certified copies to the Governments signatory to this Protocol.

I hereby certify that the foregoing document is a true and faithful copy of the original of the Protocol for the Extension of the Inter-American Coffee Agreement for one year from October 1, 1946, deposited in the Pan American Union.

Washington, D. C., January 6, 1947.

[SEAL] WILLIAM MANGER,
Acting Secretary of the Governing Board of the Pan American Union.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, was this protocol unanimously reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think I can answer the question of the Senator from Connecticut. The protocol was reported unanimously by the subcommittee and by the full committee. It is desired by the State Department and by the President. It is a simple extension of the protocol until October 1, 1947. The coffee quotas are in suspension, the substantive purpose of the treaty having lapsed; and it is merely desired to maintain the framework for another year, pending the results of a study being made regarding the future coffee prospects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The protocol is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the protocol will be reported to the Senate.

The protocol was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive B, Eightieth Congress, first session, a protocol to extend for 1 year from October 1, 1946, subject to certain conditions, the Inter-American Coffee Agreement signed in Washington on November 28, 1940. The protocol was signed October 1, 1946.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the protocol is ratified.

The clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE—NOMINATION RECOMMITTED TO COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Herbert E. Arnold to be collector of internal revenue for the second district of Texas.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I move that this nomination be recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Herman B. Baruch to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Netherlands.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

UNITED NATIONS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Francis Bowes Sayre to be representative of the United States of America in the Trusteeship Council of the United Nations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Josiah Marvel, Jr., to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Denmark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

FARMERS' HOME ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dillard B. Lasseter to be Administrator of the Farmers' Home Administration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Army nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE NAVY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Donald B. Duncan to be vice admiral in the Navy, for temporary service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. WHITE. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, February 24, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

Executive nominations withdrawn from the Senate February 21 (legislative day of February 19), 1947:

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

Frank W. Sommer to be United States marshal for the district of Minnesota.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, who committest to us the swift and solemn trust of life, since we know not what a day may bring forth, but only that the hour of serving Thee is always present, may we wake to the instant claims of Thy holy will, not waiting for tomorrow but yielding today.

Consecrate with Thy presence the way our feet may go, and the humblest work will shine and the roughest places be made plain.

Lift us above unrighteous anger and mistrust, into faith, and hope, and charity, by a simple and steadfast reliance on Thy sure will.

In all things draw us to the mind of Christ, that Thy lost image may be traced again, and that Thou mayest own us at one with Him and Thee, to the glory of Thy great Name. Amen.

(Prayer written by James Martineau in 1805. Used at the request of the United Council of Church Women.)

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on February 21, 1947, the President approved and signed a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 1353. An act to amend the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The SPEAKER. This is the day designated under previous order of the House on which Washington's Farewell Address is to be read. In accordance with past custom in other years, the Chair feels that this shall come first, and therefore recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE] to read Washington's Farewell Address.

Mr. LODGE read Washington's Farewell Address, as follows:

To the people of the United States:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest; no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and, every day, the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently, want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism,—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans, by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation, and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquility at home; your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that, from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed; it is of infinite moment, that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can, in any event, be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth, or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess, are the work of joint counsels, and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they addressed themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest.—Here, every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The north, in an unrestrained intercourse with the south, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter, great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise, and precious materials of manufacturing industry.—The south, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the north, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the north, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength, to which itself is unequally adapted. The east, in a like intercourse with the west, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The west derives from the east supplies requisite to its growth and comfort—and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions, to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the west can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength; or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined cannot fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts, greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations; and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union, an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalship alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues, would stimulate and embitter. Hence likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments, which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is, that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind and exhibit the continuance of the union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its hands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations,—northern and southern—Atlantic and western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head; they have seen, in the negotiation by the executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the general government and in the Atlantic states, unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain and that with Spain, which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances, in all times, have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a constitution of government, better calculated than your former, for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and maintaining within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.—But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power, and the right of the people to establish government, presuppose the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency.—They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system; and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments, as of other human institutions:—that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country:—that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion: and remember, especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular references to the founding them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind.—It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and, sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind, (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit or party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils, and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchial cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasion of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern; some of them in our country and under our own eyes.—To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the constitution designates.—But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes, that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object (which is always a choice of difficulties,) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice towards all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions, to the favorite nation, of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinon, to influence or awe the public councils!—Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, (I conjure you to believe me fellow citizens,) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove, that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith:—Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collusions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon, to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view, that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations, but if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far, in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have, at least, believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe; my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both houses of congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound, in duty and interest, to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity towards other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress, without interruption, to that degree of strength, and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration, I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors and dangers.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES,
17th September, 1796.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—RELIEF TO PEOPLE OF THE LIBERATED COUNTRIES (H. DOC. NO. 144)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I recommend that the Congress authorize the appropriation of not to exceed $350,000,000 to assist in completing the great task of bringing relief from the ravages of war to the people of the liberated countries.

The period of full-scale supply operations by the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration is rapidly drawing to a close. In some of the liberated countries UNRRA will have achieved its objective fully, for these countries will once again be self-supporting so far as the basic essentials of life are concerned. In other liberated countries, however, this is not yet the case. Compared with what has already been done, what remains to be done is relatively small and limited in time and scope, but nonetheless vitally important.

On humanitarian grounds, and in the light of our own self-interest as well, we must not leave the task unfinished. We cannot abandon the peoples still in need. To do so would be to replace hope with despair in the hearts of these peoples and thus to undermine the spiritual and economic stability upon which our own hopes for a better world must rest. Others will help but such is the preponderance of our economic resources that success cannot be acheived without us. If we fail to do our part, millions of human beings will be denied the elemental necessities of life. Their strength and recuperative powers, which have been slowly growing, will be undermined. The time, now in sight, when they can once more exist without help and make their contributions to the peace, prosperity, and progress of the world, will be indefinitely postponed.

I recommend that this relief assistance be given directly rather than through an international organization, and that our contribution be administered under United States control. International cooperation in the program and the necessary coordination of our relief activities with those of other contributors can be achieved by informal consultations with all nations concerned through the mechanism of the United Nations and otherwise. I believe that our relief contribution should be used only for providing the basic essentials of life, such as medical supplies, food and items which will aid in the production of foodstuffs.

The authorization recommended is designed for the urgent relief needs for the balance of the year. The most critical period will be in the spring and summer months, when UNRRA shipments will cease and the harvests are not yet available. Swift legislative action is necessary if our help is not to come too late.

The United States, in keeping with our traditions of immediate and wholehearted response to human need, has stood in the forefront of those who have checked the forces of starvation, disease, suffering, and chaos which threatened to engulf the world in the wake of the war. The task is nearly finished. I urge the Congress to act promptly to insure that we do not stop short of the goal; that we do not endanger the permanence of the gains we have helped to achieve.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 21, 1947.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and of course I shall not, I would be pleased, and I am sure the membership would be pleased, if the majority leader would give us some idea of what we may expect in the way of legislative program next week.

Mr. HALLECK. I will be pleased to do so.

Monday is District day. I understand the Committee on the District of Columbia is proposing to call up for consideration on that day H. R. 1700, which is the daylight-saving bill for the District of Columbia.

Mr. RAYBURN. May I interrupt the gentleman? I would like to know if there is any scheme for the expansion of this kind of legislation beyond the District of Columbia by enactment of Congress.

Mr. HALLECK. I spoke to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who is chairman of the District of Columbia Committee, about the bill. I must confess I am not informed as to its detail, except I assume that, coming from the Committee on the District of Columbia, it applies only to the District of Columbia. If there is any member of that committee present who could enlighten us about that I would be glad to have him do so. Otherwise I will be glad to make inquiry and inform the gentleman.

Mr. RAYBURN. If there is any contemplation of having any such legislation apply to the entire country I will say now it will have hard sledding.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. In the absence of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON], chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which committee would likely have jurisdiction of such matter, I know of no legislation before the committee to that effect.

Mr. HALLECK. I was about to say that when we had Nation-wide daylight saving time before, the bill originated with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; so I am very sure that this measure applies only to the situation within the District.

On Monday we also hope to call up the Hobbs bill, H. R. 4. This is a bill dealing with the Supreme Court decision in the McNabb case, which has to do with the competency as evidence in criminal trials of confessions under certain circumstances.

It is my hope and plan to adjourn from Monday to Wednesday. On Wednesday it is proposed to call up a resolution which has been reported out by the Rules Committee to re-create the so-called Newsprint Committee.

Also if the resolutions are reported from the Rules Committee it is our purpose to call up a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER], which would re-create the so-called Small Business Committee that has heretofore operated

Also, to call up a resolution offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY], chairman of the Committee on Labor, which would be designed to give the Committee on Labor the power of subpoena and certain authority.

On Thursday we are hoping to call up the Gwynne bill, H. R. 584, known as the portal-to-portal bill. That of course is contingent upon the Judiciary Committee's completing its work on the bill and making its report, and the granting of a rule on the bill.

Friday of next week, so far as I know, is undetermined and will be so designated.

Mr. RAYBURN. I thank the gentleman, and withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the calling of the committees in order on Wednesday next may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may be permitted to sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAMEY (at the request of Mr. HALLECK) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. PLUMLEY (at the request of Mr. ARENDS) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the translation of a Spanish song apropos Washington's Birthday.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 100 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the studies and investigations authorized by (h) (1) of rule XI incurred by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $60,000, including expenditures for printing and binding, employment of such experts, special counsel, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by said committee and signed by the chairman of the committee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

SEC. 2. The official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, if not otherwise officially engaged.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 2, strike out "authorized by (h) (1) of rule XI" and insert in lieu thereof "with respect to the disposition of surplus property authorized by rule XI (1) (h)."

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$60,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. LECOMPTE. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments created a subcommittee to investigate war assets. That was a continuation of the so-called Slaughter committee. A member of that committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY] was made chairman and he said it would require some $50,000 to make a proper investigation, which, in my humble judgment, is a very modest request. I understand a similar committee in the Senate which is going to take up another part of the investigation—there is no duplication—is asking for and will get $100,000.

The Committee on Expenditures, acting upon a request from a very distinguished Member on the minority side, which was conveyed to our committee by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS], created a subcommittee that is similar to and which if granted funds will carry on the duties of the so-called Smith committee, which rendered such a valuable service during the last Congress.

The Committee on Expenditures also authorized a limited and circumscribed investigation of the State Department, one which has nothing to do with or which will not in any degree or manner encroach upon any investigation or with the duties or the proceedings of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was a committee authorized to investigate the enforcement or lack of enforcement by the Department of Justice of the law prohibiting labor and other racketeering.

In short, Mr. Speaker, your Committee on Expenditures assumed that rule XI meant what it said, that it wanted certain investigations made by the Committee on Expenditures—no duplications—and so the chairman of that committee asked the Committee on House Administration for a total of $60,000, which included the $50,000 requested, and for which I shall vote, by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY] and an additional $10,000 for the committee's other subcommittees. When that matter came before the subcommittee it was inclined to give us, as I understand it, an over-all of $75,000.

Then when the resolution went before the full Committee on House Administration on motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS], all but the $50,000 was stricken out, so that as the matter now stands your Committee on Expenditures has not one thin dime to enable it to function in any manner except as the subcommittee may now work on surplus war assets. That is all right with me, if that is the way the House wants to let the matter rest, with this exception: One of the investigations which has been undertaken—that relating to labor racketeering and for which witnesses have been subpenaed—will be carried on regardless of whether the House gives us a penny or refuses to do so.

I understood that when the meeting of the full Committee on House Administration was held—and the gentleman from Massachusetts is here—when this matter was up, he voiced opposition to the Committee on Expenditures having any money, favored giving it all to the subcommittee, which again is all right with me if that be the procedure; though while the committee is denied funds and the money given to a subcommittee, the resolution makes the committee chairman, not the chairman of the subcommittee, responsible for the disbursement of the fund—a queer procedure, that of denying the committee funds but making its chairman a disbursing agent. Then from the minority side of the House Administration Committee came opposition on another ground. The statement was made in effect—and if I am wrong the gentleman can correct me—that the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures had refused to consult the committee minority in making appointments to the subcommittees. There is absolutely no foundation whatever for that statement. I do not know where he got it. I do know that the ranking minority member of the Expenditures Committee named every minority man who was appointed to a subcommittee.

I see here before me the ranking member of the minority on that committee, and if I am in error I hope he will correct me. I am addressing that remark to him. I notice here other members of the committee on both sides, and if I am in error they can correct me, any one of them, and unless they now do so let us assume that my statement is correct. What I did do and what I now understand was contrary to my duty, and the minority whip would lay it down for me, was to fail to consult the ranking minority member of the committee prior to asking the individual members of the committee in open meeting and prior to the appointment of the members what line of duty each would be interested in. In my ignorance and my innocence and my desire to be democratic, to be considerate, in order that, as Drew Pearson says, democracy may live, I perhaps inadvertently, when the subcommittee was authorized—and the duty devolved upon me to appoint members of the majority and the minority to that subcommittee—I say, perhaps inadvertently, I said, "Now, who on the majority side and who on the minority side"—and here sit two members of the minority, freshmen—"wants to go on that committee and thinks he would like to serve there, doing the particular work which will fall to the lot of that subcommittee?"

Shall I apologize to the minority whip because I did not secretly, prior to naming minority members of a subcommittee, consult with the ranking minority member of the committee, but instead, when authorized to name a subcommittee, at once, in open meeting, asked the members to state any preference each might have as to the work he desired to do? The ranking minority member sits before me. I understand he is satisfied—so far I have never heard from him to the contrary—is satisfied with the action that was taken. If he and the new members who are on the committee are all satisfied, why should the minority whip complain? I can see how party discipline on the minority side is not aided if I just ask the members of the committee what they think they are qualified to do, what they would like to do, instead of forcing every new committee member to run to the whip, ask him to see the ranking minority member. These new members are able to speak for themselves. They have not advised me they have selected the whip as their bargaining agent, and so I am going to continue that practice of asking them what they want and of giving it to them when possible.

So today, Mr. Speaker, apparently because of the joint action of a Republican member of the Labor Committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS], and the minority whip, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], a resolution from which was stricken the paltry sum of $10,000, a part of which might have been used to inquire as to whether the Department of Justice intended to prosecute alleged extortionists and robbers by a committee authorized by statute to make such an investigation is now before us. I shall vote for the amended resolution even though our modest request for $10,000 was stricken, because and only because I believe the subcommittee may need the $50,000 and I am sure the chairman of that subcommittee will not waste any part of it.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the House that there was no disposition on the part of the Committee on House Administration to interfere with the activities of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The original request was for $50,000, and it seemed that that was adequate to take care of the investigation of this one Subcommittee on Expenditures, now headed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY], investigating the activities of the War Assets Administration. I think that is the committee which was formerly known as the Slaughter committee. Mr. RIZLEY'S own resolution called for only $50,000.

In the event the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments brings in a resolution for additional money, it will be considered very carefully in the House Administration Committee. As to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] about the rights and privileges of the minority, may I say that I will defend with all my strength the rights of the minority at all times.

I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has brought to the floor a matter which was unnecessary, and so far as we on the Democratic side are concerned we knew that the Republican leadership was not aware of it or would not stand for it, and we on this side felt that the gentleman from Michigan himself had no intent to take a course of action which was inconsistent with the custom that has existed from time immemorial, and which has the practical effect of a right of both parties. So, the gentleman need not feel disturbed, and, certainly, anything he says with reference to myself does not disturb me, because, whether he intended it or not, he conveyed to the Members of the House the fact that I was simply performing a duty. Now that this has been brought into the open, the information that I received from my leader, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], was that it was going to be taken up with the Republican leadership and the facts ascertained, so that it could be ironed out in an understanding way, which we knew it would be. Before that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], we assumed unintentionally, was undertaking to directly or indirectly dictate the appointment of minority members of the subcommittees.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Of course I will yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not intentionally.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Not intentionally; I said unintentionally, directly or indirectly.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman knows I could not make it without making it intentionally. Will the gentleman yield to me for 3 seconds? First, I want to thank him for the lesson in the correct way to make appointments.

Mr. MCCORMACK. I am not giving the gentleman a lesson. He is not going to get away with that. He should not say I am trying to give him a lesson because I am not.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do not be disturbed.

Mr. MCCORMACK. No; I am not disturbed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Let us get back to the issue.

Mr. MCCORMACK. I am not disturbed, but the gentleman is not going to put into the RECORD statements that in no way are consistent with the truth, not when he is dealing with me.

Mr. HOFFMAN. This is what I did.

Mr. MCCORMACK. If the gentleman will sit down, I think it will all come out all right, because the gentleman has conceded that the position I took was correct. I was not taking it as an individual. I would expect the gentleman's side to take it if they were in our position.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield to let me answer his statement?

Mr. MCCORMACK. I have yielded.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is right in this, that before the committee—and there sit two of the freshmen over there now—what I said was, "Do any of your gentlemen want to serve on a subcommittee, and if you do, what committee do you think you are qualified to sit on, and do you want to sit on such-and-such a committee?" That is what I asked them. Was I wrong in asking the freshmen Members of Congress what they would like to sit on, without seeing the minority man over here? The minority man, who sits right here, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO], named every member of the minority on every subcommittee. Am I right, Mr. MANASCO?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Michigan met me outside yesterday. Some observations I made in the House committee, which were impersonal, were carried to him. I said, "Yes." "Who told you?" I told him who told me. It was the ranking member of the committee himself, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO], and the confirmation is there.

This is all over. This will not happen any more. I do not say the gentleman intended it.

The gentleman made one other remark, that I opposed his resolution in the committee yesterday for $60,000. The gentleman is very greatly mistaken in this respect. What I did say is that it is up to the Republican members to determine to what extent, if any, his committee is going to encroach upon the original jurisdiction that belongs to other committees, and that I would cooperate with my Republican colleagues in preserving the jurisdictions and dignity of any other standing committee of the House. I said that, and I did not oppose $60,000; as a matter of fact, I did not care whether $50,000 or $60,000 was reported out. So when the gentleman says I opposed it, he is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, since this matter has arisen as to the right of the minority to make their assignments, may I say that it was my fortune or misfortune to serve in the minority for 12 years, and through all of those years I recall that the then majority party gave to the ranking minority member of the committees on which I served the full and complete right to select the members to serve on the various subcommittees. I am quite sure that the gentleman from Michigan understands that situation and will afford to the ranking minority member on any committee on which he serves that same privilege, as we certainly, so far as I am concerned, will yield to the minority leadership and ranking committeemen generally the right to make such appointments.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]

Mr. SABATH. I rise for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Indiana whether that should not apply to all of the committees and not only to the committee of which the gentleman from Michigan is chairman.

Mr. HALLECK. I thought I made it clear that it would be so applicable. Certainly, if I did not make it clear, I want to make it clear now.

Mr. SABATH. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that upon the conclusion of special orders heretofore granted today I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

RELIEF TO LIBERATED COUNTRIES

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object to this request, I wish to advise that I will object to any additional 1-minute speeches before the House proceeds with the consideration of legislation on the hoof-and-mouth disease.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, in the message from the President of the United States which was sent to us today, there was this sentence:

> I recommend that this relief assistance be given directly rather than through an international organization, and that our contribution be administered under United States control.

I rise on this occasion to pay my respects to the President of the United States and to compliment him for wanting future moneys for relief to be administered under our control.

When the original bill for UNRRA was under consideration, on January 25, 1944, I offered an amendment that would have put all the funds for relief and rehabilitation under the supervision of the American Red Cross. The amendment was defeated by the Democratic side voting solidly against it.

Everyone knows the scandals that have come out of UNRRA and how much of the funds were used to entrench puppet governments of the Soviet Union of Socialist Republics.

It is gratifying in part at least to know that President Truman acknowledges through his desire now to have future funds administered under United States control that it was not handled correctly under UNRRA.

A Democratic President and a Congress controlled by Democrats were responsible for insisting that funds should be spent through their political child, UNRRA.

ERADICATION OF FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 108.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

> Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1819) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with other American countries in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Agriculture now in the bill, and such amendment for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], and at this time I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution (H. Res. 108) makes in order consideration of H. R. 1819, which is a bill authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the other American countries in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest.

It is my understanding that this bill was given very full consideration by the Committee on Agriculture and that that committee unanimously reported H. R. 1819. I may say to the membership that this rule was reported unanimously by the Committee on Rules. It is an open rule and amendments will be in order under the 5-minute rule.

A few weeks ago a number of us who live in the agricultural sections of the country, especially those who have districts that raise a great deal of livestock, had called to their attention the fact that in Mexico the so-called foot-and-mouth disease was becoming quite prevalent and that if something was not done to aid and assist the Republic of Mexico by this country it was very likely that the disease would spread to this country and would probably result in the devastation of thousands upon thousands and perhaps millions upon millions of cattle in this country.

Further, it is my understanding that preliminary surveys have been made by the Department of Agriculture. They sent some representatives down there and found these conditions to exist. They came back and made their report and it was their considered judgment that the Republic of Mexico was unable to handle the situation and that if we were to protect the livestock industry in this country, so that we might be assured of beef for ourselves and for other people we are trying to help feed, we had better do something about it.

After these reports were made the matter was called to the attention of the Committee on Agriculture. After hearing the experts and the gentlemen who were sent down by the Department of Agriculture they came to the unanimous conclusion that something should be done about it. Pursuant to that, this bill, H. R. 1819, was introduced by one of the able and distinguished members of the Committee on Agriculture, Dr. GILLIE, and it is his bill that is before the House today for consideration. The members of the Committee on Agriculture will explain the full purposes of the bill. I do not propose to take further time under the rule. It is an open rule subject to amendment when the bill is considered on the floor.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. Coming from a cattle district, I know the importance of the action of the Rules Committee in expediting the passage of this legislation. Those of us who come from the livestock producing States such as South Dakota and Oklahoma realize that it is important that something like this be done immediately.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Has not this bill passed the Senate already?

Mr. RIZLEY. I am informed that a similar bill has passed the Senate.

Mr. WORLEY. A bill similar to this was passed by the Senate a few days ago.

Mr. RIZLEY. I may say to the House that this bill, of course, does not carry with it any appropriation. The amount of money to be expended must be justified before the Appropriations Committee before any expenditure is authorized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the rule making this bill in order is, indeed, a broad and liberal rule. Because the bill itself is of such importance to the Nation I feel that there cannot be any opposition. Unlike the rule that was brought in yesterday on the budget resolution, a bill of transcendent importance, on which we were gagged and deprived of even the right to offer an amendment, this rule is a broad and liberal one that permits any kind of amendment germane to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House more than to express the hope that when the bill is considered we will insert a limitation as to the amount that should be allowed for any Mexican cattle that may be ordered killed. I recall that in 1914 and 1915, when our country suffered a great deal from this same foot-and-mouth disease among cattle and many cattle were killed, that from $10 to $15 per head was allowed. I hope that in this case, too, the House will put a limitation on the amount that can be paid.

I also notice there is no limitation as to the expenditures. I am told that there may be from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 required to combat the disease. I do not object if it is properly expended and if it is needed and required.

As to the legislative procedure, may I suggest to the gentleman from Oklahoma that, in view of the fact that the Senate has already passed a bill, I think it might be in the interest of saving time to offer this as an amendment to the Senate bill or adopt the Senate bill in lieu of this if it is on all fours with this bill, except that we should limit the power that is given to the Secretary of Agriculture. Though I have confidence in him, nevertheless I do not like to give unlimited power to anyone to spend millions and millions of dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN].

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is so enthusiastically in favor of this legislation, and, if I may have his attention, I would like to discuss in part the suggestions he made with reference to placing a limitation on the authorization and expenditures under the bill. Our committee unanimously felt that there is a need for legislation of this kind. When we see a prairie fire coming to us at a distance we try to put it out before we are destroyed. So we have an idea that the best thing we can do is to cooperate with the Government of Mexico in an effort to eradicate and control the disease in that country before it comes over to ruin the livestock of the United States.

We went into the question of expenditures. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that we tried in every possible manner to secure some idea as to the amount of money involved to cope with this problem, but we were unable to secure any definite information as to the cost. It is said that the disease exists in about 10 States in Mexico, and that there are approximately 2,000,000 head of cattle in the area. It may not be necessary to destroy all those animals, but surely, if they are destroyed and if we are required to pay the entire sum, it will run into a substantial amount of money. However, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of State had not proceeded far enough in negotiations with the Government of Mexico to determine what we might be required to spend; so the committee wrote a provision into the bill which required a report every 30 days to the Congress by the Department of Agriculture in order that we may be fully informed and, accordingly, could raise or lower our estimates on the requirements of what had to be done to stop this disease from coming into the United States.

I doubt if there is anyone here who can suggest any fixed sum of money with reference to cost and, too, it may be dangerous to fix an amount of money here because there may be people in some other countries who may feel that if we set a limit of $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 or $50,000,000, since the money has to be spent through the instrumentalities of that country, the money should be turned over to them in a lump sum. We did not want to spend it in that way because we want to control and eradicate the disease.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. I understand the gentleman from Illinois proposes still another limitation upon the bill and that is that there should be a limitation per head as to the value of the cattle or other stock that might be necessarily slaughtered under this act. It seems to me it would be well to point out that within the territory now infected in Mexico are some of the most valuable breeding stock in the Republic of Mexico; therefore, you cannot fix across-the-board average valuation because some of that stock runs into thousands of dollars, whereas most of them are poor stuff.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I may say that the price of cattle has gone up, as the gentleman knows. He will remember that one man told our committee that they would average about $50 a head.

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. BUFFETT. Perhaps you have been over this same territory in some of the hearings, but I think it ought to be in the RECORD again. Did this outbreak or this epidemic arise out of or through a violation of any treaty between this country and Mexico?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Well, how far we should go into that, I do not know. But I might say to the gentleman that there were certain Americans and other nationals who were engaged in bringing in bulls from Brazil; several hundred of them.

Mr. BUFFETT. The American taxpayer is going to pay for that, is he not?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The American taxpayer apparently will have to pay for it, but we have to do this now. We are forced into a situation where we cannot help ourselves.

Mr. BUFFETT. Certainly, but at the same time we should have full information as to how this money is going to be spent.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I will be glad to relate the incident that brought about the foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. BUFFETT. I think that would be helpful.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me relate the whole matter of how this came about. I cannot give specific dates, but I will try to put them in the RECORD.

In 1945 there were certain Americans, and possibly people from Mexico, and possibly from Brazil, whom I would call promoters, that brought in several hundred bulls from Brazil to Mexico for stock. These bulls were put into quarantine. It was found that some of the bulls were infected with the foot-and-mouth disease and consequently they were quarantined. The quarantine was placed on them, in which the Government of Mexico joined. But, for some strange and unknown reason, the then President of Mexico overnight issued an order releasing those bulls, distributing them to the ranches in Mexico, and so the disease spread throughout Mexico, and the bulls which cost these promoters around $300 apiece were sold for from $5,000 to $20,000 each in Mexico.

Mr. BUFFETT. Were the American citizens a party to this agreement then?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. So I am informed. There were some American citizens, together with others, who were interested in this promotional scheme to make money.

Mr. BUFFETT. Is our Department of Justice doing anything about that violation?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am informed that those American citizens are not in the United States.

Mr. BUFFETT. Should not that be investigated at the same time we appropriate this money?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It might be well to investigate it. But here we have reached a situation that we have trouble with, and unless we take the precaution now, even though there will be heavy expenses, the foot-and-mouth disease may be spread throughout the United States.

I might say to the gentleman that last year, when the OPA took away meat from the American people, thousands of those head of cattle were brought into this country over quarantine from Mexico, and were put in some 28 States in the United States, but apparently we have not discovered any infection from those cattle.

Mr. BUFFETT. If American citizens helped to bring about this violation, unless our Government operates to prevent the recurrence of that sort of thing by appropriate measures, certainly we are not doing our full duty by simply appropriating money to eradicate it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. There is no question about that. I think the gentleman is right. We should confiscate the property and the assets of those people wherever they may be, but that is only a drop in the bucket compared to what it will cost in the long run.

Mr. BUFFETT. Is the gentleman's committee taking any positive action in that connection?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. You may be sure that we will, if we are given the information.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. As soon as our committee heard of these bulls last spring, we made provision for a quarantine on Swan Island, which makes provision for places where animals like this can be put on an island in the Caribbean Sea and kept for 90 days under supervision to determine whether there will be any foot-and-mouth disease. That is the first time there was any such provision made.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me ask the gentleman, Are the facts I stated approximately correct?

Mr. POAGE. I think so, except there were two shipments of bulls. The first came in in 1945, in October—160 bulls, I believe—and there was no foot-and-mouth disease ever attributed to any of those, although they were kept for a good many months and then scattered rather widely, after they were brought in, and apparently there was no foot-and-mouth disease. Some 300 bulls were brought in in April or May of last year, and they were kept for some time in quarantine at Vera Cruz, and then, as the gentleman says, the President of Mexico let them go.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER].

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, first I wish to pay my compliments to the distinguished chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE], who has done such a fine job in bringing this legislation before the Congress. He is a man who is trained not only by education but by having had experience in the controlling of this dread disease, commonly known as hoof-and-mouth disease.

There is nothing very much new to be added to what has been said, except that I should like to say that this is a very good answer to the people who have continuously put before the country that the sanitary quarantine was a ruse of the livestock producers to keep livestock out of this country. We have had this quarantine against the importation of cattle and other livestock from countries where hoof-and-mouth disease exists for a number of years. As far as I know, this is the very first time that cattle have been exported from infected areas to free areas, which in this case is the Republic of Mexico. The very first time it was done we had an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease, so it should call to our attention the necessity of continually seeing to it that the quarantine against infected areas is maintained.

I think the quicker this legislation is passed the less it is going to cost this Government. It is going to be a painful and expensive project, in my judgment, but I think the legislation is necessary and should have the support of every Member of the House.

May I also say that when it was learned these bulls were brought from other countries into Mexico our Department, under the treaty we have with Mexico, vigorously protested the importation of these cattle. As a result, they were quarantined and held in quarantine until it was thought the danger was over. Then, as has been said here, some of them were sold to individuals throughout Mexico.

This is a dread disease, and whatever it may cost—and I say we should use all the precaution necessary—this disease should be stamped out as quickly as possible, right in its tracks.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to confirm what the gentleman has said in regard to this fight to protect our livestock, and also to express my appreciation to the chairman and the members of the subcommittee for bringing the legislation to the floor today.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. In view of what has been stated as to the tremendous profit that has been made out of these imports of bulls, may I not suggest to the gentleman that it might be wise, because of the profiteering that is going on, to place a limit on the amount that should be allowed for the Mexican cattle that will be killed in Mexico and which we will be obliged to pay for. Understand, I am for this, but I want to restrict as much as possible the actual cost to our Government.

Mr. GRANGER. The Committee on Agriculture considered that question very thoroughly. Some of us thought that perhaps when this appropriation was made a limitation might be placed on it, and I think it will. I think it should be. I believe this problem can be handled in a businesslike way and can be prosecuted very quickly if the House acts promptly in passing this authorizing legislation. Furthermore, that the Appropriations Committee and the Congress makes funds available so that the work can start immediately.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, the subject of hoof-and-mouth disease is extremely important, and in the few minutes that I have I would like to suggest to all Members of the House that it affects every district. It is not a problem affecting the cattle industry alone. The situation in old Mexico today is so serious that it could in itself change the cattle economy of the United States and put us in a very bad position—so far as cattle breeding is concerned—for the next 50 years or more.

I mean by that that England, the Latin-American countries, and perhaps every nation except the United States and Australia, have this disease and have established partial immunity against it, while the infection here would destroy our herds, our milk supplies, and our meat sources, and it be another 50 years or more before we built up the same immunity.

Not that such an immunity would be desirable. The disease in any form is serious, expensive, and destructive, but I am pointing out our position today, and what the introduction of the disease could mean to us.

It is not, as I say, a question only for cattlemen and a problem affecting them only. It would limit the production of cattle for food. The outbreak of hoof-and-mouth disease has been shown to increase the price of beef, because of scarcity. An epidemic of hoof-and-mouth disease will dry up dairy cows and will make it impossible for cattle to breed, and in every way upset the entire cattle economy and industry of the United States. It affects people in the cities just as much as it affects people in the rural areas and the cattle-producing areas, except that the people in the cities do not have to see the tragedy of the cows that are infected with this disease. The hoof-and-mouth disease is a virus disease of such intensity that a single drop on the claws of a bird can infect a drinking trough and thus infect all of the cattle which subsequently use that drinking trough.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from New York, who is a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Is it not true that this disease is no respecter of boundaries and can jump from county to county and from State to State and finally infect the whole country?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The disease jumps, as the gentleman from New York has said, from county to county and respects no boundaries. The only known preventive is destruction. The only thing to do is to destroy the animal. It affects all cloven-hoofed animals, such as cattle, deer, goats, oxen. You realize the problem that confronts the United States from the diplomatic, economic, and practical standpoints, to go into a country like Mexico where the ox is a domestic animal used in farming, and where almost every rural family has a milk goat and where goats roam wild over the land. You appreciate the problem confronting the United States in attempting to help a nation shut out the disease which is already so well established that perhaps the solution may be the quarantining of the infected area in Mexico, about 250 kilometers by 150 kilometers, and then to fight the spread of the disease outside of that area. May I say to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] who is on his feet, before I yield to him, and before my time expires, that the United States has spent $200,000,000 in the past to keep this disease away.

Mr. MILLER of California. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that when the disease was prevalent in California, the California Division of Fish and Game spent in excess of $300,000 slaughtering deer when the disease got into certain sections of the mountains where the deer were and it was many years before the deer population became great enough again to furnish the usual sport that is carried on there.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, because those of us who have seen these outbreaks know that it is a very serious situation and a tragic one if we cannot control it in the adjoining country. In our attempt to eradicate the brief outbreaks in California, the one in 1924, and subsequently in 1929, it was necessary if the disease broke out in a dairy to destroy the dairy cattle in that particular dairy and in the adjoining dairies on either side in an attempt to stop the disease.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. I believe the hoof-and-mouth disease threat is a real threat to the Nation and I am supporting this legislation designed to do something about the danger. May I make an observation and ask a question. I think the gentleman is aware that very often Members of Congress from agricultural areas are accused of trying to spend too much money for agricultural purposes. Is it not true that this bill and the fight against the hoof and mouth disease will be of almost as much benefit to the general public as to the cattle raisers themselves?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I thank the gentleman. It will benefit the general public even more than the industry itself.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a foot-and-mouth disease summary of information on its history, character, and method of control, as compiled by the Library of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, today the House of Representatives, the House Committee on Agriculture, and the Subcommittee on Animal Foot-and-Mouth Disease is indeed fortunate in having the gentleman from Indiana, Dr. GILLIE, chairman of this subcommittee. Dr. GILLIE is a veterinary of long standing. His experience at this time is valuable.

H. R. 1819, before the House today, and of which the gentleman from Indiana, Dr. GILLIE, is the author, is vitally necessary because of the fact that under existing law, the Department of Agriculture has no authority to engage in any formal joint undertaking with the Government of Mexico on vesicular stomatitis or foot-and-mouth disease as it is commonly known.

The Department of Agriculture only has authority to consult with the Government of Mexico on such problems.

This legislation provides joint undertaking authority and to authorize appropriations of necessary funds by the United States Government.

Foot-and-mouth disease can attack any cloven-footed animal or those with split hoofs.

This means cattle, hogs, sheep, goats, and deer would be affected in the United States should the epidemic break out.

While North America is freer than any continent except Australia, we have had, I believe, eight epidemics, the most recent occurring in 1929.

As report 38 accompanying this legislation will show, this present epidemic which is below the border in Mexico has rapidly spread into 10 Mexican States.

It can spread among animals as fast as the flu epidemic spread among humans during the last World War.

It is the most highly infectious of animal diseases and is correspondingly dreaded with livestock owners as smallpox or cancer with humans. It is so infectious that troops are being used at present to patrol the affected areas in Mexico.

The worst epidemic to occur in the United States was in 1914. During this outbreak, 22 States and the District of Columbia were affected. The State of Illinois at that time had 1,226 herds slaughtered which included 31,074 cattle, 45,560 hogs, 1,866 sheep, 66 goats, the total for Illinois being 78,566 animals, the appraised value of which was $2,569,102. The appraised value of the slaughtered animals for the entire United States in 1914 was $5,865,720.

Should a similar outbreak occur today the amount would be many times greater.

Of 102 counties in Illinois, 54 were affected. Illinois had the largest slaughter for any State in the Union. In Pennsylvania it was necessary to slaughter 892 herds, the disease spreading through one-half of the counties in that State. In Illinois the disease lasted from November 1914 to May 1916. In Pennsylvania it lasted from November 1914 to April 1915. In Illinois and Wisconsin it lasted 18 months.

Mr. Speaker, at this point in the RECORD I desire to insert the statistics of this disease for the 1914 outbreak.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. I yield to the distinguished member of the Committee on Agriculture from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Can the gentleman tell us where this disease started at that time?

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. Just a little later in my remarks I will bring that out.

The present alarm on foot-and-mouth disease has reached such proportions that according to the press when President Truman visits Mexico next month he expects to take up the matter with the President of that country.

The Foot-and-Mouth Disease Subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture has been given information that this disease is constantly prevalent in England, Europe, Asia and Africa.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I think the gentleman is doing a very fine thing by putting all this material in the RECORD at this point. I particularly want to emphasize what he has just said about England, and the Latin-American countries. They have developed a sort of immunity against it which we do not have and therefore we are trying to keep the disease out.

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. It is just as prevalent in these countries I have just mentioned as is the common cold in the United States.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I am very much interested in the very able speech the gentleman is making and the remarks that have already been made. May I inquire if any so-called sanitary laws or inspection laws are effective in the case of meats which come in from infected areas to see whether the virus of this disease, or whatever you call it, has been destroyed?

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. I will touch on that in just a few moments.

Our committee received information that an English soldier had brought it back from Germany to his father's farm during World War II. The entire herd on this farm was slaughtered. It has been constantly prevalent in South America. The virus has been known to live a year in frozen meats. It does not seem at all impossible that American veterans returning from infected areas could bring foot-and-mouth disease to the United States.

If this assumption is correct it could break out here at any moment. It has especially followed invasion routes during a war. It was further testified before the committee that England has made research experiments on a ship at sea, because the disease is so infectious. It is so infectious no experiments may be conducted in our country. It is my understanding the virus may be carried on shoes, clothing, or bodies of persons, upon the feet or bodies of poultry, birds, dogs, cats, or any other animal which may be in the vicinity of afflicted animals.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman said it is brought in in frozen meat. I still ask the question—if the gentleman cannot answer it perhaps someone else can—In whatever form the meat comes in, whether it comes from South American countries or other countries, are we able to discover whether that meat is infected with the virus of this disease before it goes on to our market?

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. Later I will show you where it came into this country in frozen meat and started a big outbreak in Niles, Mich., in 1914.

Mr. REED of New York. Not only frozen meat but other forms of meat.

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. I do not know about canned meat.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Texas, a member of the committee.

Mr. POAGE. Canned meat is cooked, and presumably the cooking has a sterilizing effect on this just as on any other germ. That is the very reason a great many of us have for so long insisted on maintaining the exclusion of Argentine fresh meat, because for years we have known that you could bring in this disease in fresh meat. While there have been those who alleged insincerity on the part of us who have opposed the bringing in of any Argentine beef, we know what we are talking about. The outbreak of the disease in California was traced to scraps of beef from a ship that came from South America and where they fed the scraps of meat to hogs and the hogs became infected.

Mr. REED of New York. I have always opposed the entry of meats from these other countries into the United States for other reasons, but I want to get into the RECORD if possible every angle of this so that the people who say we ought to be importing meat at the present time from these foreign countries to relieve the shortage of meat here will see the reason that prompts us to maintain our opposition.

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. Obviously, fresh meat carries the disease if it came from diseased animals.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. I thank the gentleman from Oklahoma.

It is believed to be carried by insects or particles of straw or litter which may be carried by the wind. It has been known to have been introduced into the United States through infected meat. It is especially interesting that when the 1914 outbreak occurred in Niles, Mich., it was first noticed in infected hogs which had been fed scraps obtained from a local butcher, who in turn purchased frozen meat from a dealer whose records showed that this butcher had been shipped several thousand pounds of imported frozen meat from South America.

I hope the committee today can appreciate the task confronting the Secretary of Agriculture if this joint undertaking is authorized with the Government of Mexico.

It is my understanding that oxen and cows are used in many States in Mexico for plowing. Many Mexicans have milk goats. I am sure all of you can appreciate how a Mexican family would feel living in an infected area and having the government slaughter these family animals. These Mexican people who live in an infected area may not be so easily convinced. Remember, the disease is not over 1 to 3 percent fatal. Calves and young cattle are the more seriously affected. While, as stated, the mortality rate is not high, but the animal and the productiveness for breeding purposes is rendered useless.

As near and as close as the foot-and-mouth disease is to the border we cannot afford to take any chance on the fine herds in this country becoming infected. If this should happen the animal industry could suffer untold millions. During 1943 in England one shorthorn herd of 84 head, valued at $40,400 were necessarily slaughtered. Think what this would mean to many of the fine American herds today.

It is to the interest of the entire membership to support this legislation.

It is to the interest of those from agricultural sections to support it, and I feel that they will.

It is to the interest of those Members living in the cities to support it because of the daily quarts of milk delivered to their doorstep.

H. R. 1819 can affect everyone. When foot-and-mouth disease strikes it is nonpartisan. This is legislation into which no partisan politics should be injected. I do not believe that it will.

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

A SUMMARY OF INFORMATION ON ITS HISTORY, CHARACTER, AND TREATMENT

I. History

A. General:

Foot-and-mouth disease has been known for centuries to be one of the world's most contagious and devastating livestock maladies. Greek and Roman writers have made vague descriptions of different disorders, one of which may well have been the foot-and-mouth disease. No reliance can be placed on this evidence, however; it was not until the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries that its presence was definitely proven in Germany, Italy, and France. During the nineteenth century it became widely diffused. Hungary, Lower Austria, Bohemia, Saxony, and Prussia had severe outbreaks in 1834; France and Switzerland in 1837; and Belgium, Holland, and England in 1839. Between 1839 and 1902, Great Britain suffered 11 distinct outbreaks of the disease. Since the World War the disease has appeared in numerous districts of Great Britain, but has been held in check by restriction of movement of cattle over a radius of 15 miles from the center of infection, and compulsory slaughtering of diseased animals.

It was introduced into Denmark in 1841 and into the United States in 1870. It appeared in Australia twice during 1872 but was stamped out on each occasion. It also appears to be well known in India, Ceylon, Burma, the Straits Settlements, South Africa, and South America.

B. United States:

There have been eight outbreaks of foot-and-mouth disease in the United States. These occurred in 1870, 1880, 1884, 1902, 1908, 1914–16, 1924–25 (twice), and 1929. Since 1929 the United States has remained entirely free of the disease. This has been achieved by cooperation of Federal and State veterinary officials in maintaining a rigid national quarantine to exclude infection from outside sources and in promptly eradicating outbreaks that occurred in spite of that precaution.

Following are brief outlines of each of the eight outbreaks:

1. 1870: This first outbreak was introduced by way of Canada, where the infection was brought by an importation of cattle from Scotland. It spread into New England and New York and appears to have been arrested within a few months.

2. 1880: Two or three lots of diseased animals were brought into the United States, but there was no extension from the animals originally affected.

3. 1884: A small outbreak occurred at Portland, Maine, caused by imported cattle, but was limited to a small number of animals and was easily brought under control.

4. 1902: The disease was discovered in November in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, having probably been imported from Japan in the form of cowpox vaccine virus which had been contaminated with the virus of foot-and-mouth disease. The outbreak involved Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Rhode Island. It was eradicated in about 6 months by slaughtering 3,872 cattle, 360 hogs, and 229 sheep and goats. The animals slaughtered were valued at $184,155 and the total cost to the Department of Agriculture of stamping out the disease was about $300,000.

5. 1908: The outbreak was first observed in November near Danville, Pa. It was traced to stockyards at East Buffalo, N. Y., and Detroit, Mich. The disease appeared in Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland. Source of the infection was contaminated Japanese vaccine virus. One hundred and fifty-seven premises were found infected and 3,636 animals, valued at $90,033, were slaughtered. Owners were reimbursed for the value of their animals and property destroyed, one-third being paid by the States and two-thirds by the Federal Government.

6. 1914–16: The outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease was discovered near Niles, Mich., in October 1914, and turned out to be the most serious and extensive ever known in this country, the last infection not being disposed of until May 1916. It occurred in 22 States and the District of Columbia. The Middle Western and Eastern States were mostly affected, the chief sufferer being Illinois, where more than one-third of the total losses occurred. The Union Stock Yards in Chicago became infected early and were a source of dissemination of the contagion in all directions. During the outbreak, 77,240 cattle, 85,092 swine, 9,767 sheep, and 123 goats were slaughtered as infected or exposed. The entire cost of eradicating the outbreak amounted to about $9,000,000, of which the Government paid about $4,600,000. No further outbreaks have occurred in the States involved in this attack since 1916.

7. 1924–25: The disease was first discovered in two herds of dairy cattle near Oakland, Calif., in February. The source was unknown but it is believed that it came from the Orient as the disease was traced to hogs feeding on garbage from ships. Some unusual difficulties were encountered in eradicating the disease due to the spread of the disease in large ranch herds and flocks in rough, poorly fenced country, and in deer in a national forest. Simultaneously the disease appeared late in September 1924, in a herd of Zebu cattle south of Houston, Tex. Final eradication of the Texas outbreak did not occur until October 1925. In the California outbreak, 58,791 cattle, 21,195 swine, 28,882 sheep, and 1,391 goats were slaughtered. In addition, 22,214 deer had to be destroyed. In Texas a total of 31,918 animals had to be destroyed. The appraised value of animals and property destroyed in these outbreaks was more than $5,000,000.

8. 1929: The latest outbreak occurred in southern California in January, under much the same conditions as the preceding California outbreak in 1924. The 1929 outbreak was confined to 5 premises but 28 additional contact herds were also destroyed as a precautionary measure. The total number of animals slaughtered was 3,591 comprising 277 cattle, 3,291 swine, and 23 goats. The appraised value of the animals and property destroyed was $109,958.

II. Expenditures on foot-and-mouth disease

Two types of expenditures should be considered, those used in the actual eradication of the disease, including primarily the reimbursement to farmers whose cattle have been destroyed, and those used for research. Table I indicates the amounts paid annually by the Federal Government for eradication of the disease. As indicated by statements of the United States Treasury, the total for the period since 1915 was $7,133,064, the majority of which was spent for the outbreaks in 1914–16 and 1925–26. No eradication expenditures have been incurred since the fiscal year 1935.

The principal actual research expenditures by the Federal Government were those connected with the Foot-and-Mouth Disease Commission study in Europe in 1925. Approximately $85,000 is the estimated total cost of research to the Federal Government.

Of this $85,000 about $55,000 represents expenses of the Foot-and-Mouth Disease Commission; the remaining $30,000 was for expenditures over a period of years for research in the United States on related vesicular disease that might be mistaken for foot-and-mouth disease in the absence of the knowledge gained.

The research provided first-hand knowledge of the disease and showed that a rigid national quarantine, together with the slaughter policy of combating outbreaks, as used in the United States, is both effective and economical. The average cost of eradicating the few outbreaks that have occurred has been less than $4,000,000. By contrast, even in much smaller countries where the disease is well established, vastly greater losses occur constantly. If through inadequate measures or lack of foresight, foot-and-mouth disease had been allowed to become established in the United States, its presence would probably cost this country fully $200,000,000 a year, judging from reliably reported losses that it causes abroad and the toll that less serious diseases take in our own country.

It has been estimated by the Department of Agriculture that State expenditures for eradication and research are about equal to those of the Federal Government. However, definite figures on total expenditures by States do not appear to be available.

III. Characteristics, transmission, and treatment of the disease

A. Characteristics of the disease:

Foot-and-mouth disease affects all cloven-footed animals, especially cattle and swine. Human infections occasionally occur, but cases are rare and not serious. In cattle the disease is characterized by the appearance of fever and vesicles filled with a clear fluid. The vesicles occur principally on the mucous membranes of the mouth, tongue, and lips, but are seen also on the skin of the muzzle, between the claws and on the teats and udder. Affected cattle become lame because of the soreness of the foot lesions, and they drool from the mouth and refuse to eat because of mouth soreness. The vesicles rupture, leaving raw surfaces which become shallow ulcers.

The mortality from foot-and-mouth disease is not high; generally not more than 1 to 3 percent. Calves and young cattle are more severely affected than older animals. The greatest losses, as a rule, consist of the morbidity, the loss of flesh and of milk, rather than the loss of life.

The incubation period of the naturally acquired disease is seldom more than 4 days and frequently may not be greater than 48 hours. The onset is marked by fever and depression. The vesicles appear in the mouth in from 12 to 36 hours after the onset of fever. Cases without complications caused by pyogenic bacteria usually recover within 2 or 3 weeks. Complications are frequent, however, and recoveries may be greatly delayed.

The infective agent in foot-and-mouth disease is a filtrable virus. The size of foot-and-mouth disease virus has been estimated to be between 8 and 12 millimicrons, which places it among the very smallest of these ultramicroscopic infective agents. The virus is present in the fluid and the covering of the vesicles and can also be found in the blood in the initial feverish stage of the disease. Saliva, milk, urine, and other secretions may also contain the virus. The fluid and covering of the vesicles in the animal usually lose their infectivity within 4 to 6 days after the lesions appear. Definite evidence is available to show that in one instance in the United States the virus persisted in the field for 345 days. It is of utmost significance in the control of outbreaks, therefore, to regard the virus as resistant to destruction.

B. Transmission:

The commonest agent in the spread of foot-and-mouth disease is, of course, the infected animal itself. In fact, once an infection has entered a herd practically every animal on the premises belonging to a susceptible species will contract the disease before the outbreak is over. Milk, meat, and the raw byproducts of the slaughter of infected animals may also be instrumental in distributing the virus. The feeding of the meat or other parts of animals slaughtered in the feverish stage of the disease to susceptible animals obviously may result in infection.

The British Foot-and-Mouth Disease Research Committee found that when the carcasses of experimentally inoculated guinea pigs were bled out and kept at temperatures slightly above freezing the blood remaining in tissues around the throat was virulent after 21 days, while the bone marrow contained active virus for periods of 21 to 87 days. In experiments with cattle and hog carcasses kept in freezing temperature, active virus was found in the bone marrow for 76 days. The examples mentioned explain how meat scraps, bone, and other parts from infected animals, when included in garbage, butcher shops, or slaughter-house scraps, can be a source of infection in hogs.

C. Immunity:

Cattle which have recovered from foot-and-mouth disease generally have enough immunity to protect them from the same type of virus for a year or more, but the resistance is not lifelong. Natural immunity in cattle and swine is negligible, although some individuals have greater resistance than others.

D. Methods of control:

Two general methods of control are used: (1) The drastic slaughter method and (2) local quarantine with or without the use of serum or vaccines. In the United States the drastic slaughter method has been used exclusively. A commission from the United States Department of Agriculture made a study of foot-and-mouth disease and methods of control in Europe in May 1925. This study was authorized by a special act of Congress (43 Stat. 1325). This study showed definitely that the drastic slaughter method of eradication is best for the United States. It is based on the reasoning that the sacrifice of a few animals is much wiser than to allow so costly a disease to become permanently established, as has occurred in many other countries.

1. Under the drastic slaughter method the entire premises, all animals, and people, are placed under rigid quarantine as soon as the disease is diagnosed in a herd. As rapidly as possible, all susceptible animals are slaughtered and buried on the premises. After thorough cleaning and disinfection, the quarantine is lifted but susceptible animals are barred for sufficient time to insure that no active virus remains. All herds in the neighborhood are carefully and frequently inspected for signs of the disease. The area quarantine is not lifted until 60 or 90 days after all evidence of the disease has disappeared.

2. Local quarantine with or without the use of serum or vaccines: These methods are generally used in European countries, particularly by the continental countries where national border lines are close together, where the disease practically always exists in one area or another, and where, as a consequence of these conditions, it has been found impossible or uneconomical to use the more drastic method of slaughter of all infected and exposed animals. Even in these countries, the slaughter method is sometimes used in the beginning of outbreaks with the hope of curbing the disease before it becomes widespread. Generally speaking, the philosophy in these countries is that they must resign themselves to living with the disease.

Immunization in itself still appears to be in the experimental stage and has been found largely impractical because of the fact that there are varying strains of the disease and the vaccines made from one do not protect against another. Also, infected animals, though rendered immune in short periods, remain as potential spreaders of the disease.

In brief, conditions that favor the prompt eradication of foot-and-mouth disease are: (1) Early discovery of the infection, (2) a cooperative attitude on the part of livestock owners and local agencies, (3) dependence on time-tried measures having a scientific basis, and (4) faith in the ability of the eradication forces to conquer the disease again as they have done before.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

THE SPREAD OF FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE IN THIS COUNTRY WOULD BE DISASTROUS

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, the problem of foot-and-mouth disease is much more important than most people realize. It affects cattle, hogs, sheep, and other cloven-hoofed animals. It is one of the most highly infectious animal diseases known. There is absolutely no cure for it. The only way to stop the spread of it is to destroy all herds where the disease appears.

A few weeks ago our attention was called to a sudden outbreak of the disease in Mexico when thousands of cattle were ready to cross the border into the United States. The outbreak of the disease in Mexico was caused by the shipment of infected animals from Brazil. The intent of this bill is to prevent an outbreak in the United States by cooperating with the Government of Mexico to control and eradicate this deadly disease before it reaches across our borders.

Our country has had experience with this disease on two or three occasions. In 1914 it spread across 22 States before it could be stopped. Again in the 1920's there was an outbreak that was finally controlled after the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of valuable herds of cattle. Animals valued at more than $100,000 were destroyed in my area during the 1914 plague.

Mr. Speaker, we have had what is known as a quarantine against the shipment of cattle from South American countries over a period of years. Those of us who have insisted on maintaining that quarantine have at times been criticized. This is a further indication that the quarantine against the importation of live cattle from South America must be maintained and rules and regulations concerning the problem must be strengthened.

Mr. Speaker, everything possible should and must be done to prevent the spread of this dread disease. It must be stamped out. The spread of the disease will not only seriously injure the cattle industry, it will paralyze the food supply of America. Again, I say every precaution should be taken and everything should be done to prevent the spread of this disastrous epidemic to the United States.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

CHEAPEST TO STOP IT SOUTH OF THE BORDER

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, if anyone has any doubts on this proposition, he should see the picture of one animal with the loathsome foot-and-mouth disease. It is a virus disease that attacks the membranes of the foot and mouth. All cloven-hoofed animals are susceptible—cattle, hogs, sheep, goats, deer, elk, and antelope.

The tongue swells. The feet develop raw sores. Soon unable to eat, drink, or walk, the animal wastes away. The disease spreads rapidly and can be carried by birds. In fact, as the committee report on the bill says:

> It is one of the most infectious diseases known and is comparable only to pandemic influenza in humans in the rapidity with which it spreads.

Fences and quarantines will not stop it if contact with carriers is permitted. It can only be stamped out.

That is the reason for this emergency legislation. I do not like the prospective follow-up request for funds, but I support this proposal as the only alternative to much greater losses and costs if we permit the disease to become established in this hemisphere.

It is economy to stop this disease where it is—south of the border.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1819) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with other American countries in the control and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1819, with Mr. AREND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE].

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Chairman, the American livestock industry is in the gravest danger. The most serious and most infectious livestock malady known to man—foot-and-mouth disease—has broken out in Mexico and is raging like wildfire over that country. It is threatening to spread across the border. Unless protective action is taken without delay by the American Government, the disease inevitably will come to this country.

The bill before us today is America's answer to that threat. It is an emergency measure, proposing emergency action. It declares war on foot-and-mouth disease and pledges to the Republic of Mexico full United States aid in stamping it out.

This bill has the unanimous support of the House Committee on Agriculture and of every livestock and farm organization in the Nation. It is America's answer to the most serious threat which has confronted United States livestock since the last outbreak of this disease in the United States in 1929.

The American livestock industry is the backbone of our entire farm economy. Our investment in it is equal to the combined investment in the steel and automobile industries. With an investment of that character, we simply cannot take the chance of having foot-and-mouth disease in this country.

Mr. Chairman, time is of the essence in fighting this disease. The longer we wait the less chance we will have of suppressing it and the more it will cost us. A dollar spent to keep this disease from our border now will be a hundred dollars saved if we are forced to fight it on our home soil.

This bill deserves the support of every Member here today.

The outbreak in Mexico now covers an area of some 45,000 square miles. The Mexican authorities do not have the equipment, the experience, or the men to deal effectively with the disease. They have indicated that our cooperation will be welcome.

If this disease gets into the United States, no one can foretell how many million cattle might have to be slaughtered.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLIE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to compliment the gentleman on the very splendid effort he has made in bringing this bill before the House. There is one question I would like to ask. I was reading some time ago in the papers where the statement was made that a huge fence was in process of construction between Texas and Mexico. I would like to know what the gentleman knows about that operation.

Mr. GILLIE. I have heard that there was a bill before the House now to build a fence along the border. That is a long-range matter. A fence would never stop this disease if it ever got within 50 miles of the border. If this disease ever gets to within 50 miles of the border we will have it in this country, as sure as the world. The fence will not stop it. The fence might help in keeping some animals from coming across the border, like deer or other wild animals, farm pigeons or perhaps some dogs. We must deal with the disease more effectively right now, if we hope to prevent it from spreading in the United States.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLIE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. In connection with that, the gentleman will recall the witness we had before the committee who outlined an idea that he proposed, that a strip of land between the Mexican border and a point in the State of Texas might be used for a quarantine area. I wonder what the gentleman thinks of that, and how large he thinks it should be.

Mr. GILLIE. It might be necessary to do that yet; having a zone along the border, perhaps 50 or even 100 miles wide as a safety zone in which, if something should happen, we could prevent it from spreading into the country. But, in my opinion, if we get to work now and keep this disease down in the southern part of Mexico, where they have it now, some 250 miles from the border, it will be a lot better than to have a zone. But that will be worked out when the Mexican officials come here after we pass this bill. They are all ready to come. I understand that the Bureau of Animal Industry has their visas and telegrams all ready, and the Mexican officials will be here in 48 hours after we send them word.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLIE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. I think it is only fair for the RECORD to show that some of us who have favored the building of an international fence all the way from San Diego, Calif., to Brownsville, Tex., have never claimed that that would be an answer to our immediate and emergent problem. The truth is that there is already authorization for the International Boundary Commission to build a fence along the border, and are now building some of it in sections. That has been actively advocated for 25 years not only by the cattlemen but by the Department of State, the Treasury Department, acting through its customs officers and border patrol, and the Department of Justice through its Bureau of Immigration, so any idea about the fence is looking to a long-range program not only to help establish the line and mark the border and provide some protection against smugglers and aliens and things of that sort, but also to stop the smuggling and the drifting of animals, either domestic or wild, from Old Mexico across the border into the United States. It is my judgment, and that, I think, of all the cattlemen in my great big district, that it would in the long run be of very great benefit. So I want the record to be clear that none of us who favor the fence have said that that is the answer to the immediate problem. We are strong for this bill the gentleman has so very ably sponsored.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLIE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The discussion of the fence will come up shortly, but a good deal of the discussion is about repairing the existing fence. It is not a new idea.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLIE. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have been advocating for several years, and for the last 4 or 5 years I have gone before committees asking that money be appropriated to build a fence along our southern international border. We have already actually built quite a bit of that fence, but not all of it. As the gentleman from Texas says, that is not advocated now as the sole or best means of stopping that disease, but there are plenty of other reasons for such a fence. We know the ineffectiveness of a fence to stop the spread of this dread disease, but the fence should have been built long ago.

Mr. GILLIE. That is the point I wanted to get across, the fact that a fence built now would not be very effective in trying to stop this disease. The fence problem is another one, beyond that.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLIE. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the hoof-and-mouth disease affect horses, sheep, and hogs?

Mr. GILLIE. Sheep and hogs, yes; but not horses.

Mr. Chairman, prevention of this disease is so vital to the great American livestock industry that we had better forget about the border between Mexico and the United States, insofar as spending American dollars is concerned.

I sincerely hope that we will not have to spend huge sums of money to eradicate this disease, but if we have to do it, it is better to spend it in southern Mexico than it is to have to spend a hundred times as much all over the United States if the disease gets into this country.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLIE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman from Indiana is one of the recognized authorities in this country on diseases of livestock. May I ask him if he feels that this disease can be controlled or if steps must be taken to eradicate the animals within the quarantine area?

Mr. GILLIE. I think the United States has the best way of controlling the disease. That is destruction of the animals, followed by thorough disinfection.

It is necessary to stamp out this disease. The problem in Mexico is going to be different. As you know, they now have established three different zones around Mexico City and Veracruz. The first zone is where the animals now are infected. They are going to keep those animals there, and if the animals get better they will slaughter them for meat after they recover. In the next zone anything that becomes infected will be destroyed.

There is one picture I hope you do not have to see, and that is the picture of a big trench, about half as wide as this room and about three to four times as long, where they drive in perhaps 100, 150, or 200 head of cattle—full-bloods, pure-bred—cattle grades—hogs, sheep, goats, perhaps animals that are worth thousands of dollars, driven into this big trench and five or six men are stationed on each side with their rifles shooting.

I remember back in 1914 when we had the outbreak in my country and I saw just such a picture. I know what a terrible disease this is.

I have been assured by officials of the Bureau of Animal Industry that they have men and equipment ready to move into Mexico the moment this legislation is passed.

The longer we wait, the harder it will be to wipe out this disease and the less chance we will have of success. We cannot afford to delay action on this bill.

The Senate already has acted on a measure similar to this one. The bill passed the Senate unanimously 3 days ago, with very little debate. The House should—and I believe the House will—do likewise.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, the outbreak of the hoof and mouth disease in Mexico is the greatest threat to our economy I know of. If we permit this disease to spread to America, it will sooner or later practically paralyze our American economy. We will have to put under strict quarantine any area in which the outbreak occurs and immediately begin to slaughter off animals in that area. With our transportation system such as it is, it is possible for this disease to jump not only 100 miles or 500 miles but a thousand miles or more over night. Someone may walk through a field and get some of the virus on his shoes and then get into a plane and fly from Texas to New York. The next day or the day after that the cattle in that area will be infected. We gave honest consideration to the drafting of this legislation. We have brought in the best bill we knew how to draft, after consulting with the best authorities we could contact, in order to safeguard the rights of our Government in every way. It has the unanimous approval of the Department of Agriculture and the unanimous approval of the Department of State. I hope it will be the pleasure of the House to pass it by a unanimous vote.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. I have been studying this problem for the last 60 days and, as has been said here today, the most effective method is by slaughtering the cattle. Does this bill give full authority to permit our Government to go into Mexico and have those cattle slaughtered in Mexico as well as to treat them medicinally?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. The Secretary of Agriculture is given broad power under this legislation. While that might not be the right way to legislate, it is the wisest way in this particular case. Our scientists will have to go down there and work out with the Mexican authorities the best program to eradicate the disease.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE].

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, my district and the State of Louisiana are very much interested in this legislation. I am very glad to see that the committee has been able to bring this legislation to the floor of the House so expeditiously. I do not believe it is necessary to have any further argument about the bill because at the time the rule was under consideration the legislation was fully explained during that debate. I do not know of any opposition to the legislation. I might say in passing, Mr. Chairman, that in recent years my State has expanded the cattle industry tremendously. Coming from a State where 20 years ago all we had was scrub cattle, with the eradication of the cattle tick, the cattle industry in my State is expanding rapidly. Now, if you go through my State, you will see nothing but high-bred cattle, such as white-faced Herefords, Angus cattle, and others of the finest breeds in the United States.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily back of this bill and am supporting it. You remember the old saying, "A stitch in time saves nine." I think we can magnify that simile and say, "A step in time will save ninety-nine" in this case. We must fight this disease before it reaches our border. I think this legislation is the effective way of doing it.

Referring again to the matter of a fence along the border with Mexico to which I referred when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE] had the floor, I want to emphasize that building it is a long-range program on which we have been working for years. It is a vast stretch of desert country along the Mexican border from El Paso to the Pacific Ocean, and while it has been surveyed and marked, it has never been fenced nor adequately guarded and patrolled. Each year several miles of border fence have been built, but thus far it is only a beginning. I think it is important enough for various reasons in addition to the danger from the foot-and-mouth disease, to continue the program of fence building despite the scarcity of steel and concrete.

Members will recall that I have frequently advocated a better guarding of the border against smuggling and the importation of drugs, narcotics, and the like, and the minimizing illegal entry of aliens to the United States. A suitable fence would help to protect the border in many ways.

One reason why I am very anxious that we cooperate with Mexico effectively in stopping the spread of this foot-and-mouth disease as far south in Mexico as possible is that we want to disrupt the international trade between the two countries as little as possible. There is a vast trade amounting to many millions of dollars between the United States and Mexico, and many thousands of persons ordinarily cross and recross the border daily and hourly, which traffic would have to be stopped or closely guarded if this dread disease gets within a 100 miles of that border. In order to take necessary precautions against the spread of the virus it might be not only disastrous but extremely costly to carry it out. Quarantining or stopping the plague in the heart of Mexico would be far less expensive than fighting it, possibly ineffectively, when it reaches an area just south of the border, when fighting it on the border would disrupt commerce and travel.

As a citizen of Arizona a quarter century ago when the foot-and-mouth disease was prevalent in California, I remember the extreme precautions taken by local authority in Arizona then as our State fought desperately to keep the disease from spreading to us from the west. At that time every passenger train from California carrying passengers into Arizona had to require passengers and crew members alighting on Arizona soil to walk through a disinfectant placed on the platform in shallow pans. These pans were placed at the steps of every car opened, somewhat as the small steps are placed by the pullman porters for passengers who are alighting. I remember distinctly that I "hit the sawdust trail"—the disinfectant in the shallow pans was a saturation of sawdust—during that period when this disease was prevailing in California and probably it did not do the soles of my shoes any good, but I hope it killed any virus that I might have carried back with me. That great amount of trouble and expense was undoubtedly worth while, for the disease did not invade our State.

Likewise, arriving automobiles were driven through sterilizing pits as a part of this same process of precaution, all of which was a tremendous expense but shows what is required to fight this disease when it comes very close home. However, the cost in such precautionary measures is but slight compared with the necessary cost of killing the infected animals to eradicate the disease. We must fight this thing effectively no matter what the cost.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ZIMMERMAN].

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am glad this bill comes before the House today with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Agriculture of this House. Our chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] when this problem first confronted our country, appointed the gentlemar from Indiana, Dr. GILLIE, a member of our committee, as chairman of a subcommittee to make an investigation of this terrible disease that has broken out in Mexico. I want to take this opportunity to compliment the gentleman from Indiana, Dr. GILLIE, for the fine service he has rendered our country in sponsoring this bill and in doing so much to get it before this body today. The gentleman from Indiana, Dr. GILLIE, is a veterinarian who has been through some of these battles. He knows what it means to the people of this country. As he so ably told you a few minutes ago, this industry is one of the most important industries of this Nation. It has more to do with our national economy than probably anything else. I hope there is no opposition to this bill. Every State in the Union will be affected by this disease if it breaks out in the United States. It will not only affect the big cattle ranches in Texas and other parts of the country, but it will affect every dairy herd in the country. It will reach Chicago, New York, and all our great centers where livestock is distributed. Not only will it affect cattle, but it will affect sheep, hogs, goats, and in some cases it has affected human beings.

I think the provisions of this bill are wise, because a stitch in time saves nine. We were told in our committee that the State of California spent $200,000,000 in getting rid of this terrible disease, to say nothing of what our Government has expended and what other States have expended to get rid of the disease. This is our opportunity to go down into Mexico and fight the disease on their soil. The experts who came before our committee said we could not afford to have a laboratory in this country to make tests in regard to the treatment of this disease because it was so terrible that we could not afford to have an experiment station here in our own country. For that reason, they wanted to go down there and establish laboratories and make a study of this disease to find out the means of eradicating it. We have an opportunity to cooperate with the Government of Mexico in stamping out this disease before it gets to this country. That is what we want to do. We all felt it was to our great advantage to fight the terrible war we have gone through on foreign soil and not have the war fought on our soil. We do not want to have to fight the foot-and-mouth disease in this country.

So I feel this bill should have the unanimous support of this body. It will affect you men in the cities. Do not forget that. You will have a shortage of milk. You will have a shortage of beef. The price of beef will go up. The entire livestock industry of this great country will be absolutely destroyed or at least greatly hampered for many years to come.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. In our dealings with this foot-and-mouth disease, the fact that we are going to give this power to the Department of Agriculture to go to Mexico to try to work out a solution of the problem, does not the gentleman think the Mexican people ought to be grateful to us for sending our men down there and that they should be willing to pay at least 50 percent of the cost of doing away with that disease in their own country, and that we ought to insist that they pay at least 50 percent of it?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I may say to my friend from Pennsylvania that I think the Secretary of Agriculture will try to work out just such a plan; and I will say this further, that we had before our committee a distinguished citizen of our country who is probably the largest rancher in Mexico, a man who is very close to the Mexican Government. He told us that the Mexican Government would cooperate with us. That is all this bill seeks to do, enable our country to go down there and cooperate with the Mexican Government. Mexico is a sovereign power. We cannot go down there and take control unless they give us permission or invite us. This bill permits us to accept such an invitation and we have to leave it up to our own Secretary of Agriculture to work out plans of cooperating with the Mexican Government in dealing with this thing and do everything that is possible and necessary to stamp out the disease and make sure that it does not get up into Pennsylvania where the gentleman lives or up into Missouri where I live, and to every section of this country where cattle raising is so important.

Mr. RICH. I agree with the gentleman in that, but I cannot forget that in the last 6 or 8 years we have been stressing the good-neighbor policy, going into the South American countries and helping them instead of letting them help themselves, and bearing part of the expense. We have been acting as though we were all-wise, all-powerful, and had wealth beyond measure, that the people of this country did not care a rap about paying taxes. I resent the action of some of these departments going into these other nations and squandering American dollars and burdening American taxpayers at the very time we are trying to help them. It seems to me these countries ought to do a little more to help themselves. I am even sick and tired of trying to help American individuals help themselves when they do not want to help themselves. Everybody in this country wants to get on the back of the American taxpayer. We ought to try to guard against just those things in this bill.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I agree with everything that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, but I do not believe he realizes just what a very critical situation we face. This is an emergency which must be met now. As the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] said, this disease will jump from two to three hundred miles at a time. Unless we get down there and do what we can to help these Mexicans, we will soon have it in our own country. They have not the technicians to cope with it; they do not know as much about this subject as we do. Unless we go down there and help them, it could come to our country, and I am sure the gentleman does not want that to happen.

Mr. RICH. No; I do not want that to happen, and I want to do what I can to help prevent it; but I want the people to realize that, if they want help from us, they have got to help themselves instead of trying to get us to carry the entire load. I want to stop that.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. This is one instance where we cannot stop and argue about the method, because we have got to go down and cooperate with these people. I think this is a time when by supporting the bill the gentleman will be rendering a real service to his country.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I agree with the gentleman that, in order to be effective and not waste our money, we must have full cooperation from this country.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I think the gentleman knows that we have been assured that we are going to get that from the men who have been down there and who know the situation; in other words, we have got to deal with those people. They have shown a very friendly attitude up to this time. They have invited us to come there and give them the help they need to stamp out this disease.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. We hope there will be full cooperation for our own protection.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I would like to call attention to the fact that the provision included in this legislation providing for a report every 30 days is a pretty good indication of the apprehension that members of this committee had in this particular instance.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. That is right; and I think that is a guaranty to our friend from Pennsylvania and others that we will know what is going on.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I yield.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I think my friend from Missouri will agree that we do not expect them to go down there and rehabilitate the Mexican economy or to upset it. It is a multimillion-dollar proposition. I think perhaps my record of voting against things here is pretty well known; however, I am willing to go all out for this measure to protect not only our beef and dairy herds but pork and the rest. This is a pretty good guaranty toward that end, and I think we better act fast.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I am glad to have the gentleman's views, because I am sure all of the committee feels that way.

Mr. ELSTON. I am certain that will be done, too.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I want to touch on the point that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] mentioned, and that is the spirit of cooperation. The gentleman will recall Mr. Kleberg, a former colleague of ours here in the House, appeared before the committee on several occasions and emphasized that unless the Republic of Mexico and the rank and file of the people cooperate with this program it cannot be a success. I am sure the gentleman joins with me in the hope that the rank and file of the people of Mexico will cooperate. It all depends on a system of education on the part of the President and the rest of the Government of Mexico.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The gentleman is quite right.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RAMEY. I want to thank the gentleman for bringing the challenge before the House that this affects city as well as rural areas. In the matter of a disease of this kind there is no rural or city area.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. It will affect Ohio, Missouri, and every State in this Union and that is the reason we should take action today. That is why I hope we can get the approval of this measure by every Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, we all realize the importance of this bill. May I say that if my close neighbor's house gets on fire, I better get out there and help him put it out without finding out who is going to pay the bill of the fire department.

We better put this out and put it out now as long as we are welcomed in Mexico to do it before a potential catastrophe overtakes our country.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS] may be permitted to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD in favor of this measure.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, this bill asking the Congress to make an initial appropriation to eradicate the hoof-and-mouth disease now ravishing the livestock industry in Mexico will no doubt receive some criticism from people not familiar with the seriousness of the situation or the threat that it constitutes to our own livestock industry, as well as to our economy in general.

I realize too that this is probably the beginning of a long hard fight, and to completely eradicate the disease in Mexico we will have to have the wholehearted cooperation of the Mexican Government. It will require stern enforcement of every regulation laid down by the authorities. Unless we clean up Mexico where the disease broke out only last September and is now sweeping the country like a prairie fire it will only be a matter of months before it crosses the border whether or not we close the border.

To combat it here will be extremely costly and avail us nothing so long as it rages on the other side of the border. We can never be free of it, or feel safe, unless it is eradicated in Mexico, so we better do it now, and the sooner the better. I recall as though it were yesterday the outbreak we had here in the early twenties, when I saw herds numbering 100 head driven into large trenches dug adjacent to the barns and then shot, covered with quicklime, and buried. The premises in every case were placed under strict quarantine during which they needed to be thoroughly cleaned up, disinfected, and so forth. In some cases where the affected livestock were kept in old barns or sheds the buildings were burned as the only means of cleaning out the disease. While the disease in many cases does not prove fatal the cattle become so ill they are reduced to bones and hide. It takes a long time for an animal to recover, if ever. In dairy cows their milk usually dries up and if they ever again become useful it will be after their next freshening period. It affects all cloven-foot animals with the same disastrous results.

I sincerely hope that we can get the needed appropriation and the cooperation in Mexico to go to work inside the next 30 days. Eradication in Mexico will not be as costly as in the States because the value of their livestock is just about 30 percent of the value of our own, except in the Mexico City milkshed, where most of the dairy cattle have been imported from Minnesota and Wisconsin. There, I understand, the infection is heaviest, and eradication will be extremely costly.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, any effort to prevent the spread of hoof-and-mouth disease in this country is not academic to those Representatives in Congress who come from areas which have been infected in the past. In the attack of 1914, the congressional district which I have the honor to represent suffered severely. This was through no fault of the farmers and stock producers of that section.

It so happens that there are a large number of feeding lots in the Second District of Michigan. The steers are purchased largely in the Chicago market, conditioned in these lots, and the fattened steers are sold in Detroit, Toledo, Buffalo, and other slaughtering centers. When this disease got started in the stockyards it naturally followed the steers to our feeding lots. The manner in which the disease spreads and in which the infection is communicated has been minutely and adequately outlined in this debate.

In 1914 I was prosecuting attorney in my home county. The State bureau of animal industry was charged with the enforcement of sanitary laws. The epidemic was so great and so dangerous that the Federal Government took over at once, and by efficient Federal direction and enthusiastic State cooperation hoof-and-mouth disease was stamped out in Michigan almost before it got started; however, 274 of our finest herds were slaughtered and buried in great trenches as a preventive measure. Not only that, but all other cloven-hoof animals on these farms were also destroyed.

The loss was terrific, not only in dollars and cents, but in the destruction of prize cattle, which had more than the commercial value allowed by the Government as compensation.

So, Mr. Chairman, I have personal knowledge as to what can happen if this dread scourge gets a foothold in our land. This legislation is necessary. Time is of the essence and there should not be 1 day's delay. I feel sure that the Congress will not quibble and that it will pass this legislation unanimously and now.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, foot-and-mouth disease, caused by a virus, is one of the most highly infectious diseases which affects the cloven-hoofed animals such as cattle, hogs, sheep, goats, and deer. It is a disease that attacks the membranes of the mouth and the hoof, rendering the animal virtually incapable of walking and eating. It renders the animal almost worthless.

The present epidemic in Mexico affects an area about the size of the State of Missouri and includes some 2,000,000 head of cattle. Mexico has approximately 9,000,000 head of cattle.

Outbreaks of foot-and-mouth disease occurred in the United States in 1914. The disease spread from Chicago into 22 States before it could be stopped. The State of California in 1924 spent $300,000,000 eradicating the disease. The only acceptable and successful method of stopping the disease is to kill the animal. This frequently means the destruction of all herds in which the disease appears together with all herds directly exposed and all other wild animals in the area by a thorough disinfection of the premises involved.

The resolution now before us, authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with Mexico in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease. It will cost some money, but this will be only a drop in the bucket compared to the cost should the disease appear in the United States. It will appear in the United States if permitted to go unchecked in Mexico.

The old adage, "A stitch in time saves nine," might well be applied in this case. We might also say that our neighbor's house is on fire. Are we going to help put out the fire or will we sit idly by until our own property is consumed.

It is my opinion this resolution should have the wholehearted support of the Congress.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, in 1924 California had an outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease. It was very bad in my home county, the county of San Joaquin. That epidemic cost our State about $10,000,000 in the value of cattle killed and in administrative costs. The indirect cost was also great. For instance, in order to make the eradication effective, it became necessary to kill over 20,000 deer, as it was felt that they were or might be infected, and in turn infect our livestock.

There is only one sure way to avoid this disease. That is to eliminate all possible sources of infection. We have been told by experts, such as our colleague the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE], that once that disease gets a foothold it will spread throughout our entire country unless the sources of infection are absolutely eliminated. Our congressional delegation has a Subcommittee on Agriculture of which the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] is chairman. He has called numerous meetings, all of which I have attended as a member of that committee. We heard from representatives of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of State. From what these men told us and from what Members of the House and Senate who are familiar with the dangers of the foot-and-mouth disease told us we became convinced that we should stop short of nothing in trying to prevent infection of our cattle, due to the presence of the disease in Mexico now. The bill under consideration seemed to us to meet the danger. I therefore wish to add my voice to the many others that we pass this legislation so we may realize our hope that we will not have to face, in our own country, the dreaded foot-and-mouth disease. I know my people will confirm my great gratitude to the gentleman from Indiana, Dr. GILLIE, for his great service in bringing this problem to us, and in furnishing the leadership that will result in its passage.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LECOMPTE].

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Chairman, every man in the United States has an interest in preventing the hoof-and-mouth epidemic. I presume that Iowa and Texas are friendly rivals in the matter of the cattle industry; Texas, perhaps, No. 1 in the total number of beef cattle; Iowa, No. 1 in the number and value of corn-fed cattle. In this case time is of the essence. The whole United States has a very vital interest in this measure today. Every city, hamlet, and village, as well as the Corn Belt area, is deeply interested in this resolution.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOEVEN].

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEVEN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GILLIE. Something was said a few minutes ago about inserting in the bill a record of reports; that we should receive certain reports from the infected area every so often. No one need be afraid of that, because the Bureau of Animal Industry will receive reports every 24 hours on this disease.

Mr. HOEVEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, the United States has had the good fortune of fighting and winning its battles on foreign soil. During the First World War, as well as during the Second World War, no enemy set foot upon our shores. That is exactly the thing we are doing here today; fighting the battle of the foot-and-mouth disease in Mexico.

I commend to the membership of this House the report of the subcommittee which presents this bill. It is very comprehensive, indeed. Those of us who come from the cattle country and from the great agricultural States know something about this dreadful foot-and-mouth disease. Those of you from the cities and the larger centers of population could well afford to read this very comprehensive report.

Mr. Chairman, we have a practical problem here. Whether or not certain animals with the disease were illegally imported into Mexico from Brazil is water over the dam. We have a very practical problem right here and now. The foot-and-mouth disease is raging in Mexico. They do things very differently in that republic than we do here at home. They let their cattle run at large, and there are no fences. Some of the Mexican farmers own but one ox or some such animal that is almost sacred to them. In eradicating this disease, these oxen or other animals may have to be taken away and slaughtered. Very little has been done by the Mexican Government to educate the people about the disease, and there are few veterinarians in Mexico. Three methods have been proposed during the past few years to eradicate this disease; first, by immunization, which has not been found to be practical; second, by quarantine and disinfection, which was not successful. So, the only really effective way of eradicating the disease is by slaughtering the infected animals.

If we are called upon to do this in Mexico, we may have some trouble. Then, too, the eradication program will cost money. No one knows what the cost will be. Some Members may feel that they are between the devil and the deep blue sea on this kind of legislation. We all want to economize in Government and reduce expenditures, but we have a practical situation which we must act upon now.

The great epidemic of the disease which swept this country in 1914 should demonstrate to us the need for doing something right now before the thing gets out of control in Mexico. In the short period of 3 months in 1914 this disease swept 22 of our States and we were required to slaughter 172,000 animals during that period, at a cost of over $5,000,000. If the disease once gets into this country it will spread like a prairie fire. It will affect milk production and meat production and many segments of our economy. It might even result in national chaos itself.

The people of Iowa, I am sure, do not want the foot-and-mouth disease to get within the borders of our State. We do not want it anywhere near us. We want to stamp it out before it gets near the Mexican border. Iowa, with its many cattle and hogs, simply cannot afford to take a chance. In the long run, whatever time, effort, and money this Government is called upon to use in eradicating this dreadful disease now while it is still far away should pay big dividends, not only to the farmers of Iowa, but to the entire Nation.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FISHER].

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending bill. The subject has already been thoroughly covered. This is no time to quibble over who pays what. The house is on fire. I represent a district along the Mexican border within 200 miles of which this dread disease is now raging. In its movement the disease recognizes no border lines. Within less than 3 months following its outbreak in Mexico the virus had spread to 8 States and more than 50,000 cattle are affected. An additional 2,000,000 have been exposed. Every day hundreds of new cases are being reported. That simply serves to emphasize the importance of speed in passing this legislation and getting our experts into Mexico to work with Mexican officials in making war on this terrible malady.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, in our State, as one gentleman a moment ago said, we are in the beginning of a new industry, the beef cattle industry. In years gone by we had there the experience of having the cattle-tick fever break out and then having to slaughter the cattle after the disease became established. I have also seen fine dairy herds where Bang's disease broke out. There were farmers who could not afford to have their cattle slaughtered, but they would have to have their cattle slaughtered and bear the greater part of the loss. We have in Georgia some fine pure-bred Aberdeen Angus cattle herds. I myself have one. We have fine pure-bread Hereford cattle herds, both the polled and the horned. I fear that if this disease gets established there, all these herds would be wiped out and possibly would never be reestablished.

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. The State of Arizona is very much interested in this proposed legislation. Not only do we have a great many cattle in our State, but we have one of the major ports of entry at Nogales, Ariz., where cattle have been shipped into the United States from Mexico. All shipments of cattle from our southern neighbor have been stopped, but this does not mean that the dreadful hoof-and-mouth disease cannot come into our country at an early date. In view of the fact that the disease is carried by ticks which can be brought into our country by means of either fowl or animal, it is eminently necessary that this law be passed forthwith; otherwise, we may suddenly find that the cattle of the United States are infected in spots far north of the border. This is an insidious disease because it can spread so quickly and it is so difficult to control. This is an opportunity for our scientists and our agricultural experts to go into Mexico, where the disease now prevails, and develop new methods of cure, possibly a vaccine which will not only eradicate the disease from Mexico at this time, but will make it possible to control it for all time in the States. I commend the Committee on Agriculture for bringing in this proposed bill, and I trust that the House of Representatives will see fit to act favorably on it at this time.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I also come from the Mexican border because the district I have the honor to represent extends from El Paso down to the Big Bend of Texas, more than 300 miles. In that district are some of the finest herds of cattle in all the land. The cattlemen in my part of the country are worried; they are terribly alarmed about this situation. I think everybody who has given this matter any study or investigation appreciates the importance of this legislation. The big thing, as I view it, is action, and that very promptly, so that the Secretary of Agriculture, through his accredited representatives, can get busy.

Foot-and-mouth disease is the most contagious and dangerous known to animals. We can take no chances. If that disease should become an epidemic in this country, no person can estimate the damage that would be done to the livestock industry. We must fight it in Mexico and stamp it out before it crosses the border. One of my good friends, Mr. Raymond Bell, of Durango, Mexico, and one of the largest cattle raisers in that country, testified before the committee last week. He has seen the infected herds in Mexico and knows how alarming the situation is. In company with him, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Zimmerman, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Worley, Hon. Richard Kleberg, Judge Joe Montague, Mr. Dolph Briscoe, and Mr. Dolph Briscoe, Jr., we went to the White House last week so Mr. Bell could give the President first-hand information of the true situation. The President is giving the fullest cooperation of our Government, but enabling legislation like this bill is necessary. That is the reason I urge haste in its passage. Time is of the essence.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WORLEY].

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to see the same unanimity of opinion on the floor of the House that was most evident in the work of the subcommittee and the full Committee on Agriculture. It might be well, however, to bring out now that unless we do enact this legislation quickly the Department of Agriculture is absolutely powerless to go into Mexico and take any steps whatever toward eradicating and suppressing the foot-and-mouth disease.

The State Department also is without power to continue their negotiations. So, with all deference to the membership of the House, I believe that if we could get along with the reading of the bill for amendment, we could pass this legislation quickly.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WORLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think it should be understood that the officials of the United States are not going down into Mexico to actually kill the cattle, but that we are going down there to furnish technical skill and to work in cooperation with the Mexican officials to control and eradicate this disease.

Mr. WORLEY. I am glad that the gentleman has made that point. Too many of us are assuming that this involves a gigantic expenditure of money. That does not necessarily follow at all, because the disease can be suppressed and eradicated so that eventually there will be no danger to us.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think it is going to cost plenty of money, but I do not think the impression should be left that we are going down there and kill these cattle. It is going to be done by the Mexican Government, and they must cooperate with us, and we are furnishing our financial assistance and skill.

Mr. WORLEY. But when it is necessary to stamp out the disease and the cattle must be killed, of course, they will be killed with the consent of the Mexican Government.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, due to the recent outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease in Mexico, the livestock producers have asked that the border between the United States and Mexico be closed and guarded. They testified that some 130 head of Brahma bulls were imported October 1945 to Mexico from Brazil. The Bureau of Animal Industry protested this shipment and asked that these bulls be left on an island for a sufficient length of time to be certain that they were not infected. This was not done and now a tract of land in Mexico nearly 400 miles square has become infected. The committee concluded the hearings by recommending that sufficient funds be provided to assist Mexico in stamping out this disease and further provided for proper protection along the Mexican border.

This disease is so highly infectious that every object with which the diseased animal comes in contact may become a source of infection to other animals. And while the other animal may not be susceptible to the infection, it may become a carrier of the germ. In fact the germs may be carried on shoes, clothing, or bodies of persons; upon the feet or bodies of poultry, birds, dogs, cats, or other animals which may have been in the immediate vicinity of an afflicted animal. Many investigators feel that even insects or particles of straw used as litter might well be a carrier of the infection.

There are three methods of control:

Immunization: This method is in the experimental stage. There are varying strains of the disease and the vaccines made from one do not protect against another. Also, it seems only to control and not eradicate the plague.

Quarantine and disinfection: This is not a satisfactory method, as countries using this plan have constant recurrences of the disease.

The slaughter method: This has been found to be the most effective, provided the reinfection from outside sources is thorough and complete.

The first serious outbreak occurred in the United States in 1914. Cattle, hogs, and sheep in 22 different States and the District of Columbia were slaughtered and the disease eradicated. This outbreak was caused by the importation of dressed meat from the Argentine. In Illinois 1,226 herds were slaughtered; Pennsylvania, 892; Michigan, 272; Ohio, 228; and other States totaling 3,556 herds or 172,222 head of livestock. Since a rigid embargo was established in 1927, we have had only one minor outbreak, that in garbage-fed hogs in California in 1929, due to garbage brought ashore from a ship just returned from Buenos Aires.

It is easy to imagine what terrible damage might occur if the disease should spread from Mexico to the cattle country in Texas and from there into the western livestock-producing areas. Undoubtedly every assistance and aid should be given to Mexico to stamp out this infectious and destructive disease.

Mr. Chairman, I support this measure and compliment the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE], the subcommittee chairman, on the dispatch with which he has handled this matter.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL].

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, which has held extensive hearings on the subject of foot-and-mouth disease, I am considerably alarmed over the testimony presented. I am convinced the bill now before the House providing for cooperation with Mexico to combat this dread disease should be passed.

Ordinarily I would not favor a measure which seems to give so much power to a Cabinet officer. Nor am I enthusiastic over the idea of entering another country, the rank and file of which we are not absolutely certain will cooperate with outsiders. As I was told during the hearings, the Mexican Government has first to do a selling job on this proposal to its own people.

This selling job must get the Mexicans to like the idea of losing their oxen, their beef, and dairy cattle by necessarily ruthless steps which our Department of Agriculture must and will take to eliminate this disease. It remains to be seen how successful the salesmanship of Mexican authorities will be. As one who wants to see our campaign against hoof-and-mouth disease progress, I hope we will be able to gain their confidence and proceed immediately.

While we are extolling the crusade the Agriculture Department is about to launch, let us not forget that it will cost money, and a lot of money. Naturally, if the hoof-and-mouth disease is stamped out south of the border, the cost will be justified. I am sure with our experts, scientists, and veterinarians, highly specialized and well informed as they are, the battle will be won.

This calls for an aggressive war and carrying it into our neighbor's back yard. I feel sure everything will go as planned and that we will be doing the Mexicans and ourselves a great service when final victory is attained.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, coming from a State whose annual income is derived to the extent of at least 85 or 90 percent from livestock and livestock products, it goes without saying that I am certainly interested in this legislation and absolutely in favor of it. I do think, however, that with all the testimony we have had before our committee and with the debate that we have had here today, we should analyze the situation and look forward to what might happen.

This legislation, to me, has many possibilities of repercussions. There are certain points of it that I did not like to support in the committee and which I do not like to vote for in the bill, because I do not like to see the Secretary of Agriculture have so much power, regardless of who the Secretary of Agriculture might happen to be. I did not like it during the other sessions and I certainly do not like it now. We have to meet these situations that exist, however. This legislation has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Agriculture. I wish to say to every Member here that I have great confidence in the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], and the ranking minority member and ex-chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN], the chairman of the subcommittee, the Honorable GEORGE GILLIE, and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the Honorable JOHN TABER, and in view of the fact also that we are going to have these 30-day reports from the Department of Agriculture, I feel that we are all justified in voting "aye" on this legislation which is now before us.

The Congress can give; and the Congress can take away.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYLE].

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, fortunately it appears that the entire membership is conscious of the necessity for this legislation. The tremendous importance of protecting our herds from the menace of foot-and-mouth disease was forcefully brought to my attention last October by Mr. Tom Lasater, of Falfurrias, Tex., and by others who are vitally concerned with keeping our country free of infection.

Some Members have questioned the advisability of this country's moving into Mexico with unlimited funds in the effort to stamp out this malady, having, I fear, some question in their minds as to the cooperation we may expect from Mexico. But since they live so far away from that splendid nation, and because I am so close to it, I would like to call their attention to the wonderful cooperation this country has always enjoyed from our neighbor to the south.

Throughout the war, particularly, the Mexican Government did all things possible to help win the victory that was finally achieved. They contributed their great national resources, their manpower, and deserve the highest commendation for their full and valuable cooperation. We are very happy with our neighbors and have all confidence that they will contribute their share to eliminate foot-and-mouth disease which unfortunately broke out in the northern part of the Mexican Republic.

It is, of course, unfortunate that we must spend this money, but it is inevitable. It was our reluctance to spend money, our hesitance to involve ourselves in the affairs of other governments, which caused us to wait so long before using our resources to combat a still more insidious disease which threatened us long before 1941. We could have saved many lives as well as millions of dollars had we acted then before it actually touched us.

We are receiving excellent cooperation from the Department of Agriculture and, as I have said, from the Government of Mexico. The legislature of my own State of Texas has appropriated a substantial sum to carry out this program.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, the livestock industry in Louisiana has grown to huge proportions in recent years. This has been made possible in part by the improvement of our pastures and has further been made possible by the building of thousands of cattle ponds, which are available in every locality. This industry therefore in my native State is a major consideration to our economy and business life.

Great herds of some of the finest blooded cattle in America now feed on our hillsides and in our valleys. Because of a salubrious climate, these cattle thrive and develop. The development of new grasses available to the livestock makes fall field grazing and early spring grazing a matter of course. As a matter of fact, very few days in the course of a year are unfit for outside grazing purposes. The finest type of Angus and Hereford herds are seen on many a farm and milch cattle which produce enormous quantities of milk have caused the dairying industry to expand to most unusual proportions.

I therefore am vitally concerned with the possible spread of the hoof-and-mouth disease. Although my congressional district in the State of Louisiana is removed from the Mexican border by over 1,000 miles, our cattlemen and our dairymen are already alarmed at the reports of the wildfire-like spread of this dreaded cattle disease. Many meetings have occurred and much discussion has taken place regarding what action should be taken to prevent the spread of this epidemic disease to our cloven-footed friends.

Many of us remember the heroic efforts which occurred years ago when the hoof-and-mouth disease penetrated the State of Texas. At that time, Louisiana was not a huge cattle-raising State as it is at the present time and although the boundaries of Texas are contiguous to the boundaries of our State, the people did not have the investments of the present in blooded livestock and were therefore not so vitally affected. This is contrasted with the spontaneous reaction of our cattlemen at the present time. They do not want this disease to spread into the United States and they want prompt and effective action by this Congress. The bill which is presented to the House of Representatives will give the Secretary of Agriculture authority which he says he needs. I hope it will go far enough to prevent any possibility of this dreaded scourge crossing the Rio Grande and moving northward into the great Southwest—the region of our country more than any other section devoted to the propagation of cattle. This legislation is vital and I am therefore pleased to give to it my most wholehearted support.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, foot-and-mouth disease is the most serious and devastating malady affecting livestock. This is true not only because of its disabling effects, but because of the fact that it is extremely contagious. For these reasons, when foot-and-mouth disease has broken out in this country in the past, the most drastic methods have been used to suppress it. The methods used were the prompt slaughter of all affected and exposed animals, as well as thorough fumigation and disinfection of all buildings and premises which might have become contaminated.

Foot-and-mouth disease is prevalent in most parts of the world. The North American Continent is one of the few areas where rigid policies of eradication has prevented all but sporadic outbreaks. The present outbreak is the first on this continent since 1929. This outbreak resulted from importation into Mexico of diseased animals from Brazil. The importation of these animals from a country known to have foot-and-mouth disease was in direct violation of a treaty between the United States and Mexico, which was proclaimed in January 1930 and has been in effect ever since. When it became known late in 1945 that a shipment of Brazilian bulls had been brought into Mexico, this Government protested. This first shipment, consisting of 130 Zebu bulls, arrived in Mexico in October 1945. The shipment was originally unloaded on Sacrificias Island, adjacent to Vera Cruz, and was brought to the mainland in December 1945. Later, in May 1946, a second shipment consisting of 327 bulls reached Mexico and was taken first to Sacrificias Island and then to the mainland in September 1946. As soon as it became known that a second shipment of these Brazilian bulls was going to be brought into Mexico, this Government again protested the violation of the treaty, however, without avail.

When it became apparent that the Mexican Government was permitting shipments of cattle from Brazil to be brought in in violation of the treaty, this Government on May 28, 1946, amended the regulations covering the inspection and quarantine of livestock imported from Mexico in such a way as to place severe restrictions on the entry of cattle and other ruminants, as well as swine, from Mexico. Those regulations remained in effect until October 18, 1946, at which time they were removed.

In the meantime, there had been a meeting of the Mexican-United States Agriculture Commission in Los Angeles during the week of July 22, 1946, at which time representatives of the Mexican Government agreed to remove all of the bulls which had been brought into Mexico in the second shipment. Later, however, by action of the then President of Mexico, the order providing for the removal of the bulls was rescinded, and in the course of time they became widely distributed over Mexico.

On December 18, 1946, what was thought to be foot-and-mouth disease was discovered in Mexico, and upon the invitation of the Mexican Government two veterinarians from the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture were immediately dispatched to Mexico, and pronounced the infection as genuine foot-and-mouth disease. Following this, the receipt of any cattle from Mexico was stopped on December 26, and on January 3 a formal order was issued prohibiting the importation of all ruminants and swine from Mexico.

While the Department of Agriculture has authority to go into the various States of this country and cooperate in stamping out foot-and-mouth disease, and while it has authority to cooperate informally with foreign countries in suppressing outbreaks, it has no authority to cooperate formally and directly with any foreign government. The purpose of the bill H. R. 1819 is to give our Government that authority. Until this legislation becomes law it will be impossible for our Government to make any binding and effective agreement with the Government of Mexico. That Government possesses all needed authority to act.

The Committee on Agriculture has very carefully considered this legislation. Shortly after the convening of Congress and the appointment of the committee, I appointed a subcommittee to cooperate with the Department of Agriculture and to determine what legislation might be necessary in order to enable this country to assist Mexico in eradicating this disease. That committee consisted of Mr. GILLIE, of Indiana, chairman; Mr. SIMPSON, of Illinois; Mr. BRAMBLETT, of California; Mr. GRANGER, of Utah; and Mr. WORLEY, of Texas. This committee went to work immediately upon its appointment and has done a great deal of work and given the matter much study. The bill H. R. 1819 was introduced by Mr. GILLIE, the chairman of the committee.

All who are familiar with foot-and-mouth disease are agreed that it is of the utmost importance to the livestock interests of this country and to our economic stability as a whole, that everything possible be done to prevent the spread of the disease to this country. It is also agreed that if the disease spreads all over Mexico, or if it gets near the Mexico-United States boundary line, it will be impossible to prevent its spread into this country. For that reason, it is felt that it is of the utmost importance that this country cooperate with Mexico in taking effective measures to stamp out or retard the disease, and that this complete cooperation must begin at the earliest possible date. The committee, in reporting the legislation, did so with the thought and understanding that any funds or other assistance which might be furnished by this country should be matched in at least equal amount by the Government of Mexico. There was some discussion as to whether or not a limitation upon the amount expended should be placed in this bill. The unanimous conclusion of the committee was that it is impossible to put such a limitation in this bill. There is no way of knowing at this time what the cost will be. It is simply a case where we must depend upon the Appropriations Committee to make such appropriation as are found to be justified in enabling this country to cooperate with the Mexican Government in its fight on this terrible disease.

Time is of the essence in this battle. One dollar spent today may save $50 or $100 later on. The Senate has already passed a similar bill. It is my understanding that as soon as the proposed legislation becomes a law, our Department of Agriculture and representatives of the Mexican Government will get together to work out the details of a program. I, therefore, urge that the House pass the present bill without amendment and without delay.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Clerk will read the committee substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the Government of Mexico in carrying out operations or measures to eradicate, suppress, or control, or to prevent or retard, foot-and-mouth disease or rinderpest in Mexico where he deems such action necessary to protect the livestock and related industries of the United States. In performing the operations or measures herein authorized, the Government of Mexico shall be responsible for the authority necessary to carry out such operations or measures on all lands and properties in Mexico and for such other facilities and means as in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture are necessary. The measure and character of cooperation carried out under this act on the part of the United States and on the part of the Government of Mexico, including the expenditure or use of funds appropriated pursuant to this act, shall be such as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. Arrangements for the cooperation authorized by this act shall be made through and in consultation with the Secretary of State. The authority contained in this act is in addition to and not in substitution for the authority of existing law.

SEC. 2. For purposes of this act, funds appropriated pursuant thereto may also be used for the purchase or hire of passenger motor vehicles and aircraft, for printing and binding without regard to section 87 of the act of January 12, 1895, or section 11 of the act of March 1, 1919 (U. S. C., title 44, sec. 111), for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the limitations contained in section 607 (g) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended, including the employment of civilian nationals of Mexico, and for the construction and operation of research laboratories, quarantine stations, and other buildings and facilities.

SEC. 3. Thirty days after the enactment of this act, and every 30 days thereafter, the Secretary of Agriculture shall make a report to the Congress with respect to the activities carried on under this act.

SEC. 4. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ARENDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1819) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with other American countries in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest, pursuant to House Resolution 108, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 568) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with other American countries in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with any other American country in the control and eradication of emergency outbreaks of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest in such country where he deems such control or eradication necessary to protect the livestock and related industries of the United States. Arrangements for the cooperation authorized by this act shall be made through and in consultation with the Secretary of State.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make any expenditure from funds appropriated hereunder or adopt any method or measure found by him to be required in accomplishing the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. Funds appropriated hereunder may also be used, without employing the authorization in section 2, for the purchase or hire of passenger motor vehicles and aircraft, printing and binding without regard to the act of March 1, 1919 (44 U. S. C. 111), and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the limitation contained in section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946. Where necessary to control or eradicate such diseases, the Secretary or his designated representative may authorize employees of the Department of Agriculture to accept from the interested country appointments without compensation or with nominal compensation.

SEC. 4. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this act. The authority contained in this act is in addition to and not in substitution for the authority of existing law.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the bill S. 568.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the provisions of H. R. 1819 as agreed to in the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings by which the bill H. R. 1819 was passed will be vacated and that bill laid on the table.

There was no objection.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 18, Rept. No. 68) which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

I now renew my request and ask that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include excerpts from letters and newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial from the Washington Evening Star.

Mr. SHORT (at the request of Mr. ARENDS) was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL] may address the House on Wednesday next for 30 minutes following the disposition of the legislative business of the day and any special orders that may already be entered for that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes today following the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today following the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

SELECT COMMITTEES AND THE REORGANIZATION ACT

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the membership for a few moments on what I feel might grow into a very, very serious break-through of the Reorganization Act.

I was greatly disappointed to hear the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], announce that on Wednesday next we would take up the establishment of two special or select committees, both of which will be established in competition with the carefully established jurisdiction of standing committees of the House.

I have been greatly pleased with the wholehearted, aggressive support that has been given to the Reorganization Act by the leadership of the House, the distinguished Speaker of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]; the majority leader, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], the gentleman from Ilinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and those who have put into effect as best they could practically all the many provisions of the Reorganization Act.

It is a great disappointment to me—as I know it must be to many, many other supporters of the Reorganization Act—to see, for no good reason that I can fathom, the break-through of the carefully planned reorganized committee set-up by the establishment of these two proposed extraneous special committees.

Particularly is this true in the proposed establishment of a special select committee to study newsprint. This committee was in existence last year, it is true, but as a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The subcommittee functioned well and creditably, even with the vast load of wartime activities which the parent committee was carrying. As a subcommittee, it had the power to legislate when it found legislation necessary.

For the life of me I cannot see why, for personal reasons, and personal reasons alone, we are being asked here next Wednesday to establish another select committee in violation of the spirit but not the letter of the Reorganization Act.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I am glad the gentleman made the last statement. He says that the setting up of a special committee is not in violation of the letter of the Reorganization Act, which is, of course, true and correct. That has not been so represented by some persons who have undertaken to speak about this matter of special committees. Beyond that I cannot agree with the gentleman as to what he calls the spirit of the act. As I have asserted on previous occasions, and as the gentleman knows, when the Reorganization Act was formulated and presented, it contained a firm prohibition against the setting up of any special committees. However, that provision was taken out and is not now in the law. As I have heretofore asserted, that can give rise to no assumption other than that the right was reserved in the spirit and in the letter of the law to create special committees if for any reason they would be deemed to be desirable.

Mr. MONRONEY. I am glad the gentleman mentions that, because I definitely feel that every special committee set up in competition and in conflict with the newly arranged reorganized committees destroys the effectiveness of our new committee structure.

I am not arguing with the gentleman that it is any violation of the letter of the law; but here we have a period of less than 45 days under a committee system which I honestly believe is a far superior system to any we have ever had.

May I give due credit to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who arranged most of that committee structure and recommended it to the Committee on Reorganization.

Within 45 days after this new committee structure comes into being we are asked to vote a special committee to study the newsprint situation. We do not give that committee any jurisdiction to legislate, just to investigate. If we follow this pattern, and I am afraid we will, if you can make a case for the investigation of newsprint conditions outside of the regular structure of your standing committees, then you will find a thousand other excuses just as compelling and urgent to set up other special committees.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I respect the gentleman's integrity and his intention to do what is fair and right, but when you commend us in previous sentences for going to great lengths to live within the Reorganization Act, and I may say parenthetically there are some things in connection with that that have not been too easy to formulate——

Mr. MONRONEY. I am sure it has been difficult to get this organization started.

Mr. HALLECK. And then seek to impute to us any intention of widespread departure from the letter and, yes, the spirit of the act, is not to give us credit for what we have done in living under the terms of the act. And again may I say that has been quite difficult at times.

The gentleman has referred to the newsprint resolution. It just so happens that in the last Congress I introduced the resolution to create that committee and I provided in the resolution that it go to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, of which I was then a member. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] was a member of that committee.

Without undertaking to exclude other reasons for the creation of that committee upon the resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], the very terms of the Reorganization Act as adopted took the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] off the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. He worked on that newsprint committee all through the last session of Congress. I was on the committee so I approach the matter with some humility and modesty, but I think I can fairly say that in the minds of everyone who knew anything about the accomplishments of that committee it was felt that under the able chairmanship of Lyle Boren, of Oklahoma, it did a magnificent job. It so happens that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] served on that committee. They know all of the background and they know the tie-in with everything that has been done. If the gentleman wants to talk about efficient functioning and operation, then it certainly seems to me that to forego the services of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] on that committee, if we are to have such a committee, would be not in the direction of effective administration but rather, away from effective administration.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five addditional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONRONEY. I am very glad to have the word of the distinguished majority leader, because it brings out exactly the point I have in mind of objecting to special committees.

We can no longer afford the luxury in this Congress of creating committees on the basis of the personality of the Members who will serve on it. If the machinery of this Congress is going to be determined by the personality of any Member, whether he is the chairman of the committee, the ranking member, or the last member on the committee, then we are indeed violating the spirit of good congressional organization.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman refers to personalities.

Mr. MONRONEY. I did not refer to personalities. The gentleman did.

Mr. HALLECK. Yes, the gentleman did. He referred to personalities, and I do not know just what he is seeking to convey by that. It has been contended by some that special committees are set up as a matter of personality to make somebody chairman of the committee. That has not been the purpose here and will not be the purpose. If you want to refer to personalities—and that is not the way I would put it at all if I wanted to be fair about it—I would say rather than indulging in personalities by reason of somebody being chairman of a committee, that what we are doing is continuing to make available to the services of the Congress of the United States and the people of the country and the people affected the services on that committee of a man who has served in the whole process in the last Congress and, as I say, knows more about it than anybody here.

Mr. MONRONEY. I grant that the distinguished gentleman from Ohio and the distinguished gentleman from Indiana are most able on this committee. But I cannot see, for the life of me, how we are going to run an effective congressional organization if the intent of this organization is to be based on any personality; on any person who will serve. We have to plan these things in accordance with sound organizational procedure, not on persons.

I wish the gentleman would give me one reason, if he will, why, after operating during the war years as a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, we must now create a select committee and take the jurisdiction away from the committee that has always had it and put it into the realm of a special committee.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman talks about luxury. There will be nothing in the way of luxury if by referring to luxury you contend that it will cost something that something else will not cost. On that score, it does not make any difference whether it is a standing or special committee. I take it the gentleman would not urge that there should be a complete turn-over of the regular standing committee. We all recognize the fact that the man who is chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or the ranking member on that committee, should continue on that committee; at least, it is advisable that he should, because out of his years of experience he develops an acquaintance with the problems that are before that committee, and hence his service is more valuable.

Now, if the gentleman undertakes to say to me that that thing will not apply in a special field like that involved in this newsprint investigation, then I say he is departing from what is good judgment.

Mr. MONRONEY. I am afraid I must disagree with the gentleman, because the basis of his argument would obtain for the reestablishment of every select committee that we had during the last Congress, or the Congress before, because they all contained experienced men. But in a reorganization we try to recreate these activities and put them in the standing committees of the House.

To the gentleman's great credit he has provided in the Committee on Expenditures subcommittees that are now investigating many phases in our governmental activities. I cannot see how he goes off the deep end on this matter of newsprint to establish a special committee because of the experience of a committee member or two. I think this and the establishment of the Committee on Small Business is going to be the opening wedge to sap the jurisdiction and the strength of the regular standing committees of the House, the one thing that we were trying to improve in the reorganization of Congress. The gentleman knows that 90 percent of the work of Congress is done in the congressional committees. If we are going to come back to the old tanglefoot committee system where we do not know where the jurisdiction of one select committee leaves off and where the jurisdiction of a standing committee takes hold, you are going to get yourself back into the obsolescence and the mire of the same kind of duplicating and overlapping committee system which we have just left.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman had his name on the reorganization bill. Of course, I understand his solicitude for its provisions. For some of us who have been faced with the difficulties of trying to live under that act, may I suggest that the drafting might in a place or two have been done with a little more care. That is not to say that many improvements have not been made. The gentleman refers to the fact that the reorganization bill has apparently, as he puts it, removed all questions of jurisdiction between the different committees.

Mr. MONRONEY. I did not say all questions of jurisdiction.

Mr. HALLECK. You wrote into the bill certain provisions regarding the Expenditures Committee and then imposed on the standing committees the duty to exercise a continuing observation and audit of agencies under their control. Those things themselves are creating innumerable difficulties, with which we are now trying to cope in order to avoid conflict. So I think that, if I may say it, the gentleman's attack on this action that is now proposed does not come with too good grace, having regard to what the gentleman has already pointed out as the great extent to which we have gone to live within the act and otherwise to follow its spirit and its letter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for two additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will yield, I desire to make this observation. I was a member of this Reorganization Committee.

Mr. MONRONEY. A very able and helpful one. who attended all our sessions.

Mr. MICHENER. I was a member not by solicitation on my part, but by appointment. I think that we must approach the carrying out of the terms of this Reorganization Act in a spirit of tolerance, in a spirit of understanding, with the knowledge that there are many defects in the law. Trial and error only is going to make a success of the Reorganization Act. I am sure those responsible in the House at this time have been tolerant. They are trying to be tolerant and helpful. I know, as one Member of the House and of the majority, there have been many Members who wanted to repeal the whole thing or parts of it, because the act seems impossible of practical application, and because this law is delaying action in the House at the moment. Yes, there are some mistakes in the law. Few laws are perfect. This thing will work out if given time. I think it does not behoove my colleague, who did such valuable work on the committee, to start an attack against a good-conscience effort to make the law work before an opportunity has been given to do everything we can to make a success of the law.

Mr. MONRONEY. May I say to the gentleman, who did such wonderful work in helping us on this, that this is not the child of any one man, as he knows. More than 100 Members of Congress made these recommendations. A great many of these Members of Congress recommended the improvement in the integrity of the standing committees of the House.

I am as aware as the gentleman is of several defects in the law, and would be the last one to say that we should not dot an "i" or cross a "t".

But I would say to the gentleman that the establishment of these extra special committees is a matter of high policy. We are either going to build up the standing committees of this House to their proper position or we are going to tear them down if, as I am fearful, this practice of establishing one committee on special activities here and another committee on special activities there is allowed to continue.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts

Mr. McCORMACK. It seems to me the observations made by the gentleman from Michigan are much broader and relate to different parts of the Reorganization Act than that to which the gentleman from Oklahoma is addressing himself. The gentleman is addressing himself to two resolutions to establish special committees, not subcommittees within the standing committees but special committees, both to investigate subject matters that specifically come within the jurisdiction of two of the standing committees of this House. The gentleman is protesting the break-down of the Reorganization Act in that respect. If I correctly interpret what my friend, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] the majority leader, has said, and if I have misinterpreted it, I would like to be corrected, it is difficult for me to escape the conclusion that if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] were a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce this year instead of a member of the Committee on Rules, you would not have this resolution to establish a special investigating committee.

Mr. MONRONEY. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] is recognized for 10 minutes.

NATIONAL BROTHERHOOD WEEK

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the spirit of George Washington is the spirit of the Constitution, and of American and democratic institutions of government. What better day, outside of Christmas Day, is there to make remarks on the importance and necessity for respect, understanding, and tolerance among Americans than today.

The National Conference of Christians and Jews has set aside this week to emphasize that the men and women of this Nation are dedicated to those ideals which seek unity and not division, irrespective of religious belief.

The ideology which would divide a people is the ideology of destruction. Democracy is dynamic, positive, constructive. There is no space within the confines of our Government for intolerance. We are all Americans. All true Americans believe in the letter, the spirit, and the traditions of our Constitution.

The United States of America has grown in power and splendor under God through the efforts of no single race, class, or religion. Our ancestors—yours and mine—came from many lands. Their contribution to the present majesty of our country was real. Descendants of every nationality and creed have enriched our national life for the greater good of all our citizens.

We live under a constitutional form of government, with logical separation of the executive, judicial, and legislative branches of government.

Our Constitution of 1787 recognizes and provides the foundations upon which men of all races and creeds can live together in domestic tranquillity.

World wars have tested the vitality of our nationality at horrible cost. We have, however, learned that we cannot have strength if divided by class hatred, religious bigotry, and intolerance. We have learned that the solidarity of our national greatness and the influence of our national prestige is proportioned to our ability to conquer our national superficial differences of opinion on matters relating to race, color, or creed.

We desire to lead the world to permanent peace on earth. Peace with our sister nations is unobtainable if we cannot have peace at home. "The only way to have a friend is to be one." If we cannot be friends with our fellow Americans, we cannot be friends with the world.

Suspicion and mistrust based upon differences of race, color, or creed are mean, low, degrading, contemptible. Such feelings quickly lead to hatred. Americans have faith in their ability to live in harmony with themselves and with other decent peoples of the world. The challenge of today is not difference of religion. Atheistic communism, the foe of human dignity, which comes from God Himself, is not the enemy of any particular religion, but the enemy of all religion.

Man without the Omnipotent would be the essence of nihilism. The state without religion cannot continue to permanently exist. Our forebears were men of deep religious conviction. Religious freedom was the primal objective of those who founded America and gave us our most precious heritage.

The war is over, but the world is not at peace. The future is in the hands of man, inspired and activated by faith.

The necessity for the extension of spirituality among those now living needs no word of elaboration. It is a self-evident truth—the universal resurgence of faith in God and fellow man would stifle intolerance and lead to happiness not only in community, but international relationships. The road to understanding of our neighbor is found on the imperishable sign post, "The brotherhood of man, the fatherhood of God."

I recall the words of Abraham Lincoln, beloved President of our nation, in time of great domestic trial, spoken at his second inaugural:

> With malice toward none, with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphan, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.

This address of a great statesman expresses the underlying religious spirit of the American people. The words might well be uttered by any statesman of today, or by all persons possessed of a decent, tolerant, understanding mind.

We, as a nation, have drunk the bitter cup of two world wars. We must carry the fight for peace on earth with that courage of heart and soul which inspires the men and women of our armed forces. There were no religious differences on the battlefields of the Bulge, of Iwo Jima, or elsewhere. Those who served were recognized for themselves, not for his or her racial origin or religious beliefs, heritage, nor for the color of their skin. Why should life be different in our quest for a just and lasting peace among all nations?

President Truman recently stated that only a moral and spiritual awakening can save the world from disaster:

> The Protestant church, the Catholic church, and the Jewish synagogue, bound together in the American unity of brotherhood, must provide the shock forces to accomplish this moral and spiritual awakening. No other agency can do it. Unless it is done, we are headed for the disaster we deserve.

There is a greater need in America today for brotherhood among the citizens of this Nation than ever before in history. Prejudice, bigotry, and narrowness of spirit have ever weakened the foundations of a world at peace. Hatred and bigotry are unnecessary curses of mankind, mankind made, in violation of the law of God, and contrary to the instincts of persons of good will and of decent minds. They must be eradicated if happiness is to be found in world society. We all belong to one family under God. Brotherhood Week is dedicated to this truth, affirming as it does that the good-neighbor policy at home is as important as the good-neighbor policy in international relations.

The American people must be educated to realize the iniquity of any doctrine which preaches race supremacy or which would divide the citizens of this country into antagonist groups, based upon race, color, or creed.

Racial injustices thwart educational advances and help prevent economic security. Hatreds, discrimination, and defamation can never lead to decreased criminality. Interfaith amity sponsored by organizations of high-minded citizens brings neighbor in friendship to the door of neighbor—regardless of personal religious conviction. Mutual understanding among men is the sole curative for intolerance. Ceaseless effort in the search for a common denominator on which all men, irrespective of race, color, or creed, can work together for the greater good of the greatest number is the duty of every true American.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we know that Thou canst see the hidden things in every heart. If our intentions are good, help us to make them live in good deeds. If what we intend or desire makes us uncomfortable in Thy presence, take it from us, and give us the spirit we ought to have, that we may do what we ought to do. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

NOMINATION OF HUGH MEGLONE MILTON 2D—RECONSIDERATION AND RECOMMITTAL

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, on Friday last the Senate in executive session confirmed the Presidential nomination of Gen. Hugh Meglone Milton 2d to be a brigadier general in the Chemical Corps Reserve, a permanent appointment. I have been in communication with General Milton. He had a distinguished and enviable record in combat and won his star in actual combat service. This commission places him in the Chemical Branch of the Army. At General Milton's request, I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that the vote by which his nomination was confirmed on Friday be reconsidered, and that the nomination be restored to the calendar for future action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the day I asked reconsideration of the vote by which the nomination of Gen. Hugh Meglone Milton 2d had been confirmed, and asked that the nomination be restored to the calendar, which was done. Since that time I have been in conference with the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, and it has been suggested that this nomination should be recommitted to that committee for further consideration.

Therefore, at the request of General Milton, I now ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that the nomination of Hugh Meglone Milton 2d to be a brigadier general in the Chemical Corps Reserves be recommitted to the Committee on Armed Services.

Provided further, That the project, insofar as it affects the Senate wing of the Capitol, shall be carried forward by the Architect of the Capitol in accordance with plans to be approved by a committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon recmomendation of the chairman of the Senate Commitee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The Chair construes the law as a continuing mandate until the project shall be completed.

There is a vacancy in the chairmanship of the committee, due to the death of the late Senator from Florida, Mr. Andrews. The Chair appoints as a new member, and a chairman of the committee, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB], who is chairman of the Committee on Public Works, which, under the Reorganization Act, succeeds the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

"House Joint Memorial 4

"Joint memorial to the President and Congress of the United States requesting the introduction and enactment of appropriate legislation authorizing the immediate redemption of bonds issued to the enlisted members of the armed forces for accumulated-leave pay under the terms of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946

"To the President of the United States and to the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress Assembled and to the Honorable James E. Murray, the Honorable Zales N. Ecton, the Honorable Mike Mansfield, and the Honorable Wesley A. D'Ewart:

"Whereas the avowed purpose of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 is to grant equal treatment in the matter of leave to all personnel of the armed forces; and

"Whereas under the terms of that act commissioned officers continue to receive compensation for accumulated leave in cash while enlisted personnel receive only a fraction of their accumulated-leave pay in cash and the balance in bonds which are nonnegotiable and payable only after 5 years from the date of issuance; and

"Whereas the need of former enlisted members of the armed forces for immediate compensation for accumulated leave in cash is, in most cases, greater than that of commissioned officers in order to assist such members in the trying period of readjustment to civilian life, therefore justice and fairness requires that such enlisted members should have the benefit of immediate payments under the terms of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946; and

"Whereas a consideration of the equities and a balancing of alleged inflationary effects of such payments against the very urgent need of enlisted personnel for such compensation immediately demonstrates that enlisted personnel are entitled to prompt cash payment for all accumulated leave: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Thirtieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the Senate concurring), That we respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to enact proper legislation providing for the immediate redemption of all bonds issued under the terms of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 in cash, and that all future payments under the terms of such act be made in cash; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded by the chief clerk of the house of representatives, to the President of the United States, to the President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY and ZALES N. ECTON, Senators from Montana, and to the Honorable MIKE MANSFIELD and WESLEY A. D'EWART, Representatives in Congress from Montana."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming; to the Committee on Finance:

"Enrolled Joint Memorial 3

"Joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to enact legislation relating to old-age assistance

"Whereas old-age assistance is most unsatisfactory as now administered in that:

"1. The amount of assistance is changeable, indefinite, and undependable;

"2. The method of awarding assistance virtually requires the applicant to prove pauperism resulting in humiliation and embarrassment; and

"Whereas old-age assistance should be adequate, definite in amount, dependable, and be awarded as recognition of venerable old age and years of service as a member of the human family as a matter of human right; making such award a badge of honor comparable to retirement pensions of industrial concerns and not a humiliating grant given after a lot of red tape and a searching investigation: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of the Twenty-ninth Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact legislation to eliminate or appropriately modify the regulations criticized herein; and to permit the granting of old-age assistance to qualified recipients without unnecessary red tape and searching investigation.

"Approved February 15, 1947.

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 4

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to give like privileges to income-tax payers resident in noncommunity property States as are being enjoyed by residents of community property States

"Whereas an inequality exists between citizens and residents of the several States of the United States, in that residents of 9 States having community property laws are privileged to divide incomes between husband and wife for income-tax purposes, thereby reducing the income taxes required to be paid by said residents, which privilege is being denied to the residents of 41 States not having community property laws; and

"Whereas by reason of the premises, legal privileges are enjoyed by a minority of the citizens of the United States of America, solely determined by residence, which are not permitted to all the citizens of the United States; and

"Whereas it is within the power of the Congress of the United States of America to correct such inequality by adopting suitable and appropriate legislation therefor: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of South Dakota in its thirtieth regular session assembled, respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States of America that suitable and appropriate legislation be enacted permitting division of income between husband and wife for income-tax purposes by the citizens and residents of all of the States of the United States; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be dispatched to United States Senators CHAN GURNEY and HARLAN J. BUSHFIELD, to

"House Concurrent Resolution 5

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to appropriate the necessary funds to carry on the construction of Fort Randall and Angostura Reservoirs and to initiate construction of the Oahe Reservoir as proposed by the Corps of Engineers and to initiate construction of the Shadehill Reservoir, as proposed by the Bureau of Reclamation

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Thirtieth Legislative Session of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring):

"Whereas the Flood Control Act of 1944 authorized a comprehensive plan for protection of the Missouri River States against the hazards of flood and drought; and

"Whereas the authorized construction will create immense new wealth for the people of the United States through the capture and use of water which now serves only to create destructive floods; and

"Whereas a large part of this captured water will be impounded in reservoirs to be built on the main stream and tributaries of the river in South Dakota: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring), That the Congress is hereby requested to appropriate funds required to carry on construction of the Fort Randall and Angostura Reservoirs now in progress, and to initiate construction of the Oahe Reservoir, as proposed by the Corps of Engineers, and of the Shadehill Reservoir, as proposed by the Bureau of Reclamation; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, and to the presiding officers of the Congress, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of South Dakota.

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington; to the Committee on Public Works:

"Senate Joint Memorial 1

"To the President of the United States and the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress Assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the Thirtieth Legislature of the State of Washington, convened in regular session, respectfully represent that:

"Whereas the water-power resources of the State of Washington constitute the only adequate source of low-cost fuel for industrial development; and

"Whereas the State of Washington has achieved a marked industrial growth, the existence and extension of which depends primarily upon a dependable supply of inexpensive hydroelectric power; and

"Whereas low-cost electric energy from the Federal projects on the Columbia River has made feasible electrification of rural farms and homes in sparsely populated areas, and

"Whereas the program for reclaiming large bodies of arid land in the Pacific Northwest is primarily dependent upon the sale of large blocks of surplus hydroelectric energy, which can be marketed to basic industries only at the prevailing low rates; and

"Whereas a retention of existing wholesale power rates is essential to the further development of the natural resources of the State, the creation of new opportunities, employment, and taxable wealth; and

"Whereas Congress is being urged to seek an increase in power rates for energy from Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams and other projects to be constructed on the Columbia River, becaus of the unfounded contention that prevailing rates are not sufficient to amortize the Federal investment within a reasonable period of time; and

"Whereas independent commercial audits for the operation of the Columbia River power system clearly indicate that electric-power revenues have not only been sufficient to meet all costs of power operation but have provided a net surplus of $16,326,047 as of June 30, 1946; and

"Whereas a comprehensive survey of existing and potential power markets, made by the Department of the Interior, indicates that existing power rates will provide adequate revenues to repay not only all costs allocated to power, but also to reimburse the Federal Government in excess of $200,000,000 of construction costs allocated to irrigation, and further to provide a substantial surplus: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Washington (the House of Representatives jointly concurring therein), That your memorialists hereby respectfully petition and memorialize the President and the Congress of the United States to take no action that would lead to an increase in the wholesale power rates for energy generated at the Federal projects on the Columbia River; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State of the State of Washington is hereby directed to forward certified copies of this joint memorial to the President of the United States, the President pro tempore of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Members of the congressional delegation from the State of Washington."

(The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington, identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Public Works.)

RESOLUTIONS OF FOURTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF NATIONAL LIVESTOCK ASSOCIATION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present and to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred, the resolutions adopted by the Fourth Annual Convention of the National Livestock Association, held recently at Phoenix, Ariz.

There being no objection, the resolutions were received, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution 1

Hoof-and-mouth disease outbreak in Mexico

Whereas the recent outbreak of hoof-and-mouth disease in Mexico constitutes the most dangerous threat ever experienced in its history to the livestock industry of this Nation—our economy, our credit, the normal movement of livestock in the natural processes of production and marketing and to the supplies necessary properly to feed our domestic population; and

Whereas this situation has been permitted to develop through no fault of those engaged in the industry but rather through weaknesses in the sanitary treaties presently existing between this country and Mexico; and

Whereas the American National Live Stock Association and the various State livestock association members of the American National Live Stock Association have repeatedly brought to the attention of the authorities in Washington the dangers incident to the unrestricted movement of livestock from infested areas to countries bordering on the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this association in convention assembled at Phoenix, Ariz., January 10, 1947, respectfully urges that the proper departments of Government lend every assistance possible toward effectuating the protection that would be afforded through the following program:

1. The Bureau of Animal Industry should be given adequate funds to insure that no handicap be placed on its work in preventing a spread of this dreaded disease to this country.

2. The United States-Mexican border should be patrolled as if it were a prison camp. The present force engaged in that work is merely a skeleton of the former patrol. That force should be multiplied.

3. The Government of the United States, acting through the Department of Agriculture and the State Department, should prevail upon the Mexican Government to slaughter and bury the suspect bulls in the proximity of the border. This step is highly important, and action such as this would breed some confidence in the good faith of the affected Governments.

4. The work of eradication of the disease in Mexico should have full cooperation and assistance of the American Government. Regardless of the number of trained men that may be required to render this assistance, they should be supplied promptly and in adequate force.

5. Construction of a permanent border fence extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean should be started and rushed to completion.

6. By far the most important step from the standpoint of future outbreaks, such as now are in evidence, is the consummation of real sanitary treaties with Mexico and Canada. The existing treaty with Mexico was negotiated several years ago and has now proved to be wholly inadequate. New treaties with each country with strong and sharp teeth in them should be effected. That will call for quick and skillful negotiation with the named countries.

Resolution 2

Inspecting animals originating in Mexico

Whereas the presence of foot-and-mouth disease has been reported in Mexico; and

Whereas large numbers of cattle from that country have been imported into these United States since October 17, 1946: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge the sanitary officials of each State immediately to locate all livestock within its boundaries originating in Mexico, after October 17, 1946, and have it inspected and kept under constant surveillance by a Federal or State veterinarian for foot-and-mouth disease until said cattle have been slaughtered or otherwise removed from this earth.

Resolution 3

Reciprocal trade

Whereas the program of writing new trade agreements with sharp reductions in tariff rates, advocated by the State Department, is a distinct threat to the restoration of stable conditions in agriculture, industry, and labor; and

Whereas many foreign countries are now making bilateral agreements which are directly in opposition to the United States program of multilateral agreements and will make such program ineffective so far as opportunity for exports from this country is concerned; and

Whereas it is now impossible to foretell the conditions that will exist in 2 or 3 years when new agreements made now will become fully effective: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we strongly oppose the making of these new agreements and tariff reductions because it is opposed to the national interest and unfair and unequitable to American agriculture, industry, and labor.

Resolution 4

Interstate sanitary regulations

Whereas the movement of cattle has been and is being hampered by confusing and conflicting State regulations, particularly in regard to cattle vaccinated for Bang's disease; and

Whereas progress is being made in the methods for controlling this disease; and

Whereas the officers of the American National Live Stock Association have been cooperating with officials of the Bureau of Animal Industry, the United States Live Stock Sanitary Association, and the National Assembly of Livestock Sanitary Officials for promoting uniform sanitary regulations covering movement of cattle between the various States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we recommend this effort be continued and that the various State officials cooperate in making regulations effective in their States and in seeking uniformity on all rules and regulations affecting the interstate movement of livestock.

Resolution 5

Packers and Stockyards Administration

Whereas there are now under supervision of the Packers and Stockyards Administration less than 200 posted public markets; and

Whereas it is estimated that there are eligible to posting under the definition of a "stockyard" in the Packers and Stockyards Act several hundred additional public markets, which should be posted in order to preserve equitable competitive situations and to insure protection of the shippers to such markets through supervision of scales, marketing charges and practices, and the recognition by railroads of such points as public markets with the absorption of loading and unloading charges as provided by the Interstate Commerce Act: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge the Secretary of Agriculture to undertake a study to determine how many markets there are now that should be posted under the Packers and Stockyards Act and to recommend a course of action that will make it possible to place them under supervision.

Resolution 6

Unfair publicity

Whereas Life magazine in an editorial published last October made a very unfair attack on the American National Live Stock Association, attributing purely selfish and greedy motives to us and the livestock industry in general in connection with our long fight to preserve intact the sanitary embargo section of the tariff act and keep foot-and-mouth disease out of this country; and

Whereas numerous radio commentators and magazine writers have in similar fashion and without proper knowledge of the facts urged the importation of meat from countries where foot-and-mouth disease exists; and

Whereas the recent outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in Mexico, traced to imports of Brazilian bulls into that country, clearly justifies the stand we have consistently taken: Therefore be it

Resolved, That now, with the threat of foot-and-mouth disease at our very door we urge the daily press, the magazines, and the commentators to aid in publicizing the need for cooperative effort in meeting this threat, with as much zeal as they previously and mistakenly gave to the wrong side of the cause.

Resolution 7

Government statistics

Whereas there have been many complaints in the past few years that statistical bureaus of the Federal Government have been pressed by high administrative officials to provide statistics to support whatever program happened to be under promotion; and

Whereas this practice has grown until today there is a general lack of confidence in the material put out by these bureaus: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we condemn the practice of using these agencies to supply propaganda that is misleading, incorrect, and weighted or unweighted to fit the occasion, and urge that they be restored to a plane that will command the confidence of all.

Resolution 8

Representation under Railway Labor Act

Whereas the public has no representative under the present Railway Labor Act, such as it had on the former Railroad Labor Board; and

Whereas the shipping public is required to pay the labor bills of the carriers in rates assessed and collected for transportation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge Congress to amend the Railway Labor Act so as to include members representing the public.

Resolution 9

Bulwinkle bill

Whereas our entire transportation rate structure for many years has been effectively and harmoniously developed through the clearing agencies of rate-making bureaus or conferences; and

Whereas the public interest requires the continuance of such bureaus or conferences, subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and

Whereas the Bulwinkle bill (H. R. 2536), which would have exempted carriers' agreements as to rates and services, but not including ownership, when approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, from operation of the antitrust laws, failed of passage in the last Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, That like legislation be reintroduced in the present Congress, and the principle thereof be again supported by this organization.

Resolution 10

Interstate Commerce Commission

Whereas the national transportation policy enacted into law in 1940 provides fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each; and

Whereas this policy can be fulfilled only by the development of the cost of performing transportation by each of the modes of transportation; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission has, within its own organization, established its Bureau of Transport Economics and Statistics, which is composed of essential and highly skilled experts to determine adequately the cost of performing transportation by each mode of transport, and the work thereof is conducted efficiently and economically, and is of great value to the public: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we commend the Interstate Commerce Commission in this respect, and urge the continuance and enlargement of its Transport Economics and Statistics department.

Resolution 11

Livestock loss and damage claims

Whereas it has become the fixed policy of the railroads to refuse to pay more than 50 percent of the actual damage to livestock killed or injured in transit; and

Whereas attempts are being made by some of the railroads to apply this policy where animals are killed or injured on the rights-of-way; and

Whereas this policy is inequitable, unreasonable, and wholly contrary to existing law: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge the Congress to instruct the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation of and report on railroad loss and damage claims covering livestock, and thereafter a law be passed authorizing and directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe rules and regulations governing the filing, investigation, and payments of all loss-and-damage claims on livestock.

Resolution 12

Memorial park in California

Whereas a bill was introduced in the last session of Congress providing for the acquisition by the Federal Government of all California redwood timberlands in the counties of Del Norte, Humboldt, Mendocino, and Sonoma, comprising an area of approximately 2,500,000 acres, to be dedicated as a memorial park and forest in memory of Franklin Delano Roosevelt; and

Whereas such acquisition would greatly reduce the tax base essential for the support of local governments, would greatly restrict the production of timber, agricultural and mineral products, and would weaken or destroy long-established public, civic, and spiritual institutions, private businesses, farms, ranches, and homes; and

Whereas this association has repeatedly protested expansion of Federal land holdings in the Western States where Federal ownership is constantly encroaching on private land holdings: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we unalterably oppose this proposed acquisition by the Federal Government.

Resolution 13

Congressional investigation of national forests

Whereas members of the national forest personnel have been guilty of using abusive and near-libelous statements to the discredit of the leadership in the livestock industry, and have also discredited the general policy stated by the Secretary of Agriculture; and

Whereas the subterfuge of range protection has been resorted to in making cuts on transfers of permits from fathers to sons and in many cases to the detriment of veterans of the recent World War; and

Whereas the present Forest Service, self-made, self-interpreted, and self-executed type of bureaucratic administration is the most vicious type of dictatorship in a democratic government, a detriment to our form of government in causing widespread dissatisfaction among forest permittees: Therefore be it

Resolved, That congressional investigation be made of the administration of grazing on the national forests so the Members of Congress will see the need for legislation to remove existing evils and insure fair adjudication of grievances; and be it further

Resolved, That we urge the Secretary of Agriculture to instruct the Forest Service to refrain from making any cuts in livestock permits until a congressional investigation is held and appropriate legislation is enacted.

Resolution 14

Maintenance of breeding herd preferences

Whereas it has been the customary policy in past years for the Forest Service to issue short-season and long-season permits in addition to the established preference numbers in breeding herds, which is to provide the customary removal of the normal increase; and

Whereas the Forest Service has in numerous instances reduced the established breeding-herd preference to cover the short- or long-season increase as a method of preference reduction: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the breeding-herd preference shall not be reduced to take care of the normal seasonal increase.

Resolution 15

Transfer of grazing lands now in forests

Whereas there are millions of acres of lands within the forests which are not and never will be valuable for timber lands; and

Whereas these lands are chiefly valuable for grazing and are dependent upon privately owned lands for their highest use; and

Whereas maladministration and the practice of cuts by the Forest Service depreciates the value of these privately owned lands and further denies the stability and highest use of these forest grazing lands: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we instruct the legislative committee to prepare and present the necessary bill for congressional enactment to provide for a survey of forest lands and the transfer of those lands chiefly valuable for grazing to the Taylor grazing service; and be it further

Resolved, That lands so transferred shall carry the existing preferences of lease or permit and be subject to all the provisions of the Taylor Act for lease or sale.

NOMINATION OF DAVID E. LILIENTHAL—TELEGRAM FROM H. R. CULLEN

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a telegram sent to me by H. R Cullen, one of the most prominent and respected citizens of Houston, Tex. The telegram deals with the confirmation of David E. Lilienthal, and Mr. Cullen would like to have it made available for all Senators to read.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSTON, TEX., February 21, 1947.

Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL:

Dr. James Bryant Conant, president of Harvard University and member of Atomic Bomb Advisory Committee, was entertained yesterday at luncheon at Houston Club. Regents of University of Houston and Rice Institute and their presidents were present at luncheon. Among the subjects discussed at luncheon was the atomic bomb, and the question was put to Dr. Conant by me, Why was he in favor of President Truman's appointment of David Lilienthal as Chairman? Dr. Conant answered that he was acquainted with Lilienthal and thought he was capable of making a good chairman of the committee. However, he closed his remarks with this statement: "But, of course, we all know he is a New Dealer." Literally thousands of great Americans who have made America have stated from time to time that the New Deal is close kin to communism, nazism, and fascism. Has New Dealism succeeded in hypnotizing the Members of our great United States Senate to that extent, that they must seek support from and lean upon well-known New Dealers, admitting they are not capable of acting alone as United States Senators? Wired to Arthur H. Vandenberg, Robert A. Taft, Tom Connally, Carroll Reece. Mailed to Frank C. Waldrop, Washington Times-Herald.

H. R. CULLEN.

NOMINATION OF DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, at the request of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD two telegrams relating to the Lilienthal nomination, the first from Hon. Herbert H. Lehman and the second from Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 17, 1947.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building:

Strongly urge the prompt confirmation of David E. Lilienthal and the other men nominated as the members of the Atomic Energy Commission.

HERBERT H. LEHMAN.

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 17, 1947.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Chamber:

Together with millions of other citizens, I am deeply disturbed by the political fight over Mr. Lilienthal. I urge on you his confirmation. The attack on Mr. Lilienthal has degenerated into such discreditable meanness that the whole country is shocked and everyone I talk with thinks the main motive for the attack to be a political grudge hiding behind utterly unfounded accusations concerning communism that the Senate of the United States in dealing with this profoundly important matter, affecting both national and international welfare, should allow this conspiracy against an able public servant to succeed seems to me unthinkable. If it does do so, it will be a national disgrace.

HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 70) to exempt employers from liability for portal-to-portal wages in certain cases, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 37) thereon.

INTERIM REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF AIR SAFETY FILED DURING RECESS (S. REPT. NO. 36)

Mr. BREWSTER, on February 22, 1947, under authority of the order of the Senate of February 21, 1947, submitted an interim report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of an investigation into the matter of air safety, made by a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the interim report submitted by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the Senate, which has been filed and sent to the Printing Office. It will be available to Members of the Senate, I understand, either today or tomorrow.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the chairman of the Subcommittee on Air Safety, is absent today, and has asked me to make a few remarks to the Senate in connection with this report.

First, I wish to say that nothing is more important to the Nation than the development of safety, certainty, and speed in aviation.

Even the value of the atomic bomb as a defense against aggression will be measured in the speed, safety, and supremacy of our Air Forces. Our ability to deliver such a bomb against an aggressor while he is still beyond our shores is paramount in importance. The atomic bomb and supremacy in the air are inseparable.

The investigation of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Subcommittee has revealed a few notable facts. The pilots have an exceptionally clean bill of health and no accidents of major importance are traceable to their misconduct or misbehavior.

The standardization of rules and regulations governing not only flight under the jurisdiction of the pilot but airport rules and regulations promoting safety and certainty of flight, is vital to the ultimate success of the aviation industry and America's supremacy in the air.

It has been demonstrated to me, and I believe to the other members of the subcommittee, that all our major airports should be immediately equipped with the latest and best navigational and piloting aids which have been developed during and since the war so as to insure safety at the time of take-off, while in flight, and at the time of landing. Such installations should include the utilization of new telecommunication and electronic devices, the lengthening of existing airport runways, the improvement of runway lighting systems, and the fog-dispersing apparatus, known as "Fido," which is under test and bids fair to prove successful, particularly for use at airports located in areas where extreme fog conditions prevail.

It seems to be the unanimous opinion of the subcommittee that these various devices supplement each other, and the interim report recommends that this procedure be adopted with the greatest speed possible.

The report further shows that aviation under the American flag, particularly under scheduled operations, controlled by the CAB and CAA, is the safest in the world, and the record of fatalities per passenger-mile in 1946 is the finest record made since aviation began. The statistics prepared by the CAB on this point are available in the report.

Your committee had the finest kind of cooperation in the hearings at which appeared some of the most important men in our armed forces and in commercial aviation throughout the Nation.

Everyone seems to appreciate that the truth and the facts regarding what we have done and are doing in aviation should be brought home to the American public at the earliest possible moment, so as to correct a psychology which has seemed to develop because of accidents which have occurred throughout the world to planes not under the American flag, as well as the unfortunate accidents which have occurred domestically under the American flag. The fact still remains that domestic air travel under the American flag is one of the safest forms of transportation available to our citizens.

The aviation industry is new and romantic, and naturally anything that happens in the air makes interesting reading for the American public, but if we are to be supreme in the air we must know the facts and be guided by them.

Your subcommittee will make a further report after further investigation, and it is hoped that the Congress and the American people will see the wisdom of making safe and certain the airports we now have before we spend our money in other directions.

In conclusion, I call attention to the fact that the authorities who appeared before the subcommittee were of the opinion that certainty of flying schedules depends upon safety and the use of the necessary safety devices, and that through the proper and prompt expenditure of the necessary funds, we can assure the safety which brings the desired certainty, and that 90 to 95 percent of all scheduled flights can be carried out regardless of weather conditions. Weather is the pilot's greatest foe. The pilot has a life just as does the passenger, and he is entitled to the same consideration through the installation of all available and reliable safety devices known to us.

I urge every Member of the Congress to read this interim report of the subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to the end that we may be prepared to act with speed and wisdom when the recommendations come before the Congress.

MEDICAL AID TO NEEDY AND OTHER INDIVIDUALS

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act so as to provide assistance to the States in furnishing medical aid to needy and other individuals, and I request that a statement prepared by me may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 678) to amend the Public Health Service Act, as amended, so as to provide assistance to the States in furnishing certain medical aid to needy and other individuals, introduced by Mr. LODGE, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

There being no objection, the statement presented by Mr. LODGE was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LODGE

The title of the bill which I have today introduced says that it is "to amend the Public Health Service Act, as amended, so as to provide assistance to the States in furnishing certain medical aid to needy and other individuals."

It is substantially the same as a bill which I first introduced on March 19, 1940. At that time I pointed out that the reason for the bill springs from the fact that there are at present a number of medicines the manufacture of which has become thoroughly standardized, and which are properly regarded by the layman as specific remedies for well-defined diseases. These particular medicines, unlike the majority of medicines, are so expensive that they are beyond the reach of many persons. For example, big hospitals will make gifts of small quantities of most types of medicine. For these hospitals, however, to give away the medicines to which this bill refers would be to strain their finances to a point which they could not bear.

The bill therefore provides Federal aid, on a matching basis, to those States which have a plan for making these medicines available to those who are entitled to them. The medicines covered by the bill are as follows:

1. Sulfa drugs: Used for pneumonia, streptococcus infections, and other infections.

2. Insulin: Used for diabetes.

3. Liver extract: Used for pernicious anemia and occasionally for other anemias.

4. Mercury diuretics: Used for patients with congestive heart failure.

5. Endocrine products—most of these except thyroid gland are expensive: Used for glandular and nervous disorders.

6. Vitamin preparations—thiamine chloride, nicotinic acid, viosterol, vitamin K: Used for a variety of conditions, especially nutritional deficiency.

7. Typhoid vaccine: Used to prevent typhoid fever and is already compulsory in some States.

8. Penicillin and streptomycin for various infectious diseases.

This list covers medicines which enter into the field of internal medicine. I hope and believe that with the publication of this bill additional medications used in other branches of medicine, such as dermatology and obstetrics, will be proposed and included.

The same philosophy is carried into the field of medical services. It provides for Federal aid on the same basis, so that persons in need of these services may obtain the use of respirators, the so-called iron lung, and, above all, of large-scale X-ray facilities. I believe it is not disputed that countless instances occur every day in which X-ray examinations are desirable—nay, essential—but are not given because of the prohibitive cost.

The suffering which could be prevented by prompt X-ray examination is indescribable. Needless to say, the prevention of disease automatically tends to reduce the cost of caring for the disease once it has been allowed to take hold. The use of respirators and X-rays involves a technique which has become relatively standardized. There is really no longer any mystery about them. In the case of the X-ray it is not inconceivable that it would become a routine part of every physical examination were it not for the cost. In the case of people of moderate means the cost prohibits its use. In the case of persons who can afford it, the use of X-ray is known to be so unusual that its prescription sometimes causes alarm.

At a later date I shall submit data showing the amount which might be initially authorized. Until the list of medicines to be provided is complete, the sum to be authorized could not be stated with any exactitude. It is safe to say, however, that in comparison with the total outlay for social services in which the Government is now engaged the figure would be most moderate.

This measure would not regiment. In all cases the initiative would rest with the individual. He himself would choose his own doctor and his own hospital. The Federal Government would merely give full recognition to the work of private enterprise, and simply set up the machinery whereby the self-respecting man might help himself. Questions of medical personnel and hospital standards would remain where they now are, in the devoted hands of professional physicians. The part played by the State and local governments is recognized and enhanced. There is no invitation to haste and waste.

There is to be no large-scale splurging of money in building programs and in contracts for materials. There is to be no setting up of a bureaucracy or of any other obstacles between the patient and his health. This scheme is as direct as a governmental scheme can be. It provides specific, concrete, definite aid for definite diseases. It is believed that in giving everyone a chance to have these medicines and services according to his ability to pay very great good can be done.

In recent years we have taken important steps looking toward the establishment of a well-rounded, integrated social-security program. Workmen's compensation for many years has provided financial aid to those who have suffered from injuries sustained during the course of their employment. Unemployment compensation aims to protect the unemployed from loss of wages. Old-age pensions are being developed which will safeguard our people from the hazards of insecurity. A well-conceived health-insurance program should bring measurably nearer the day when the American people will be physically fit.

This bill is a humble first step toward this inspiring goal.

INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES FOR SENATE SECTION OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. HICKENLOOPER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 87), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $2,500 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for the purposes specified in Senate Resolution 63, agreed to January 20, 1947.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 17) authorizing the printing of additional copies of House Document No. 754, Seventy-ninth Congress, entitled "Communism in Action," was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

PRICES UNDER OPA AND NOW

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a year ago in the debate on OPA there were many predictions as to how high prices would go if the ceilings were removed. At that time there were predictions that the price of bread would go to $15 a loaf, that beefsteak would go to $3 a pound. At some appropriate time I should like to review all the predictions and statements which were then made; but I was very much interested yesterday to read in the Times-Herald an editorial entitled "By the Way, Where's That $15 Bread?" I ask that the editorial be printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BY THE WAY, WHERE'S THAT $15 BREAD?

Many of us still remember, and all of us should be reminded from time to time, and everybody who reads this column will be, that when President Truman kicked price controls off meat last October 15 Elliott Roosevelt keened to the press:

"You will see bread at $15 a loaf. This is the beginning of the end. I am disappointed."

It was indeed the beginning of the end of price controls. Truman blew the ceilings off meat because his political advisers were telling him the OPA's meat famine, then in full swing, would lose dozens of the November 5 elections for the Democrats if it weren't stopped somehow.

Sure enough, meat was rolling through the pipe lines soon after Truman decontrolled it. The famine ended as fast as was physically possible, and shows no signs of coming back—though the voters stayed sore about that and other things long enough to elect Republican majorities in both Houses of Congress.

Elliott's prophecy about bread going to $15 a loaf is what we'd like to discuss in the rest of this editorial.

Of course, Elliott's prediction didn't pan out. What he meant was that his crystal ball showed him a wild inflation coming because Truman had been spurred by practical politicians into giving the law of supply and demand a chance to reassert itself in this country.

Since shortly after Pearl Harbor, that law had been partially in the discard. The Roosevelt administration had clapped controls on prices to prevent wartime inflation, though it hadn't had the courage to put similar halters on wages and salaries.

After the war, the "great brain" and planned-economy crowd in Washington—Chester Bowles, Paul Porter, etc., etc.—set up a howl that if price controls were called off we'd zoom into a ruinous postwar inflation. So controls were kept, and we zoomed into an inflation anyway.

There was a barrel of money around, but there was less and less to buy.

The situation finally blew its top, and for about 3 months we have been living in a largely free-market, unplanned economy again.

Prices are still high in many categories. Food isn't dirt cheap yet, by a long shot. But neither are we paying Elliott Roosevelt's $15 a loaf for bread. Prices for most items are no longer climbing, and many of them have started down.

Just now, market prices for wheat, corn, oats, and hogs are high. But that is chiefly because the Government is determined to ship large quantities of these foods abroad in the next few months. European crop prospects are growing worse as spring draws near.

PLANS VERSUS NO PLANS

Our own crop prospects, however, are excellent. Therefore, future prices bid by grain and hog speculators are a good deal lower than spot prices. Market analysts assure us that these basic food items are destined for sharp drops later in the year.

Meanwhile, our unplanned, supply-and-demand economy, still groggy though it is from the planners' long bulldozing, is able to ship heavy relief consignments to Europe and eat well itself.

Europe, on the other hand, is more and more of a paradise for planners, from Spanish Fascists through British and French Socialists to Russian and Yugoslav Communists. These babies plan and plan; but they keep coming around to us for things to eat and wear—all the while, of course, damning us as backward and economically illiterate for not adopting one or another of their planned systems.

These facts pretty much write their own editorial. The proper comment, it seems to us, is that when it comes to getting results which people can eat, wear, and warm themselves with, our unplanned economy delivers better than any other system yet invented if given half a chance to do so. Our own home-grown planned-economy fans are lying fairly low at present, having been stunned by the Republican victories in the last elections.

CAN PLANNERS KID US AGAIN?

But just as soon as the slightest recession sets in—as will probably happen sooner or later—they will bounce back with schemes for planning us into endless prosperity.

These people planned us into a meat famine once, and until kicked in the teeth were planning us into chronic shortages of everything except inflated money. Are we going to buy their plans again—ever?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the Legislative Reorganization Act approved by the Seventy-ninth Congress is, in my opinion, one of the outstanding enactments of the last two decades. I say this for a very clear reason. Passage of the Reorganization Act demonstrated that Congress, after nearly 14 years of subservience to New Dealism, inefficiency, and waste of taxpayers' and bondbuyers' funds had wearied of the charge of rubber stamp and had decided to reassert its constitutional control of the public purse. I, like many of my colleagues, was gratified to note the favorable public reaction to our efforts. For the first time in many years we gave hope to the taxpayer—the housewife, the wage earner, the farmer, and the countless other classes of citizens who had tired of supporting the greatest bureaucracy any nation had ever seen.

But now, Mr. President, I am alarmed. I am fearful that we may have brought forth a mouse. For one reason or another the intent of the act, and particularly of its fiscal provisions, is being confused; and while in the process of confusing its intent, we are fumbling what may well be our last opportunity to return the Federal Government to the path of fiscal sanity—a path foreign to it these many years.

What do I mean by confusion of intent?

The purpose, the intent, the objective, whatever one may wish to call it, of that part of the act having to do with a legislative budget is, to my way of thinking, misunderstood by many of us. In voting for the act, I for one never contemplated any extraneous discussion of budget detail as a prelude to the establishment of a ceiling on expenditures. The absurdity of our attempting, let alone ever accomplishing, any agreement on detail in the short space of time since January 3, when the President submitted his Budget message, is apparent to me. How can we, a body of perhaps 96 divergent opinions, agree on detail in 40 days when the President and a large staff of unified opinion require more than 6 months to pose the detail? And why should this body attempt to usurp the functions of its Appropriations Committee?

Mr. President, I care not about detail at the moment, but I do care about the policy we are to adopt. For policy is our responsibility here today. The policy issue can be stated simply, Are we to have a balanced Federal Budget for the fiscal year 1948 and, if so, by how much? The question is clear, and it deserves a clear answer. Such fundamentals as this should occupy our current attention, not the details of the program involving particular grants and projects. Some may say, "But the Budget already is in balance." To that I reply, "Yes; for the first time in 17 years, but if past records are any criterion it will not long stay in balance." A margin of $202,000,000, or one-half of 1 percent, between revenue and expenditure is entirely inadequate insofar as I am concerned, particularly in the light of the $259,000,000,000 of Federal debt accumulated during the past 17 years. In fact, the margin of its balance, as proposed by the President, would operate the Federal Government for only one and one-half working days. Moreover, all of us appreciate how the President's Budgets grow as the year wears on. In the fiscal year 1947 the original message proposed expenditures of $36,000,000,000. Then in August it was revised upward to $41,000,000,000. Now the fiscal year 1948 Budget indicates that expenditures will total $42,500,000,000 for 1947, or 18 percent more than was originally proposed by the President in his Budget message.

Last Friday we received from the President a message asking that we appropriate $350,000,000 chargeable to the 1945 fiscal budget for foreign relief to be used where UNRRA had been used—I happen to be in sympathy with the objective of that message, for it may bring peace to this earth—but it does indicate how budgets grow and get out of balance. Before that item was recommended the 1947 Budget had been increased 18 percent more than was originally proposed by the President in his Budget message.

Today some in the Senate are fearful that if we fix $6,000,000,000 as the figure by which the President's Budget of expenditures shall be reduced, it will not be possible actually to effectuate a decrease of $6,000,000,000 in expenditures and, therefore, from a political standpoint, it may be inadvisable to take such action. I do not agree with this. Politics should not be considered in connection with this question of policy.

The Budget is said to be in balance. As I previously stated, it is in balance only by the narrow margin of 1½ days' expenditure by the Government. So we must do something to reduce expenses so that we shall really have a balanced budget for 1948.

Mr. President, I believe that a clear-cut determination of policy by Congress that the expenditure ceiling for fiscal 1948 should be $31,500,000,000, as recommended by the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, would go a long way toward correcting the fantasy that is now called the budget process. It would allow substantial debt reduction and a readjustment of tax rates, both of which, to my way of thinking, are of the utmost importance at this time.

Some of us are fearful that a ceiling at this level is impractical. I say that if it cannot be done now, to apply the third year after hostilities, it will never be done.

All of us know that the Federal Government's left hand frequently does not know what the right hand is doing. There is shameless duplication, overlapping of functions, and waste of taxpayers' moneys. Comptroller General Lindsay Warren, a reputable Federal official, emphasized this condition when he said:

> Our Government is in a mess. * * * We have developed an extravagant hodgepodge of duplications, inefficiencies, and inconsistencies * * * 75 different bureaus and agencies of the Government that have an important connection with transportation * * * public housing * * * at least 15 different agencies * * * 14 agencies dealing with forestry matters, and no less than 65 gathering statistics * * * 34 different agencies could acquire land * * * one-fifth the entire land area of the United States is owned by the Government. * * *

The legislative budget ceiling is intended to make a beginning toward elimination insofar as possible of this nonsensical waste.

There is growing realization among our citizens that the President's $37,500,000,000 spending proposal is neither fish nor fowl—neither a peacetime transition nor wartime budget. Justification for some of its billions of dollars appears to be based on the possibility of immediate war. Other billions of dollars are proposed on a now-the-war-is-over-we-must-catch-up kind of reasoning. Still other billions of dollars are excused on what seems to be little more foundation than that we have the money—let us spend it.

War, peace, or transition might justify various budgets. Certainly all three cannot be used as justifications for the same budget.

I believe that a Budget of $37,500,000,000 is much too high an assessment against our production capacity in peacetime. It is a charge of nearly 23 percent against national income at the estimated 1946 rate. Added to State and local expenditures, the aggregate Government charge amounts to nearly 30 percent.

In the first year of war, the fiscal year 1942, Federal expenditures were $34,000,000,000. But in 1948, the third year of peace following that war, the Federal Government proposes to spend a sum more than $3,000,000,000 greater. This, I maintain, is an inconsistency that must be justified in full, not only in Congress but to the public as well.

The cost of government in the United States has reached staggering proportions. All State and local government operations actually cost about one-third the cost of the Federal Government. Combined, government cost actually exceeds the Nation's food bill. In other words, it now costs us more to be governed than it does to eat.

Expenditures proposed in the 1948 Federal Budget are approximately one-half greater than the cash income of all farmers from marketing their produce, nearly three times all dividends and interest paid to security owners, and more than twice the combined income of all persons receiving $10,000 a year or more. That is the cost of Government to the taxpayers and the people of America.

Even a budget involving expenditures of $31,500,000,000, which some of my colleagues apparently believe is too low, will be a burdensome charge. It represents nearly $1,000 per family, on the average, in addition to accumulated overhanging debt liability of more than $7,000 per family.

I personally believe that the Budget ceiling might be lower, but I shall not quarrel with $31,500,000,000 as a ceiling limit.

The time-worn question, "Where can we cut?" does not trouble me. My feeling is that we can cut almost everywhere. Take the domestic nonmilitary field, for example. Since 1941, excluding outlays for domestic relief, which is no longer an important budgetary factor, expenditures in the domestic, nonmilitary field have increased $4,500,000,000. This, I believe, is a fertile field for economy.

The Budget predicts a reduction of 301,984 in the average Federal employment by Federal agencies other than Post Office and Government corporations between the fiscal years 1947 and 1948.

Later, I shall say something about Government corporations. The Senator from Michigan is the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having to do with that subject. That is a net figure, however. War and Navy Departments, eight other agencies with direct war-connected responsibilities which are being discontinued, and five smaller Federal agencies, are lopping off 342,755 employees. Remaining Federal agencies are adding more than 40,000 employees to their pay rolls. Thus, the actual fact is that roughly two-thirds of the nonmilitary agencies of the Government have requested personnel increases averaging 10 percent over the previous year, for the fiscal year 1948.

The military and naval sides of the budget have been discussed at length in the press and elsewhere. As I indicated before, it is unfortunate that appropriation detail should cloud Congress' mind in striving to set a fiscal policy for 1948, but since it has happened, I should like to make several comments.

As a member of the Senate War Investigating Committee I have seen countless examples of waste, bad judgment, and inefficiency, all of which inflated spending out of proportion to its actual benefit. I am not ready to be fooled into believing that the malpractices are only wartime mistakes, amplified by the need for speed. Some of them probably exist today, only in different forms.

Mr. President, in America we are forgetting that the great war surpluses which are in warehouses or being sold by the War Assets Administration were in many cases the result of over-buying, and we are thinking now only of the question of their disposition.

It is, in my judgment, improper and in bad taste for the departments and agencies to attempt to influence Congress at this time on policy determination. Such decisions constitutionally reside with Congress, not the spending units of Government.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Government Corporations of the Committee on Appropriations, I want to comment on the budget sent to Congress covering Government corporations. The Bureau of the Budget asks that we make the following appropriations for five corporations: For the TVA, $27,000,000; Federal Public Housing, $8,300,000; Federal Crop Insurance, $9,300,000; and Inter-American—two corporations—$8,115,000; a total of $52,715,000. But they do not ask direct appropriations. The Federal corporations show that they will disburse $1,310,000,000, an amount which will be borrowed from the United States Treasury. This is really not an appropriation, but is included in the President's budget where he shows the expenditure of $37,500,000,000. It should be there, because that money will be spent; but the Congress is not asked to appropriate it directly. The Government corporations get that money from the sale of bonds under the old Liberty Loan Act. In other words, we sell the bonds, call them what we may, to the public generally, and the money goes into the Treasury. Eighteen dollars and seventy-five cents is paid for a $25 bond, and the RFC and other Government corporations go to the Treasury and borrow the money.

This entire sum will be spent if Congress does nothing about it. If we default and do not pass legislation prohibiting the spending of this sum, these corporations will spend it.

Mr. President, in 1946 these corporations showed assets of $15,624,000,000. In 1947 they had $11,843,000,000; and the budget indicates that in 1948 they will have $12,405,000,000 of assets.

I ask, Why should we not compel them to start to liquidate some of the assets which they are accumulating? Why should they go to the Treasury of the United States and borrow $1,310,000,000 and make it a debt against the United States when they have assets? If they should liquidate their assets and reduce their activities we would not have to appropriate this sum.

I say to the Members of the Senate that if we are diligent and scrutinize the Government corporations' budget as to expenditure we can deduct a billion dollars from the budget. We can compel the corporations to sell a billion dollars' worth of assets to the taxpayers of America who want them. The corporations are doing business. They are not paying taxes upon their income, but they use this method of getting all the money they can on direct appropriations, and then they borrow the balance they wish to use from the funds of the taxpayers and make it a debt against the United States.

Take the Commodity Credit Corporation and the item of $830,000,000. When was that money spent? We talk about keeping faith with the people as to the budget. Mr. President, $800,000,000 of that money was spent in the fiscal year 1946.

Why was it not put in the budget then? Thirty million dollars more of it was spent in 1947. Why is it not put in the budget for this year 1947? It is put in the budget for 1948, because by so doing last year's budget, which has gone up from $36,000,000,000 to $42,500,000,000, can be kept down to the extent of $830,000,000. If that sum were added to it the budget for the current year would be in excess of $43,000,000,000.

For many years the RFC came to Congress and asked for an increase in its borrowing power. No one seemed to know the borrowing power of the RFC. Even Jesse Jones said before Congress that it would take a corps of accountants a long time to figure that out. Then we passed the Control Act, but that act did not require the RFC or other Government corporations to come to Congress and obtain appropriations of the money they spent. We still allow them to borrow from the Treasury of the United States. What we are permitted to do by that act its to give the opportunity to review their budget. If Congress is silent, we give consent. Take the item of $830,000,000 of the Commodity Credit Corporation to which I have referred, and which is now included in the 1948 budget. It is called an impairment of capital whereas it is only a recognition of expenditure made out of borrowing from the United States Treasury. How does the United States Treasury get this money to loan to the RFC and the other corporations? It gets it by the sale of war bonds. The $18.75 the people pay for a $25 bond does not all go to actually fight the war. This is contrary to the spirit of our Constitution. It was intended that money spent by our Government should be obtained through the congressional appropriation process.

The President's Budget shows that the budget expenditures for administrative and personnel purposes by Government corporations and credit agencies are showing a persistent tendency to grow, notwithstanding the reduced scale of operations of most of these corporations and agencies. For example, the Budget shows—page 962, exhibit A:

Actual, 1946	$96,901,513
Estimate, 1947	104,247,558
Estimate, 1948	106,100,332

A detailed examination, corporation by corporation, of the behavior of expenditures for administrative and personnel purposes reveals many situations in which these expenditures are increasing in a seemingly inexplicable and unjustified manner.

For example, the RFC has budgeted a 25 percent increase in 1948, as against 1947; certain corporations do not include, or include only a grossly inadequate account of, administrative and personnel expense; certain corporations which President Truman has recommended be liquidated budget an increase in administrative expense in 1948 as compared with 1947; some corporations which President Truman has announced are already in process of liquidation, such as the Institute for Inter-American Affairs, budget an increase in expenditures for administrative and/or personnel purposes in 1948, as compared with 1947. One corporation, Prencinradio, which the President has announced was in process of liquidation, budgets an administrative expense of $8,850 (an increase as against 1947) that is incurred to administer a radio program budgeted at only $12,637. Mr. President, why should the Federal Government continue to operate one of these corporations which was supposed to be liquidated? Its function was to broadcast to South America during the war. Why should it remain in existence in 1948, almost 3 years after the close of the war, and why should it require administrators whose compensation must continue to be paid? Even where this class of expenditure shows a decline in 1948 as against 1947, it very seldom drops to the level of 1946.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a list of some of the corporations with respect to which the amounts budgeted for administrative or personnel purposes seem open to question or show increases.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

Export-Import Bank: Increase one-tenth in 1948 to $892,200 (schedule B-1, p. 975) including a $69,000 jump in personnel (schedule B-2, p. 976).

Panama Railroad Company: Increase capacity $500,000 in 1948 (schedule B-4, p. 995).

RFC: Increase 25 percent in 1948 to $45,204,000 (schedule B-2, p. 1060).

TVA associated corporations: Does not show administrative expenses; not to exceed $2,500 shall be available for administration.

TVA: All personnel services increase from $38,605,603 to $38,836,958 (schedule D–1, p. 1023).

Federal National Mortgage Association: Nearly double in 1948 (schedule B–1, p. 1075).

United States Commercial Corporation: Up from $1,940,000 to $2,104,000 (schedule B–2, p. 1087).

Federal Home Loan Bank System: All personnel services, net increase from $1,293,315 to $1,479,805 (p. 1099); administration increases from $203,751 to $228,344 (p. 1100).

Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation: Total administration up from $532,000 to $670,000, including a jump in personnel services from $381,727 to $424,111 (schedule B–1, p. 1109).

Federal Housing Administration: Total administration goes up nearly $4,000,000, including a jump of nearly $3,000,000 in personnel services net (p. 1127).

Federal Public Housing Authority: Administrative and personnel services fall, but only to level of 1946 (schedules A and A–1, pp. 1187 and 1190).

Inland Waterways Corporation: Administrative and personnel expenses shrink very little (schedules B–2, B–3, B–4, pp. 1281, 1282).

Warrior River Terminal Company: Administrative and personnel services do not decrease at all in 1948 although President Truman recommended liquidation of Company (schedules B–3 and B–4, p. 1290).

Virgin Islands Company: Personnel services increase $47,000, although President Truman recommended liquidation of the Company (schedules B–4, B–5, p. 1302).

Institute of Inter-American Affairs: Administrative expense and personnel services increase, although President Truman announced it was in liquidation (schedules B–1 and B–2, pp. 1315–1316).

Inter-American Educational Foundation Inc.: Both the administrative and the personnel expense increase in 1948 (schedules B–1 and B–2, p. 1329), although the proposed expenditure for programs in 1948 shrinks by more than one-fourth (exhibit B, p. 1327).

Prencinradio, Inc.: Administrative and personnel expenses increase in 1948 to a total of $8,850, although the only activity indicated for that year is a radio program to cost $12,637, notwithstanding the fact that President Truman announced the corporation was already in process of liquidation (exhibit A, p. 1339).

Commodity Credit Corporation: Personnel services shrink as compared with 1947 but remain more than $1,000,000 above 1946 (schedule B–3, p. 1213–14) and the same is true as regard administrative expenses (schedule B–2, p. 1213), although the total of funds utilized will be one-third less than in 1946, and $830,380,811 of these funds will be furnished by the Treasury's cancellation of the Corporation's notes in this amount (exhibit A, p. 1204).

Federal Crop Insurance program: Total administrative expenses is roughly one-third higher than in 1947 and nearly double what it was in 1946, and total personnel expenses increase in the same amounts (schedule B–2, p. 1229), all of which to be provided by appropriation (amount involved $9,330,000).

Regional Agricultural Corporation of Washington: Personnel services increase slightly in 1948 (schedule B–2, p. 1272), although total administrative decreases (schedule B–1, p. 1272), and notwithstanding fact funds applied (exhibit A, p. 1268) are only two-thirds what they were in 1947.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I wish to discuss some of the items which appear in the list to which I have just referred, and for the RECORD I shall indicate some of the administrative expenses which show increases. I shall not now read all of them, because that would involve too much detail. As I said earlier, I do not care so much about giving many details, but I wish to mention a few details concerning some of the Government corporations. I shall mention one in particular because the Senator from Michigan happens to be the chairman of the subcommittee dealing with it, and I wish to point out where I believe money can be saved in that particular budget.

At the present time there is no real mechanism for liquidating Government corporations.

The record of Government corporations placed in liquidation, which extends back to the First World War, shows that procedures that have been and are currently employed are unconscionably slow, inefficient, and expensive. I cite just one corporation, the United States Spruce Production Corporation, organized August 20, 1918. Its function was the production and allocation of aircraft lumber to the United States and its Allies. On June 28, 1920, suit for dissolution of the Corporation was filed in the Superior Court of Washington State. However, the final dissolution of the Corporation was not entered until December 12, 1946. In 1947, Congress allowed a $10,000 item in the appropriation bill for the purpose of winding up that Corporation. That was used the first part of the year.

Mr. President, the Corporation has not yet been wound up, but it has finally been turned over to the War Department. After some difficulty I have obtained the figures which I shall state at this time though they are not entirely complete, and therefore I shall have to do some estimating.

The operating expenses of the United States Spruce Production Corporation for the fiscal years 1945 and 1946 were as follows:

1945	$20,696.33
1946	20,793.47
Total	41,489.80
1942	20,299.38
1943	19,995.46
1944	20,522.01
Complete total	102,306.65

Since the Corporation has been engaged in liquidation since 1923, for a period of 24 years, it may be assumed that the operating expenses for the entire period from 1923 to 1946 were $496,712, using expenses for the year ended June 30, 1945, as typical of the preceding years. We do not have the exact expenses for each year prior to 1942.

Congress has enacted a law which provides that all these corporations must end by June 30, 1948. But if the illustration I have just given is an example, as I believe it to be, of what is likely to happen, we shall discover that in the future these corporations will be continuing and will be making the same kinds of expenditures as those they are making today. The law will not be effective unless we act. That is why I have brought these details to the attention of the Senate.

Let me give another example. An item for the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation appears at page 309 of the Government Corporation Budget Estimates, 1946 and 1947, Seventy-ninth Congress. I cite this simply to show what happens even though some persons may say that the amounts involved are "merely peanuts," for when we examine the details and make a total of the "peanuts" that are being distributed over the United States, we find that they amount to billions of dollars. What are the facts with respect to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation? According to last year's budget—1947—its assets were as follows: One Government agency owed it $131, and others than Government owed it $136. Those items are not in thousands of dollars or in millions of dollars, but they are simply $131 and $136, making a total of assets receivable of $267, and these are all the Corporation's assets according to the Budget. Mr. President, do you know what that Corporation asked the people of the United States to appropriate in order to wind up that business and to collect the $267? Some may classify it as peanuts, but the Budget Bureau asked the Congress to appropriate $40,000 for personnel and administrative expense to collect $267. Schedule B3, 1947 Budget, showed a request for personnel services of 1 liquidating officer at $6,230 per year and 11 other employees. That is why I stand on this floor today and say something about bureaucracy and Government corporations for whose appropriations the Congress is made responsible by the Constitution. It is time we become responsible for spending in America. That is why I said in the beginning of my remarks that for two decades there has not been brought to the consciousness of the Senate and the House of Representatives a more important act than the Legislative Reorganization Act. We have a constitutional responsibility to work on this budget, and I have no doubt that in due time we will go to work on it in the Committees on Appropriations of the House and the Senate.

In the 1948 fiscal budget Prencinradio, Inc., a Government corporation, certificate of dissolution was filed, secretary of state, Delaware, May 14, 1946, yet this year 1948 Budget shows its only business will be a radio program, $12,637, and it asks an appropriation of $8,850 to operate.

Military and naval estimates of appropriations and expenditures are guesses at best; their tendency is to err on the high side. By no means are they a precise measurement of the minimum or maximum amounts of funds necessary to finance security. No less an authority than Admiral Nimitz clearly indicated this fact when he stated before an appropriations subcommittee last year:

> No naval or military man is ever satisfied with what is made available, and again I must say very frankly that it is a guess as to what is adequate.

Again I must say very frankly that it is a guess as to what is adequate. I recognize clearly the need for an alert Army and Navy. Although I am opposed to promiscuous reductions in the service appropriations, I believe that substantial economies can be achieved without impairing either the efficiency of the services or the security of the Nation.

Mr. President, it appears to me that in connection with the question of fixing the budget the proverbial red herring is being drawn across the trail. It is being said on the floor of the Senate and all over America that we intend to cut down the American Army and the American Navy. I do not believe there is a Member of the Senate who would vote consciously—certainly all Members of the Senate will have the facts, and be conscious of what they are doing—to cut down the real efficiency of the American Army and the American Navy. We must first know that real peace is here to stay before we cut them down. But I think it is unfair to the people to say nothing about any of the expenditures except those of the Army and the Navy, and seek to make them believe that we in Congress want to cut down the effectiveness of the Army and Navy of the United States.

No nation on the face of the globe should take what I say here today as an indication that those who believe in a $6,000,000,000 cut in the budget do not stand for a really efficient Army and Navy, which can take their places in the uncertain world in which we live. No nation should draw such a conclusion, because it is not justified.

Our defense establishment proposes to spend $6,790 per man per annum during 1948. This is only slightly lower than the expenditure of $6,960 per annum per man during fiscal year 1945, when we were engaged in an all-out war. Considering the vast stores of equipment and supplies which remain available to the services, Congress would be remiss in its duty to the Nation if it did not question Army and Navy budget estimates.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Subcommittee To Investigate the War Assets Administration, from the meager investigation I have made it appears there is surplus property worth billions of dollars declared surplus by the Army and Navy. I also find, after the Army and Navy declares property surplus, they revoke the declaration and the property is returned to the Army or Navy. This should reduce the amount of appropriations for the Army and Navy.

I have been unable to get the exact figures showing what the War Assets Administration has sold, the proceeds of which it has turned into the Treasury of the United States, but that certainly should be applied on the debt, so that we can reduce interest charges on the debt and taxes.

It is believed that a measure providing for unification of the armed services will probably pass in this Congress, yet no one has mentioned that item. It should cut the expenditures of our national defense, if we are to take the testimony of General Eisenhower. In testifying before the Senate Military Affairs Committee, he said:

Comparing the two opposing plans—

He was speaking about unification—

Comparing the two opposing plans, I should say you could develop a more efficient fighting force with unification, with 75 percent of the men that you would have if you had separate forces.

"Seventy-five percent of the men," he said. What a reduction that would mean in the expenditures; yes, and in the sacrifice of lives by the American people.

In reply to a question by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] asking if he could give a reasonable guess as to the expenditures we might have saved during the past war had we had a unified Military Establishment, Secretary Patterson said, "No, except it ran into billions of dollars." It would run into billions of dollars. General Marshall agreed with Secretary Patterson.

The President of the United States spoke about unification, and what a saving we might effect through unification. But nothing is said about it in the Budget. No one is mentioning that.

In his state of the Union message to Congress on January 6, 1947, the President referred to the unification as "the one certain way by which we can cut costs and at the same time enhance our national security."

No Member of Congress desires to cripple our national security. I maintain, however, that effective security and efficiency of Government is not merely a matter of absolute spending totals. Dollars themselves are not security, but their wise use is. In suggesting a ceiling of $31,500,000,000, I am hoping we can compel the prudent administration and effective direction of tax moneys to essential projects.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senate is not in order. I hope order will be maintained both on the floor of the Senate and in the galleries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEM in the chair). The Senate will be in order, and the occupants of the galleries will refrain from conversation.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I would not expect the galleries to be in order, for most of the occupants, I perceive, are from the departments which seriously object to the Senate reducing expenditures by $6,000,000,000. But the people back home are not going to be silent about this reduction, or, for that matter, the people of the whole world, because on our solvency in America will depend the path on which the world will move in the future. A part of my statement consists of figures, and while some Government departments may not be interested, and may not want to hear what I say today; and while I know that politically this is not the appropriate thing to say to those who want to spend, and to those who have been living upon the taxpayers of America, and who have caused the spending of as much money for Government as the people have been spending for food; yet all the people, in their sober moments, even those who are employed in government, will some day be interested in the solvency of the United States of America.

In our Nation's history we have reached a crisis where clear thinking, free from partisanship or bitterness, must be used if we are to emerge a solvent oasis in a world of bankruptcy. If we are to help stabilize an unstable world, we must build a sane, solvent economy founded upon our imperative needs and our actual resources.

Having established our need and having evaluated our assets, it becomes our duty to provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare of our people and thereby secure the blessings of liberty. We must have a sound, efficient economic base upon which we can operate nationally and internationally. Certainly I shall not vote to jeopardize our national security but I shall vote to cut down the unnecessary duplications of bureaus and senseless spending of millions of dollars for purely political purposes. I shall vote to retain the essentials, and I shall vote to do away with waste and extravagance such as has been pointed out repeatedly in the Senate and House hearings, instances of which I have seen as a member of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment at this point?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HAWKES. The Senator made a comment on a matter about which I feel very strongly. He states that he would not vote to jeopardize our national defense—and, of course, he would not, as everyone who knows the Senator must be aware—but I want to emphasize again that the strongest bulwark of our national defense is national solvency, and I say to every Member of the Senate that if 5 years or 10 years from now, when other nations may be wanting to attack us, we have failed to achieve national solvency, and are at war amongst ourselves, the United States of America as we have known it heretofore will be a thing of the past.

Mr. FERGUSON. I appreciate the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey, because I believe what he has said to be a true statement of fact that cannot be disputed.

If the Nation remains sound and strong, with an efficient Army and an efficient Navy, we can increase our strength and go into battle against any nation or nations, but if the Nation becomes insolvent, if its assets become dissipated, then we shall be unable to defend ourselves. No nation can survive or help the rest of the world to recover, when its people are taxed beyond the level where initiative is killed and only existence or survival remains. When the Government takes a third of its citizens' income, the result is hardship, dissatisfaction, and demand for a change. The only excuse for taking that amount of money is when the Nation is actually at war or is immediately facing a war.

Therefore, essentials must be recognized and must be guaranteed and nonessentials must be equally recognized and just as definitely must go. It is imperative that we remain strong if we are to help the rest of the world in its struggle back to peace and prosperity.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I firmly believe that the United States is at the fiscal crossroads. Which road the Nation follows will determine its internal strength for years to come. The choice is up to Congress in its decision on the legislative budget. If the road to easy, unchecked Federal spending is accepted, our national substance may be so weakened as to leave us easy prey to internal emergency or external foe. If the more difficult road is followed, and the legislative budget ceiling of $31,500,000,000 approved, we will retain for real emergency the fiscal substance upon which our strength must rely.

NOTICE OF NIGHT SESSIONS

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, last week the Republican policy committee, with the approval of the Republican conference, decided that the Senate should be asked, rather than to meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays, to meet Monday and Wednesday evenings. I told the conference at that time that we would give 2 weeks' notice before any such schedule went into effect. I now am compelled to give such notice. We intend to ask the Senate to meet on Monday and Wednesday evenings beginning 2 weeks from tonight, which will be March 10.

The new schedule is an experiment; we do not know how it will work. The proposal is to continue in session until perhaps half-past 5 and then recess until 7 o'clock, so as to give everyone an opportunity to have supper downstairs and then to sit from 7 to 10, perhaps, on Monday and Wednesday evenings, in order that on Tuesdays and Thursdays there may be more time for committees to meet and do their work, and also in the hope that we may have better attendance and perhaps accomplish more work at the evening sessions than is ordinarily possible during the day.

If the schedule does not work satisfactorily, we shall have to adopt some other plan; but the notice is in accordance with the present plan of the majority policy committee.

I may say, as to the schedule, Mr. President, that we now have on the calendar for consideration after the completion of the pending business the joint resolution limiting the President's tenure to two 4-year terms. The portal-to-portal pay bill has been reported in today, and the question of the confirmation of the Lilienthal nomination will be ready next week. So it looks as if from now on we shall have to run rather long sessions in order to complete the business of the Senate.

By the time the matters to which I have referred are completed we expect to have a major labor bill ready, and important foreign-relations matters and treaties will also come before the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio, Does the announcement mean that we shall also meet on Fridays?

Mr. TAFT. We shall meet on Fridays, but not on Friday evenings. The purpose is to try evening sessions only on Mondays and Wednesdays.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator has found himself getting behind, and he wants to catch up on the work, is that it?

Mr. TAFT. The only trouble is that Friday evening is the beginning of the week end, and I thought it would be inconvenient for many of the Senators to remain for sessions Friday evenings. If we cannot do it in this way, we shall have to begin to meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays also, but we thought we would try it and see how this plan would work.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

Mr. CAIN. To my mind, Mr. President, there are things yet to be said about our budget-reduction problem which have not been said before.

Ninety percent of what we have listened to has revolved around our national security. Some would have us believe that merely to look at Army and Navy budgets is somehow to hold them in peril. I wonder how many people, including Senators, really believe this to be so.

What about the required needs of the Nation's armed services? Are they properly provided for in the President's Budget? Should they have less or must they have more than the requested $11,500,000,000? Like many a Senator and Representative, I do not know, but I do know men and budget estimates and the record, and knowing these things in a general way I am convinced that as they apply to the armed services they must be examined and questioned and reexamined with a preciseness and thoroughness not in evidence for many years. To question and to doubt any requested budget item is not to doubt either the integrity or sincerity of the branch having jurisdiction over the item. In taking for granted that economies can be made which will not hinder or injure the several missions which the Congress has given to the armed services, the Appropriations Committees of House and Senate will render a true and substantial service to the armed services and to the Nation.

I have a clear right to voice a positive objection, and I do, to the logic used by some Members on both sides of the aisle who appear to want the Nation to believe that a vote in favor of the $6,000,000,000 cut proposal is a vote in support of a turn-back to isolation, and a threat to our national security. That I think a majority of our citizens everywhere will take no such view is an understatement. These citizens, Americans all, want the armed services to have what they clearly need and nothing more. There is nothing unfair or unreasonable in this average American position, and I know of no first-rate military or naval leader who thinks otherwise.

It is not for me to say what cuts, substantial or small, can be made with safety in the submitted budgets of the armed services. Were I to listen solely to those who dissent on this floor I would obviously conclude that no cuts are possible. But those who dissent the more vehemently and at greatest length have not even admitted or recognized possible large-scale savings which could come from eliminating duplicating supply lines, facilities, and services. If the services are to be integrated is it not about time that this very considerable task was undertaken? We should not talk about taking needed monies away from the services until we are further convinced that the services are doing all they humanly can to make every dollar of present appropriations go as far as it can.

I wonder if every precious dollar is presently serving a useful purpose. Many years ago the Congress decided that special compensation should be granted to officers of the Army and Navy who had something to do with airplanes. This was known as flight pay and there was a sound reason why it came into being. Airplanes were new. Riding around in them constituted a painful duty and hazardous occupation, and the services thought the offer of a premium would attract the personnel required. All of this was years ago, but unless the prevailing policy is changed, flight pay will go on forever. Perhaps it is proper today to pay a premium for doing something which has become a national habit—for doing something which is no longer unusual or hazardous. My own feeling is that flight pay, like many another practice, has outworn its usefulness and ought to be done away with. Not only would dollars in surprising amounts be saved but to eliminate flight pay would be to recognize that special privilege is no more required in the Army and Navy than in any other walk of life. I wonder what the budget-cut dissenters think about flight pay. It represents a sizable sum of some millions of dollars; a sum unnecessary to expend for this purpose; a sum which could be used to far greater purpose somewhere else.

The Senators who favor the $6,000,000,000 cut are looking for reductions which will not curtail service. The merger and flight pay are but two examples. I hope the Appropriations Committees will find more, and I defy any other Senator to prove that I have less respect and admiration than does he for the fighting qualities of the armed services and their magnificent leadership. In doubting their stated dollar needs, I am willing to provide what they prove in due time they must have.

Like every other freshman Senator, I had nothing to do with the Reorganization Act, but I have already, as an American, learned to be grateful for its existence. If it were not for the Reorganization Act, we would not now be debating the difference between a cut of $4,500,000,000 and $6,000,000,000 in the President's proposed Budget of $37,500,000,000. We should, I think, if the Reorganization Act did not make it otherwise, be sitting here in the midst of a land of make-believe. We should be leaving reality up to others. The Reorganization Act, which requires a legislative budget, has forced the Senate to consider America's financial future. The legislative budget permits and encourages us to determine if we want to bankrupt America or to move as rapidly as we can in the direction of financial security, sanity, and solvency. If it were not for the legislative-budget requirement, we would be leaving America's future financial policy up to committees of the House and Senate; we should be ignoring a responsibility which belongs, and ought to belong, to us.

I am grateful, moreover, to those who recommended to the Senate a budget cut of $6,000,000,000. That such a figure is concretely attainable, I do not know and I do not particularly care. That it cannot be too far away from what can be accomplished is certain because of the men, both Senators and Representatives, who have said that the figure, from their point of view, is reasonable and possible, and because of what others, not members of the Legislative Budget Committee, have pointed out and said.

What I do have a conviction about is this: If the committee had not recommended $6,000,000,000, we would not be arguing over a compromise figure of $4,500,000,000. If those of us who want six billion get one and one-half billion less than what we want, we are actually going to live well within our income for the first time in years. This in itself would be a tremendous achievement, and it might turn out to be more because the conference between the Senate and the House will compromise whatever dollar differences they have.

I shall vote for the $6,000,000,000 cut for several reasons. I shall vote for it:

(a) Because Senators and Representatives whom I respect have said that it can be accomplished without injury to the national welfare.

(b) Because I am satisfied that if we knew how to do it, and I frankly am satisfied we do not at this time, we could cut the Budget $10,000,000,000 without injury to anyone.

(c) Because I assume, and for very valid reasons, that the President guarded against a sizable cut by fashioning his budgets accordingly.

(d) Because I want to join with others in declaring unrelenting war on paternalistic big government, on deficit financing, on tragic extravagance, on bureaucracy, on doing for States and municipalities what they ought to and must again do for themselves.

(e) Because I recognize a vast dollar difference between what government must have to be effective and what it naturally enough, because of its paternalistic character, wants in order to accomplish its myriad purposes.

(f) Because I feel no real or solid assurance that our present high level of national income will long continue.

(g) Because I conceive the national debt to be an obligation and not the figment of somebody's imagination. It must be retired or repudiated. Over the long pull there is no middle course. It is freedom on the one hand and feudalism on the other.

(h) Because tax burdens, if long continued, will further destroy our American enthusiasm and need for incentive without which we should become as helpless and futile as other peoples have become who struggled only for the state.

(i) Because I see no reason for apology or embarrassment should we fail in the attainment of a $6,000,000,000 goal.

There is an honest difference of opinion between those of us who seek the four and one-half billion and those who favor the $6,000,000,000. There is no quarrel between us, for we argue only about degree. Both sides wish to repudiate New Dealism in its every sordid financial aspect. We seek to release the American people from a tax burden and Federal-debt dictatorship. We hope to help them understand the incredible fallacy which is ever present in the premise America has followed in recent years that an individual, a group, a city or a State can get something for nothing. If our present Congress could do this and this alone, it would go down in history as having made a real contribution to the march of progress, and to the development of society.

But all Senators and Representatives are not impressed with the imperative need for Federal retrenchments. They say they have no information as to how the proposed cuts can be made. They insist on being shown, but they will not look for themselves. They cry to high heaven that we budget cutters want to destroy the national security, but they do not suggest nor do they even admit that in practically every field of Federal endeavor, financial madness and foolish extravagance have been in the saddle for a good many recent years gone by. In my American eyes these gentlemen are recognized for what they stand for, and I shall fight to stay here long enough to see them eliminated one by one.

Whether we cut four and one-half or six billion dollars from the budget the task will not be easy. The American people have been trained to expect gratuities from the Great White Father and from the Congress. Blank-check legislation has helped to make this true. No one denies that such is the fact. The people have been taught that there is no point in waiting until tomorrow to get what they want when they can get it today. But I think those very same people will listen to reason, that they will understand, that they will appreciate the need for economy—provided we define the issue and let it be known that all regions and areas are expected to make the same kind of sacrifices. I lay particular stress on the need for an equality of sacrifice because I am a western Senator and as such I have a greater selfish interest in continuing Federal expenditures than do most Senators. The West is a going and a growing concern. Its destiny continues to lie beyond the horizon. Billions of dollars can be invested out there and there will long be a need for billions more. Were I a Senator only from my State of Washington I might care little for the state of the Nation or for the rights and needs of others. I might only insist on getting more and more from the Federal trough. But no Senator belongs to his State or his section alone. He belongs to the Union as well, and for that Union of 48 States he must likewise, as for his own State, work and persevere and dream. If in being a Senator from Washington State I got for that State everything it wanted, but in getting things it could get along without at this time, I helped, along with other Senators who were doing the same thing, to bring financial ruin and a valueless dollar to the Nation of which all States are a blessed part, I should have done my State no favor; I should have betrayed my public trust.

Mr. President, the soundness of the American dollar is a prize and goal worth fighting for. The dollar is worth only what it will purchase. That it buys so little today is no compliment to the Congress of the United States. In joining with other Senators who support the proposed $6,000,000,000 budget cut I give evidence of my individual faith in the willingness of the American people to make sacrifices today which will retain for our tomorrows a free and solvent opportunity for all.

NOMINATION OF DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only a few minutes.

During the hearings which have been in progress for the past few weeks before the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy concerning the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal, who has been appointed as Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, a great many things have been proved. A great deal of comment has been provoked by columnists, newspaper editors, and others. I wish to read at this time a comment by Mr. Harold Ickes, former Secretary of the Interior, which was published in the Washington Evening Star of Friday, February 21. The article is entitled "Man to Man. Lilienthal's Monopoly of All Virtues Leaves Commentator a Little Queasy." Mr. Ickes said:

MAN TO MAN—LILIENTHAL'S MONOPOLY OF ALL VIRTUES LEAVES COMMENTATOR A LITTLE QUEASY

(By Harold L. Ickes)

The attacks of Senator MCKELLAR on David E. Lilienthal have been reckless and intemperate. No one believes, probably not even the Senator himself, that Mr. Lilienthal ever has been a Communist or possessed of sympathies for communism. And yet while we may be impressed with the injustice of the attacks on Mr. Lilienthal, we are entitled to feel a little queasy about the extremes to which his devotees have gone, although, of course, it may really be true that Mr. Lilienthal is a citizen whose loftiness of soul, whose exclusively unique abilities, and whose noble characteristics can be compared to the greatest in the pages of American history only to the disadvantage of the latter.

Perhaps Senator MCKELLAR is a black political devil, with never a redeeming quality, but he has made our choice easy for us by taking the pastel shadings out of our political life. We like an issue to be black or white; a man either devil or angel. We insist on being on the side of the angels, and since Senator MCKELLAR is a devil, Mr. Lilienthal is necessarily an angel.

MORE FUEL ON THE PYRE

Many of our newspapers, exercising their freedom to be above discrimination, day by day throw more fuel on the pyre around the poor old man from Tennessee, depending on spontaneous combustion to supply the flash of consuming flame. At the same time, they exalt ever higher the white-robed figure of David Lilienthal, with lyre in hand and eyes straining upward. The man who does not accept Mr. Lilienthal as the indispensable man (at long last) necessarily believes in Army control of atomic energy, betrays the cause of liberalism, seeks to destroy our democracy, and wants to share the secret of the atom with Russia.

I hope that Mr. Lilienthal, who admittedly has a monopoly on practically all of the virtues, is not as good and as pure as this hysteria would have us believe. I hope that the Senate will quickly resolve this issue. I do not feel comfortable living on the same earth with a man who is conscious that he possesses all of the virtues and not a single fault. I am ill at ease in the presence of this radiant and transcendent human being, who, if he could permit himself to boast, would acknowledge all of the spiritual qualities that have been generated from Thomas à Kempis to Aimee Semple McPherson.

One columnist compares him to the late Louis Brandeis and Charles Evans Hughes. Others represent him as being a composite of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln. If he bears any resemblance to Franklin D. Roosevelt, that would be a top military secret because of those Senators who still hate that man. However, we do not need Franklin D. Roosevelt as a yardstick. We still have a long list to draw on for a proper setting for our hero, even although they may not be worthy to tie the laces of his shoes. Are there not Peter the Hermit, Jeanne d'Arc, Lorenzo the Magnificent, and Big Bill the Builder?

FLAG IN THE STRATOSPHERE

If it were permitted to pursue Mr. Lilienthal into the stratosphere, where he exhales the purest of oxygen, we would undoubtedly find him, as usual, wrapping himself up in the TVA, the flag, or democracy. No one except Senator MCKELLAR (exclamation point!) would be so base as to deny that Mr. Lilienthal is a knight in shining armor, who would disdain any thought except on behalf of the people; or to question that he is the only symbol that we have of international cooperation, and that the early doom of our democracy and civilization is in the cards, if Mr. Lilienthal is not given the job that he did his damnedest to avoid by pulling every wire to get. If it were true as basely charged that, despite his ability, he is predisposed to intrigue, is given to ruthlessness, and, at times, is not too scrupulous in promoting his personal ambitions, this is not to his discredit. After all Mr. Lilienthal is Mr. Lilienthal, while Senator MCKELLAR is just Senator MCKELLAR.

Some time ago, when Senator MCKELLAR wasn't looking, Mr. Lilienthal smote a rock and brought forth a book called Democracy at Work, which was a paen of praise of the works of the TVA and, of course, of Mr. Lilienthal. In it he describes how the TVA has improved the land by teaching the farmers soil erosion control methods and the like. He states proudly that the farmers of the area were induced to accept these better methods by gifts of free fertilizer. This is the system that he hails as democracy. Only the hypercritical would suggest that paying some one to do something is a poor description of democracy. Just so, "Hinky Dink" Kenna, who used to slip the human derelicts in Chicago's first ward a dollar on election day to vote his ticket, was knee deep in democracy.

Mr. Lilienthal doubtless believes implicitly in his eloquent words on democracy of which he delivered himself so glibly (considering that they were supposed to be extemporaneous), but he knows how selfless he is and how superbly equipped to serve the people, even in spite of themselves.

As for me, I am going to listen to the voice of God, as filtered through the newspapers, and be on the side of Mr. Lilienthal. I want him to remember me when he hands out free samples of atomic power.

Mr. President, I desire to read a few selected portions of the record which has been made in the hearings, to which I referred at the outset, before the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, during which time consideration was given to making a report upon Mr. Lilienthal's appointment as Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

I first want to call attention to the examination of a witness from Chicago, a lady who was at one time Mr. Lilienthal's secretary when he was privately and otherwise employed in that locality. One of the principal purposes of calling attention to this testimony is to point out the fact that Mr. Lilienthal held a public position in the State of Wisconsin by appointment of the Governor. He held a membership on the Utilities Commission of the State of Wisconsin; and, in defiance of law and contrary to the statute of Wisconsin, he held other employment. That condition continued for more than a year—or possibly a year and a half, or 2 years he held two positions in violation of the plain provisions of the laws of the State of Wisconsin.

I want to read the testimony of Mrs. Meads Duncan Leitzell, who resides at 1520 North La Salle Street, Chicago. Her testimony was taken before the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy on February 19 last, and it appears in volume 16, pages 1398 to 1409. She was examined by the chairman of the committee, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state your name, please?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Meads Duncan Leitzell.

The CHAIRMAN. And where do you live, Mrs. Leitzell?

Mrs. LEITZELL. I live in Chicago.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your occupation now?

Mrs. LEITZELL. I am a housewife.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time a subpena for you was suggested, or some time after that I was given a memorandum as to the line of testimony that you were desired to give, and it apparently is not in the file that I brought down this morning. But, as I recall it you were, at one time, employed by Mr. Lilienthal.

Mrs. LEITZELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Where was that, and in what capacity?

Mrs. LEITZELL. I have a statement if you would like me to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. If that will answer the purpose, you may proceed. That may have been what I was handed.

Mrs. LEITZELL. This is a carbon of that statement. Would you like me to read it?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; proceed in any way you want to. I am not certain what the line of examination is which I should follow here.

Mrs. LEITZELL. My name is Meads Duncan Leitzell. I am a housewife and live with my husband and three children at 1520 North La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

I was born in St. Joseph, Mo., on April 7, 1904.

My husband was transferred to Chicago from St. Joseph in January 1928, where I joined him a few weeks later. I then secured a position as stenographer with Commerce Clearing House, in the Continental-Illinois Bank Building.

At that time, Mr. David E. Lilienthal was employed by Commerce Clearing House as editor of "Public Utilities and Carriers' Service," and used to send his material to CCH office.

That name is in quotation marks, and I assume it is a pamphlet or magazine of some kind issued periodically.

Part of my work was to type material that came in from him.

Mr. Lilienthal's office at first was in the same building with the Commerce Clearing House, but later he took an office in the Straus Building.

While at the Straus Building, his secretary stopped working for him and he asked me to become his secretary. I went to work then in his office in the Straus Building.

During the time I worked in the Commerce Clearing House office, I was paid by them, but after I went to the Straus Building, I was paid by Mr. Lilienthal, always by check.

In the Straus Building office, in addition to Mr. Lilienthal and myself, Harry Booth also worked for Mr. Lilienthal in connection with the preparation of the Public Utilities and Carriers' Service.

The Public Utilities and Carriers' Service was a legal publication service dealing with court decisions and legislative bills of interest to utilities and carriers. I don't know what the cost of the service was, but it was considered more expensive than other publications of the Commerce Clearing House.

Mr. Lilienthal paid Harry Booth, me, and later Joseph Swidler, by check.

The CHAIRMAN. Who?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Mr. Lilienthal paid Harry Booth and me, and later, Joseph Swidler, by check.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know whether he is the same Joseph Swidler that has been with TVA?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Yes. I know that he was paid by Commerce Clearing House, and understand that this arrangement with Commerce Clearing House was by formal contract.

I don't recall the date, but Mr. Lilienthal moved from the Straus Building to an office at 1 North La Salle Street. This was, however, before he was appointed to the Wisconsin Railroad Commission, which is now called the Public Service Commission.

After moving to 1 North La Salle Street, Joseph Swidler came into the office and worked for Mr. Lilienthal. There had been two private offices in the Straus Building office.

There were three private offices in the 1 North La Salle Street office.

After moving into the 1 North La Salle Street office, I continued to act as Mr. Lilienthal's secretary. In that capacity, I prepared manuscripts for the Public Utilities and Carriers' Service.

I handled such correspondence as was necessary. Mr. Lilienthal often wrote his notes and material in shorthand. I could read and transcribe his shorthand notes.

I handled his checkbook, preparing checks for payment of myself, Booth, and Swidler, and for office expenses, such as telephone bills and rent.

I checked his monthly bank statements against the stubs in his checkbook, which was kept in the office.

Early in 1931, Mr. Lilienthal was appointed to the Wisconsin commission and went to Madison.

He continued to maintain his office at 1 North La Salle Street, Chicago. He continued to pay the office rent. He continued to pay me. He continued to pay Mr. Booth and Mr. Swidler.

He handled these checks in one of two ways: Either he would come into the office and sign the checks or I would mail them to him in Madison for signature.

After his appointment to the Wisconsin commission, Mr. Lilienthal told me to tell anybody who asked for him that the office was no longer his. I followed his instructions.

If I couldn't cope with any situation that came up, I turned it over to Mr. Booth or Mr. Swidler.

I continued to work for Mr. Lilienthal under these conditions through and beyond the summer of 1932. I remember the date, because in the summer of 1932, my husband went on a camping trip and I returned to work for Mr. Lilienthal after coming back from that trip.

I know that I was no longer working for him in the summer of 1933. My husband and I had planned another camping trip that year, but just before we started, the luggage compartment of our car fell on my thumb, forcing its amputation. I will never forget that year.

I worked for Mr. Lilienthal after the 1932 camping trip, but I do not remember the exact date when I stopped working for him. But it was before the 1933 accident to my hand.

During the entire period I worked for Mr. Lilienthal, he was always courteous and considerate as an employer.

A number of years have elapsed since my employment by Mr. Lilienthal, but I believe the principal facts stated can be confirmed by records.

The CHAIRMAN. Mrs. Leitzell, that is not the memorandum that I had been given. I had never seen your statement before. I was given a short memorandum of your testimony. I think the point that was emphasized in this statement, as I say, that was given to me, either at the time of or after your subpena, I forget which, was something questioning the conduct of Mr. Lilienthal in connection with his receiving compensation from the Commerce Clearing House Association while he was holding the position as a member of the Wisconsin State Power Commission. Do you know anything about that?

Mrs. LEITZELL. I do not quite understand.

The CHAIRMAN. I said the suggestion was made that the point of your testimony would be that Mr. Lilienthal was receiving pay, or income, or compensation for his services in connection with the Commerce Clearing House activities while he was a member of the Wisconsin State Utilities Commission.

Mrs. LEITZELL. Yes, as I say here in my statement he did receive checks from the Commerce Clearing House during that time, and I was paid by him. You see, he went to the commission in 1931, and I was still working for him through the summer of 1932.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, I see. Now, as I recall it, a question was raised that as an employee of the Wisconsin State body there, he was prohibited under the Wisconsin law and the obligations of his job from accepting compensation from other employment any place else. Did you know anything about that?

Mrs. LEITZELL. I didn't at the time. I know now, that that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. I see. And how long did this compensation from the Clearing House continue, so far as you know?

Mrs. LEITZELL. So far as I know, as long as I worked there. Whether it continued later, I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. Your employment ended prior to your vacation in the summer of 1933? Is that correct?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Yes, that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think it continued into the spring of 1933?

Mrs. LEITZELL. No, I don't think so. I really don't remember, but I am sure it was after the camping trip in the summer of 1932.

The CHAIRMAN. I see. You were not working for him at the time you had this unfortunate accident to your thumb?

Mrs. LEITZELL. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe that is all. Just a moment, though. There may be another question. Yes, Senator CONNALLY wants to ask you a question.

Senator CONNALLY. What were the duties or services that he rendered?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Pardon?

Senator CONNALLY. I say, what were his duties to this concern in Chicago that you were working with?

Mrs. LEITZELL. What do you mean? When he was in Chicago?

Senator CONNALLY. No; after he went to Madison, or before he went to Madison. What was he supposed to do?

Mrs. LEITZELL. He was the editor of it.

Senator CONNALLY. Editor of a magazine?

Mrs. LEITZELL. It was not a magazine, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. What was it?

Mrs. LEITZELL. It was a service for attorneys, utilities, and carriers. That was the name of it: Public Utilities and Carriers' Service. It was gotten out in loose-leaf form, and sent at different times, after court decisions.

Senator CONNALLY. To keep them advised as to the status of the affairs of the utilities and the railroads? Is that right?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Mere court decisions dealing with utilities and the carriers.

Senator CONNALLY. I say to keep them advised as to the situation as to what was happening to railroads and public utilities. Now, did he continue to do that after he was appointed to the commission in Wisconsin?

Mrs. LEITZELL. I don't remember how much editorial work after he went up there.

Senator CONNALLY. Well, you say he continued to receive a salary for it?

Mrs. LEITZELL. He did.

Senator CONNALLY. And he continued to pay you for the work on this stuff?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Yes, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Was there any difference of his conduct of the business after he went to Wisconsin, as compared to what he did before?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Well, surely he was not as active after he went to Wisconsin.

Senator CONNALLY. Because he was not there all the time?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Because he was not there.

Senator CONNALLY. But was there any change in the nature of the work that he was doing?

Mrs. LEITZELL. The work was the same, as far as the office went.

Senator CONNALLY. All right.

Senator MCKELLAR. Did Mr. Lilienthal reside in Chicago when he was appointed commissioner of the State Power Commission of Wisconsin?

Mrs. LEITZELL. He did live in Chicago before he went to Wisconsin.

Senator MCKELLAR. Well, when he was appointed, then, he was living in Chicago, was he not?

Mrs. LEITZELL. I do not know whether it was Chicago or whether it was one of the suburbs. I think it was one of the suburbs.

Senator MCKELLAR. You do not know where he was living. But when he was appointed, did he move to Madison?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. He moved up there?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Yes, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. Did he just come occasionally down to your office?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Yes, sir; that is right.

Senator MCKELLAR. And how long was it, according to your best memory, after he was appointed, that you ran this business for him in Chicago?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Well, I did not run it.

Senator MCKELLAR. I thought you said you did.

Mrs. LEITZELL. I was merely a secretary.

Senator MCKELLAR. Well, put it this way: Did Mr. Swidler and Mr. Booth and yourself run it? And how long was it after he left that you ran it?

Mrs. LEITZELL. I didn't run it.

Senator MCKELLAR. I mean all three of you.

Mrs. LEITZELL. I continued to work there in his office after 1931, through the summer of 1932.

Senator MCKELLAR. He left in 1931?

Mrs. LEITZELL. That is right.

Senator MCKELLAR. And you continued to work in his office through 1932, and you said in the spring of 1933 you still were working for him, did you not?

Mrs. LEITZELL. No, sir.

Senator MCKELLAR. You did not say you were there when you left on your spring vacation?

Mrs. LEITZELL. I worked for him through the summer of 1932. My husband and I had taken a camping trip in the summer of 1932, and I went back to his office after we came back from that camping trip.

Senator MCKELLAR. And how long did you work after you came back from the camping trip?

Mrs. LEITZELL. That I don't remember.

Senator MCKELLAR. Did you not say it was early in 1933?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Pardon?

Senator MCKELLAR. You said 1933 a while ago, did you not?

Mrs. LEITZELL. No, sir.

Senator CONNALLY. Do you know when he terminated his services with this concern?

Mrs. LEITZELL. No; I don't.

Senator CONNALLY. You don't know how long he continued in this relationship after you left?

Mrs. LEITZELL. Pardon?

Senator CONNALLY. I say, you do not know how long he continued this relationship with this concern in Chicago?

Mrs. LEITZELL. No; I don't know that.

Senator CONNALLY. Do you know how much compensation he was drawing from the company?

Mrs. LEITZELL. At one time it was something over $300 a week, and it was reduced to something over $200, but I don't recall the exact figures.

Senator CONNALLY. When was it reduced? When he went to Wisconsin?

Mrs. LEITZELL. I do not recall exactly when it was reduced.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all, Mrs. Leitzell. Thank you very much.

Mrs. LEITZELL. Thank you.

EXCERPTS FROM HEARINGS BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY, VOLUME 17, FEBRUARY 20, 1947, PAGE 1438

Senator MCKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, may I offer at this point, before we start on Mr. Shelton, two sections of the Code of the State of Wisconsin of 1945, in connection with the testimony that was taken yesterday?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir. Will you give the code citations?

Senator MCKELLAR. The Wisconsin Statutes, 1945, section 195.01, provides:

"(2) Ineligibility: No commissioner shall be pecuniarily interested in any railroad, public utility, or motor carrier, and if any such commissioner shall voluntarily become interested his office ipso facto shall become vacant; * * *" (Laws of Wisconsin, 1929, ch. 504, p. 925.)

And subsection 4:

"(4) Full time office: No commissioner shall hold any other office or position of profit or pursue any other business or vocation or serve on or under any committee of any political party, but shall devote his entire time to the duties of his office." (Laws of Wisconsin, 1929, ch. 504, p. 925.)

I want to insert that in the record, and the code is here if anyone would like to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in the record.

EXCERPTS FROM HEARINGS BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY, ON FEBRUARY 20, 1947, VOLUME 17, PAGES 1503–1507

Senator MCKELLAR. I want to put two biographies from Who's Who in the record, one from volume 24, 1946–47 edition, and the other one from volume 23, 1944–45 edition, of Who's Who, and several telegrams in the record concerning service of Mr. Lilienthal in Wisconsin and Chicago at the same time. Is there objection to it?

The CHAIRMAN. No objection.

Senator MCKELLAR. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you identify the pages?

Senator MCKELLAR. Yes, sir. I have got one of them transcribed, and I will identify the other one.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean at this point in the record, can you identify the pages of Who's Who?

Senator MCKELLAR. Yes, sir. The first one is 1945.

The CHAIRMAN. 1945 edition of Who's Who?

Senator MCKELLAR. Yes, sir. I do not have the page. I will have to put that in. (Citation is to page 1261 of volume 23.)

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Senator MCKELLAR. The other one is 1946 and 1947, on page 1407.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, sir; and if you will give the reporter the telegrams you want to put in at the same time, they will go in all together.

Senator MCKELLAR. All right, sir. Thank you.

I wish to read next a quotation from volume 23 of the 1944–45 edition of Who's Who:

David Eli Lilienthal; Chairman, Tennessee Valley Authority, lawyer; born in Morton, Ill., July 8, 1899; son of Leo and Minna (Rosenak) L.; A. B., DePauw U., Greencastle, Ind., 1920; LL. B., Harvard, 1923.

It states the names of the members of his family and then—

Admitted to Illinois bar, 1923; Tennessee bar, 1934; in practice of law, Chicago, 1923–31; Chicago, 1923–26; alone, 1926–31.

For a period of 5 years he was not a member of any firm.

Then it states:

Member Wisconsin Public Service Commission, 1931; Director, Tennessee Valley Authority since 1933; appointed Chairman, 1941.

Then there is other personal description. It states he lived at that time in Norris, Tenn.

I shall not undertake to read the full quotation from the 1946–47 edition of Who's Who, but it is the same, with the exception that the first line underscored in the 1944–45 edition has been deleted. It leaves out the statement that he practiced law in Chicago during the time he was a member of the Wisconsin Public Service Commission.

Next is the following telegram:

FEBRUARY 20, 1947.

Hon. FRED ZIMMERMAN,
Secretary of State, Madison, Wis.:

Please wire me immediately Government collect date of appointment of Mr. Lilienthal to Public Service Commission.

KENNETH MCKELLAR.

The reply from Mr. Zimmerman is as follows:

MADISON, WIS., February 20, 1947.

Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR:

David Lilienthal appointed to Wisconsin Railroad Commission (now Public Service Commission) on February 12, 1931.

FRED R. ZIMMERMAN,
Secretary of State.

There was a supplemental telegram from Mr. Zimmerman, not placed in the record of the hearings, bearing the same date, as follows:

MADISON, WIS., February 20, 1947.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR:

David Lilienthal received pay as railroad commissioner of Wisconsin from March 25, 1931, through June 30, 1933. His salary was $5,000 per year and he received a total of $11,347.23 for his services as commissioner.

FRED R. ZIMMERMAN,
Secretary of State.

There was another telegram, dated February 19, from Senator MCKELLAR to the Commerce Clearing House, Chicago, Ill., as follows:

FEBRUARY 19, 1947.

THE COMMERCE CLEARING HOUSE,
Chicago, Ill.:

Please wire me Government collect the date that Mr. David E. Lilienthal received his last check from you as editor of the publication, Utilities and Carriers Service, or in any other capacity. Give the dates of his going with you and the date of his last month with you.

KENNETH MCKELLAR.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 19, 1947.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Answering your telegram of even date our records show that the first payment to David E. Lilienthal for his authorship of Public Utilities and Carriers Law Reporting Service was made September 18, 1926, and that the last check from us was dated August 27, 1932. During the entire period his personal services were rendered from his own law office and our records do not disclose requested dates with us except as indicated by foregoing dates of payment.

COMMERCE CLEARING HOUSE, INC.

Mr. President, that completes the reading of the excerpts from the hearings which have been proceeding now for several weeks. I read them particularly in order to point out and emphasize and call specifically to the direct attention of the Members of the Senate that for a period of a year and a half or more David Lilienthal, whose name has been sent to the Senate for confirmation as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, occupied a position of trust under the State of Wisconsin in violation of the laws of that State, which he had subscribed to an oath to support, in that he at the same time held another position although the laws of Wisconsin expressly provided that he should do no other work, that he should serve no other master, that he should not, during the period of his service on the Wisconsin Commission, even have private employment.

Mr. President, that is the purpose and the reason for my imposing on the Senate to call this matter particularly to the attention of the Members of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled joint resolutions, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to operate vessels until July 1, 1947; and

H. J. Res. 121. Joint resolution granting, in the case of income, estate, and gift taxes, deductions for contributions to the United Nations.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, we are discussing whether or not it would be possible to cut $6,000,000,000 off the Budget which the President recommended. In other words, we are debating whether we shall follow the recommendation of the President and spend, in round figures, $37,000,000,000, or whether we shall cut that figure and spend, in round figures, $31,000,000,000.

It seems to me that those who believe in a reduction in expenditures of the Federal Government have allowed themselves to be maneuvered into a very undesirable position. I do not think we should be discussing here today the question of whether or not the President's Budget shall be reduced to $31,000,000,000. I think what we should be discussing is whether or not the Budget should be reduced to $25,000,000,000.

This is not the place to attempt to go into a detailed discussion of the Budget which the President has proposed, but I think if we will simply take an over-all look at the situation, we will be constrained to reach the conclusion that a Budget of $25,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year and a Budget of not more than $20,000,000,000 for the succeeding fiscal year would be entirely reasonable.

The memory of my colleagues, I am sure, goes back to the utopian days of the New Deal, when I think everybody agreed that there was being employed every known means of funneling money out of the Federal Treasury to all individuals and governmental agencies who would offer to take the money and put it into circulation. Occasionally during those days we would hear a few stouthearted Democrats, who were already in bad repute with the then ruling dynasty, observe that this Government was engaged in wasteful expenditures of public funds; occasionally we would have some member of the Republican Party make the observation that New Deal socialism was leading us into bankruptcy.

It seems to me that our memories are inclined to be short. Back in the days when the New Deal was being criticized for being wasteful, when the New Deal was being criticized for using the Public Treasury as a means of perpetuating itself in public office, the top amount which they were ever able to think up means of spending in any one fiscal year was slightly more than $9,000,000,000. Back in 1940, the last year before we entered the war, the New Deal brethren were only able to think up plans to spend a little more than $8,000,000,000.

Now we come to the point where we are planning our expenditures not for a war period but for a peacetime period, 2 and 3 years after the war is over, and we find ourselves here debating the question of whether we shall spend $31,000,000,000 or $37,000,000,000. It is my personal judgment that if we would set as a limit $25,000,000,000 instead of $37,000,000,000, certainly that would be a liberal limit, which should be cut to not more than $20,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year.

I realize, of course, that we must find a means of servicing our public debt, which will require five or six billion dollars annually, and I think we all realize that we must maintain an adequate system of national defense, but if the Budget were cut to $25,000,000,000 that would give us $17,000,000,000 to allot to national defense, debt retirement, and veterans' relief over and above what we were spending in 1940, and then it would enable us to continue to operate the "gravy train" which the New Deal was operating and spend $8,000,000,000 for that purpose. It seems to me this ought to be enough to satisfy the most liberal spenders.

I want to say to my colleagues in the Senate that there is no easy way to reduce Federal expenditures; every time a move is made to unhook a coach from the New Deal "gravy train" which has been running for the past 12 or 13 years, there are going to be plenty of squawks from the passengers on the train. There is only one sensible way to reduce public expenditures, and that is to reduce them. Give the bureaus and agencies a certain amount of money to spend and tell them to spend it and quit.

Because of the situation built in this Nation during the war period, we are actually collecting in Federal, State, and local taxes more money than the total national income was 12 or 13 years ago. Private business and private enterprise simply cannot exist under this kind of tax load.

No one is a stronger advocate than am I of adequate national defense. The best way in the world to have a strong national defense is to have a strong, solvent, national economy. Whatever we do which will tend to start the wheels of business moving so as to furnish employment for our people and enable them to maintain a high standard of living is the very essence of building a strong national defense. It is simply impossible to do this and at the same time bleed the citizens of this country white through taxation, and it is impossible to reduce taxes without reducing expenditures.

My judgment is that the results of the election on November 5 prove without any question of doubt that the American people are sick and tired of the kind of government we have had for the last 14 years. They voted for a change. I think the American people are tired of the plan of operating the New Deal "gravy train" at Washington at the expense of the taxpaying public, and I should like to suggest to the new Members of the Senate that I do not think the people simply voted to change engineers and conductors on the "gravy train"—I think they want the unnecessary coaches unhooked. I think they want all surplus boards and bureaus eliminated. I think they want Government to get back to operating on a sound and reasonable basis, and my opinion is that if the leadership of the Republican Party has reached the conclusion that the only thing wrong with the governmental philosophy which has grown up in the past 14 years and that the only thing wrong with the taxpayer-financed "gravy train" we have been operating in the past is that the conductors and engineers have been Democrats and not Republicans, the Republican leaders are due for a rude awakening at the next election. The people want the New Deal "gravy train" stopped and its schedule canceled. I think the people are seriously concerned about getting the cost of operating Government back on a reasonable basis, reducing taxes to the point where a man not only can make some money but can keep a part of it.

I think the people are sick and tired of a government so controlled and operated that those in power utilize the public purse to satisfy groups and blocs and thereby assure their own safety in the forthcoming election. I believe the people will applaud Members of Congress who have the courage to stand firm and square for real sure-enough economy.

In my judgment, the people are ready and willing to support the leadership that offers constructive evidence of its intention to reestablish free enterprise and to make it possible for business to operate and for the individual to be rewarded by allowing him to keep a reasonable portion of what he earns.

For these reasons I shall certainly vote to sustain the idea of reducing the President's budget to $31,000,000,000, unless I have an opportunity to vote to reduce it to twenty-five billion. I certainly think the reduction should be, not to $31,000,000,000, but to $25,000,000,000. Furthermore, if given an opportunity I shall vote for a 20 percent reduction in taxes, provided I do not have an opportunity to vote for a greater reduction.

My opinion is that within the next 2 or 3 years Federal expenditures should be cut at least 50 percent, Federal taxes should be cut at least 50 percent; and I think it is reasonable to suppose that both of these objectives could be accomplished if we would go to work in earnest to get the job done.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, I feel impelled to make a brief explanation of my position on this issue, because I understand that the parliamentary situation is such that we shall probably not have an opportunity to vote on whether we favor a $6,000,000,000 reduction in the Presidential Budget.

I am not one of those who believe it is impossible to cut the Budget by $6,000,000,000 without seriously impairing the strength of our armed forces. There is not a Member in either branch of the Congress who does not recognize that, at a time when world conditions are chaotic and unsettled, it is highly essential that the United States and the representatives of this Republic take a firm position in all of its relations with foreign countries.

We have demonstrated, through our efforts in cooperating with other countries individually and through the United Nations, and in other ways, that we are willing to make every necessary sacrifice to make possible rehabilitation of the devastated areas of the globe and to make possible an enduring peace.

It has been said frequently during the debate on this issue that any Senator who does not favor giving the armed services every dollar they ask for takes a position that he is jeopardizing our national defense. It think it is not fair to place that stigma upon any Senator who sincerely believes we can have national defense and security as well as economy and efficiency in the administration of our armed forces. Throughout the years of the war we heard that same suggestion repeated time and again before the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate. It was invariably said when the budget officers of the War and Navy Departments made requests for funds that members of the legislative branch could not justify withholding a single dollar without seriously jeopardizing the defense of our country and the prosecution of the war.

I know what the record is. We are proud of the magnificent work done by the 15,000,000 young men who won a military victory over the Axis Powers. The peace has not been won yet, and we know that the legislative branch of the Government, as well as the executive branch, is obligated to do everything possible to win the peace not only abroad but on the home front.

Recently I asked a member of the Appropriations Committee staff to do some research for me to determine whether the armed services during the war years used all the money appropriated by the Congress. I shall confine my figures only to the military functions of the War Department and submit at this time some figures which I am sure will be highly illuminating to all Members of the Senate.

In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1941, the War Department had unobligated for that 12 months' period the sum of $1,317,000,000.

In the fiscal year 1942 the Congress of the United States had appropriated $32,368,000,000 in excess of the capacity of the War Department to spend during that one year.

In the fiscal year 1943 the Congress provided $15,176,000,000 beyond the capacity of the War Department to spend in that crucial year.

In the fiscal year 1944 the figure again exceeded $32,000,000,000, being $32,766,000,000.

In the fiscal year 1945 we appropriated $10,397,000,000 more than could be obligated by the War Department.

In the fiscal year 1946, after VE-day, the War Department had remaining unobligated of its 12 months' appropriation the sum of $1,892,877,000.

It is true that some of these amounts were reappropriated, but the point I desire to stress is that notwithstanding the fact that the War Department budget officers had insisted in each of those years that they needed every dollar they were requesting, the record shows they were given billions and billions beyond their current requirements.

Public Law 301 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, rescinded $30,263,000,000.

Public Law 391 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, rescinded $1,544,000,000.

Public Law 521 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, rescinded $1,563,000,000.

I understand there is now contained in House Document No. 55 a request for the rescission of about $35,000,000. That means that already there has been recaptured by the Congress a total of $33,406,951,000. Of course it must be recognized that all that money was appropriated by the Congress, and was recaptured because even during those war years it was impossible for the Military Establishment to expend those funds.

It has frequently been said during this debate that there may be some element of partisanship in the approach made by the various Members to the proposal to cut the budget by $6,000,000,000 or by $4,500,000,000. I hold in my hand a copy of House Report No. 2729 which was filed on December 12, 1946—just a few months ago—by a committee, the majority members of which belonged to the Democratic Party. They made an extensive study of postwar economic policy and planning, and on December 12 filed a report, from which I shall take the liberty of quoting, as follows:

> While the committee realizes the necessity of continuing heavy expenditures for strong national defense, it seriously questions whether it is necessary to spend over 12 times the amount which was spent in 1939. It would urge upon the officials of the War and Navy Departments that they should realize the effects which such heavy expenditures have upon the economy of the country and that the greatest effort be made to reduce these expenditures; that each item in the Budget be scrutinized to see if it is absolutely necessary; and that projects which are not immediately needed be postponed.
> The committee feels that a Budget of $30,000,000,000 is a realistic budget and that expenditures can be reduced to this level without interfering with national defense or other normal functions of the Government. At this level the cost to the Federal Government per family of four would be over $850 a year.

I quote from this report merely to show that as late as December spokesmen for what was then the majority party of the Seventy-ninth Congress said a realistic budget at this time would approximate $30,000,000,000.

I should like to call attention to another development which took place on February 13, 1945. That is not so long ago; about 2 years ago. On that date Mr. Lindsay Warren, the Comptroller General of the United States, a man who has had extensive service in the Congress and whose judgment and integrity are respected by every Member of the Congress, appeared before a congressional committee to discuss the expenditures in the executive branch of the Government. At that time a Member of what was then the majority party asked Mr. Warren to express himself concerning the cost-plus system of awarding contracts which was in effect throughout the war. This Member asked Mr. Warren how much that particular program had added to the cost of the war, and according to the hearings printed, and which are available, Mr. Warren responded as follows:

> It is just so staggering that it is beyond our guess or computation.

When pressed further he said that the cost would be at least $50,000,000,000. In the rush and in the urgency of prosecuting the war, the War Department, through its procurement program, wasted $50,000,000,000 of our money, and the money of our children and grandchildren, merely because they did not adopt policies which provided for economy and efficiency in the handling of those contracts.

I recall last summer that when the pay measure was before the legislative branch of the Government, the Bureau of the Budget at that time—and the Bureau of the Budget represents the Chief Executive of our Government—made some promises and assurances to congressional committees that at the end of the present fiscal year, June 30, 1947, it was reasonable to expect the number of civilians on the Federal pay roll would reach the figure of 1,611,000.

I read with considerable amazement a few weeks ago that the Chairman of the United States Civil Service Commission said that, according to the records of this Federal agency, there would be approximately 2,100,000 civilian employees on the pay roll at the end of the present fiscal year. This means only that the Budget Bureau will miss its guess during one 12-months' period, Mr. President, by nearly 500,000, indicating that a great deal of talking takes place respecting retrenchment and curtailment of the operation of our Government. However, the record shows we do not have invariably that consistent action which is necessary to carry into effect proposals for economy.

I realize very well that the debate on the proposal made by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, after mature deliberation, whereby it was recommended that $6,000,000,000 be taken from the Presidential Budget, was more or less a gesture or symbol. Of course, we have not had an opportunity to scrutinize the recommendations made by the President, but under the Reorganization Act this procedure is required. So far as I am concerned I wish to stress the point that, whether the reduction be $4,500,000,000 or $6,000,000,000, or any other figure, the full responsibility rests upon the Congress to carry out the express will of the American taxpayers; namely, that now, 2 years after the end of hostilities in World War II, we determine that the waste and inefficiency which impaired the operations of our Government during the war shall not be continued.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee I serve notice upon my colleagues that I feel it incumbent upon myself to do everything I can to see that every possible dollar is cut from the 12 appropriation bills. Above all, that means that we should scrutinize the requests for funds submitted to this body by the War and Navy Departments. I am not one of those who believe that those in charge of the armed services are unwilling to cooperate. They are patriotic Americans who realize that we must have efficiency in the armed services as well as in every other department of Government.

Mr. President, we must have ample funds and we must have sufficient manpower not to jeopardize our national security. But above that, we need the national will and the national determination to put our fiscal house in order, because an essential part of national defense is a strong internal economy.

For these reasons I favor the $6,000,000,000 cut in the President's Budget.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, today in this critical hour of our country's financial welfare, in this hour when our country may be tottering on the very brink of insolvency, at this time when our national debt of $260,000,000,000 represents much of all the available money in the world, and at what may be the epochal period in determining whether we shall survive as a country of free enterprise, the whole people are looking to their President and to their Congress for leadership.

This is no time, Mr. President, for weak, vacillating leadership, but instead the exigencies call for men of iron determination, iron will, clear thinking. Above all, it may demand personal political sacrifice on the part of those of us who represent the people in this Government.

If anything has been proved by the debate on the Budget during the past few days, it has been the ghastly failure on the part of those to whom since 1932 has been entrusted the foreign policy of the United States, a policy that has brought us today to the very brink of extinction as a leading country, symbolic of justice, freedom, liberty, and happiness.

It would not be a pleasant task for me to review how failure succeeded failure in foreign affairs, until today we find ourselves the most hated country in the world—until today when, as the result of the last 14 years of miserable leadership, we find ourselves with few dependable allies and the overwhelming population of the world standing in actual fear of America.

Search our consciences as we will, the cold, hard reality is that our leadership in foreign affairs for 14 years has been a failure. Today the question facing the Senate is how to get out of the steel vise which daily is tightening around us; and in the choice we must make, whether for future war on the one hand or peace on the other, there will be agonizing distress.

It is almost fatalistically prophetic that Congress is called upon to act upon this Budget under the new Reorganization Act. This is true because it offers a gigantic challenge to us, and that challenge says, "There are but two ways to go—the right way or the wrong way, and go the latter way at your peril."

Mr. President, I welcome the opportunity to go the way of peace, and not of war. As I have listened during the many hours to Senators who have discussed this momentous problem, I have come to one inevitable, unchangeable, American decision; and that decision is that America shall not continue to be the leader in armaments, that the Senate shall not by its vote confirm the actions of men who in my opinion have become utterly hysterical with fear. Their attitude to me is reminiscent of that date in 1933 when the then President said:

> The only thing we have to fear is fear itself—nameless, unreasoning, unjustified terror which paralyzes needed efforts to convert retreat into advance. In every dark hour of our national life a leadership of frankness and vigor has met with that understanding and support of the people themselves which is essential to victory.

Personally, I have no fear of the present crisis, if the Senate will stop and take stock of itself, accurately estimate the feelings of the people of America, and then have the stamina to act.

The greatest danger we face is not another immediate war, but a repetition of a depression similar to that of 1933, when the then President said:

> Values have shrunk to fantastic levels; taxes have risen; our ability to pay has fallen; government of all kinds is faced by serious curtailment of income; the means of exchange are frozen in the currents of trade; the withered leaves of industrial enterprise lie on every side; farmers find no markets for their produce; the savings of many years in thousands of families are gone.

Let me make it plain that I believe that in this Budget there are two kinds of money: The first, money which will yield returns; the second, money which will be wasted. In the first category we find the loans for rural electrification, which will be repaid to the Federal Government in their entirety; the maintenance of 90 percent of the parity price for agricultural products; the maintenance of the soil-conservation program; the continuation of school lunch, educational, and labor programs; the maintenance of veterans' benefits; the interest on our debt; and various other similar items. These are items which are absolutely essential. They are those elements in a government which provide the greatest good for the greatest number, in health, in education, in prosperity. But the second kind of appropriations, those which are for war, are universally admitted to be unproductive and, in an economic sense, wasted.

Therefore I stand four-square for an all-out continuance of the first kind of appropriations. Last week a distinguished Senator said that, with the proper economy, we could save $2,500,000,000 by a reduction of the number of Federal employees. I may say that that statement has just been repeated by the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK]. As chairman of the Senate Committee on Civil Service, let me say that I believe it will be done.

The truth of the matter is that, since the shooting ended, 1,483,100 civil-service employees are no longer on the pay roll. I repeat that 1,483,100 have either resigned or been removed from the civil pay roll of the United States Government. This does not sound as if those who have been yelling, "Fire a million employees!" were telling all of the story, does it? This reduction was accomplished without publicity and in an orderly, sane, and businesslike manner under the terms of the Byrd-Langer amendment with the full cooperation of the Civil Service Commission and the Federal agencies.

In addition, every day more Federal employees are being released because more than a year ago Congress fixed a ceiling which provided that a certain number of employees should be removed every 3 months. This means that by June 1, 1947, there will be a total employment of 1,167,220, plus those additional empoyees hired by the Veterans' Administration, the War Assets Administration, and one or two minor agencies. With these added, the Senate Committee on Civil Service received from the Civil Service Commission and the Bureau of the Budget a carefully prepared statement that on July 1 next the total civil-service employment will be 1,710,000.

On January 1 there were 2,283,890. So we see that because of the careful planning that has been done by the Congress, by July 1 there will be a further reduction of 573,890 persons.

Mind you, Mr. President, all of this was done by a law, passed last year, which provided for a careful, systematic reduction, with every precaution being taken to protect those who had been experienced in civil service, and also providing for all possible veterans' preference.

Moreover, the Senate Committee on Civil Service has been meeting two or three times a week, with the result that further reductions will take place, so that the number will be decreased to approximately 1,500,000 employees.

In December 1941, when the war started, we had 1,620,922 civil-service employees, so that even with an addition in the Veterans' Administration, the number of employees will be, by December 7, 1947, approximately what it was on December 7, 1941, when we entered the war.

I suggest that this record made by the cooperation of the Civil Service Commission, the Bureau of the Budget, the heads of the various agencies, by the Congress, and by men like the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and Representatives REES, DIRKSEN, and TABER is a record of which every American can well be proud.

This brings me to the matter of the Budget about which we have been hearing so much lately. The Budget recommended by President Truman calls for an expenditure of $37,528,000,000.

From the statements of some of the gentlemen who want to dismiss 1,000,000 employees, the impression might be derived that by so doing the Budget could be reduced almost half. The truth is that if every employee of the Federal Government were discharged, the Budget would be reduced by only approximately $6,000,000,000. By the reduction that Congress already has provided for, and which will be continued by congressional action based on the House and Senate Civil Service Committee hearings, there will be a reduction of approximately $2,300,000,000 more.

So it can be realized that a small proportion of the total of President Truman's Budget of $37,500,000,000 goes to the employees. Where does most of the money go?

Five billion dollars goes for interest on the national debt. So, Mr. President, the interest on our national debt alone will be more than the total salaries of everyone working for the Government.

How much, Mr. President, do you think goes for education and general research? Only $88,000,000. How much goes for agriculture? One billion six hundred million dollars. How much goes for the veterans and veterans' benefits? Seven billion three hundred and forty million dollars. Listen carefully, please. How much goes to the Army and Navy? Roughly, $11,500,000,000.

So we see that even if the Republicans reduce President Truman's budget by $6,000,000,000, leaving $31,500,000,000, approximately one-third of the total Budget will go for the Army and Navy. I ask whether this is necessary and needed?

Bear in mind that in 1940, just prior to the declaration of war, the entire Federal Budget was $9,297,000,000, or over $2,000,000,000 less than is now asked for the Army and Navy alone. Thus, the budget recommended to the Congress by the President for the fiscal year 1948 requests expenditures almost three times those of 1941. Even in the war year 1942, when everyone was straining every nerve to win the war, the Budget was less than $32,500,000,000.

You will be amazed, Mr. President, to know that the expenditures for this peacetime year are equal to about the total cost of World War I, plus the ordinary governmental expenditures for the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920.

Again, consider the fact that the Budget submitted is approximately $10,000,000,000 more than the national-defense expenditures for all of World War I.

Or, to put it another way, the proposed Budget is $7,000,000,000 more than the aggregate of all Government expenditures for the 11 years, 1921 to 1931, inclusive.

For 17 years our Government has been in the red; and in that time the public indebtedness has been increased from approximately $16,000,000,000 to $260,000,000,000. As has been so well stated, during the past 17 years we have built up in Washington a gigantic bureaucracy which has attempted ruthlessly and autocratically to administer the affairs of our citizens.

Recently it was stated that there are 1,039 principal component parts of the Federal Government, including departments, main bureaus, emergency and independent agencies, which are only 102 less than we had at the very height of the war. But I call attention to the fact that not one of those departments, main bureaus, or agencies could exist unless the Congress had first passed a law making possible its organization.

So we see that the determination of the size of the Budget is entirely the providing of the men and women who are selected by the people to administer the affairs of the Nation through the Congress.

That brings us to the question whether we should appropriate $11,000,000,000 for the Army and the Navy.

I ask, what experience in business or fiscal affairs has the average general or admiral? How many of us, if we needed a business partner, would pick an admiral or a general whom we happened to know, in preference to a good, hard-headed businessman? These men are trained, not to conserve material, but to waste it.

Now, "let's look at the record." In 1941, some of the same generals and admirals asked for nearly a billion and a half dollars more than they needed, and the money was appropriated at the expense of the taxpayer. In 1942, when we were at war, these generals and admirals asked for nearly thirty-two and a half billion dollars more than they were actually able to spend. In 1943, they asked for fifteen billion one hundred million more than they were able to spend. In 1944, after 2 years of experience in the war, when certainly we would figure they would know what they were talking about, they asked for nearly $33,000,000 more than they were actually able to spend. In 1945, they asked for over $10,000,000,000 more than they were able to spend. In 1946, it was nearly $2,000,000,000 more. Now, in 1947, at a time when the people by an overwhelming vote have said that, although they were willing in wartime to pay high taxes and suffer the tyranny of bureaus and departments, now they want tax reduction, now they want the Government run on a business basis, those admirals and generals are asking for fifteen or sixteen billion dollars more, which has been cut down by the Congress to roughly eleven and a half billion dollars, and which I maintain is only half a start on what the cut really ought to be.

Mr. President, I am one who under no circumstances would do anything to harm the defense of this country. But I am not afraid of fear when I compare what our situation is today with what it was in 1941. Today we have thousands of ships which certainly cannot be obsolete, because they were all built within the last 4 or 5 years. We have thousands of fighting planes, and certainly they cannot be obsolete. We have billions of dollars worth of other materials which we did not have in 1941. So, comparing the status of the Army and Navy equipment in 1941 with present-day equipment, we have a great deal more now which we did not then have. In addition to that, we have spent scores of billions of dollars in giving lend-lease to scores of countries. Most of these countries are our allies, so that they, too, are much better equipped for military purposes than they were in 1941. In addition, we have stock-piles of war materials which in 1941 did not exist. Remember, Mr. President, that to attain this security, the American taxpayer has paid and paid and paid and will continue to pay.

When I was a freshman Senator, I, too, believed most of what the admirals and generals said on financial matters. I knew they were good fighting men who knew their military strategy. However, even then I did not follow them when they spent hundreds of millions of dollars in building the road to Alaska and another road through South America, and when they spent $130,000,000 on the Canol project and other projects. Likewise, I did not follow them when they insisted that the Antitrust Act not be enforced, and permitted the people to be robbed by cartels and monopolies.

As chairman of the Senate Civil Service Committee I have discovered that thousands of Army and Navy men were blanketed into the civil service as civilian employees, with an increase in pay from $300 a month to $540 a month, for doing exactly the same work in the same locality. Also, I find that almost half of the entire civil-service personnel is in the War and Navy Departments—in this, a time of peace. I ask, in heaven's name, how much more do the admirals and generals want?

I ask that the REA, education, and labor appropriations not be interfered with. I believe in a square deal for the small businessman, for labor, and for the farmer. I agree that all these things should be done, but I totally disagree with a man who takes the position that Americans have to continue to pay billions of dollars to various foreign countries. When we consider that many of our veterans are without jobs and in hospitals, and that thousands of our aged depend upon our Government for their living, then I believe that charity should begin at home. Let us remember that as far back as May 1940 President Roosevelt said, "The Navy is stronger today than at any time in the Nation's history." Let us remember, too, that at the end of the war our Navy was stronger than the combined navies of all the other nations of the world. Let us remember, too, that the late President said, "In types of planes, we are not behind the other nations of the world."

In my opinion, the Budget of $31,500,000,000 is an invitation to other countries not to disarm, not to advocate peace, but, on the contrary, to arm as they have never armed before—to arm to get ready for another war, to keep the United States of America from being the master, the dictator, the ruler of the world. It gives to the leaders of countries who may not like us the propaganda weapon of saying, "Look: One-third of the entire Budget of the United States is for the purpose of holding our country in subjection."

Mr. President, the United States, the country which went into the last two wars with high ideals, to make the world safe for democracy and with the cry "this shall be the war to end wars," the United States of America, the country which, after winning two wars, finds itself in the most desperate plight in its history; the United States of America, which, through its great military leaders, its great generals and admirals, won remarkable victories in both the last wars, finds itself almost helpless to secure the peace which the overwhelming number of the people of the United States demand.

It is here, Mr. President, that I believe positive action should be taken to eliminate the fear which is paralyzing the thinking of our country, the fear on the part of our people that there will be another war, the fear of the fathers and mothers that their sons will again be called upon to go across the waters and fight upon the bloody battlefields of Europe and Asia, the fear of another horrible slaughter.

Mr. President, one distinguished Senator has stated that he does not want "Uncle Sam to have a chip on each shoulder, with both arms in a sling." And I desire to reply to that epigram. I ask today, "Why should Uncle Sam have a chip on either of his shoulders? What is the necessity for it?" So far as I am concerned, in this critical period, I am going to back up the President of the United States. He has seen fit, after the most thorough investigation, to believe the men who are in charge of our foreign policies, the generals and admirals who are in charge of our war forces. They have convinced him of the absolute necessity of a Budget in excess of $37,000,000,000. He guesses that that is what will be needed, just as those who favor the reduction by $4,500,000,000 guess, and just as those who favor a $6,000,000,000 reduction guess. If the situation is as critical as is indicated by the appointment of General Marshall to the office of Secretary of State, then I am for the President's Budget. If, as time goes on, the situation becomes more critical, I am for a higher Budget. If the situation develops favorably, then of course there is no necessity for spending anything like $37,000,000,000.

But we either have or have not confidence in our President and in our State Department. If we do not have confidence, let us frankly say so. If we have, let us back them up. But, Mr. President, I am reminded of two men who, by means of lawyers, are fighting each other in a legal battle. On the contrary, the situation today calls for direct negotiation. Therefore, I personally call upon President Truman himself to take charge of negotiations with Russia.

When England wanted to find out what Russia was going to do, she did not subscribe to what the United States thought about the matter, but she dealt directly with Russia. President Truman should act accordingly. Russia's budget for this year has been approved at $70,000,000,000, of which 18 percent has been assigned to the armed forces. Our Budget calls for, roughly, thirty-seven and a half billion dollars, with 30 percent, or $11,200,000,000, assigned for defense.

It is my considered judgment that instead of acting through intermediaries, no matter who they may be, the President should say to Marshal Stalin, "Marshal, let us get together and talk this thing over. What is it that you want? Is it an outlet of warm water to the ocean? If so, your country may be entitled to it. We are not interested in what type of government your people want. We want to make it clear to you that you cannot establish your kind of government over the American people. We have no right to tell you what kind of government you should have; and if there are people over here who try, by force or intrigue, to establish your kind of government over us, we will take care of them in due course. I ask you now, as an ally to whom we have given billions of dollars, to state what it is that you want. And we will get together, talk it over, come to an agreement, and use this money that would be wasted in case there was a war to develop roads and hospitals and irrigation and in a multitude of other peacetime aims. Your people do not want war, and our people do not want war. You and I can get together and settle this thing. We can get together and do away with the fear of each other which is prevalent among the peoples of our countries. I want you to know that Uncle Sam has no chips on either one of his shoulders. We want peace—a peace so sound that it will last for years and years and years to come, a peace so sound that both you and I, if we break both our arms, can walk around with all four arms in slings. Let you and I get together, as sooner or later our countries must, and settle this thing now, and wipe out this fear that is paralyzing the world."

I say, fellow Senators, that our President should do that, regardless of what any other nation may think about it, because today there are only two great dominant nations in this world—the United States and Russia. And I say if President Truman will do what I suggest, if he will personally pick up the telephone and call Joe Stalin, arrange a meeting, and eliminate the element of fear which each country has for the other, he will render a service to this country of such magnitude that it will never be forgotten.

I call upon him to take the initiative, because, after all, the disagreements of nations are similar to the disagreements of two human beings. It is my belief that these two men can sit down and, through mutual understanding and covenants openly arrived at, do away, I hope forever, with the feeling that we are on the verge of war with each other, and secure peace. If peace cannot be secured, if war must come, then any budget we set today will mean nothing anyway, any more than it did in 1940, 1941, and 1942, when the budget was constantly increased by Presidential messages sent to us by our former President, and we will be simply wasting our time.

Personally, I have every confidence that President Truman would rather cut off his right hand than harm a single individual in this country. I have the greatest respect and the keenest admiration for him. He is the one man to whom has been given the golden opportunity of securing peace for the world. It is my belief that he should seize that opportunity, and become one of the very greatest Presidents this country will ever have known; a President whose name will ring down to posterity through the ages as a man who unshackled himself from all red tape and face to face with the leader of another great power, personally settled the issues without recourse to force of arms, the loss of millions of lives, and the wasting of billions of dollars, as is evidenced by the budgets of the United States and of Russia.

CONTROL AND ERADICATION OF FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE AND RINDERPEST

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. IVES in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 568) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with other American countries in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the Government of Mexico in carrying out operations or measures to eradicate, suppress, or control, or to prevent or retard, foot-and-mouth disease or rinderpest in Mexico where he deems such action necessary to protect the livestock and related industries of the United States. In performing the operations or measures herein authorized, the Government of Mexico shall be responsible for the authority necessary to carry out such operations or measures on all lands and properties in Mexico and for such other facilities and means as in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture are necessary. The measure and character of cooperation carried out under this act on the part of the United States and on the part of the Government of Mexico, including the expenditure or use of funds appropriated pursuant to this act, shall be such as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. Arrangements for the cooperation authorized by this act shall be made through and in consultation with the Secretary of State. The authority contained in this act is in addition to and not in substitution for the authority of existing law.

SEC. 2. For purposes of this act, funds appropriated pursuant thereto may also be used for the purchase or hire of passenger motor vehicles and aircraft, for printing and binding without regard to section 87 of the act of January 12, 1895, or section 11 of the act of March 1, 1919 (U. S. C., title 44, sec. 111), for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the limitations contained in section 607 (g) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended, including the employment of civilian nationals of Mexico, and for the construction and operation of research laboratories, quarantine stations, and other buildings and facilities.

SEC. 3. Thirty days after the enactment of this act, and every 30 days thereafter, the Secretary of Agriculture shall make a report to the Congress with respect to the activities carried on under this act.

SEC. 4. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this act.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the Government of Mexico in the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest."

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to understand the situation a little better than I now do.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I can explain exactly the amendments the House has made to the bill originally passed, and which was sent to the House from the Senate.

The first amendment limits the activity of the United States, in the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease, to Mexico.

The second amendment authorizes the Department of Agriculture to establish a research laboratory in the infected area in Mexico.

The third amendment provides that the Department of Agriculture shall report to Congress once every 30 days the progress of the activities of the Department of Agriculture under the act.

Mr. WHITE. And the Senator has moved that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House?

Mr. THYE. Yes; I have so moved.

Mr. WHITE. Have the amendments been considered, in some other form, by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate?

Mr. THYE. They have been considered in this manner: The members of the committee of the Senate have discussed the amendments. The importance of taking action is so great that we should not delay until another committee hearing can be held. Committee members concurred personally in the amendments, rather than as an official act.

Mr. WHITE. I have no objection.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. THYE. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I served on the subcommittee with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE]. As I understand, time is of the essence in this matter, as we say, and because the situation is serious, and rapid action is necessary, and because, in my opinion, the amendments are satisfactory, I think it well that the Senate concur in them, and not lose the time it would take to appoint a committee of conference. I make this statement as a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. THYE. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, nothing affecting agriculture in America is more threatening than that which is involved in the particular measure now under consideration. The foot-and-mouth disease came into this country about 25 years ago, immediately after the First World War. It cost the stock raisers of America hundreds of millions of dollars, because the only way to eradicate the disease, or check it, is to destroy the herds which have become infected. Thousands of livestock have come across the line from Mexico into some of the Western States. How far they have reached we do not know, but we do know that the disease exists in central Mexico, and that it is spreading rapidly toward the border.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. I shall occupy the floor for only a moment more, with permission of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, for the benefit of the Members who have come in since this motion was made by me, I might say that the Senate passed the bill (S. 568) and it was sent over to the House. The House amended it, and I stated the three amendments made in the House. The reason I am speaking is that members of the committee agreed, as did the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. BUSHFIELD], that a motion should be made to concur in the House amendments. The Senator from South Dakota is not in the Chamber today, and therefore, is unable to submit the motion, but the Senator's secretary spoke to me about it and assured me that concurrence in the House amendments was the action that had best be taken, inasmuch as it is necessary to act immediately in order that the Department of Agriculture may be authorized to proceed at once.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I am only trying to assist the Senator from Minnesota in his motion, by explaining what the motion is, and why it is so imperative that the House amendments should be concurred in now.

To continue, if I may, with the permission of the Senator for a moment, the experience the country had immediately after World War I taught us the lesson that we must protect our livestock, and in order to protect them from the hoof-and-mouth disease we must go into border countries where the disease is prevalent and from which livestock are likely to come and have already come into our country.

I hope the Senator's motion will prevail.

Mr. LANGER. I wish to ask a question of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota. Is the bill now in the form approved by the secretaries of agriculture of Minnesota, North Dakota, and of all the other interested States, when the meeting was held here about 2 weeks ago?

Mr. THYE. I understand the question of the senior Senator from North Dakota is, whether the bill is in the form concurred in by all the secretaries of agriculture of the various interested States of the Union. I will say to the Senator that I am unable to answer that question, but I know we found no opposition to the bill recommended by the Senate committee, which was passed by this body and sent to the House.

The House amended it in a very simple manner, and I personally would concur in the amendments, as would all the other members of the subcommittee and the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It is the recommendation of the subcommittee that the Senate concur in the House amendments to the Senate bill.

Mr. LANGER. Then, Mr. President, in view of the experience the distinguished Senator had when he was commissioner of agriculture of the great State of Minnesota, which is North Dakota's neighbor, I certainly hope the amendments will be concurred in.

Mr. THYE. I may say that the commissioner of agriculture of the State of Minnesota would concur in this bill, and in the amendments.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, as coming from a State which has a very important and growing livestock industry, and as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I want to give hearty support to the motion of the able Senator from Minnesota that the Senate concur in the House amendments. There are only three respects in which the original bill is amended: First, it is limited to work in Mexico, as I recall; second, provision is made for the establishment of a research agency in Mexico; and, third, provision is made for monthly reports.

It means a great deal to the livestock industry of the South, and I hope the Senate will speedily adopt this preventive measure to stop the spread of this very infectious disease.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] that the Senate concur in the House amendments to Senate bill 568.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. THYE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I was absent from the floor for a few moments, and just as I returned the Senator from Minnesota was concluding his remarks. I understood that the Senator moved that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. THYE. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I stepped over to the Senator's desk and asked him what the amendments were; and, if I understood correctly, the Chair was stating the question on the motion to concur in the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I hurriedly read the amendments, and I am now perfectly willing to express my approval of them. I, too, like other Senators from the cattle-growing States am interested in the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease. If I recall correctly I offered the resolution which was the basis for the consideration by the subcommittee of the proposed legislation. I hope that the Senate will concur in the House amendments immediately, and that the action will be unanimous.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. THYE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I might raise the point that the Senator from Minnesota cannot hold the floor and yield indiscriminately, except that I do not want to make a point of order of that kind.

As a matter of fact, like all the other Senators from the Western States, I want to have the House amendments concurred in. I was about to rise, Mr. President, to make a parliamentary inquiry: Have or have not the amendments been concurred in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments have been concurred in.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, under the statement of the Chair that the amendments have been concurred in, cannot Senators obtain a little information in respect to the matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can move to reconsider if he desires to do so.

Mr. JENNER. I should like to ask a question. I was on my feet seeking the floor when the Chair made the announcement that the amendments had been agreed to. I am curious about this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota no longer has the floor, but the Senator from Indiana undoubtedly can raise the question.

Mr. JENNER. I should like some Senator to tell me whether the foot-and-mouth disease occurs in any other country in the world except Mexico?

Mr. HATCH. Oh, yes.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I should like to answer the Senator from Indiana by saying that the foot-and-mouth disease occurs in many countries of the world in such a form that most of them have found it necessary to adjust themselves to living with it.

We in the United States have always eradicated the disease promptly as soon as it appeared anywhere within our borders. We now find that there is such an infection in the neighboring country of Mexico. If the disease is permitted to get across the border from Mexico, then we shall have to adjust ourselves to living with it; and that would be far too expensive. The Department of Agriculture must be authorized to take every possible step to confine the infection to the area in which it appears at present and to keep our side of the border free from infection, so that there may be some degree of safety for cattle within the United States. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. JENNER. In other words, it cannot be controlled through inspection of animals that are brought into the United States from another country?

Mr. THYE. No, indeed; it cannot; because not only animals but even birds can carry the infection, and once it develops on this side of the border, it will cost the United States millions of dollars rather than possibly thousands of dollars to control the disease in the present area of infection.

Mr. JENNER. Is the proposal satisfactory to Mexico?

Mr. THYE. We certainly hope it will be; it should be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana want to move to reconsider?

Mr. JENNER. No, Mr. President.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I raise a point of order. Have the House amendments been concurred in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments have been concurred in unanimously.

Mr. WILEY. That, as I understand, is the final disposition of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate having concurred in the House amendments, the bill is finally passed.

Mr. WILEY. I am very much interested in having it passed.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I desire to speak to the pending question. The essential facts, as I see them, are that the President has submitted what he considers a rock bottom budget of $37,500,000,000. The Senate section of the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget has recommended a $6,000,000,000 cut, and we are now discussing an amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] that the cut be $4,500,000,000. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the debate on the subject. I shall not undertake to review any particular facts, nor do I claim that I know what the answer should be; but very briefly I desire to make five points which I think are worthy of consideration and eminently relevant:

First. There is much confusion about the matter. We speak of a cut in the President's Budget—whether it shall be $6,000,000,000 or $4,500,000,000. First, let us recognize that the figure $4,500,000,000 is a minimum reduction, not the maximum. I am sure that every Senator hopes the Congress will find it possible to make the maximum reductions in the national budget without imperiling our national security. I am sure every Senator will agree that America's defense in this atomic age must not be jeopardized.

Second. The second point is that the men who spend the money must see to it that every dollar is spent carefully and that the Government will receive a dollar of value in return. Every dollar spent for defense must be scrutinized also to see whether it will actually assure modern defenses or whether it is going into military waste, extravagance or outmoded training or arms as we have noted time and time again in the past. I have spoken repeatedly on that subject, and I shall not bring up the historical instances of which we are all too well aware. I call attention again simply to what happened when Billy Mitchell, the prophet of his era, told the learned men of his time what was coming in the future.

Third. Those who call attention to waste and squandering of the public money do so, I am sure, hoping that such reprehensible practices will cease.

Away back in the time of Tacitus an individual was criticized in the following language: "He knows how to squander but not to bestow." We have had too many officials in public life of that character. Every generation of men has those who "waste their substance in riotous living." Shakespeare in Twelfth Night said, "You waste the treasure of your time."

I bring that point up, Mr. President, because it seems to me to be the first fact of which we must become cognizant.

Fourth. I believe that still further cuts can be made if each committee of the Congress will maintain continuous oversight, in accordance with section 136 of the Legislative Reorganization Act, over the executive departments and agencies within its jurisdiction. I read that section of the act:

LEGISLATIVE OVERSIGHT BY STANDING COMMITTEES

SEC. 136. To assist the Congress in appraising the administration of the laws and in developing such amendments or related legislation as it may deem necessary, each standing committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives shall exercise continuous watchfulness of the execution by the administrative agencies concerned of any laws, the subject matter of which is within the jurisdiction of such committee; and, for that purpose, shall study all pertinent reports and data submitted to the Congress by the agencies in the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. President, a few years ago a Governor of one of the Midwestern States took a very significant action. The same thing occurred in one of the Eastern States. A number of useless agencies had been created. They were what we now call a bureaucracy. This Midwestern Governor said:

I do not know anything about the agencies in question, but I shall create three committees to make investigation. I shall ask the house and the senate of the State legislature each to appoint one member on each of the three committees—and I shall appoint to the committees the best efficiency experts I can secure. I will take them from the large corporations of the State. I shall constitute three separate committees and I shall divide up the functions of the State so that each committee will screen a certain number of State agencies in order to determine what waste is occurring, what extravagance is taking place, what bureaucracy has been created, what useless expenditures are being made of the money in the State treasury which belongs to the people.

That would be one State senator and one assemblyman—

The results were very beneficial.

Mr. President, Congress, of course, has the responsibility to ascertain how the people's money is expended. Why does not Congress secure the help of the best efficiency experts? It may be said that congressional committees hold hearings on the subject of Federal expenditures. Countless tales that are related on the floor of the Senate can be authenticated to the effect that useless practices are in effect here and there in Government agencies. But what about the way in which the money asked for is going to be spent for the national defense? It is a fact patent to anyone that most of the military leaders from early youth have been educated at the expense of Government and have never earned a dollar.

I am trying to suggest that our duty is not completed when we have appropriated money after appropriation committees have evaluated the facts, which, by the way, are always brought to us by individuals in interest. As practitioners we know that we scan the testimony of individuals in interest. I am not reflecting upon any individual or on any particular group. I am thinking in terms of my responsibility as a Senator of the United States and of methods of obtaining practical results. It is obvious to every expert observer that the Senate and House Appropriations Committees, joined with the Senate and House Committees on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, can not possibly, with the available personnel, scrtinize every dollar of the $33,000,000,000 Budget. To make such a scrutiny it will be necessary that each committee perform what I think was the intent of the Reorganization Act. Irrespective of what the intent was, it is the obligation of this body to follow through on the expenditures and see, especially in the critical time in which we are living, that we get a dollar of value for every dollar that is spent. That applies to every department and agency of the Government. Perhaps this will require additional help on the committees.

What a beautiful job we have done. As legislators we limited by law our right to helpers on a committee to 10. The jurisdiction of my Judiciary Committee has been extended—and it is called streamlining—between 600 and 700 percent. We limit the number of efficient helpers that we can have. Why? Are we to perform our function in screening expenditure of this money? I am not saying that we as a body can do it. But the philosophy of America, from the days of the Constitution—and it is imbedded in every fiber of our being—has been a system of checks and balances. Yet we have no checks and balances on the money we expend. We merely appropriate. In my opinion we are not performing the legislative function which has been delegated to us under the Constitution.

The fifth and last point I desire to make is this: How can we, the legislative branch of this Government, render more efficient service to our constituents in relation to the treasure that is placed in our hands to account for? We know the tendencies that have been prevalent in relation to mushrooming of bureaus. We know the tendency inherent in many mortals when they get into positions where they handle funds of others—to play fast and loose with them. We know from years of observation how, generally speaking, Government lacks efficiency in many matters. Now the time has definitely come, irrespective of what we do today, to ask ourselves. What can the legislative branch of the Government do to see that funds are not wasted? Are we going along in the same old rut? We are living in a new day. The world has turned a corner. We talk in terms of billions of dollars when we used to talk in terms of hundreds of millions. What can the legislative branch of Government do to see that funds are not wasted, and that men who handle funds fully recognize their trust capacity and obtain full value for every dollar spent?

I have previously stated, and I repeat, that big business interests have efficiency experts. They have checks upon waste and carelessness. It is not uncommon, when a change in the economy of the Nation takes place, for a business concern to say, "We are expending $1,000,000 or a certain department. We are running into a period when that expenditure must be cut," and someone is put in charge to do the job with 50 percent of the former expenditure.

To my knowledge, and to the knowledge of many of my associates, there are countless instances of such action having taken place. In the past we have never taken such action with respect to Government. We have never claimed that it was our function. It is said that we must continue listening to those who say how much they need, and give them the people's treasure without asking ourselves, "Do we get value received?"

We have a few wartime controls. Formerly contracts had to be let to the lowest bidder. But at present that is not so. Perhaps as a wartime measure such a course was wise; but is it wise now? What should be done? The Government of the United States is the largest business in the world. Can we not have checks on efficiency? Can we not have efficiency experts working for us?

As I previously stated on the floor of the Senate, when I came to Washington we were appropriating approximately $1,200,000,000 a year for the Department of Agriculture, and I was receiving between 95 cents and $1.25 for milk which cost me $1.80 to produce. Was that Department operating as it should? How many useless employees did it have? How many dollars were going into the waste basket? I use that Department merely as illustrative.

It is true, as some one has said, that in Government there are literally thousands who have never had to work for a dollar, provide a pay roll, or meet situations outside their positions in the Government. Their checks have come to them regularly from the Government. The time has come to place men in Government who will insist that a dollar of value be received for every dollar spent.

I am not seeking to condemn a class. I know that there are many conscientious, hard-working, efficient employees in the Government; but as a rule there is little premium paid for that sort in any government. What is the answer?

If we were discussing ways and means to find the answer, we could more profitably continue this debate. We would not be spending so much time on what I consider almost irrelevant questions. Intelligent consideration of all domestic and foreign factors involved must precede Senate action, in accord with wisdom, economy, and the public interest.

REGENERATION OF JAPAN—LETTER FROM GENERAL MacARTHUR

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I wish briefly to discuss a message from Gen. Douglas MacArthur recently sent to Assistant Secretary of War Petersen and General Eisenhower. The message bears significantly upon the question now pending before the Senate. It portrays a dramatic but extremely hopeful picture of the economic, political, and social conditions of Japan, provided that the Congress of the United States upholds and defends the position of General MacArthur. In clarity of expression, and in its appeal for continued support for the preservation and advancement of our American interests in the Orient, it will rank as one of the leading documents of its time. I believe that the message should be read into the RECORD. It is as follows:

FEBRUARY 20, 1947.

From: CINCFE, Tokyo, Japan, signed MacArthur.

To: War Department, for Assistant Secretary Petersen, General Eisenhower:

Reurads War 91969 and War 91976. There is a popular misconception that the achievement of victory in modern war, wherein a clash of ideologies is involved, is solely dependent upon victory in the field. History itself clearly refutes this concept. It offers unmistakable proof that the human impulses which generated the will to war, no less than the material sinews of war, must be destroyed. Nor is it sufficient that such human impulses merely yield to the temporary shock of military defeat. There must be a complete spiritual reformation, such as will not only control the defeated generation but will exert a dominant influence upon the generations to follow as well. Unless this is done victory is but partially complete and offers hope for little more than an armistice between one campaign and the next. The great lesson and warning of experience is that victorious leaders of the past have too often contented themselves with the infliction of military defeat upon the enemy power, without extending that victory by dealing with the root causes which led to war as an inevitable consequence. Thus, in the occupation of Japan, while we have destroyed Japan's war-making power and neutralized from a material standpoint its war-making potential, we are yet in the process of finalizing the victory that the ensuing peace at war's great cost may be vital and real. This will require a complete reformation of the Japanese people—reformation from feudalistic slavery to human freedom, from the immaturity that comes of mythical teachings and legendary ritualism to the maturity of enlightened knowledge and truth, from the blind fatalism of war to the considered realism of peace.

In the accomplishment of this purpose, all policy in the administration of the occupation is attuned to those very ideals for which we fought—that by example we may point the way. This in turn is infusing in the Japanese mind both an understanding of and an enthusiasm for our own concept in human relationship—a concept which embodies within itself a spiritual repugnance to war.

If we are successful in the accomplishment of this purpose, we shall not have finalized the victory by bringing under control basic causes of war, but we shall have erected here in the western Pacific a strong bulwark against the reappearance and spread of those same causes which are calculated to plunge the world into future war, for history has shown the futility of dependence upon the violence of war alone to preserve the peace. This is the stake for which we strive. It is yet too early to measure the degree of final success, but Japan is now already governed by the form of democratic rule and the people are absorbing its substance. They have learned by the hard way the futility of resort to arms for individual and national advancement, and appear to have completely assimilated this bitter lesson. Having repudiated war and renounced all rights of belligerency, they have placed their full reliance for future protection on the good faith and justice of mankind, and are proceeding through legislated reform to develop here a state dedicated, in full reality, to the welfare of the people. Given encouragement, this can prove the exemplification of the superiority, in the advancement of the human race, of moral force, generated by spiritual strength, over physical force, with all resources employed for constructive rather than destructive purposes. A spontaneous development which offers both encouragement and inspiration as a measure of the progress of this concept lies in the increasing number of the Japanese people—already estimated at over 2,000,000—who, under the stimulus of religious tolerance and freedom, have moved to embrace the Christian faith as a means to fill the spiritual vacuum left in Japanese life by collapse of their past faith. This is partially responsive to the opportunity for comparison between the qualities of the old and the new—to an understanding of those principles of tolerance, justice, and human decency which govern our action in the tragedy of their defeat, and, more particularly, from close-hand observation of the American soldier standing in their midst, reflecting, as he does, those fine traits of character, outgrowth of the American home. Through the firm encouragement and strengthening of this yet frail spirit of Christianity in the Far East lies hope that to hundreds of millions of backward peoples, now easy prey to the ignorant fatalism of war, may come a heretofore unknown spiritual strength based upon an entirely new concept of human dignity and human purpose and human relationship—the very antithesis to those evil attributes which throughout history have led to war.

The American forces committed to occupational duty in Japan, now cut to only a fraction of their former strength, are at the lowest numerical level consistent with either reasonable security or the accomplishment of the regeneration of an entire race from its traditional threat to peace to a powerful bulwark against the recurrence of war—with its orderly emergence from the chaos of destructive defeat to economic, political, and social stability. And high-lighting all else, of course, lies the grave responsibility of protecting our national security against future threat to our Pacific coast. In short, the consolidation of the gains which victory has brought, that we may have peace. Our task is thus but a final phase of war, and it is inescapable that its avoidance may only be at the expense of victory itself.

In war the complete blockade of a force dependent for food and other supply from outside sources is the most effective weapon known to military science. It was through the use of this weapon that our starving men on Bataan and Corregidor were finally forced to yield to the enemy hordes who surrounded them. It was through the use of this same weapon, more than any other, that the Japanese armed forces were finally brought to the futility of further resistance, as segment after segment of their extended positions, by envelopment, were cut off from needed supplies on the grim road back. Thereafter, when reconquest of the Philippines completely severed the Japanese war-gained empire and permitted a blockade of the Japanese home islands themselves, traditionally dependent for sustenance from sources without, total collapse became imminent.

Since the surrender this blockade of the Japanese home islands has been continued, extended, and intensified. Not only have Manchuria, Korea, and Formosa, long contributors to Japanese sustenance, been taken away, but many millions of Japanese citizens have been repatriated from the outside back into these four home islands. Trade and financial intercourse with the rest of the world is by our decree so prohibited as to constitute economic strangulation.

Cut off from our own projected relief supplies in these circumstances, countless Japanese would face starvation, and starvation breeds mass unrest, disorder, and violence. Worse still, it renders a people easy prey to any ideology, however evil, which bears with it life sustaining food. To permit such a condition to arise would be to repudiate those very ideals and principles on which our country has always stood and for which many of our countrymen selflessly have died. For under the responsibilities of victory the Japanese people are now our prisoners, no less than did the surviving men on Bataan become their prisoners when that peninsula fell. As a consequence of the ill treatment, including starvation of Allied prisoners in Japanese hands, we have tried and executed many Japanese officers upon proof of responsibility. Yet can we justify such punitive action if we ourselves in reversed circumstances, but with hostilities at end, fail to provide the food to sustain life among those Japanese people over whom we now stand guard within the narrow confines of their home islands.

Nor must sight be lost of the circumstances under which such food and other emergency relief supplies are provided. There is involved an appropriation of public funds only for the purpose of their acquisition, the corresponding cost becoming thereafter a charge against Japan, which should be protected by a first lien on every asset within Japan. It is not charity, nor have I found that the Japanese want charity. It is but a means to secure needed life preserving sustenance until such time as we ourselves relax the restrictions which now prevent Japan from securing the same by the normal methods of trade and commerce with the other nations of the world. Nor, if reasonable precautions are taken, will the American taxpayer ultimately be out of pocket a single dollar as a result.

At most it is but a temporary measure in discharge of a clear responsibility which victory has imposed. It must be and remain our firm purpose to restore peace and normalcy at the very earliest time practicable, and it is my full intention to recommend removal of the existing military controls over Japan just as soon as civilian controls safely may be substituted. History points out the unmistakable lesson that military occupations serve their purpose at best only for a limited time, after which a deterioration rapidly sets in—deterioration of the populace in an occupied country which becomes increasingly restive under the deprivation of personal freedom, inherent in such a situation—and deterioration of the occupying forces which in time assume a dominant power complex pointing to the illusion of a master race.

While I have herein discussed our national responsibilities of occupation largely from the viewpoint of Japan, much that I have said applies with even more poignant force to Korea, wherein our public commitment to assist in the establishment of a stable, free government, for a friendly people liberated by Allied arms, imposes upon us an even more solemn obligation.

I am in fullest accord with the desire of the American Congress to practice the most rigid economy in the administration of government which our national interests reasonably may permit. Economy in both blood and supply was a rule which guided every strategic plan in the prosecution of our phase of the Pacific war, and economy has since been the rule here in the extension and consolidation of victory. A rationalization of the cost involved in this great task shows it to be, in the aggregate, infinitesimal compared with that which might have been incurred in a comparable period of extended combat.

I have observed the workings of the American Congress for many years, and have never seen it hesitate vigorously to preserve and advance our American interests. When provided with full knowledge of the situation, I do not believe, therefore, that it will take any action which would prejudice fulfillment of occupation objectives, to which we are already committed and in honor bound, as a prerequisite to finalizing the victory and insuring the peace.

THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) establishing the ceiling for expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 and for appropriations for the fiscal year 1948 to be expended in said fiscal year.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question. Is it his opinion that if any substantial cut is made in the military appropriations, it will jeopardize the situation in the Pacific, as set forth by General MacArthur in the letter the Senator has read just now?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from what I know of the Budget and from my examination of the needs of the Army and the Navy, I believe that a $6,000,000,000 reduction in the Budget, if it is made, will mean that approximately $2,500,000,000 will have to be taken from the Army and Navy appropriations. It is perfectly clear that if $2,500,000,000 or $2,225,000,000 is taken from a requested $11,000,000,000 appropriation for the Army and the Navy the situation in Japan, whatever it may be, will inevitably be affected adversely; and that is exactly what General MacArthur has stated in the letter.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, the letter the Senator from Illinois has read is most pertinent to the issue now before the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. That is why I read the letter to the Senate, and that is why General MacArthur sent it to the Assistant Secretary of War, namely, in order that the Senate and the House of Representatives and the country at large may know what that great man is doing in the Pacific as he attempts to establish peace among those who in the past have been pagans.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Last Friday, when the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] was speaking, he was interrupted by the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], who at that time criticized the War Department because, as he stated, it had seriously miscalculated its estimates for the needs of the Army in 1946.

When that statement was made, I interrupted the Senator from Illinois and asked that I be permitted to reply to that remark. When the Senator from Illinois consented, I stated that the reason that the Army had missed the correct estimate by approximately $32,000,000,000 or $33,000,000,000 was that it did not anticipate that the war with Germany and the war with Japan would end so soon.

After the Senate session on Friday ended, I telephoned the War Department and requested a substantiation of the statement I had made. I desire to read into the RECORD at this time the Army's statement regarding what took place during that period:

DATA ON WAR DEPARTMENT RESCISSION ACTS

1. Preparation of the War Department military estimates for fiscal year 1946 began in late fall of 1944. Such estimates had been prepared on the basis that the war would continue. Hearings began in Congress on May 25, 1945. However, the war with Germay terminated unexpectedly in May 1945. It was not clear at that time as to just what course the war against Japan would take and the rate at which partial demobilization could take place. Consequently, although it was recognized that all funds contained in the estimates would probably not be required, it was deemed advisable, in view of the late date, to appropriate the funds estimated on the original basis, and then withdraw such funds as appeared proper after further study. In accordance therewith, the fiscal year 1946 appropriation act was enacted on July 3, 1945, and study immediately began leading up to a rescission bill—the first. Hearings were begun on this September 25, 1945, and the First Rescission Act (Public Law 301) was finally enacted February 18, 1946.

2. Before the hearings on the First Rescission Act started, however, VJ-day occurred and further withdrawals became possible. These additional sums were considered and the First Rescission Act, when finally enacted in February 1946, withdrew $30,263,923,993. As plans were further revised and further study proved it advisable, the Congress withdrew additional sums by means of the Second and Third Rescission Acts, enacted, respectively, on May 27, 1946, and July 23, 1946.

3. The sums withdrawn by the three rescission acts are indicated below:

First Rescission Act (Public Law 301)	$30,263,923,993
Second Rescission Act (Public Law 391)	1,544,490,612
Third Rescission Act (Public Law 521)	1,563,283,587
Total	33,371,698,192

The action of the War Department shows plainly to me that they were trying to cooperate, not only in winning the war but also in saving dollars for the people of the United States. Instead of not knowing what was taking place, as the Senator from Indiana insinuated, it seems to me they did know what was going on, gave reliable figures, and saved us a great amount of money.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. JENNER. In answer to the statement just read by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, I should like to know whether the War Department gave him the figures regarding the estimates of what they said they would have to have for the past 6 years? Did they give the Senator that information?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I was not a member of the Senate during all of the last 6 years, nor did the War Department give me the estimates. I am not a member of the Committee on the Armed Services. I understand the War Department did from year to year give estimates to the Congress.

Mr. JENNER. For the Senator's information, let me suggest that the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] this afternoon placed in the RECORD the estimates the War Department had made for the past 6 years, and in their estimates of the bottom dollars they needed to carry on the defense of this Nation they had made a mistake, over the 6-year period, of from $2,000,000,000 to $33,000,000,000. I merely said to the Senator from Illinois the other day that any department which cannot guess within $33,000,000,000 of what it actually needs does not know what it is doing, and I still maintain that contention.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I refuse to yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington declines to yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long. So much has been said in both Houses of Congress, and in the press, concerning the report of the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget for the fiscal year 1948 that I thought it apropos, as an individual Senator, to add my views.

The joint committee recommended a slash of $6,000,000,000 in the Budget submitted by the President of the United States for the coming year. The President estimated the minimum needs of the Government to be $37,500,000,000. The joint committee has proposed that this figure be reduced to $31,500,000,000.

Mr. President, the Reorganization Act placed upon the appropriate committees in both Houses the responsibility—and I quote from the act itself—"to meet jointly at the beginning of each regular session of Congress and after study and consultation, giving due consideration to the Budget recommendations of the President, report to their respective Houses a legislative budget for the ensuing fiscal year, including the estimated over-all Federal receipts and expenditures for such year. Such report shall contain a recommendation for the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year, shall include such an amount to be reserved for deficiencies as may be deemed necessary by such committees. If the estimated receipts exceed expenditures, such report shall contain a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt. Such report shall be made by February 15."

I may observe that passage of the Reorganization Act in itself was a significant milestone in the progress of the Nation toward better, more effective government. From my point of view, the provision of the Reorganization Act which I have just read is a wise one. For the first time since I came to the Congress of the United States the opportunity was made available to the Members of the Congress to see at one and the same time estimated Federal income in relation to estimated expenditures. I say again this is a wise, businesslike provision and procedure.

Under this procedure the joint committee had the obligation to report to their respective Houses by February 15. This they have done. The committee, therefore, has not failed in its responsibility to make a report—it has failed in its responsibility to make an adequate report.

The Reorganization Act was passed at the close of the Seventy-ninth Congress, in August 1946. From the date of its passage the leaders of both parties knew that on February 15, 1947, a report on the legislative budget must be made to the Congress. On November 5 the leadership in the Congress passed from the Democratic to the Republican Party. Certainly from that day on the new majority leaders in this body knew the responsibility which was theirs.

From the Senate there were on the joint committee 19 members of the majority party, 15 from the minority. I mention this to emphasize that the majority party held the balance of power in the joint committee. They used this balance of power in a manner contrary to the best traditions of this great body and contrary to the basic principles of democratic action. They held, I am informed, secret and closed sessions, at which minority members of the committee were not present. The report is they called only two witnesses. The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] stated on the floor of the Senate last week that there were no hearings, that there were minutes of the sessions, but he did not know where those minutes could be obtained. This kind of procedure and tactics I say again is contrary to the best traditions of this body and of democratic government.

Majority leaders in both Houses have issued press statements on matters related to the legislative budget which are confusing and misleading to the American people, who, I assure Senators, are watching these proceedings with the utmost interest and concern. We have seen quotations in the press from House majority leaders saying the proposed cut in the President's Budget must be made to provide for a 20 percent across-the-board cut in income taxes. If income taxes are to be cut, I submit with all the vigor at my command that an across-the-board cut violates every aspect of ability to pay.

Let us examine for a moment, in view of these statements, what the 20-percent cut across the board would achieve. The average yearly income in this country today is about $2,600. The average family consists of between three and four persons. An American wage earner with an income of $2,600, supporting two children, would pay an income tax of $67. To him the 20-percent reduction would mean a saving of $13.40. Contrast this with the juicy cut of $14,000 to $15,000 that would accrue to the man with an income of $100,000.

Or contrast this saving of $13.40 with the effect upon his real income of another piece of legislation which may soon come before the Congress. We are told that the average rental unit in this country costs approximately $30 a month—or $360 a year. A 15-percent increase in ceiling rents would add $54 to the average tenant's yearly outlay. So, on the one hand, we reduce his taxes by $13.40, and on the other, if some present proposals are written into law, increase his living costs by $54.

The original rumors emanating from these statements and from the closed sessions of the small group who formulated the recommendation of the joint committee were to the effect that to achieve an over-all cut in the President's Budget of $6,000,000,000, two and a quarter billion dollars would be slashed from the armed services.

Many statements have also been made to the American people since last November regarding the financial situation which continue to mislead. The statement about the necessity of making a slash in the armed services appropriations is true, because if such savings are to be effected as were stated by the members of the majority party between the last election and the time Congress met, and even since that time, there are only three or four places in the Government where it is possible to achieve anywhere near such savings. One is in appropriations for the military, another in the appropriations for the veterans, another the fixed interest on the debt, which we cannot touch. The fourth, of course, is the appropriations for the great developments and projects in the West. Despite the fact that every Member of the Senate, and everyone who has any knowledge of Government, knows that in order to achieve these cuts we would have to cut the Army and Navy substantially, even that has been intermittently denied and confirmed by the majority leaders, depending on who was speaking. The performance we have witnessed in this regard leaves the public, the heads of the armed services, and many Members of Congress completely in the dark as to what are the real intentions of the majority leaders.

Last week on the floor of the Senate majority leaders were repeatedly asked by their colleagues on both sides of the aisle, What items specifically do you intend to cut? There has been no satisfactory response. There has been no study, as was recommended under the Reorganization Act, as to where these cuts shall be effected. Yet, in New Haven, Conn., on Saturday, February 22, the senior Senator from Ohio is quoted as saying, "Most of us agree that by rigid economy and cutting out a lot of popular projects we can take out three and a half to four billion dollars without touching the armed forces."

It is said by the senior Senator from Ohio that we can save between three and one-half and four billion dollars by rigid economy, by cutting out many popular projects. The Senator implies, at least, that he or somone on the other side of the aisle knows to what popular projects he refers. What are those projects? Why have we not been apprised of them so that we might vote on this question in the light of that knowledge?

We in the West should like to know, for instance, whether or not in order to make these cuts the Military Establishment is to be touched. If the statements regarding maintenance of efficiency of the military organization are to be lived up to, how will the $6,000,000,000 cut affect western projects? How will it affect the development of the great dams on the Columbia River? How will it affect the Columbia River Basin? To such questions we have had no answer, and the Senator from Washington finds himself in a very difficult position. He believes in the Legislative Reorganization Act and its provisions for a legislative budget. He deeply desires to have an opportunity to vote on a resolution substantiated by facts. He finds instead that this vital question has been shrouded somewhat in secrecy within the committee, and confusion, tailored out of many conflicting statements and assertions in the press and on the floor of both Houses.

I therefore must vote on this important subject, guided not by the information received from the majority leaders of the joint committee, as contemplated under the Legislative Reorganization Act, but guided by my own general knowledge of the affairs of our Government and such information as might be obtained on the floor of the Senate during the course of this debate on the $6,000,000,000 resolution.

Personally, I shall support wholeheartedly any bona fide efforts to achieve economy in governmental expenditures. We all want that. I want it understood, however, that when the choice is between economy and the national security, or public health or welfare, I perforce must choose the latter.

We cannot at this stage of world affairs afford to tinker with the national security or the health and welfare of our citizens.

An amendment increasing the joint committee's recommended $31,500,000,000 ceiling to $33,000,000,000 has been submitted. I shall support this amendment. I shall support it as an objective which we will make every effort to attain, namely, some form of national economy. However, as individual appropriation bills come before the Senate I shall have to consider each one on its merits and vote on each according to the demonstrated need of the department or function concerned. Moreover, in considering individual appropriation bills, I shall have to differentiate, as I think the majority leaders have failed to do in this case, between appropriations for expenses of Government and appropriations for investment by the Government. By "investment" I mean funds requested for the protection of the health of our citizens, for instance, such as the school-lunch program; funds requested for conserving our greatest of all national resources, soil conservation and flood control, and funds requested for self-liquidating, wealth-producing projects, such as reclamation and rural electrification. If these be the popular projects referred to by the Senator from Ohio, I think he should apprise us of that fact.

My distinguished colleague the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], today, suggested in a very able address that probably the Budget could be cut to the extent of $10,000,000,000. The Senator posed, however, a very apt question: Where is the cut to be made? How is it to be made? He suggested that probably if we knew where to make the cuts, we might even make the reduction more than $6,000,000,000; and, of course, that is the information I am seeking. There are certain cuts that some of us want to make; other cuts have been suggested we do not think it desirable to make.

I am sure that all the Senators living west of the Mississippi River would like to know where the ax is to fall. Those are some of the things about which I think we have been kept completely in the dark, as has also the American public.

I desire to return briefly, Mr. President—and I shall not prolong my remarks unduly—to the question of income-tax reduction, which is an integral part of this whole problem. I have already made clear my position relative to the across-the-board approach to this issue. I now address my remarks to the utilization of any income for 1948 in excess of expenditures.

As has been pointed out previously on the floor of the Senate, our national income was at an all-time high of $165,000,000,000 in 1946. There is no way of knowing how long income will continue at that level. A reduction of $10,000,000,000 in national income would mean a reduction of $3,000,000,000 in Federal income. Our national debt stands at $259,000,000,000. Because of the threat to our national solvency contained in this stupendous sum, it is my conviction that all excess revenues for 1948 should be applied to reduction of the national debt.

I therefore find myself in support of the so-called Knowland amendment.

In conclusion, I hope that in the course of this debate we shall be given some indication, either by the committee or by Senators on the other side of the aisle, as to where it is intended to make the various cuts. If cuts are to be made in the military appropriations, let us say so; if they are to be made in the western projects, let us say so; if the cuts are going to kill the self-liquidating reclamation projects of the West, we should like to know.

In the meantime, we of course shall do what we can to find out, as individual Senators; but when we are considering the $6,000,000,000 cut which is proposed to be made in the President's Budget of 1948—which was slashed considerably before it arrived in the Senate, and on the floor of the House—I think the people of the West would like to know just where it is intended to take out the $6,000,000,000.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, it is my intention to submit a motion to the effect that action on the pending Budget resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) be postponed.

My motion, however, will not call for indefinite postponement. I am one of those who support the Budget procedure as it finally emerged from the Legislative Reorganization Act, and I believe that a vote should be taken upon the Budget resolution as soon as possible.

But I also believe that Senate consideration of the Budget resolution should be consistent with the spirit and purpose of the Legislative Reorganization Act and with the traditions of this great deliberative body.

My motion, therefore, will call for postponement of action on the Budget resolution until such time as the Joint Committee on the Economic Report has submitted to the Senate its findings and recommendations on the Economic Report of the President.

But why, one may ask, should action on the Budget resolution be held up until the Joint Economic Committee has reported on the President's economic program?

My answer to this question is threefold.

First, it was the clear and unmistakable intention of the Legislative Reorganization Act that the Joint Economic Committee's report on the President's economic program should precede action on the legislative Budget.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to two significant sections of the Legislative Reorganization Act—section 225 and section 138. Section 225 provides that by February 1 the Joint Economic Committee shall file its report containing its findings and recommendations on the economic report of the President. Section 138 provides that the Joint Budget Committee shall submit its Budget resolution by February 15.

The intention behind these two dates was unmistakable. The intention was that the Congress should first review the broad economic recommendations of the President, and then consider the President's recommendations on the Budget. The intention was that the problem of the Budget should be considered in the light of a considered analysis of the health of our economy and of the character of the Federal Government's economic program—an analysis to be prepared by a joint committee composed of 14 outstanding Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Unfortunately, the Joint Committee on the Economic Report has not yet had the time to complete its analysis of the President's Economic Report. As the joint committee reported to the Senate on January 31, it has not yet hired its staff of experts, and is, therefore, not yet prepared to submit to the Senate in detail its "findings and recommendations upon the main recommendations in the Economic Report of the President, as called for under the Employment Act of 1946.

I am not criticizing the Joint Economic Committee for having delayed in submitting to the Congress its complete findings and recommendations on the President's economic program. Surely, it is essential that the Joint Economic Committee submit well-considered conclusions to the Congress at a later date rather than to submit ill-considered conclusions at an early date.

In the same way it would surely be better for the Senate to take well-considered action on the Budget resolution at some later date than to take ill-consindered action today. It would certainly be the wiser course, therefore, to postpone action on the Budget resolution until the Joint Economic Committee has given the Senate the benefit of its conclusions upon the President's Economic Report.

While I have been informed by the Senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who is chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, that no specific date has yet been set for the Joint Economic Committee's report, I am sure that no one in this body need fear lest the Joint Economic Committee delay too long in the preparation of its statutory report. The members of the Joint Economic Committee are Senators who are deeply familiar with economic problems, and I am sure that once the staff organization of the committee is completed, the committee will submit its report to the Congress without further delay.

The second reason for postponing action on the pending Budget resolution is to provide the Senate with essential information without which intelligent action on the Budget resolution will be impossible.

In the years gone by, the Budget of the Federal Government was so small that it had relatively little effect on our economy. Today, however, for better or for worse, the activities of the Federal Government are so vast that the Government's Budget plays an exceedingly important role in determining the future course of employment, production, and purchasing power.

Furthermore, there is not one Member of the Senate or the House of Representatives who does not accept the fact that the Federal Budget for the fiscal year beginning on July 1, 1947, will call for expenditures over and above thirty billion dollars. There is not one Member of Congress who does not accept the fact that the Federal Budget for the next fiscal year will call for the collection of more than $30,000,000,000 in tax revenue.

Since these facts are self-evident, Mr. President, how can this huge Federal Budget be properly analyzed, debated, or voted upon except in the light of its relation to economic conditions?

When I look at this pending Budget resolution, Mr. President, many economic questions of great significance arise in my mind.

Are we entering a period in which there is a danger of inflationary trends—or does the prospect of deflation loom ahead?

What is the anticipated level of national income during the coming fiscal year—and what level of national income should be our goal?

What percentage of the national income is represented by the expenditure estimate in the pending concurrent resolution?

Do economic conditions call for a balanced Budget during the next fiscal year or for a Budget surplus?

If a Budget surplus is indicated, how much should it be?

Mr. President, I do not have the answers to these questions. I have not seen the answers to these questions presented to the Senate during the debate we have thus far had on the pending Budget resolution.

Mr. President, until I know the answers to these questions, I cannot vote intelligently upon the pending concurrent resolution. Until the Senate has discussed these broad questions of fiscal policy in the light of the needs of our economy, I do not see how the Senate can vote intelligently upon the pending resolution.

Since the Joint Economic Committee will necessarily have to discuss these questions in submitting to the Congress its findings upon the President's Economic Report, I believe that action on the Budget resolution should be deferred until the Joint Economic Committee has had an opportunity to prepare its report to the Congress.

The third reason, Mr. President, for postponing action on the pending Budget resolution is to give genuine strength and meaning to the resolution that is finally adopted.

It has been charged by some that the pending resolution is meaningless because the figure it establishes on appropriations will be merely a target and have no statutory force.

Now it is perfectly true that any figure finally adopted in the Budget resolution will be merely a target and will represent no binding ceiling upon the actual level of appropriations and expenditures. This is as it should be. It does not mean that a target figure is meaningless. The acceptance of such a target figure by the Congress will mean that the Congress has committed itself to act in a certain manner.

But if the target figure in the Budget resolution is agreed upon without an adequate analysis of the relation between the national economy and the Budget, then the target figure will have no force whatsoever.

It will be regarded by the public as a figure without meaning—as a figure snatched out of the air for the purpose of making a play to the galleries.

It will not be adhered to by either House of Congress.

Lacking the force and vigor that can come only from well-considered action, from action based upon a genuine analysis of our economic needs, it will be openly flouted by the Congress as we take action upon individual appropriation and revenue measures.

It will be used as the basis for heaping scorn and derision upon the Members of Congress when only a few months later it is found that Congress first established a Budget policy and then proceeded to ignore it.

How much better it would be, Mr. President, for action on the Budget resolution to be deferred until the Joint Economic Committee has had a chance to present to the Congress a well-considered and integrated analysis of our budgetary requirements in the light of the economic needs of our country.

Mr. President, I have not attempted to suggest a specific date for the report of the Joint Economic Committee. I know that that date will depend upon the success of its present plans for recruitment of staff and upon the pressure of other congressional business. I am merely suggesting postponement until whatever date it is that the Joint Economic Committee submits its report. If the chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, the senior Senator from Ohio, believes that it is possible to set a specific date—whether that date be March 15, April 1, or some other date—I shall be delighted to amend my motion accordingly.

Mr. President, it was my original intention to ask that the pending Budget resolution be postponed until 15 days after such date as the Senate shall have received the report of the Senate Joint Committee on the Economic Report, and its detailed recommendations on the Economic Report of the President as called for under the Employment Act of 1946. I find, however, that the rules of the Senate will not permit such postponement to an indefinite time. It is necessary therefore for me to fix a definite date of postponement.

I therefore move that the consideration of the pending Budget resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) be postponed until April 1, 1947, at which time it is expected that the Senate shall have received from the Joint Committee on the Economic Report such committee's report containing its detailed finding and recommendations on the Economic Report of the President, as called for under the Employment Act of 1946.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Montana repeat his motion?

Mr. MURRAY. I move that the consideration of the pending Budget resolution be postponed until April 1, 1947, at which time it is expected that the Senate will have received from the Joint Committee on the Economic Report such committee's report containing its detailed findings and recommendations on the Economic Report of the President, as called for under the Employment Act of 1946.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is the Senator's motion in order, with the amendment pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's motion is in order, and takes precedence, and is the pending question before the Senate.

The question before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] that consideration of the pending concurrent resolution be postponed until April 1, 1947. The motion is debatable.

Mr. BRIDGES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hayden	O'Conor
Baldwin	Hickenlooper	O'Daniel
Ball	Hill	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I move that the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] be laid on the table.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. If the motion to lay on the table should be agreed to, would Senators be denied the privilege of debate upon the motion of the Senator from Montana?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would be the effect.

Mr. PEPPER. Is that the intention of the Senator from New Hampshire?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the parliamentary situation, at any rate.

The Senator from Montana moved that the pending resolution be postponed until April 1, 1947. The Senator from New Hampshire moved to lay the motion of the Senator from Montana on the table. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, which is not debatable. [Putting the question.]

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I move that the pending resolution be deferred until April 2, 1947.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the Chair's view, the motion is technically in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida that consideration of the pending resolution be postponed until April 2, 1947.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Does any Senator have the floor at this moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. TAFT. When a Senator makes a motion does he automatically retain the floor after making the motion, or is new recognition required?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. New recognition is required.

Mr. TAFT. Has the Senator from Florida been recognized the second time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not. The Senator from Florida is now recognized, because he was the first to address the Chair.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Chair.

It seems to me, Mr. President—and I believe it is the consensus of the Senate and of the country—that this matter is of sufficient consequence to deserve consideration by the Senate; and I am sorry that there is any disposition to deny Senators the opportunity to debate it. I think there are Senators who desire to debate the question. They are in accord with the pending motion, which, although not the same as the original motion, is somewhat akin to it.

There is an orderly scheme provided in various statutes which are pertinent to this question, and that is what we are suggesting that the Senate follow.

The Full Employment Act requires for the first time in connection with a momentous piece of legislation, bipartisan in conception and character, that the President shall make an economic report to the Congress. The President has discharged his duty under the law; and on January 8 the Senate received from the President a very comprehensive and commendable economic report. I think it is only fair to say that the comprehensiveness and clarity of that report have challenged the admiration and favorable comment of all sections of opinion in the country.

Under the law it was the duty of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report to consider that report and to advise the Congress of its recommendations relative thereto.

That has all been recognized in the report of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report of the President which was filed on January 31. The date when the joint committee was under a duty to recommend to the Senate relative to the President's report was February 1. Senators will recall that it was May 1 in the Full Employment Act, but in the Reorganization Act the date was fixed as February 1. So the first point in the sequence was the report of the President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Reorganization Act fixed the date as the 15th of February, not the 1st of February.

Mr. PEPPER. The date of submitting the report of the committee on the President's report was fixed as February 1. The date of the filing of the legislative Budget is February 15.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. The first step in the sequence, therefore, was the President's economic report telling the Congress what the signs in the economic sky were and making recommendations as to what was necessary to keep employment at a high level, to maintain the prosperity of the country, and to carry on a stable program for the Nation.

On February 1 it was the duty of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report of the President to report back to the Senate. It was contemplated by the law that that report should not be a mere casual report, not a cursory consideration of the very momentous recommendations of the President on the national economy. It was to represent the deliberate act of a bipartisan group giving careful consideration to the subject—something that would be a guide, as the law itself said, to the various legislative committees of the Congress in the performance of their several duties.

Mr. President, it was provided in the Reorganization Act that on February 15—although the margin of time was narrow, the Congress fixed the date as February 15—it was then the duty of the Committee on the Legislative Budget to make a recommendation to the Congress fixing the over-all limit of the Budget, fixing expenditures in relation to receipts as best it could, and, if the expenditures exceeded the anticipated receipts, providing for a resolution that the national debt limit should be extended by the Congress.

Mr. President, all that is an orderly, rational procedure laid down, not by the executive branch of the Government, but by the Congress itself. I am asking, as did the Senator from Montana, only that the Congress follow not only the letter but the spirit of those enactments. I point out, first, that we have the President's Economic Report; that on February 1 we received a substantial report from the Joint Committee on the President's Economic Report; and I further ask that when we act upon the Legislative Budget, we not only have the benefit of the President's executive report on the economic situation, but have before us for our benefit the results of a sound study and a substantial report by a committee of the Congress on the Economic Report.

Do we have that before us? When we vote today, as I assume we shall, upon fixing the over-all limitation on the expenditures of this Congress, are we going to have the benefit of such information? Shall we have such information when we say, as the resolution would have us say, "That it is the judgment of the Congress"—not the intuition of the Congress, not, as the able Senator from Ohio said the other day in his remarks, "an intelligent guess," not an emotional impression, not an imprint, but the judgment of the Congress?

Mr. President, I respectfully submit that the exercise of judgment is based upon fact, and is preceded by inquiry, and is the result of consideration and deliberation, following which a conclusion is reached. Accordingly, I ask whether we have before us from the Joint Committee on the Economic Report what the law contemplated that we should have before us when we acted upon the Budget?

I need not emphasize the importance of this matter. It affects the action of this whole Congress. The able President pro tempore of this body, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], spoke eloquently in the Senate the other day and told us that the resolution, in the form in which it originally came to us, cutting $6,000,000,000 from the Budget recommended by the President, would take $2,225,000,000 from the appropriations for the armed forces of the United States. He said it would endanger and imperil the national security, and he quoted the language of Washington to warn against a danger of that character to the national well-being and safety. He had to confess, as shown on page 1265 of the RECORD, that even with a cut of $4,500,000,000, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], if I read aright the language of the able senior Senator from Michigan, the situation would be as follows:

> But, Mr. President, I beg of all Senators * * * to realize that when we support the Millikin amendment, putting the present over-all estimate at $4,500,000,000, we are voting for another cut of $750,000,000 in these items for the armed services and the national defense, on the basis of the work sheets of the joint committee.

So, as I understand the language of the able senior Senator from Michigan, even if we cut the Budget only $4,500,000,000, that will commit us to cutting by $700,000,000 the Budget for the armed services. Is it the deliberate judgment of the Senate, Mr. President, that we can afford to do that? Have we before us the substantial, carefully arrived at conclusion of the Joint Committee on the President's Economic Report to advise us in undertaking this momentous step? Of course, we have before us the testimony of the Secretary of War and the testimony of other representatives of the armed services. They have told us the danger of cutting the appropriations for the armed services, and how it will imperil the national defense.

I hold in my hand the report of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report of the President, which was supposed to be a guide to the standing committees of the Congress and, of course, to the Congress itself in passing upon the matter of the Legislative Budget. In its report the committee explains that there has been delay in a number of things preliminary to its report. It says its has not had time to select a staff. I read the following from the report:

The problems to be considered by the committee are the most complex economic problems which the country faces, and it is vitally important that the best possible staff and consultants be procured in order that the best possible studies may be made. The committee is now engaged in canvassing the qualifications of a number of men for this work, but as yet has not selected these men or begun the necessary studies.

The committee has considered the Report of the Council of Economic Advisers to the President, made in December 1946 (S. Doc. No. 6), and the Economic Report of the President transmitted to the Congress on January 8, 1947 (H. Doc. No. 49). It has particularly considered the recommendations of the President in the "short range program" appearing on pages 20, 21, and 22 of his report. The committee agrees with the President that removal of wartime controls and the return to a freer economy places on business, farmers, labor, management, and consumers the main responsibility for working out price and wage relationships. The committee joins in the President's hope that business will reduce prices; that labor will refrain from excessive wage demands; and that both will bend every effort to increase productivity.

The short-range recommendations of the President calling for congressional action may be summarized as follows:

1. Congress should extend rent control.

2. Congress should extend the coverage and raise the rate of the minimum wage.

3. Congress should extend the coverage and revise the benefits under the social-security system.

I shall refer to that a little later. That would cost money.

I read further from the report:

4. Congress should enact a long-range comprehensive housing program.

That likewise would cost money.

The report further states:

5. While the tax burden should be reduced as soon as possible, it should not be reduced at this time.

6. Congress should deal with the whole field of labor management relations in which sound collective bargaining is essential.

All of these six matters are already under consideration by standing committees of Congress which will make a detailed study of each one of them and submit recommendations to the Congress. Most of them are highly controversial. A recommendation from this committee at this time which could only be casual before our studies are made, would not be helpful to the solution of the problems. The committee will proceed to consider these problems with reference to their effect on the maintenance of a stable economy and continuous employment.

The basic problem which this committee has to consider is the method of preventing depressions so that substantially full employment may be continuously maintained. No problem before the American people is more vital to our welfare, to the very existence of our way of life, and to the peace of the world. It is the most complex and difficult of all the long-range domestic problems we have to face. It involves a study of price levels and wage levels and their relation to each other, a study of methods of preventing monopoly control in industry and labor from distorting prices and wages, a study of spending for consumption and for capital investment, a study of individual and corporate savings, and a study of many other economic forces bearing on a stable economy.

Until we have further studied and analyzed the basic considerations which underlie this problem, we do not feel we should become involved in controversy on current issues which have many aspects besides their effect on the prosperity of the country.

With regard to the President's long-range program, no immediate recommendations are necessary. The committee will proceed to consider his different proposals as rapidly as we can reach them, to determine whether they bear a relation to the principal task of this committee and, if they do, make recommendations to Congress with regard to them.

The committee notes with approval that the report places special emphasis upon an over-all policy directed toward the preservation in agriculture of the family-sized farm (p. 25) and in industry of free competitive enterprise (p. 28). The details of a program to prevent another agricultural depression and of an affirmative program, in the words of the report, "to enlarge the opportunities for efficient and enterprising small businesses" will be among the primary subjects of committee study.

Regardless of the recommendations of the report on which there may or may not be controversy, it is our desire to commend the compilation of statistics and economic facts which are contained in the President's report and furnish a substantial basis for further study.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. If the Senator's motion should be adopted, would it result in delay in the consideration of and report by the Appropriations Committee of the Congress on appropriation bills?

Mr. PEPPER. No; I would not consider it so, Mr. President. I would consider that it would be the orderly procedure.

Mr. OVERTON. Then the committees of Congress could proceed to consider appropriation bills before the Congress acted on the resolution proposed by the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget; could they not?

Mr. PEPPER. I know of no prohibition to their doing it.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not think there is a prohibition, though it is possible, within the contemplation of the Reorganization Act, that the Appropriations Committee will not take action until the Congress has adopted the legislative budget. I assume that.

Mr. PEPPER. I think I can say with safety that there is no prohibition in the Reorganization Act to any Appropriations Committee considering an appropriation before the Congress has acted upon the legislative budget.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, let us see what is the most orderly procedure and the more intelligent procedure for the Senate to observe. If we adopt this resolution proposing to cut the budget by a certain number of dollars, we have pledged the good faith of the Congress to the observance of such action. We cannot go out to the people and say, "This is merely a pious hope; this is merely a well-meaning declaration; it is for political purposes and aims." The country is going to take it as the solemn commitment of the Congress, duly arrived at, as the statute itself says, "after study and consultation." That is quoted from section 138 of the Reorganization Act. The people are not going to believe that the Senate of the United States passed a measure providing for a cut of $4,500,000,000, or $6,000,000,000, or any other sum, as an over-all legislative limit, without knowing what it was doing, and acting like rational legislators rather than like one who makes a guess upon a momentous public matter.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. If the country should misinterpret what we are doing, I think it would be the country's fault, because no Senator has risen in this body, on either side of the aisle, and claimed, as they could not claim, that what we were doing was arriving at any more than, first, what was denominated an "intelligent guess," and, secondly, "a rough judgment"—very rough indeed. I do not see how any of our citizens who considered the matter could be misled as to what we are doing.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the able Senator. I think another way to characterize what is proposed is "budgetary blind man's buff."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield for a question.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator was on the committee which drafted the Reorganization Act, was he not?

Mr. PEPPER. I was.

Mr. BRIDGES. And he voted for it?

Mr. PEPPER. I did.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator stood here a few weeks ago and fought any effort for the appointment of special committees because he said it was sabotaging the Reorganization Act, did he not?

Mr. PEPPER. I did.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is not what the Senator proposes deliberately sabotaging or dodging the Reorganization Act, of which he was one of the author?

Mr. PEPPER. I am glad the Senator asked that question. Let me say, first, I am glad the Senator calls attention to the grief of the Senator from Florida, which he attempted to express on this floor when the able Senator from New Hampshire and his colleagues were the first ones to tear a hole in the Reorganization Act, and to make an exception to its provisions by setting up two special committees.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. Will not the Senator allow me a moment? I am going to answer his question. He always asks pertinent questions.

Secondly, the Senator from Florida believed that the enactment should have been observed by the Senate, and I am sure that that was the overwhelming position of Senators on this side of the aisle. But when the Senator from New Hampshire suggests that I, in my answer to the able Senator from Louisiana, was proposing the thwarting of the design and the purpose of the Reorganization Act, let me tell him that I am merely contending that when a condition precedent has not occurred, one is not under an obligation to discharge an obligation subsequent when the latter is inextricably interwoven with the performance of the first. In other words, it is very clear that the Reorganization Act contemplated that when we acted on the legislative Budget we should have before us two things, first, the report of the President, carrying all the weight his high office carries with it; secondly, that we should have before us the recommendation of the Joint Committee of the Congress on the Economic Report.

The able Senator from New Hampshire will remember that on this floor, while we were considering the Reorganization Act, we moved up the date from May 1, when the Joint Committee on the President's Economic Report was supposed to be made, to February 1, so that it was 15 days ahead of the time when the legislative Budget was supposed to be filed with the Congress for consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky, then I shall yield again to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I view the situation, there is no legislative or parliamentary connection between the report of the Joint Committee on the President's Economic Report and the report of the Joint Committee on the President's Budget. The joint committee provided for in the Employment Act, which was passed months ahead of the Reorganization Act, required a report by the 1st of February on the President's Economic Report. The form or shadow of a report was made by the 1st day of February, and, so far as I know, the Senate is powerless to compel any further report, either by the 1st of April, or any other time during this Congress. So that if we were to postpone the consideration of the President's Budget until the 1st of April, on the theory that there would be another report made by the other joint committee, we might, and probably would, reach the 1st of April with no further report.

Therefore, frankly, I see nothing to be accomplished by postponing until the 1st of April the consideration of the pending matter which we have been debating for weeks. There would be no further report from the other joint committee, and we would then debate the pending question for another week or two, and be about where we are now, as I see it. So, personally, I think that inasmuch as we have been dealing with this matter for the past 2 or 3 weeks, we might as well dispose of it. I do not see any advantage to be gained, either for the President's Budget or for the economic report, by putting it off to the 1st of April, or the 2d of April. There is no power in the Senate to compel the other joint committee to make another report, and when it has been announced by the chairman of that committee that no further report will be made, I do not see what we will gain by stopping now, after we have been debating this matter for weeks, and coming back another day to take another whack at it. That is the way I see the matter, though I do not like to disagree with my friend, the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Kentucky knows with what reluctance I disagree with him, but I am sure that if he will refresh his memory he will recall that when we were considering the Reorganization Act attention was called to the fact that the Full Employment Act provided that the Joint Committee on the Economic Report should file its report on May 1, and that it was pointed out that that date should be changed because we had made the time for the filing of the legislative budget February 15. It was felt by the Senate—and I am sure it was a Senate amendment—that the Senate should have before it the report of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report of the President before we acted on the legislative Budget.

I base that on what appears on page 30 of Public Law 601, and I read section 225. The caption is "Joint Committee on the Economic Report."

SEC. 225. Section 5 (b) (3) (relating to the time for filing the report of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report) of the Employment Act of 1946 is amended by striking out "May 1" and inserting in lieu thereof "February 1."

Mr. BARKLEY. I recall that circumstance, but I still say that the creation of the two separate joint committees was in no way connected. We passed the Reorganization Act the latter part of July, and the Employment Act had been passed a month or two before that, as I recall. I have forgotten the exact dates now.

The joint committee provided for in the act had already been created, and it was brought to the attention of the Senate, I think, that the joint committee created under the Employment Act should file its report prior to the report of the Joint Committee on the President's Budget, and the date was set forward from May 1 to February 1 in order that that might be done.

The point I make is that when the Joint Committee on the President's Economic Report comes forward and files, however inadequate, a report on the day when it is designated it must be filed, how can we compel them to file another one by the 1st of April, or any other date, so that we would be justified in postponing the consideration of the pending matter, even though another report might be submitted by the 1st of April?

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to call to the attention of the able Senator from Kentucky, if the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] has no objection to my doing so, a letter which the Senator from Ohio wrote to the Senator from Montana on this subject. A reading of the letter apparently indicates that it was the intention of the Senator from Ohio that his committee should file a full and comprehensive report at a subsequent time.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to correct my statement as to the dates of the passage of the two acts. The Employment Act, which was first known as the Full Employment Act, but became known as the Employment Act of 1946, was signed by the President on the 20th day of February.

Mr. PEPPER. Of 1946.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. The Legislative Reorganization Act was signed by the President on August 2d.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that a period of several months elapsed between the two dates.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I agree with the able Senator from Kentucky, the Senate has no authority to compel the Joint Committee on the Economic Report to make a report. I say it does not have it though I suppose the Senate always has control over its committees and subcommittees; but I had understood, and I am going to base that on the letter I have in my hand, written to the Senator from Montana by the Senator from Ohio that it was the intention of this committee to file a more full and complete report as soon as it could obtain the personnel and could feel that it was capable of doing the job. This is the letter dated February 15, 1947, sent to the Senator from Montana by the Senator from Ohio:

I have your letter of February 12 with regard to the report of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

I have felt that the permanent job of developing the principles by which an economic depression may be prevented, and stable employment assured, is the great object of our committee. To accomplish this purpose it is necessary to get the very best economists we can secure. I have already interviewed several and consulted a number of others, but I want to make no mistake in the selection. Once these economists are secured and have had time to begin their studies, I hope we may be able to make some interim reports on the short-term recommendations of the President. Whether and when such reports are made will depend upon the decision of the committee.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT TAFT.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana was not critical of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, and neither am I. They gave a very good reason for not having filed an effective and substantial report. They have not had time to secure personnel and to give the matter the consideration that its magnitude in their opinion requires. I agree with them; yet we are expected here upon the floor of the Senate, without a report even from the Budget Committee containing any factual data, with proponents of this measure describing it as anything from an intelligent guess to something else equally ambiguous—we are expected to act and tell the people of the United States, in the language of the concurrent resolution, that it is the judgment of the Senate of the United States that $4,500,000,000 or $6,000,000,000, as the House provided, or some other amount that evidently seems determined upon here, should be cut from the President's Budget.

Mr. President, let us talk about good government for a moment or two. Let us talk about orderly procedure. Let us talk about a course of action that will command confidence from the public.

The President of the United States has made a Budget recommendation to the Congress. We all know that for months the Budget Bureau with all its many aides, presumably competent and experienced in their tasks, have sat, no doubt day and night, and heard the department heads and agency representatives, including the heads of the armed services, present their needs, and then when all that was done, the Budget Bureau no doubt made a recommendation to the President, and the President finally settled upon a figure and submitted it to the Congress of the United States.

But, Mr. President, I have here a quotation from the New York Times, from Mr. Hanson W. Baldwin, as to what even the President had to do to the armed services and to the security of America. I am reading now from the New York Times of February 20. Mr. Baldwin said the following:

> The Navy's budget as submitted to Congress by President Truman would provide funds for the procurement of only 579 planes (exclusive of experimental planes), during the 1948 fiscal year. The Bureau of Aeronautics originally asked for funds for some 1,600 planes.

The President cut the number of airplanes for the Navy from 1,600 requested by the Bureau of Aeronautics, in charge of this matter for the country, knowing more about it than we know, I respectfully submit, to 579.

This figure was reduced to about 1,100 by the Navy Department, and the Bureau of the Budget further pared that to 579.

> If the $1,750,000,000 cut is made, even this number—one-third of what the Bureau of Aeronautics originally estimated as its needs—will be cut in half.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Who does the Senator think was right—the President of the United States, or the Army and Navy in their original request? One of them must have been right, and one of them must have been wrong.

Mr. PEPPER. I will say this, in my opinion—and I say it with deference to my colleague—they both know more about it than we do.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should have some question about that. It may apply to the Senator from Florida, but not perhaps to every other Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the able Senator. Perhaps I should have said that, excepting Zeus himself, who undoubtedly from his Olympian position might have had better information than the rest of us have; but I am presuming that if the Senator had had this information he would not consciously withhold it from his colleagues; and I do not find it in his report.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I gladly yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I ask the Senator a simple question in good faith. One or the other must have been wrong. Either the Army and the Navy were wrong in their original request, or the President was wrong in cutting the Budget. Who does the Senator think was wrong?

Mr. PEPPER. I should construe error as going too far downward in framing the Budget, and the President went down, in my opinion, far enough. If he committed an error, we ought not to make it worse by further reducing the amount.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The difficulty with the Senator from New Hampshire is that he thinks both of them were wrong, and he is trying to have his own figures adopted instead of theirs.

Mr. BRIDGES. I may say, if the Senator will allow me, that, in my judgment, they are both wrong, but I think probably that if the President, as Chief Executive of the United States, in his good judgment, found the figures of the Army and the Navy 40-percent wrong, and acted accordingly, it is entirely possible that the figures could be a trifle wrong now.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will allow me to say so, I would not attribute to him vanity; I would say he has a superior confidence in his judgment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I may say with regard to the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, that, after all, three very excellent economic advisers have made a report, which Senators have all had time to study.

Furthermore, presumably with their advice, the President has made an economic report to Congress, which all the Senators have had full time to study; and I cannot possibly see anything bearing on this issue which would be particularly enlightened by any further reports by the Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

Let me read what the President said:

> In the Budget message, I review in detail expenditures and receipts for the current fiscal year, and transmit recommendations for the next fiscal year. There is no need to repeat those details in this economic report.

In other words, the Budget report is one thing, and his economic report is another.

> With an outlook of high economic activity for the current year, the revenue policies are designed to balance the Budget and achieve a surplus toward the retirement of the national debt.

We all agree with that. Certainly our committee would agree with it.

> The expenditure policies are designed exclusively to cover the essential cost of the national defense and war liquidation, to meet our international commitments and the obligations to war veterans under existing law, to carry forward programs required by the Congress, and to take some small but essential further steps toward fulfilling the duties of an alert and progressive Government.

I certainly can take no exception to that.

The only difference between the President and ourselves respecting the Budget is as to how much is necessary exclusively to cover the essential costs of national defense and war liquidation. Certainly that question is one which the Joint Committee on the Economic Report ought not to go into. That is for the Appropriations Committees to go into when they have that question before them. It seems to me that on this particular question even if we made a report, it could cast no beneficial light. There is no difference between the Congress and the President except on the question of how much is necessary for these essential services. The President said we should only have essential services performed this year, and so do I. It is up to us to decide how much is necessary to cover essential services. I do not think our committee could possibly throw any light on that particular subject.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am afraid the able Senator from Ohio does not attribute the importance to his committee which he attributed to it in his written report in which he spoke of the magnitude and complexity of these problems, referred to the fact that they require study, and said he regretted that he had not had a chance to secure a competent staff that would be able to grapple with the problems, and that sort of thing, and he also made the same statement in his letter written to the Senator from Montana.

I agree with the Senator's written report and his letter to the Senator from Montana as to the extreme importance of his committee, and how much Congress should be expected to rely upon the competence and the adequacy of a report from it. We ourselves cannot go into a detailed study of all these things. Every Senator cannot undertake such a study. The Senate and the House constituted the joint committee as their adviser. Now, the Senator indicates that there does not seem to be any difference between his committee and the President. In the first place, the President recommended that the tax burden should be reduced as soon as possible, though not immediately. He did not contemplate any reduction in the tax at this time.

Obviously the President expected that his Budget of thirty-seven and a half billion dollars was to be considered as coming from the executive branch of the Government. That Budget, as the Senator set out on page 2 of his committee's report, mentioned, among other things, the recommendation of the President that Congress should, for example, extend the coverage and revise the benefits under the social-security system. What did we do about it last year? We raised our own salaries $5,000 a year and raised old-age pensions $5 a month. And the President, probably correctly, emphasized that we should reconsider or give continuing consideration to the question of the extension of benefits under the social-security law. We, as Senators, know that if that recommendation of the President is carried out, it will cost money which will have to be a part of the expenditures provided for by the Appropriations Committees. So that recommendation alone necessitated the Joint Committee on the President's Economic Report giving consideration to what effect it would have upon the legislative budget, not to mention housing and other items mentioned by the President.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that we are asked to act without any factual data before us from a competent committee such as the Joint Committee on the President's Economic Report, and without factual data from our own Legislative Budget Committee, and the able Senator, while he has given a general summary, will not, I think, contend that he has given us a basis in figures as to what he proposes to reduce in the Budget of the President.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Florida knows as well as I do that under the Reorganization Act it is not intended that Congress should prejudge the President's Budget, or to attempt to give a break-down with respect to where cuts could be made, because it is literally impossible to go into all the ramifications and details that are involved. That could only be done after months and months of hearings on the various appropriation bills. Therefore the Legislative Budget Committee submitted a report which would fulfill the provision of the Reorganization Act. The ground and the basis for that report was a well-defined judgment based upon concentrated work over a period of considerable time. It is an estimate, but it is the committee's judgment that we cannot give a break-down, we cannot give details, unless we undertake months and months of hearings, because that is the only way the details of the various appropriations can be obtained.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Now, Mr. President, if that is all this is, to use the language of the Senator from Ohio "an intelligent guess" or to use the language of the able Senator from New Hampshire "an estimate," then surely these able Senators cannot blame some of the others of us for preferring to go along, not with "an intelligent guess," and not with "an estimate," but with a factual Budget submitted by the President of the United States and the Bureau of the Budget created by the Congress of the United States. How are we to choose? Am I to say I will take the "intelligent guess" of the Senator from Ohio or the "estimate" of the Senator from New Hampshire in preference to a factual budget of figures and data submitted in a lawful way by the President of the United States? I do not think, Mr. President, I should be called upon to vote for the concurrent resolution proposed by the able Senator from New Hampshire based upon the "intelligent guess" of the Senator from Ohio and the "estimate" of the Senator from New Hampshire and in rejection of the Budget report of the President of the United States.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. If the Senator believes the Legislative Budget Committee should have done what he suggests, then he should have sought to provide in the Reorganization Act that instead of from January 1 to February 15, in effect from about the middle of January to February 15, one month, the Legislative Budget Committee should have had at least 6 months, or a year, in order to study all the details of some 1,400 pages contained in the Presidential Budget. But the Senator from Florida did not do that. He proposed a simple overhead ceiling. It was his committee which made that report. He voted for it in the Senate. He stood up on the floor of the Senate and advocated not tampering with the Reorganization Act, and said nothing about special committees interfering with the spirit of the act. Now he attempts, in my judgment, by the postponement here proposed, to sabotage what we attempt to do under the very act which he helped to create.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, there is merit in what the Senator from New Hampshire has stated about the possible desirability of a change in the date. Surely there is no use to have a committee if all it can give the Senate is an intelligent guess or an estimate as stated by the Senator from New Hampshire. We might as well change the date if that is all the significance the action of the committee is going to have. What the Senator from New Hampshire has said I believe has merit. But the law did not require the Senator from New Hampshire to propose anything below the Budget submitted by the President. How much better it would have been, how much more rational, I submit, it would have been, if the Senator from New Hampshire had said to his colleagues: "Gentlemen, the President has submitted to us a factual Budget. We are entitled to attribute integrity to the Budget as coming from the Chief Executive of our country. We do not have time to make the thorough study of the subject the President and the Bureau of the Budget have made, and not being confident that we are correct in tampering with the national security, or endangering the national defense, we will put that matter above our intelligent guess or our estimate, and we will say, 'We will recommend the Budget submitted by the President, but if we find we can cut it later on without detriment to the national security and welfare we will do so?' "

Mr. President, I ask my able friend, would that not have been a more statesmanlike, perhaps a little less political approach to the problem, than to have taken the position which the Senator from New Hampshire has taken?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator has outlined the position which the Senator from Florida has taken here year after year and year after year since the present administration and the preceding administration have been in power. The preceding administration came into power with a pledge to cut expenditures 25 percent, but instead of cutting expenditures 25 percent increased them year after year and year after year, until in the war period expenditures went up to $100,000,000,000 a year. Now I can see that the Senator is merely being consistent when he suggests that we should not cut the President's Budget. I think it should be cut. I believe that the appropriations of every department of Government can be cut. I know that the process will be painful, but we cannot have our cake and eat it too.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Florida is consistent, as the Senator from New Hampshire suggests. He has always tried, when he bought dollars, to appraise what he paid for them. I am told—I do not know whether it is correct or not—that a member of the House Appropriations Committee stated that the over-all cut for agriculture, for example, if there were a $6,000,000,000 cut in the Budget, would be from $947,000,000 to $553,000,000. This would include a cut of $75,000,000 in the school-lunch program. When I buy dollars I am not willing to pay children's lunches to get them. Mr. President, I am glad that I have been consistent in voting to save lives and the health of children rather than someone's dollars; and I believe that my method will give us a better America in the long run.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator excuse me for just a moment? I believe the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] or the Senator from Maine wishes to propound a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Maine and I and other Senators have been negotiating with respect to a limitation of debate on Wednesday. I know that the Senator from Maine wishes to propose such an agreement. If it can be entered into it may enable us to suspend now and go over until Wednesday, and complete consideration of the resolution on Wednesday.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I understand that seven or eight Senators desire to discuss, not the matter immediately before the Senate, but the concurrent resolution itself. It seems certain that we cannot conclude the debate and dispose of the resolution this evening. I understand that Senators would like to dispose of the motion made by the Senator from Florida this evening. If that can be disposed of promptly, then I shall proffer a unanimous-consent request for limitation of debate beginning on Wednesday.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me suggest to the Senator from Maine that any limitation entered into now would apply to the pending question as well as to the concurrent resolution itself. Personally I see no objection to allowing the pending question to go over, with the understanding that the limitation of debate will apply to it. Of course, it would apply to any motion which any Senator might wish to make. The Senator from Florida might not be willing to yield the floor now in order that his motion might be disposed of at this time. I think we would get along just as fast by letting the limitation apply to everything.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, in the complete belief that it is impossible to dispose of this matter tonight, I ask unanimous consent that, beginning on Wednesday and continuing until the final disposition of the pending resolution, no Senator may speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes on the concurrent resolution or upon any amendment thereto or substitute therefor——

Mr. BARKLEY. Or motion pertaining thereto.

Mr. WHITE. Or motion pertaining thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I inquire whether the majority leader has an understanding with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. Let me say in answer to the question of the Senator from Illinois that the Senator from Oregon would not agree to a definite time for voting. However, I have cleared with him, as has the Senator from Kentucky, the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, and he would not object to the suggested limitation upon debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, am I to understand that the 20-minute limitation applies as an over-all limitation?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is an over-all limitation on everything.

Mr. TAFT. Then the Senator from Florida could not make a motion and speak for 20 minutes on the motion, and then make another motion and speak for 20 minutes on it?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Would that apply also to the Senator from Ohio? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAFT. As I understand, the proposed limitation is a 20-minute over-all limitation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to have any misunderstanding about it. Any amendment could be debated for 20 minutes. The concurrent resolution itself could be debated for 20 minutes, or any substitute could be debated for 20 minutes. Any motion could be debated for 20 minutes.

Mr. TAFT. I do not believe that such a limitation would serve a very useful purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the usual limitation which we enter into. There is no way to obtain an agreement under which an amendment could not be debated by the author or by other Senators for 20 minutes, or any length of time which might be agreed upon.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, as the Senator from Kentucky says, I believe that the unanimous-consent request follows the usual form of such requests.

Mr. TAFT. With all due respect to the Senator, there is no usual form for unanimous-consent requests. Sometimes they are in one form and sometimes another. It seems to me that very clearly there ought to be only 20 minutes on the resolution and all motions relating thereto. Then if it is desired to have 20 minutes on each amendment and all motions relating thereto, I have no great objection. However, I do not believe that there ought to be an indefinite number of possible motions to be debated.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know how we can limit the number of motions that may be made with respect to a pending question. As a rule, an indefinite number of motions is not made. The Senator may conjure up a situation in which that might happen, but I do not think it will happen in this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair requests the Senator from Maine to repeat his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. WHITE. I do not know whether I can repeat it in precise words, but I can repeat it in intendment.

I ask unanimous consent that beginning Wednesday and continuing until the disposition of the pending resolution, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 20 minutes upon the resolution or any amendment, or any substitute, or any motion with respect thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to make it clear to the Senator from Ohio and other Senators that the Senator from Florida is not making this motion to try to filibuster or otherwise delay consideration of the resolution. I have in mind no other motions. If this motion should be unfavorably disposed of, I should like to see the question put in such a way that Senators who wish to vote for the $37,500,000,000 Budget of the President may have an opportunity to do so. If no Senator makes a motion of that character, and I can find a parliamentary way to do so, I propose to make such a motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The way to get at it is to vote against all amendments, including the original resolution. If the Senator votes against the resolution, or any other limitation, he votes for the President's $37,500,000,000 Budget. It is not necessary to make a motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I was saying that I have evidence that a member of the House Appropriations Committee stated that if this Budget cut were contemplated it would take $19,000,000 from agricultural research. He also stated that it would take $394,000,000 from REA. There would be a reduction of $125,000,000 in the amount available for loans by the Rural Electrification Administration. He also stated that it would take $50,000,000 from the Farmers Home Administration, and $10,000,000 from appropriations for roads and trails. Those are only a few items which have been suggested in connection with the adverse effect on agriculture.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, the question now before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to postpone consideration of the concurrent resolution to April 2, 1947.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the pending question.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, that is the question still before us for consideration, and it is proposed to vote on that question this evening?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to point out that the facts and figures which have been produced by the able Senator from Florida can be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Wednesday, February 19, on page 1186. The point I make is that facts and figures were discussed in the House of Representatives in connection with the agricultural budget, and apparently the House had no misgivings about the figures. Yet there is nothing in the Senate in the way of information from the subcommittee of the Legislative Budget Committee.

I invite the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that in the debate last week, as the Senator perhaps recalls, the able Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], stated that he had a break-down of the figures, that he knew where he would make the cuts, but he did not give any information to the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, since we are engaged in pioneering in respect to this new legislation, I emphasize that the Senator from Illinois has just called attention to information which someone seemed to have authority to put before the House of Representatives, and I call attention to the fact that the Senate's Legislative Budget Committee has not given the Senate any specification or suggestion as to where the cuts are to be made.

I respectfully submit that if it is not to be an intelligent guess, if it is not to be an estimate, if the honorable committee does not have the personnel or the time to go into this matter thoroughly, we should be told the field from which the money is to be derived. Is any money to be taken from agriculture? Is any money to be taken from social security? Is any to be taken from the national-defense program?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The money will be taken from every department of the Government, down the line, in every division, every bureau, and every department.

Mr. PEPPER. Does that include interest on the national debt?

Mr. BRIDGES. That is not a department of the Government.

Mr. PEPPER. Does it include expenditures for veterans?

Mr. BRIDGES. It does not include any payments to veterans or veterans' benefits.

Mr. PEPPER. I thought the Senator said that it went all the way down the line.

Mr. BRIDGES. It hits the administrative expenses of the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. PEPPER. Then the Senator is telling us that if we vote for this Budget cut, a portion of the cut will come from veterans' expenditures.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am not saying that it will come from veterans' benefits. It will not affect a single veteran. The saving will result from elimination of some of the duplications and overlapping activities in Veterans' Administration affairs.

Mr. PEPPER. There will be some cuts, then, in the appropriation for the Veterans' Administration?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes; but they will not affect a single veteran.

Mr. PEPPER. I think that is helpful. The Senator has clarified our minds on that point.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me clarify another point. The Senator made a statement regarding school lunches. I do not know whether or not the appropriations for school lunches will be cut in the final analysis, because that decision will be up to the respective committees, but in the worksheets on which I based my figures school lunches were not included.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In view of the statement just made by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire I desire to make it a matter of record that in the discussions of the full Committee on the Legislative Budget the statement was expressly made by a member of the House committee that the appropriation for school lunches would be cut in its entirety. That was the point of view of one of the principal spokesmen for the alleged $6,000,000,000 reduction.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order to answer the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Various committees and groups worked on this subject. I quoted from my own work sheets, from which I arrived at the total, as a member of the committee, and on my work sheets school lunches are not affected.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is very gracious. In view of the remark just made by the Senator from New Hampshire regarding his personal work sheets, I cannot avoid advising the Senate that such work sheets are extremely personal, so personal that no member of the minority was permitted to see any of them. No report was made to the full legislative committee as to work sheets by any member of the subcommittee. The majority members of the subcommittee met in executive session to compare their individual work sheets, which apparently differ one from another, which, of course, reaches the final absurdity which was set forth so clearly in the report filed by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, in which we find this sentence:

> Of course, if the accompanying resolution be adopted there is no commitment as to any reductions in specific items contained in the Budget.

So our friends of the majority find themselves in the very convenient position of saying to the veterans, "Oh, you are not cut on my specific work sheets. My personal work sheet does no injury to the veterans."

Then to the Senator from Louisiana, who is interested in river-and-harbor improvements, the majority member can say, "On my specific work sheets river-and-harbor improvements are not included."

Then to my friends from the West, western Republican Senators who know so well how invaluable to the building up of the West is the construction of reclamation projects, the majority Member can say, "No reclamation projects are cut on my work sheets."

The vice of this whole matter is that there are no work sheets which have any probative value at all. Nothing was presented by way of a specific report, even by the exclusive majority subcommittee, with respect to the specific reductions which were to be made.

We are here debating a resolution which is extending to the people of the United States a false promise, the pretense that several billion dollars are to be cut from the Budget, without any work sheets to show where the cuts will be made. The absence of work sheets is clearly to be explained by the plain fact that the majority members of the committee have not been able to agree as to where the reductions can be made.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Is the Senator from New Hampshire about to give us his work sheets?

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from New Hampshire wants to make one remark to the Senator from Wyoming. If the Legislative Budget Committee had reported in detail where the cuts were to be made, and thereby prejudged the work of the Appropriations Committee, the first Senator who would stand on this floor and scream to high heaven against that procedure would be the Senator from Wyoming. I can hear him now. Therefore, we are leaving it up to the committees to work out the actualities.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from New Hampshire is not a very good prophet. He has never heard me screaming against economy.

I am in the position of the Senator from New Hampshire. As a member of the Appropriations Committee I have never filed minority views against any bill that was reported; and the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, who has been on the Committee on Appropriations so long that he is now the chairman, never once in all his service filed an objection to the expenditure reports of the Appropriations Committee, save once when he objected to the action of the Appropriations Committee with respect to reclamation appropriations for the Interior Department.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me, so that I may answer the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. On many occasions both in committee and on the floor of the Senate, I have offered amendments looking toward economy; and in most instances on those occasions, so far as I can remember, the Senator from Wyoming was on the other side. I assure him that in the months ahead there will be ample opportunities to vote for economy, and there will be some record votes, and we shall see very clearly that a great deal of this talk today having to do with national defense actually is made because the Senators on the other side of the aisle are against any cut for anything. That is the story.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think we have had a most interesting exhibition. It is almost like a shell game at a fair, where the question is under which shell the bean rests. Someone is trying to put the finger on the private figures of the Senator from New Hampshire, and obviously the $64 question is where are the private figures of the Senator from New Hampshire.

However, this matter is not really a game, in spite of the fact that it reminds us a little of the game of blindman's buff. This is a solemn request of the Senator's committee that if he has predicated his request on certain figures and factual data, why does he not disclose them to his colleagues and let us know that he, as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, is using them as the basis on which he acts.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I do not do so because I do not wish to prejudge the work of the Senate or of the House or of the Appropriations Committees. We arrived at what we thought, in our judgment, was a fair, over-all ceiling for the expenditures of the Government; and within that framework the respective committees, and subsequently the Senate and House of Representatives themselves, can work out the details.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire, inasmuch as he said he did not wish to prejudge the work of the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses, why in the secret session that resulted in a final call of the subcommittee of 20 of the Joint Committee on the Budget, the Senator from New Hampshire did prejudge, in his own mind, the action of the Appropriations Committee, because in his so-called work sheet, which he never submitted to the full committee, but which he did submit, from a memorandum held in his own hands, to the subcommittee, he cut off $2,225,000,000 from the appropriations for the armed services. I recall that item specifically. He cut off $250,000,000 from the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture. I recall that specifically. If the Senator from New Hampshire does not wish to prejudge them now, why was he willing to prejudge them then in his own individual, secret, personal memorandum, which he threw in our faces, as to what he would do if he had the power to make such cuts?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, it was because we had to arrive at this over-all ceiling, as provided in the act of Congress which was reported to the Senate by the joint committee of which the Senator from Florida was a member; and we had to arrive at that ceiling in the best possible manner, according to the best judgment of the Congress, acting on all available information. We had to arrive at the best possible intelligent judgment of that group. But we could not break down that figure or ceiling, because if we did so, immediately it would be said that we had prejudged the work of the committees and that there would be no object in holding months of hearings.

Of course, Mr. President, I answered the Senator. I said, "Of course, there are going to be cuts in every department, all down the line."

That is the trouble today, here on the floor of the Senate, because some Senators do not wish to cut. It is hard to make cuts, and it causes a great deal of trouble, in view of all the propaganda, and so forth. I say it is going to hurt, to reduce the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well, Mr. President; the Senator from New Hampshire has given a clear-cut statement of what he proposes; namely, that there are going to be cuts all along the line—and this time he is sticking to his statement. So there will be cuts of the armed services and cuts of the Veterans' Bureau and cuts of the Department of Agriculture and cuts of Social Security, and there will be cuts all along the line. If a Senator does not favor making cuts all along the line, then I assume it is only logical that he should vote against this resolution.

Mr. President, I believe that the President of the United States has submitted to the Congress a sensible, commonsense Budget. It may be possible for the Appropriations Committee, when later they come to take up the matter in detail, to make some cuts here and there. If so, here is the able watchdog—and I use that word in a deferential and dignified sense—here is the able watchdog of the Treasury, the Senator from New Hampshire, standing there as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and I know we can count upon the diligence of the Senator from New Hampshire in making any cuts in the President's Budget that it is feasible to make, and as to which he can secure the concurrence of a majority of his committee. Over in the House of Representatives there is the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, another diligent advocate of economy; and we know that he and his colleagues will give very careful scrutiny to every request for appropriations, and will make all possible cuts in the appropriations which come before them. Where they believe that such cuts can be made and where they can be successfully advocated on specific issues, undoubtedly such cuts will be made.

However, it is obvious, now that we have this intelligent guess of the Senator from Ohio and this estimate of the Senator from New Hampshire, that Senators still can vote against both of them and nevertheless vote in the committee and in the Senate itself for any specific items of reduced appropriations which may be found to be appropriate. The difference is that in that case Senators will be giving probity to the recommendation of the President and will be acting upon facts and figures, instead of indulging in speculation, which is the basis upon which we are asked to act today.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I observe that it is 5 minutes before 6 o'clock. Let me inquire whether it is the intention of the majority leader to have the discussion continue indefinitely this evening.

Mr. WHITE. I hope that this evening we may dispose of the motion of the Senator from Florida. If we can do that—and the sooner the better, so far as I am concerned—then I shall move that the Senate take a recess.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in view of the invitation of the able Senator from Maine, I shall not indulge myself in the pleasure of addressing the Senate very much longer. I shall gladly cooperate with him in endeavoring to dispose of my motion, so far as I am concerned, in a very short time.

I do not think it is necessary to go further into the matter which has been under discussion during the last few minutes. We see now what the position of the Senators is.

As I have said, Mr. President, we are told that there will be some cuts in the recommendation for the armed services. I wish to finish reading the New York Times article by Mr. Hanson W. Baldwin as to the cuts already made in the Budget recommendation for the armed services. I resume where I stopped reading a few minutes ago:

> The Army Air Forces find themselves in a roughly comparable position. Their 1948 budget, as submitted to Congress, contains funds originally estimated as sufficient to procure 900 new planes of all types, but the increasing unit costs of aircraft will probably limit the number that actually can be procured to about 800. If the projected $1,750,000,000 slash is made, this number probably will be reduced further.

That figure is 800 planes for the Army and 579 planes for the Navy. That is based on the $6,000,000,000 cut. Of course, if the cut is only $4,500,000,000, there would be a proportional reduction.

I read further:

> Thus the Army and Navy together will be able to procure in the 1948 fiscal year if—and it is a big "if"—Congress makes no cut in the requested funds for aircraft procurement only about 1,400 or 1,500 planes. This is half the 3,000 that a postwar study indicated was the minimum number of military planes that must be procured annually by the armed services to maintain a healthy industry.

Mr. President, I do not know what group it was that made that postwar study. I was not a member of it. I do not know whether they are entitled to credulity or credit for their statement. But that is what this committee, presumably appointed by the President or the armed services, recommended; namely, 3,000 planes a year. The Budget recommends 579 planes for the Navy and approximately 800 or 900 planes for the Army.

Mr. Baldwin further points out that there will be a reduction of about one-third in the budget of the Office of Naval Research, which is carrying on a program of basic research on a wide variety of problems through some hundred of our universities.

Mr. President, what may be stifled in some university research laboratory by taking a few dollars away from it? A laboratory may be on the verge of a discovery which will be of world-shaking significance, but withholding the few dollars which the able Senators are going to save may stifle the fruition of that research. What would it have meant in respect to the atomic bomb if we had blindly struck out part of the appropriation and said, "It can be reduced 25 percent"? What might have happened in the research on the atomic bomb? Is that the way legislators defend their country?

Mr. Baldwin proceeds to say the Chemical Corps of the Army will also suffer curtailment. Appropriations asked for the Chemical Corps have already been pruned in the submitted budget from approximately $8,000,000 to $5,800,000. Then he proceeds to say:

> Congress has stood firmly since VJ-day against scrapping the great modern fleet built duing the war. To preserve a great number of fighting ships not needed in active operation and to save money, the Navy laid up hundreds of ships, carefully "pickling" them against erosion and deterioration.
> Even when the job is complete, perhaps a year or more from now, it is estimated that 25,000 to 35,000 of the Navy's officers and men will be required permanently to maintain and guard the thousands of laid-up fighting ships that are being kept as a form of national insurance * * * that overhead cannot be reduced without scrapping some of the ships Congress has insisted be retained.

But the Senators, with a chopping ax, would cut an appropriation without any consideration as to where the cut is to fall, or what is to suffer.

Mr. President, some of my colleagues and I have differed about international policy. I hope we can have universal disarmament, but I have never advocated unilateral disarmament. I would favor the President taking the initiative and asking all nations at the same time to stop making new weapons, but I am not going to be one of those who will say we should unilaterally begin to disarm.

Mr. President, the able Senator from Michigan referred to some of the incidents which occurred in the administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, in the days of the economy cut, and the spending that occurred thereafter. He said his reference was not a political criticism, that he was merely commenting on history. I accept his statement in the good faith in which it was given. But, Mr. President, if we are to talk about the responsibility of the two parties to the people of the country, I should like to make a comment on history.

Did the Democratic Party cut the Army and Navy after the last war, or was it the party now in the majority? Did the Democratic Party sink a part of the American fleet, or was it the administration of the party now in the majority?

When President Roosevelt came to the White House, what kind of an Army and what kind of a Navy did he find?

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Year after year, over the protests of the American Legion, they were cut and cut and cut, until, if I understand what he said aright, even General MacArthur pleaded with the Congress to give him support, as Chief of Staff, to build America's armed forces, which support he never got.

I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. When President Roosevelt came to the White House, we had an armed-service budget of about a billion dollars a year, and Mr. Roosevelt advocated cutting it 25 percent. That was one of his campaign promises. So the Senator is a little twisted in what he says.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is correct; in the early, misguided days, when the President thought it would work, he did recommend that there should be economy, and perhaps he set a good example; perhaps the majority will change its mind on defense, as did President Roosevelt when he found that that kind of blind economy was contrary to the national interest.

But I will say that when President Roosevelt found he had based his action upon a mistake, and had the courage to try to correct it, and from then on there was a building up of the armed forces of this country. Time after time the President took PWA funds and other funds when he could not get direct appropriations from the Congress, in his effort to build up the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. DWORSHAK. The Senator from Florida has pointed out that during the early years of the New Deal the Chief Executive had to plead constantly for larger appropriations with which to build up the armed services. Is that what the Senator is saying?

Mr. PEPPER. It was not so emphasized in the early years of his administration as it was when the international crisis was approaching.

Mr. DWORSHAK. In doing that, was not the Chief Executive pleading with members of his own party, and no blame could be placed on the Republicans for any failure to give him the appropriations he needed?

Mr. PEPPER. I will say that he got an increasing amount of appropriations from his party, that but when the international crisis became acute. I should be glad to have the Senator read the record of how the votes were between the parties in building up our airplane strength, our naval ships, our merchant ships, and our armed forces. The situation today is not as it was in 1932, 1933, and 1945. Today we know the unsettled status of the world. Today we are legislating in the face of that condition.

I wanted to make it clear that the first proposal to cut the armed forces, the first proposal to reduce our Navy, to reduce our Army, to diminish our Air Force, and to weaken our research activities, is coming from the majority party, which now has the responsibility for the purse strings.

Mr. President, I think the Senate might stop, look, and listen before it blindly commits itself to a course which not only would impair the general welfare, but seriously threaten the national security of America, in a time of great international concern.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to postpone consideration of the pending concurrent resolution until April 2, 1947.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I move that the motion of the Senator from Florida be laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Joseph C. Reing, of Pennsylvania, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, vice himself;

Pasquale J. Federico, of Ohio, to be an examiner in chief on the Board of Appeals of the Patent Office;

Samuel Wolffe, of Pennsylvania, to be an examiner in chief on the Board of Appeals of the Patent Office; and Eugene W. Geniesse, of Michigan, to be an examiner in chief on the Board of Appeals of the Patent Office.

By Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on Public Lands:

Oren E. Long, of Hawaii, to be Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii, terminating recess appointment, vice Gera'd Robert Corbett.

RECESS TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there are only two names on the Executive Calendar, and it does not seem necessary to hold an executive session at this time. I therefore move that the Senate stand in recess until Wednesday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Wednesday, February 26, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who givest to all men liberally and upbraideth not, we pray for mastering strength to direct in us the impulse of pure love. O take from us the indifferent and the chilled heart, and soften our determined wills that the things which concern mankind may not be alien to us. O lift us into the folds of the gospel of human sympathy and understanding.

Blessed Master, in these demanding hours may we not put our trust alone in democracy and government but in God may we trust; in Him alone are hope and life for the storm-beaten face of this earth. O undergird it with Thy never-failing might; when we cannot see, guide us; when threatened, deliver us; and when challenged, equip us with the strong arm of a righteous God. Bestow upon us the blessing of contentment within our own borders, and inspire us to discharge our whole duty toward Thee and our fellow men. Hear us, our Father, and Thine shall be the praise. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 21, 1947, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution to continue the authority of the Maritime Commission to operate vessels until July 1, 1947; and

H. J. Res. 121. Joint resolution granting in the case of income, estate, and gift taxes, deductions for contributions to the United Nations.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore has appointed Mr. LANGER and Mr. CHAVEZ members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agency:

1. Department of Agriculture.
2. Department of Justice.
3. Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WEICHEL (at the request of Mr. HALLECK) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. O'HARA asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a resolution from the State Legislature of Minnesota.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include an editorial and an article.

Mr. ROBERTSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Post.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes today following the disposition of special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN TERRITORY ESSENTIAL TO DEFENSE

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing resolutions which, if adopted by the Congress, will authorize the President to extend to Iceland, in the name of the Congress and the American people, an invitation to become a State in the American Union; to open negotiations with Denmark for the purchase of Greenland; to open negotiations with Great Britain, France, and such other countries that may be involved for the purchase of all islands off the coast of continental United States, in the Caribbean Sea and Pacific Ocean, that may be deemed essential to the defense of the United States, the Panama Canal Zone, and the Philippine Islands.

Further, my resolutions would direct negotiations looking toward the acquisition without cost to the United States of all of the islands mandated to or owned by the Empire of Japan as the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War shall find essential to the maintenance of peace in the Pacific Ocean areas, an obligation which, by unwelcome circumstances, has become the prime responsibility of the United States.

I recommend these resolutions to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

THE CROSSER ACT—RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced bill H. R. 2169, to repeal the so-called Crosser Act governing the railroad retirement and unemployment insurance systems. Since passage of this act, and particularly since the effective date of its increased taxing provisions, January 1, 1947, I have received a great number of requests from railroad employees asking for repeal of the law, most of them saying they never wanted it in the first place. Many Members of Congress have told me that they also have received a great many complaints against some or all of the provisions of the Crosser Act.

While I recognize that there is no unanimity among the employees themselves, nor between the employees and the companies, as to what changes are most desirable, I am assuming that the best way to go about it is to correct the serious mistake made by the Seventy-ninth Congress in passing the Crosser Act and begin all over again to set up a system that will be satisfactory to the majority of employees and workable so far as the companies are concerned. There were some of us in the Seventy-ninth Congress, and I feel there are many more of us in the Eightieth Congress, who feel the Crosser Act is not in the best interest of the employees or the companies, and our feeling in that respect has been greatly strengthened by the strong ground swell of resentment to the act by the employees themselves.

The railroad retirement system is financed solely by payments made by the employees and management under a law which requires that each pay one-half of the cost. The railroad unemployment insurance system is financed entirely by a tax on the companies, no part of the tax being paid by the employees. Since these systems are financed without any subsidy from the Government but entirely by the employees and the companies, I think the interest of each of these contributors should be given due consideration. I might say, in a sentence, that the Crosser Act merely extended the bureaucracy of the Railroad Retirement Board, without satisfying the employees or the companies.

DUPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORT

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those who are not thoroughly convinced that there is a lot of overlapping, overstaffing, and duplication of effort in Government, I want to read the following letter from Dunlap & Co., Columbus, Ind.:

In one recent mail delivery we received six duplicate notices in six separate envelopes from War Assets Administration, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Here are the six envelopes mailed from the same office to the same address. Here are the six identical duplicate notices of sales of the War Assets Administration contained in those envelopes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. How would you keep those people busy if they did not do something like that?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

RENT CONTROL

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include a letter addressed to the OPA and the reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, a good deal of discussion has been created by the action of the House dealing with appropriations for OPA. It is being stated that this was legislation by indirection designed to kill the OPA without facing the issue. General Fleming, head of the Office of Temporary Controls, says rent control will die if this bill becomes law. I do not believe that the House had any intention of killing the OPA in this way. I have a letter from the OPA Administrator stating that he "failed to make our—OPA's—problem sufficiently clear to the House Appropriations Committee when I had an opportunity to testify to that body." Mr. Speaker, we are entitled to an explanation from the head of the executive department on this point.

The House passed the bill on a record vote after assurances by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, in response to my questions, that OPA could handle rent control effectively until the 30th of June, provided that OPA administered its finances honestly. Members on both sides of the aisle voted overwhelmingly for it, including the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee, who had stated OPA's position in the debate.

I am convinced that practicably tenants cannot have adequate relief under the present law, nor can landlords, unless rent-control administration continues. The Bureau of Labor statistics price index is at the highest point in its history. The high cost of living must not be added to by a rent boost now.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

TAX CONSCIOUSNESS

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that a majority of the Members of this House agree with me that the people of the United States should be tax conscious—that no substantial segment of the population should entertain the false idea that the other fellow pays the cost of operating the Government. Yet we pass up the best possible means of creating tax consciousness by failing to print on the revenue stamps which must be affixed to all tobacco products, the money value which those stamps represent.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has written me that there is no valid historic or present reason why this money value should not appear.

Within the next few days, I shall introduce a bill whose purpose it will be to acquaint every buyer of tobacco products with the amount of tax he pays the Federal Government when he buys a package of cigarettes or a can of smoking tobacco.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, following any special orders heretofore entered, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to include a letter written by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Speaker, the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

[Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

MINISTER OF PROPAGANDA

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have heard many charges against the House of Representatives, but there is one that I wish to call attention to which has not heretofore been called to my attention.

I received this morning two letters, one addressed to the Congress of the United States, Washington, D. C.; I can understand how they might have put that in anybody's mailbox, so it came to me. But another one was addressed "House of Representatives, Propaganda Department, Washington, D. C." It starts off "Minister of Propaganda. Dear Sir." I do not know the name of the person to whom this letter should be directed. Nor have I yet learned that we had a minister of propaganda.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the sentence stated by George Washington in his Farewell Address that as a very important source of strength and security we should cherish public credit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

REPRESENTATIVE CHARLES A. PLUMLEY

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, when you called the gentleman from Vermont, Representative CHARLES A. PLUMLEY, to the chair to preside over the House on the 20th, you made it possible for our good friend to realize a lifetime ambition, namely, to preside over the House of Representatives of the United States.

He used the gavel he used in 1912–15 while he presided over the Vermont House of Representatives—which some assert is the most distinguished parliamentary body among the States—and I never have seen that statement successfully challenged among Vermonters.

Anyway, we are glad to join you in your recognition of the gentleman from Vermont, Speaker PLUMLEY, as he presided over us. We congratulate you and him.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday of last week I introduced a bill, H. R. 2100, which would alleviate what I think to be a most unjust condition with which many honest and sincere business people throughout the country are faced.

During the existence of OPA many regulations were promulgated in an effort to carry out the program. People all over the Nation complained about the difficulty in keeping up with the regulations and the technicalities involved therewith. I think it is generally assumed that in many instances it was almost impossible for many businesses, and especially small businesses, to comply with all the complicated regulations.

To further complicate their problems, OPA lawyers filed many suits on the basis of technical and border-line interpretation of their regulations. Most of these cases, I understand, that were tried resulted in a verdict for the defendant. Naturally a few of the suits filed were successful. The reason for the lack of success was because most of them could have only been brought on technical violations in order, many people think, to justify their continuance on the Government pay roll.

On November 9, 1946, President Truman ordered the termination of price control on all commodities except sugar and rice. This order was put into effect by the OPA Administrator on November 10, 1946, at which time OPA was practically "washed up."

However, there is a very determined effort to continue to prosecute these old suits for violations of these regulations and orders which no longer are in effect. If they are permitted to carry out this unjustified action, it would not only cost the Government a lot of money but would be an injustice upon good citizens throughout this country.

I am proposing to relieve these people of such prosecution, and I invite the attention of the Members of the House to this proposal for your consideration. I hope you will join me in freeing the business people of this country from such "lame-duck prosecutions."

ANSWERING ATTACKS ON THE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include excerpts from the New York Herald Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, attacks have been made all over the country on the Committee on Veterans' Affairs because we have followed the same policy the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation followed for the last 20 years, to hear only those organizations that are composed of veterans exclusively.

Now I see in the New York Herald Tribune a statement signed by Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., complaining of "the deterioration in the Congress." He asks for contributions up to $100,000 to try to force us to hear the American Veterans' Committee before the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and assuring contributors that "every gift is tax exempt."

The last time I heard of Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., with reference to this American Veterans' Committee, I understood he was running out of it, because of its alleged Communist infiltration. Now he seems to have run back into it.

When he asks me to follow him, I feel somewhat as did the old fellow down in one of the Southern States when he found on his neighbor's tombstone this epitaph:

"Hark ye, strangers passing by,
As you are now, so once was I.
As I am now, so you must be.
Prepare for death and follow me."

He knew the old man quite well, so he took out his pencil and wrote under it:

"To follow you I'd not consent
Unless I knew which way you went."

The American Veterans' Committee is the most controversial veterans' organization operating in the United States today, in fact one does not have to be a veteran to join it.

At the first national convention of the organization, which took place in June 1946, in Des Moines, Iowa, the Communist element made a strong effort to secure control of the organization, and according to observers, this element was defeated by a very small majority. Immediately following the Des Moines convention, Charles G. Bolté, the national chairman of the American Veterans' Committee, made what has been called a feeble attempt to purge the national office of Communist elements. It has been alleged that some 14 members of the national organization suspected of being affiliated with the Communist Party have been discharged. However, the extent of Communist infiltration into the American Veterans' Committee seems to be more firmly entrenched in some of the local chapters of the organization than it is in the national organization. It has been reported that upon a number of occasions, National Commander Bolté was approached by interested individuals and asked what he intended to do with a number of the State organizations which were known to be controlled and dominated by the Communists. Bolte is said to have replied that the State and local chapters enjoyed local autonomy and that because of this, he was powerless to do anything.

It has been reported that the top-ranking leaders of the American Veterans' Committee having admitted that a number of the State organizations are Communist controlled, and that the State organizations in New York, Michigan, and California fall into this category. In the case of the State of Michigan, it has been reported that at the organization's meeting held in the Barlum Hotel in Detroit on September 7 and 8, 1946, the Communist forces succeeded in electing the entire slate of State officers.

The executive board of 16 members which was elected at the Michigan State convention of the organization, is reported to be made up for the most part of persons who are known Communists or who are closely associated with the Communist Party. Among the members of the executive board who were elected was one who is reported to be the Detroit correspondent for the Communist organ called the Daily Worker. He has been a candidate for Governor of the State of Michigan on the Communist Party ticket. Another individual who was elected to membership on the executive board of the Michigan chapter of the organization is reported to be labor secretary for the Communist Party. Another individual who was elected to membership on the executive board, is reported to have been ousted from the United Automobile Workers because it was claimed that he was a Communist.

With reference to the situation in the State of California, it is interesting to note that in the February issue of the American Veterans' Committee Bulletin, the official publication of the organization in California, several members of the organization wrote open letters on the subject of communism in the American Veterans' Committee. One of these letters, which was written by Theodore Robinson, chairman of the progressive caucus, representing 15 chapters of the American Veterans' Committee in southern California, states that—

> The American Veterans' Committee must stand firmly behind the national planning committee's resolution condemning communism and fascism. We have spent too much in the struggle against fascism to tolerate it now. And the views and acts of the American Communists are destructive to a democratic and progressive organization such as ours.

Another quotation from this letter indicates that Robinson is opposed to the present leadership of the organization in the State of California. Also contained in this Bulletin is a letter written by Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., wherein he states that—

> We recognize that communism is not an issue in the majority of chapters across the country. However, these must recognize that it is an issue in certain specific areas and must lend their support to the non-Communist groups who are struggling with the problem in order to achieve an overwhelming victory at our national convention in Milwaukee. There are no civil liberties or anti-Russian issues involved in the necessity of non-Communist members of the American Veterans' Committee being organized to combat Communist influence and infiltration in order to maintain the American Veterans' Committee as a genuine, independent organization devoted to the accomplishment of our liberal aims and objectives in a free America.

These two letters indicate that it is known that the Communists are endeavoring to control the American Veterans' Committee, and that even Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., knew it when he wrote this letter.

It has been reported that the reason the American Veterans' Committee has had difficulty in attracting large numbers of World War II veterans is the fact that it did not, and has not, confined its membership to war veterans. For instance, for a time the American Veterans' Committee permitted membership to those who were associated with the merchant marine during World War II. In this connection it should be stated that in June 1946 an organization was set up by the Communist-dominated maritime unions which was called the Committee for Maritime Unity. The Committee for Maritime Unity, according to a statement made by a certain individual at one of the meetings of the committee, hoped to create a general strike in the United States through the creation of a strike in the maritime unions. The man who made that statement is a known member of the Communist Party and at one time was given credit for recruiting more members into the Communist Party than any other Communist. It is not known whether this man is a member of the American Veterans' Committee or not. However, the point involved is that at the same meeting of the Committee for Maritime Unity, another individual, who was a member of the publicity committee of the American Veterans' Committee, also made an address during which he said that the American Veterans' Committee was opposed to the use of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard in maritime strikes. He also pointed out during the address that seamen were eligible for membership in the American Veterans' Committee, and in this connection he further stated that its membership was growing by leaps and bounds. This, of course, is evidence of the association between the American Veterans' Committee and known Communists and Communist-front organizations.

The fact that the American Veterans' Committee is known to have tolerated association between its members and known Communists and Communist-front organizations until at least a short time ago, is another reason why it has not been able to attract large numbers of World War II veterans. In addition to the illustration mentioned above, showing association between members of the American Veterans' Committee and communistic activities, other illustrations of the same type can be presented. For instance, the American Veterans' Committee receives more favorable publicity in the Communist organ, the Daily Worker, than all other veterans' organizations combined. Another illustration is the fact that in a letter written upon the stationery of chapter No. 1 of the organization in Chicago, Ill., the publication In Fact is recommended as reading material by Miss Nelson, a member of the chapter mentioned. The publisher of In Fact, George Seldes, is a well-known fellow traveler.

A newspaper clipping from the Washington Times-Herald dated November 22, 1946, refers to the resignation of the chairman of the Greenbelt, Md., chapter of the American Veterans' Committee. In resigning this chairmanship, William F. Miller stated that he was resigning because of the rabble-rousing tactics of the George Washington University Chapter of the American Veterans' Committee. The clipping quotes a letter which Miller wrote to the headquarters of the organization in New York City in which it was stated that "these tactics have reduced the American Veterans' Committee to the level of a semipolitical organization, rather than one that is supposed to be primarily a veterans' organization."

Recently, a chapter of the American Veterans' Committee in Washington, D. C., sponsored a speech by Ernesto Da Cal, a Spanish Civil War veteran, who spoke on the case against Franco Spain. Every Communist-front organization in the United States is at present endeavoring to cause another civil war in Spain and as a primary step cause a break in diplomatic relations between Spain and the United States.

The American Veterans' Committee has joined with numerous Communist-front organizations in their efforts to have the Committee on Un-American Activities of the United States House of Representatives abolished. For instance, the Madison, Wis., chapter of the American Veterans' Committee passed a resolution in May 1946 which was sent to all Members of Congress urging that they cast their votes against the contempt action taken by the Committee on Un-American Activities against the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc. The National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., is one of the foremost Communist-front organizations in the United States.

During the month of April 1946 the Committee on Un-American Activities held hearings in the city of New York in the Federal courthouse. Before these hearings began and during the course of the hearings certain Communist-front organizations and known members of the Communist Party picketed the courthouse where the hearings were conducted. Among the organizations picketing the courthouse was the American Veterans' Committee.

The executive secretary of the organization at that time issued a statement wherein he said that the American Veterans' Committee protested the activities of the Committee on Un-American activities and would attempt to have it abolished. During the month of October 1945 the Daily Worker, official organ of the Communist Party, published a list of organizations which were seeking the dissolution of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The American Veterans' Committee was listed among these organizations. At least nine of the organizations mentioned in the Daily Worker have been cited as Communist-front organizations and are dedicated to the overthrow of this Government.

The Greater New York Council of the American Veterans' Committee joined with the CIO and the International Workers' Order, a Communist-front organization, in picketing the office of Western Union in New York during the February 1946 strike of the Western Union employees.

The New Leader on April 20, 1946, stated that the executive secretary of the New York chapter of the American Veterans' Committee was a Communist. He has been referred to as being active in the attempts of the American Veterans' Committee to abolish the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities. The New Leader of the same date also stated that the Brighton, N. Y., chapter of the American Veterans' Committee is under Communist control.

The Daily Worker of April 5, 1946, states that the American Veterans' Committee sent delegates to the Win-the-Peace Rally, which was held in Washington, D. C., during the summer of 1946. The Win-the-Peace Rally has been exposed as a Communist front. Its successor, "The National Committee to Win the Peace," is considered one of the outstanding Communist fronts operating in the United States today.

During the month of April 1946 the American Veterans' Committee and the Communist Party of Englewood, Colo., combined to picket the Baptist Church of Dr. Harvey Springer, of Englewood, during which time some Communist Party literature was distributed in front of the church. The pickets included a prominent member of the Communist Party and a leading member of the American Veterans' Committee. Both these individuals were subsequently arrested for picketing the church, and during the course of the trial admitted that the literature which had been distributed had been printed at the local Communist Party headquarters and then distributed to the American Veterans' Committee through John Miller, a member of the organization.

As a further illustration of the association between Communists and members of the American Veterans' Committee, it is of interest to note that even in Japan the American Veterans' Committee has associated with known Communists; for on January 30, 1946, in Tokyo, Japan, the American Veterans Committee at one of its forums had as the principal speakers Mr. Sanzo Nosaka, Communist Party leader who had recently been in Yenan, China, which is the headquarters of the Chinese Communist forces now engaged in civil strife with the forces of Chiang Kai-shek. During his address to the veterans attending the forum, Nosaka said:

> Communism is twentieth century democracy; only through communism can Japan attain democracy.

Obviously, this was an effort by those members of the American Veterans' Committee who arranged for the meeting to secure the veterans' sympathy for communism in Japan, despite what views their leader, General MacArthur, may have on the subject. Nosaka's statement on democracy closely parallels the slogan of the American Veterans' Committee, which is "Achieve a more democratic and prosperous America and a more stable world." The moderator of this forum was Barnard Rubin, who is presently writing a column for the Communist organ, the Daily Worker.

Two prominent members of the AVC, one of whom is a member of the national planning committee of the American Veterans' Committee, were formerly staff members of Stars and Stripes, the official publication of the United States Army in the Pacific area. Both these individuals were removed from their posts on the staff of Stars and Stripes after it was alleged that a loyalty check on them had resulted in a negative report to their commanding officer, Col. John F. Davis.

As a matter of fact, on January 13, 1946, an estimated 9,000 GI's attended a demonstration on Okinawa which was held under the auspices of the American Veterans Committee. Both of these men were members of the Tokyo chapter of the American Veterans Committee at the time of the demonstration.

ATTITUDE OF OTHER VETERANS' ORGANIZATIONS TOWARD THE AMERICAN VETERANS' COMMITTEE

Perhaps one of the best illustrations of the feeling of other veterans' organizations toward the American Veterans' Committee is contained in a press release issued by Jack W. Hardy, national commander of the American Veterans of World War II, which is dated September 13, 1946, at Washington, D. C. The first three paragraphs of this press release are quoted as follows:

> WASHINGTON, September 13.—Amvets today struck sharply at reports of an impending merger with the AVC, asserting that the two organizations are guided by different concepts and that the latter has "sought and attracted to its membership many fellow travelers and those of communistic bent."
>
> Jack W. Hardy, Amvets national commander, made public a letter which he has sent to Charles G. Bolté, national chairman of the American Veterans' Committee, in New York City.
> The message by Commander Hardy emphasized that Amvets welcome into their ranks "all bona fide World War II veterans who can and do unreservedly subscribe to the Amvet declaration of principles" and "dedicate themselves to the preservation of American democratic principles." He pointed out, however, that when the idea of a merger had been broached several months ago by Chad Patterson and Gil Harrison, AVC officials, a review was made of "the inherent difficulty which would be encountered in efforts to purge AVC of its radical elements" who Amvets "would not be interested in accepting as members."

Pertinent paragraphs of the letter referred to in Mr. Hardy's press release are quoted as follows:

> Prior to your national convention at Des Moines, Iowa, in June, I was approached by AVC representatives on two occasions relative to the possibility of AVC merging with Amvets.
>
> At his suggestion, Mr. Chad Patterson and I had lunch together, at which time the coming AVC convention and its policies and the possibilities of a merger were discussed by him. Later Gil Harrison, one of the AVC founders and presently its vice chairman, whom I have known personally for some time, called on me and a similar discussion was had.
> On each of these occasions I indicated that there was no present basis for such a suggested merger, as the two organizations were guided by different concepts; that AVC had sought and attracted into its membership many fellow travelers and those of communistic bent; that AVC solicited and accepted into membership persons other than those who had been honorably discharged from the armed forces; and that AVC, apparently, had embraced in their entirety economic, political, and sociological programs of a leftist labor-political movement.

These quotations are self-explanatory and indicate that the American Veterans of World War II fully realize the leftist nature of the American Veterans' Committee.

An example of the feeling of the American Legion toward the American Veterans' Committee is contained in a bulletin issued by the North Shore Post of the American Legion, Post No. 21, Chicago, Ill., which is quoted as follows:

From Valley Forge on down American war veterans have never engaged in campaigns of vilification of their fellow veterans. All men who have served to defend American institutions have felt themselves bound together with hoops of steel. Those men who fought with Grant and Lee pitched their tents side by side after recall sounded. The Blue and Gray fought together to secure legislation to rehabilitate their fellow veterans. Spanish-American veterans participated in the affairs of the boys of '61. The men of Argonne and Chateau-Thierry are ready to assist the patriots of Tarawa and Bastogne. So let it be, one for all and all for one.

Charles Guy Bolté, who served with the Kings Royal Rifle Corps and is said to be directing the policies of the American War Veterans' Committee, has signed his name to an article which was published in a picture magazine here in our country. This article is typical of the technique used by the Communist smear bund and we believe that it was written by some long-haired professor who hues to the "Red" party line. Create chaos and confusion, play one group against the other, divide and conquer.

Bolté wrote: "Digging into the past I found that the Legion had been organized deliberately to quell the Bolshevist bogey among Armistice-happy doughboys of the AEF, had spent its chief talents in warning America of an exaggerated "Red" menace, had been a consistent violator of civil liberties and had almost entirely ignored the rising tide of fascism—although its traditionally isolationist policies were reversed after the fall of France."

According to the American Legion post, Bolté is talking like a typical Communist when he says we Legionnaires are violators of civil liberties; this has been the cry of saboteurs of Americanism for 25 years. Mr. Bolté speaks of an exaggerated "Red" menace. We of the American Legion prefer to believe our own Lee Pennington, Chief Inspector of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He said, "This group of rats has set out with the avowed purpose of infiltration into the American Legion. We believe the rats are directing some of the activities of Mr. Bolté's organization without his knowledge. * * * It is true that the American Legion has been fighting communism; we know all the angles. We know that the social security of our Nation rests in the Constitution of the United States of America and not in communistic social-security legislation such as Communists are trying to fasten upon American laboring men."

These quotations clearly show that the American Legion believes the American Veterans' Committee to be engaged in a smear campaign against patriotic veterans' organizations.

As further evidence of the smear technique employed by the American Veterans' Committee and one of the reasons it was cited as a smear organization by the American Legion, we need only to become acquainted with the facts contained in the following five paragraphs:

On October 24, 1945, the American Veterans' Committee joined with the CIO Political Action Committee and the National Negro Congress (Communist-front organization) and 17 other left-wing and Communist-pressure groups in demanding that Congress abolish the congressional Committee To Investigate Un-American Activities. In this connection, reference is made to a circular distributed by the American Veterans' Committee, in which it compares its program with that of the American Legion in the following language:

"From the American Legion's pamphlet, It's a Fact, we read of the following program of Americanism:

"'The Legion * * * cooperates with public education in its fight to hold the line and in its fight against Federal control.

"'The Legion * * * fights against release of alien and questionable Nisei Japanese from war relocation centers.

"'The Legion continues to help the Dies committee do an effective job of exposing subversive elements.'"

AVC, on the other hand, believes that brotherhood of race, color, and creed and the support of socially progressive legislation are more important than witch hunts which seek to hold the line against imagined subversive elements, more constructive than convention carnivals and isolated bonus grabs.

The report of the Communist Party of the United States, published in January 1946, entitled "Party Policy in the Veterans' Field," attacks the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars as being reactionary. In listing the American Veterans' Committee, however, it refers to it as a group composed to a great extent of social and democratic elements. In the report, quotations from Charles Bolté's book, The New Veteran, are used freely.

Therefore, it will be seen that the Committee on Veterans' Affairs was justified in the position it took in limiting veterans' organizations that are invited to appear before it to the ones that are composed exclusively of ex-servicemen.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION (H. DOC. NO. 145)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I recommend that the Congress authorize the United States to participate as a member of the International Refugee Organization.

As an aftermath of the war, there are more than one million displaced persons remaining in Germany, Austria, and Italy. Almost two-thirds of these are under United States care and control. The Allied military victory over the Axis Powers brought with it a practical and moral responsibility with reference to these victims of the Axis.

The General Assembly of the United Nations has considered the problem of these displaced persons carefully and at great length. At the first session in London, certain basic principles were established. It was agreed that this problem is international in scope and nature; that every effort should be made to facilitate the repatriation of displaced persons who desire to return to their homelands; that displaced persons who have valid objections to return should not be forced to do so, but should be cared for by an international agency until new homes can be found for them elsewhere. Between the January and October sessions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council made a detailed study of the entire problem and recommended the establishment of an international refugee organization which would provide an integrated and effective solution. At the meeting of the General Assembly in New York which ended in December, the draft constitution recommended by the Economic and Social Council was adopted. The United States representative to the United Nations, Senator Warren Austin, signed the constitution of the International Refugee Organization subject to subsequent approval by the Congress.

This constitution represents an earnest effort by the United Nations to solve one of the most poignant and difficult problems left in the wake of the war. The organization to be created will have no governmental powers. It can in no way alter the statutes of any of its members. It can obtain funds only by appropriations by the constitutional processes of its members. It will be solely a service organization to aid in the solution of a common problem. I am confident that with the full support of the United States, the International Refugee Organization will demonstrate the practical effectiveness of cooperation and understanding among nations. The participation of this Nation in the Organization was proposed in my Budget Message for the fiscal year 1948, and provision was made for the necessary funds within the proposed budget.

With respect to those displaced persons in our areas of occupation, the United States Army has an excellent record of performance in a field which is not traditionally the responsibility of soldiers. The Army from the first recognized the need for making the maximum use of international civilian agencies, and has done so. With the forthcoming termination of the supply of civilian personnel from other organizations, now used in the care and supply of displaced persons, I believe that it is of the utmost importance that the International Refugee Organization be established as soon as possible. It would indeed be serious if it were not in a position to begin operations on July 1 of this year.

It is not unreasonable that many of the other potential members of the International Refugee Organization should watch closely the attitude of the United States before making their own definite commitments. I feel sure that with the firm and prompt leadership of the United States, this Organization will be in a position to function as an international body to perform an essentially international service.

DISTRICT DAY

DAYLIGHT SAVING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 1700) to provide for daylight saving in the District of Columbia, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That at 2 o'clock antemeridian on the last Sunday of April of each year the standard time applicable to the District of Columbia shall be advanced 1 hour and at 2 o'clock antemeridian on the last Sunday of September of each year such time shall be returned to the standard time applicable to the District of Columbia. The time fixed under this act during the period of the year to which it is applicable shall be considered the standard time fixed by law.

SEC. 2. This act shall become effective at 2 o'clock antemeridian on the first Sunday following its passage and approval.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

THE LATE TEX RANKIN

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, today I received word of the death of Tex Rankin, who was killed yesterday in an airplane crash near Klamath Falls, Oreg. Tex Rankin became nationally known for his services in the First World War, and as a stunt flyer. His reputation grew with the great service he rendered his country in this last war, in establishing the Rankin Academy at Tulare, Calif. The Tex Rankin school, known as the Rankin Academy, gave to our country many of its outstanding flyers; Major Bong was among its graduates. The Nation has lost a fine American, and a great man, who gave so much to aviation. His wonderful advice and knowledge, which contributed toward the building and flying of better airplanes, will be missed. I know my deep sympathy for his bereaved wife and family is shared by every American who knew Tex Rankin the man, and Tex Rankin the patriot.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in two instances and in one to include a letter from one of my constituents on the subject of rent control.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN]?

There was no objection.

DAYLIGHT SAVING FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, this is the first District Day that has been claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

May I say for the benefit of the Members who have not had full opportunity to examine all the rules of the House, that the Committee on the District of Columbia has jurisdiction which is limited to the affairs of the District of Columbia, the seat of Government, and can, under the rule, claim the second and fourth Mondays in each month for the consideration by the House of District business.

Before we get around to the pending bill, let me say a word or two, by way of introduction, about the affairs of the District of Columbia and the responsibilities of this committee. The Members who serve on the District Committee serve with considerable sacrifice, I assure you. Your labors here do not pay great political dividends in the ballot box back home. More often than not you are criticized for the time you devote to the District of Columbia. But it is a responsibility that has been imposed upon the Congress by virtue of the Constitution which provides that exclusive legislative jurisdiction over the District of Columbia is vested in the Congress. That responsibility has been articulated in many different ways over a long period of time since the seat of Government has been established here.

There was a time when they had a president of the District of Columbia, appointed by the President of the United States. There was a time when they had a governor and a bicameral system of government, consisting of a council and a house of delegates. They have had all forms of government. Some of them did not work out very satisfactorily. At one time they had a gentleman who did a great job of lifting the District out of the mud, paving the streets, improving the buildings, but he left the District hopelessly in debt. It was about at that point when the Congress began to exercise its responsibility in the matter, and so it assumed to take over and to establish a new form of government, which consists of three commissioners, one of whom is a War Department engineer, and all of whom are appointed by the President of the United States and who express the executive functions for the District of Columbia.

That Board of Commissioners consists of Russell Young, chairman of the Board; Guy Mason, a very prominent attorney who has served for a number of years; and General Young, who has been appointed from the War Department. Their responsibility is to administer the affairs of the District, but the responsibility of Congress, of course, is to provide the necessary legislation under which that administrative work shall carry on. When the Committee on the Reorganization of Congress considered this matter of streamlining the committee structure it ultimately resulted in a reduction of committees from 47 to 19. Some question arose as to what we could do with the District of Columbia. Having served for 18 months on that joint committee, and having had a very modest part in the preparation of the Reorganization Act, I had a particular interest in what we might ultimately recommend. We did recommend a larger measure of home rule for the District but that proviso was finally stricken from the Reorganization Act, and so it is necessary under the structure as it now obtains, to have a District of Columbia Committee for the House of Representatives, and a comparable committee in the Senate. I understand that if it has not already done so a bill may be introduced to achieve a joining of the two District Committees of the House and the Senate so that we can operate jointly, but in any event the thing that I present to you today is that the Committee on the District of Columbia has this job of looking after the affairs of the District of Columbia.

You may be interested in knowing that you cannot change the name of a street in the District of Columbia unless a bill is first introduced, referred to the committee, enacted by the House, and then goes through a comparable process in the Senate. That is one reason why as chairman of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, I designated a subcommittee to be known as the Subcommittee on Home Rule for the District.

I, for one, believe that there is stability of relationship between the Federal and District Governments of such character that the District can exercise a larger degree of home rule and a larger degree of self-government than they have had before. When that obtains then so many of the little bills that ordinarily find their way to the attention of the Members of the House on District Day will no longer come here. As a matter of fact, the business of establishing daylight saving time for the District of Columbia is a chore that should be properly carried out and expressed by the executive heads of the District, but since they have no authority they must come here and ask for the authority, and so it is presented to you today in the form of H. R. 1700.

In the Seventy-ninth Congress we endeavored to provide daylight saving time for the District of Columbia. The bill, however, was considered so late in the session that for practical purposes it would have done very little good. A great many instrumentalities such as the railroads and their lines have a very abiding interest in this whole question of time. Nothing was done in the Seventy-ninth Congress. We did, of course, have national daylight saving time as a wartime measure; but now we must come to grips again with the proposition of daylight-saving time for the District of Columbia.

In support of this proposal there are a good many organizations recited in the report which accompanies the bill; for instance, 33 of the citizens' associations are in favor of it. The citizens' association, incidentally, is an informal group of citizens in some contiguous area in the District of Columbia who get together 1 night a week or 1 night a month and then discuss these common problems. Sometimes they enact a resolution and thereby indicate to the Congress what their own notions are about the things that we consider up here. Thirty-three of these citizens' associations have expressed themselves in favor of daylight-saving time. The Board of Trade, which is the principal organization for expressing business opinion in the District of Columbia, has declared itself in favor of daylight saving; and likewise the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

There is one thing, of course, that we have got to keep in mind: We are not insensible of the fact that a good many people who work in the District of Columbia live in the adjoining States of Maryland and Virginia, but somewhere along the line the initiative must be taken, and probably nothing will be done in Maryland or Virginia unless the Congress first acts thereon. The Legislature of Maryland is in session at the present time and I can say to the House this afternoon that the House of Delegates of the Maryland Legislature has already passed an enabling act for daylight-saving time in the State of Maryland, and there is every reason to believe from the information we have from Annapolis that the upper chamber will do likewise. So that Maryland will come in line with the District of Columbia if this bill gets favorable approval.

In that connection, may I recite to you that a good many agencies in Maryland have expressed themselves in behalf of and in support of daylight saving. This would include the Prince Georges County Chamber of Commerce, the Silver Spring Chamber of Commerce, the Montgomery County Commissioners in the adjoining county in Maryland, and also the Bethesda Chamber of Commerce.

With respect to Virginia, the situation is not quite so easy, but I am confident that if the Congress takes favorable action today the Virginia Legislature in due course will take similar action so that Arlington, Clarendon, Lyon Park, Falls Church, Alexandria, and all the other contiguous communities will fall in line. In this respect, I can say to you now that the Arlington Chamber of Commerce, directly across the Potomac River, and also the chamber of commerce at Alexandria, Va., have indicated themselves in favor of daylight-saving time.

Here are some of the reasons why I believe this bill ought to commend itself to the favorable consideration of the House. The first one is that the radio networks will go on daylight saving at the customary time in April and terminate in September. This means that programs will come an hour later in Washington. Sometimes it becomes necessary, where programs cannot be rescheduled locally, for transcriptions of network programs to be made and played from transcription at the many radio stations located here.

In respect to trade and commerce, may I say to you that the City Council of the City of Baltimore has already adopted an ordinance for daylight-saving time. There is a great deal of commerce and industry and interchange of trade between that great city of 800,000 in Maryland and the metropolitan area of Washington; so with the divergence of time, if this does not meet with your favorable approval, it adds very materially to the difficulties of those who are pursuing trade between these two metropolitan areas. This would go for Annapolis where it has already been adopted.

As we contemplate the eastern seaboard, first we start out with the fact that Greater New York and New York City will be on daylight-saving time. Philadelphia will be on daylight-saving time, along with a great many other communities in the State of Pennsylvania. New Jersey will be on State-wide daylight-saving time. Rhode Island will be on State-wide daylight-saving time, likewise the State of Connecticut, the State of New Hampshire and the State of Massachusetts. So if we have one time in Washington we are just a little bit out of line with all other metropolitan centers on the Atlantic seaboard that are so closely integrated with Washington by air-line and rail connections.

One of the reasons the bill came on at this stage of the proceedings is that if anything is to be done about it we must act now because the railroads will require abundant time to so modify and alter their schedules, that new schedules can be printed before this goes into effect.

I want to say at this juncture in the proceedings that this bill comes to you because I have had the members of the District of Columbia Committee polled without going through the motions of a formal hearing. It is not a practice I like particularly. We did, however, have extensive hearings on this bill in the Seventy-ninth Congress. I knew that the Senate was going to have hearings on it. So I assumed the privilege of polling the members and I have learned from it that a very clear and predominant majority are in favor of daylight saving.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I know the gentleman has given a great deal of thought to this subject. Has he given any thought to the situation out on the west coast? There are now 3 hours' difference in the time out there and here. If we add another hour, what effect will that have on my people out there should they want to call Members of Congress here in Washington about legislation that might be pending? For instance, there might be a meeting in my congressional district at 10 o'clock in the evening and they might want to call immediately their Congressman by telephone. They would wake him up and get him out of bed at 2 or 3 in the morning under this kind of a program. I am wondering if this legislation is for the people in the District of Columbia or are we considering that some of the other States are in the United States along with the District of Columbia?

Mr. DIRKSEN. There are quite a number of answers that can be made to my good friend, the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is what I want.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The first answer, of course, is that in this bill we are legislating not for the State of California but for the District of Columbia. You know, we often lose sight of that fact. Opinions may be expressed, for aught I know, on how will it affect Illinois, how will it affect Michigan, how will it affect California? Well, as a matter of fact, the citizens of the District of Columbia are entitled to a little consideration of their business quite aside from how it affects our own individual personal convenience because this bill applies only to the District of Columbia. I live in a different time zone. I live in the central time zone as distinguished from the Pacific time zone in which the gentleman from California lives. Now I have had the same experience. If I tried to tally the number of times that I have been got out of bed at 1 or 2 o'clock by constituents in the last 15 years it would add up to a very substantial amount of time. But that is a part of one's public service.

But, first, let me emphasize that in this bill we are legislating for the District of Columbia. Secondly, it would be up to other States and other areas of the country to determine the time question for themselves.

Now, then, in the State of Illinois we have a great many communities that have daylight-saving time. We have some that operate on standard time. But the city of Chicago, with some three and one-third million people, which is the focal center for air-line travel that comes from all western points, Northwest, Southwest, and Midwest, and then into Washington and New York, will have daylight-saving time. So it is a case of integrating these metropolitan centers wherever that can be done. So, while we want them to get into line, there is also something to be said for us coming in line with the adjoining areas.

We are legislating on this matter because it represents the clearly settled opinion of a vast majority of people who want daylight-saving time.

The Washington Post went to the trouble of polling the citizens of the District, and I think the poll will disclose that a very clear 67 percent or more are in favor of daylight saving. That is, after all, the very first consideration if Congress is going to do its proper duty by the citizens who abide here in the seat of government.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, the reason I am asking the question is the effect it will finally have if you continue to raise the hour of time in other States. It might go to States as far west as California. Now, California is a great agricultural area. The farmers there are very much opposed to daylight-saving time in the agricultural area. Now, we talk about legislating for the District of Columbia. I am wondering if the people of the District of Columbia realize how the farmer produces this foodstuff. We have to eat and they have to eat. It is the farmer who produces the food, and I am taking into consideration the effect this might have if we get every State out of line with the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am confident that the residents of the District of Columbia have a due appreciation of the inconveniences and the difficulties that beset those who till the soil, but the essential fact about all that is that there is only one farm in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I am not quite clear as to what the gentleman said about Maryland. As I understood him, Maryland is not putting in daylight-saving time unless the District of Columbia puts it in.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is one of those mutual, reciprocal things. Somebody has to make a start, so that if we make a start here they will follow. They may make a start on their own responsibility. The house of delegates has already passed it, and it is on third reading in the upper house, so the Maryland Legislature is going right about it, because Baltimore by virtue of self-rule had an opportunity to do it by municipal ordinance, and since a large portion of Maryland must necessarily integrate itself to the business hours of Baltimore, that would be reason enough for the adjoining State to do it for itself.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Has the gentleman ever lived in a city where there was daylight-saving time while the surrounding district did not have it, and has he observed the confusion that results from a situation of that kind?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Very definitely. I can recite the confusion by saying that even within the confines of my own congressional district, my home area having been on daylight saving, if I agreed to address a group of farmers or the members of the American Legion or a parent-teachers' association and was not always too careful to inquire about the time, I found that almost invariably I got to the meeting an hour late. So I have had a good deal of experience with that matter. But may I say to my good friend from California that we have tried to be mindful of that situation, and if a start is made now we not only can feel reasonably sure that those in contiguous areas will come along but we are in line then with Baltimore, with New York City, with Philadelphia, and with a good many other metropolitan areas on the Atlantic seaboard with whom there is a close relationship.

I ought to mention one other thing. Let us not forget the matter of markets and business. After all, the closing of the markets, the work of the brokerage houses, the telegrams that must be sent, the acceptances, and the offers that go out are important, so there ought to be something done that will bring us pretty nearly in line with the market practices that prevail by virtue of the fact that New York City is on daylight-saving time.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The gentleman read a list of the organizations that are in favor of daylight-saving time. I thought mostly employees' organizations. Has the gentleman a list of those who are opposed to it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. The gentleman will find them printed in the report. It looks to me as if there are about 10 against and a very, very large number of organizations and groups in favor of it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman indicated a moment ago something about bringing other places in line, localities contiguous to the District of Columbia, or other places throughout the Nation. Is the gentleman indicating that this is the first step toward bringing about Nation-wide daylight saving time?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely not. In the first place, our committee would have no jurisdiction over a bill that is national in scope. Secondly, there is no intention to give impetus to or to retard in any way what the Congress may have in mind with respect to national daylight-saving time.

Mr. HARRIS. The gentleman was arguing, however, that this bill should be adopted because it would have some influence on the State of Maryland and other contiguous areas in taking similar action.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is for the convenience and for the facility of business in all these areas along the seaboard that are so essentially hooked up with the Nation's Capital, but it is not designed to suggest to any State or Commonwealth of the Union that it should or should not have daylight-saving time.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the position of the parent-teacher organizations in the District?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Has the gentleman examined the report?

Mr. HARRIS. I looked over the report and saw that there is a recommendation here from the District of Columbia Board of Education. I see here the name of the Keene Parent-Teacher Association.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I see only one parent-teacher association that is listed against the bill. That is the Congress Heights Parent-Teacher Association which, as the gentleman recalls, is out here almost at the Maryland line.

Mr. HARRIS. I see only two of such associations which have indicated their position for the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I rather fancy that a good many of those parent-teacher associations have expressed themselves through the citizens' associations, of which 33 have indicated their favor.

Mr. HARRIS. Can the gentleman tell the House what the attitude of the farmers surrounding the District of Columbia, in Virginia and Maryland, is in regard to this legislation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I can say only on the basis of what happened last year and what representations were made to the District Committee. When the bill was up last year, it seemed the principal opposition came from two sources; the first was some of the restaurant owners in Washington, and, second, the motion-picture theaters. A third source of opposition, I believe, were one or two people identified with the Central Labor Union, who were somewhat interested. But, insofar as I know, there has been no real concerted representation against the bill by the farm organizations, although I would say that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], could speak on that with more authority than I.

Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a very firm and substantial recommendation for it. I think it is in the interest of the very convenience of life in the summertime when you have to match it up with daylight-saving time in so many areas whose business has a bearing on the Nation's Capital. It would be in the interest of the radio stations. It would be in the interest of railroads, and it would be in the interest of air lines and would facilitate their schedules. I do believe, in view of the fact that such a substantial body of the citizenry of Washington has manifested their favorable interest in this bill, it ought to be adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I wonder if the gentleman will explain further just how it would affect transportation, the railroads, and air lines, and so forth.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Daylight-saving time in New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore would make a difference of an hour scheduled in departure from or arrival in Washington. I fancy there would be a good deal of confusion on the part of many Government workers who in the summertime will be commuting out of the city for week-end leaves and who will have to keep the situation in mind as to whether the hour of their leaving is on standard time and whether their destination has daylight-saving time.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the time schedules be changed?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The railroads will change their time schedules; that is right.

I yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER].

Mr. GRANGER. I understand the gentleman's bill, so far as the District is concerned, would make this permanent legislation.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. GRANGER. What obligation is there on a common carrier to change its schedules? Is the common carrier compelled to change its schedule?

Mr. DIRKSEN. As to that, I am sure I could not say whether he is compelled to or not, but certainly it would be in the interest of the common carrier to do so.

Mr. GRANGER. Is it not a fact that we do have standard time schedules while daylight-saving time is in effect?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. GRANGER. That would mean that all the timetables would have to be changed?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It would mean, for instance, that the 24 trains that run practically on the hour between Washington and New York would be on daylight-saving schedules over the entire route since the point of departure and destination are both in the same time zone. Obviously, they can take care of it when they run between here and the Central West, because there you have an hour's time difference. But if we changed it or, for instance, if Chicago changed it, then you have not disturbed the schedule particularly but there would be the difference of 1 hour.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that if we pass this bill the railroads would change their timetables? If my memory is correct, during the times that we have had daylight saving, beginning with World War I, the railroads have always kept their regular standard timetables, and it was up to the person who traveled to know what the situation was with reference to whether or not he would arrive at any particular destination on standard time or daylight-saving time, and so forth.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is somewhat in error in this respect. While many standard-time schedules probably will not be changed, they do put out so many of these supplementary schedules with reference to one or two given routes of travel. Obviously, they would have to be changed for this very good reason. If the Congressional Limited leaves Washington at 4 o'clock, by the timetable now, and arrives in New York at 7:45, when they go on daylight-saving time and it remains standard time here, obviously the Congressional arrives there at 8:45. Now, the railroads can let you guess at it or it can get out some supplementary schedules, and that is what they would doubtless do.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not think there were many of those schedules printed during the war.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am quite confident we have had extra schedules printed. As a matter of fact, the Pennsylvania Railroad has so advised me.

Mr. CHADWICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHADWICK. May I be assured that the committee has carefully considered the implications of their choice of language when they say that this new act shall be considered the standard time fixed by law? May I say that is different from the legislative form as I know it in other States and municipalities. Is there any possibility that favorable action on this resolution will compel the railroads for instance to adopt 1 o'clock time when from their point of view it is still 12 o'clock under the act?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I doubt it. I think the reason that language is there is to be sure that the change of time is validated in case questions should ever arise.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this question of daylight-saving time is one that has always been controversial. I recognize the interest of both the urban population and the country population in their divergence of interest in this matter.

We have heard from the chairman of the committee an expression of the desires of the urban dwellers. I am deeply in sympathy with that. I know what it means to get out earlier in the afternoon in the summertime and work in the garden, but I do not think it would be fair if someone did not present the views of that other very large part of the population, that is the part of the population known as the farmers who are really the people that feed the city people. It is very easy to sit around here in comfortable offices and legislate about what the time shall be, but let us think a moment about the man who makes it possible for us to sit around here and eat three times a day. The cities live only by reason of the fact that the farmers produce enough food to feed you. I know something about the hardships of farm life. I happen to run a farm. At 4 o'clock in the morning eastern standard time, the farmer gets out of his warm bed, beats his way through the snowstorm and commences to milk his cows. At 7 o'clock in the morning, before you boys get up, his work in the way of milking and feeding his stock has been done. It is completed. His milk cans are set out there ready for the truck, and the truck arrives at 7 o'clock and brings that milk to town so that you boys can continue to live in reasonable comfort.

Now, what this thing does to that man is that he has to get up at 3 o'clock in the morning and he has to have that milk ready by 6 o'clock in the morning. In considering this matter I am simply asking that we do give serious consideration to the hardships that we are imposing upon that very important element of our population. I say I recognize the other side of the story. I live in the city myself. I know it is nice to be able to get away early in the afternoon and get out and enjoy some sunshine, but I think we should consider both sides of the proposition, and in the light of that consideration do whatever you think is right about it.

There is one other point I want to make before I yield. I have mentioned it privately to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who I am glad to know is chairman, and who I know is going to do a great deal for the District of Columbia in which I am very deeply interested.

This bill was never considered by the District of Columbia Committee of which I am a member—in this Congress. There has never been a meeting of the committee in which this bill was considered. There were no hearings, no meeting of the committee. I understand the members of the committee were privately polled as to whether they were for or against, but there has not been any meeting to reach a conclusion. With all deference to my distinguished chairman, I want to say to him and to the House that I do not think that is the way to legislate, and I hope we will not have any more bills from the Committee on the District of Columbia coming to the floor of the House until the committee has had a formal meeting and has had the opportunity to consider them in the regular legislative way.

Another point: This is permanent legislation as now drafted. I doubt the wisdom of making this permanent legislation. I am inclined to believe that if you are going to do it at all you had better do it one year at a time. You may regret it if it is permanent legislation. I shall probably offer an amendment at the proper time to make this applicable for 1 year instead of making it permanent; because, after all is said and done, we do not know what these surrounding States are going to do. Take Virginia, for instance: My distinguished chairman says 14 Members of Congress live in Maryland. I am sure a great many more than 14 live in Virginia. They are going to have to carry two watches if this bill passes, one watch to get up and eat breakfast by and the other watch to get to Washington by. That applies not only to Members of Congress, whose convenience I am not considering particularly, but to all the people of the State of Virginia and probably the Southern and Western States as well.

I now yield to my distinguished colleague from California.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is right in his statement and views as to the effect this legislation will have. It will be far-reaching in its effect because many States will feel themselves impelled to adopt daylight saving because they will believe it is a national policy, having been adopted for the District of Columbia. Many protests are coming in against daylight-saving time. We know the many protests we had during the last war.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The gentleman from Virginia brought out the fact that the farmers' schedule would be completely upset. He should also bring out the fact that if this bill were passed it would mean that the farmer would have one market time in Alexandria and another market time directly across the line in Washington, which would make a very difficult situation in the feeding of the people.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. I should like to propound this question—I understood the gentleman to say that there were no hearings on this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I said there was no hearing in this Congress. I believe the chairman said there was a hearing in the Senate in the last Congress, but there has been no hearing and no meeting of the committee on this legislation during this Congress.

Mr. REED of New York. What about the provision of the reorganization bill which says that no legislation shall be brought to the floor unless it is considered by a quorum of the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That inquiry should be directed to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. REED of New York. I know it should, but I did not know but what the gentleman himself might care to express a little opinion on it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No; I do not. I am not criticizing my distinguished chairman, I am just calling attention to what happened. I know we have all been quite busy.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Not at this time. The gentleman can submit his parliamentary inquiry as soon as I have finished, and I am almost through.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD along with my remarks a resolution recently adopted by the board of supervisors of Fairfax County relative to this subject, expressing their opposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

(The resolution referred to follows:)

At a regular meeting of the Board of Supervisors of Fairfax County, Va., held in the board room in the county office building at Fairfax, Va., on Wednesday, February 19, 1947, at which meeting all of the members of the said board were present and voting, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas it was brought to the attention of the board that there was a movement on foot to inaugurate daylight-saving time in the District of Columbia and surrounding communities; and

"Whereas farmers would have to start working an hour earlier each day in order to meet revised schedules of milk trucks, delivery trucks, trains, and other communicating systems; and

"Whereas crops cannot be harvested until the dew has dried, and there would be absolutely no advantage in going to the fields an hour earlier than is the usual custom, causing this extra hour of daylight-saving time to be wasted, thereby causing inefficient use of farm labor and adding to the cost of production of food and feed crops, and farmers will still be required to work as late as usual in order to harvest the crops within the required period; and

"Whereas if daylight-saving time is inaugurated, it would have serious effect on the cost of production of food and feed crops, thereby raising the cost of these commodities to the consumer; and

"Whereas farmers are now working as many hours as they can physically endure, and the adding of six additional hours each week caused by daylight-saving time would add materially to the hardship and cost of producing milk and other food products in the metropolitan area of Washington; and

"Whereas there is no excuse for daylight-saving time under the pretense of the war emergency program, and the board feels that it is preposterous to advance the idea of setting the clocks up at this time: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this board go on record as opposing the plan to put daylight-saving time into effect at this time for reasons stated hereinbefore; and be it further

"Resolved, That Senators HARRY F. BYRD, A. WILLIS ROBERTSON, and Representative HOWARD W. SMITH be, and they now hereby are, requested to use their best efforts to prevent any legislative act being passed to create daylight saving into a law; and be it still further

"Resolved, That duly attested copies of this resolution be forwarded to Mr. B. B. Derrick, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, and to the proper governing body of the following: City of Alexandria, town of Falls Church, and counties of Arlington, Prince William, Loudoun, and Fauquier.

[SEAL] "R. M. LOUGHBOROUGH,
"Clerk of Said Board."

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman mentioned the difficulties under which the farmers would operate under this so-called daylight savings. He did not mention the fact that all of the school children waiting for busses must go an hour earlier and in many cases in darkness to wait for their particular school busses. Nor did he mention either, Mr. Speaker, the fact that each and every farmer must wait a full hour after the sun is up before his alfalfa and his grain are ready for harvest.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. They will meet the question of the school children, if this bill is put into effect, the same way they met it when the original daylight-savings bill was passed to put the whole of the United States on daylight-saving time. The District of Columbia Board of Education met and changed the school hour so as to have the kids go to school in the middle of the morning by the clock.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am not familiar with that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, in taking a position in opposition to this bill I suppose I shall be accused, as I have been on many occasions in the past, with being a reactionary.

The gentleman from Virginia has told the truth about the dairymen. I am not sure I can add much to that. I happen to run dairy farms and I see what happens to the men who work on those farms under daylight saving. You would think, of course, that a country district 20 miles out of Washington or out of New York City would be independent with respect to the hours it keeps; but when the big city goes on daylight-saving time and changes all its business to a new time system, to a new clock, so to speak, the effect is felt clear out through the country. That milk truck, to which the gentleman from Virginia has referred, must be operated on city daylight-saving time because the milk distributors' plants in the city are under daylight saving; therefore, that milk truck must come out of the country an hour earlier. The milk must be ready.

Now, in the portion of the globe in which we live the situation of the farmer can be described about as follows: From late spring until early autumn when he gets up to do his normal work, including dairying and other work, it may be said he gets up at dawn. During that summer period the sun rises around 4:30 to 5 o'clock in the Temperate clime. My experience has been confined almost entirely to up-State New York. So, for 3 or 4 months he gets up at daylight, if you please; but as the seasons change and the autumn comes, winter follows and is followed by early spring, whether he likes it or not or whether you change the clocks or not, he must get up in the dark. I think it is safe to say that the average farmer engaged almost entirely in feeding the people of the cities has to get up two-thirds of the year in the dark and probably three-fourths of the year. These bills make him get up in the dark 12 months of the year, or 352 days in the year. He is the only man who has to do that in our entire economy.

The thing that disturbs me these days is the fact that there is an ever-increasing number of people, good people, earnest people but an ever-increasing number of our people who have not the slightest conception of where their food comes from. They see it on the grocer's shelves. They are intensely interested in price and quality, but they do not know where it comes from or how it is produced. The bottle of milk is delivered on the doorstep at a certain hour. If it is there on time, if it is good milk at a decent price, that is all they care about. They have not the slightest idea of how that milk is produced.

Mr. Speaker, if you ask country doctors the effect of this daylight-saving situation upon country families, they will tell you it has an adverse effect; and I am thinking not only of the man who has to get up in the dark the year around but of his wife and children. The wife has to get up an hour earlier and cook breakfast, get the kids out of bed, and dress them an hour earlier. Does that mean that she can go to bed an hour earlier in the evening? Not at all. She cannot get those children to go to bed by daylight. I see these men and these women working on my own farms, and I can tell you that while it is difficult to point your finger at it and prove it, there is a degree of strain and fatigue existing in the farm family wherever daylight savings is imposed upon them. I am against the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think we have no quarrel with the general consideration that the gentleman from New York makes, but it looks to me like we are dealing here with realities. Now let us take close to home. Baltimore will be on daylight-savings time. There are milk producers in this milkshed who will be delivering to the Washington area and Baltimore as well. They will be delivering 1 hour later in one case and an hour earlier in another if they were on daylight savings and we were not. I think the gentleman will agree that the farmers around the New York milk area are in the same identical fix, because I think they have been on daylight-savings time quite some time. Philadelphia is a focal point as a milk center. Chicago is the center of a great milk-producing area that embraces the southern part of Wisconsin and the northern part of Illinois. Yet they are on daylight savings, and they are able to accommodate themselves. So it occurs to me as we look at this picture of the seaboard area that it might just as well be imposed on Washington, D. C.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I note the use of that word. I recognize that use of the word "impose." It is imposed upon people who do not want it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; all legislation necessarily imposes things upon people. So, while I do not use the word advisedly, I see nothing wrong with its general connotation. But that is going to be the situation here, and the chances are that fewer farmers will be inconvenienced in this area than are presently inconvenienced in the Philadelphia area, in the New York area, and all up and down the seaboard.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then apparently the gentleman from Illinois is for this thing because it only inconveniences a few additional people.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Hardly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That since the farmers near Philadelphia and New York are already being inconvenienced, there is no reason why the other people should not be.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the people in Washington certainly are entitled to some consideration in this matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think they should first have consideration for their neighbors. Honestly, I do not think they realize what this does out in the country. They meet in their little citizens' associations—perfectly decent, honest people—and pass these resolutions without the slightest understanding of what it does 30 miles away.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I respectfully ask the gentleman would his view be the same with reference to all these other metropolitan areas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; decidedly. If I were a member of the New York Legislature and a bill of this sort came up authorizing the city of New York to adopt daylight saving, I would vote against it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But the gentleman will agree that all up and down the State of New York there are a great number of communities—some 30 or 40, including Greater New York—that have daylight-saving time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is perfectly true, and it is a great error.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, as one of those who voted against the reporting of this bill, I state here that I appreciate the viewpoint of those who desire daylight saving time, but I do want to call your attention to some of the implications that are contained in this bill. First, it will be cited as an exemplary action for various drives on every conceivable plan of daylight-saving legislation. We could give better consideration to some bill of national scope, rather than piecemeal consideration. I think all of us remember too well the disturbance and the bitterness we had during the war and the difficulty we had in removing daylight saving time as a great national vehicle for grief.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. We repealed it as quickly as we could.

Mr. O'HARA. Yes, we repealed it as quickly as we could, but how long it took to get action. Secondly—may I call your attention to what adds to and illustrates the field of confusion. Most of you have this situation. Let us say we pass this bill. Instead of there being just an hour's difference in time between here and your district there will be 2 hours' difference in time. John Smith out in your district puts in a call at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. You have worked up until 6 o'clock here, and you and your staff have put in a long day. Then he, at 4 o'clock at home, calls you and the operator says, "The Congressman does not answer." Naturally you have gone home from the office. Then he sends you a telegram and wants to know whether you are keeping bankers' hours, and what is the idea of your going home at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. You write him and say, "We have daylight-saving time in the city of Washington and I went home at 6 o'clock."

Many of our office staffs work until 6 or 6:30. I know mine do, and I do generally. But if it is 6 o'clock here and only 4 o'clock home, and a constituent calls me on an important matter, I am going to be embarrassed to explain to him what the situation is, and it may take quite a little time to convince him.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield to my distinguished colleague.

Mr. KNUTSON. What would the gentlemen say to a proposal to import starlings into Minneapolis because they have them in Washington?

Mr. O'HARA. It might be appropriate to this discussion.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. Can the gentleman think of any good reason why we should have daylight-saving time in one section of the country and not in the other?

Mr. O'HARA. No I cannot.

Mr. REES. As I understand, somebody got the idea somewhere along the line that we ought to have daylight-saving time during the war period, on the idea that we might be able to work a little longer or do a little more work during that period.

Mr. O'HARA. That is right.

Mr. REES. That was done as a sort of war measure, as I remember it.

Mr. O'HARA. I wonder how much good it really did.

Mr. REES. I wonder that myself; but it seems to me that this is a haphazard thing. The fact that somebody saw fit to put it through in Philadelphia or somewhere else is not a good reason for doing it in Washington.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. Was not the purpose of initiating daylight saving time during the war to alleviate the tremendous shortage of electricity throughout the whole eastern seaboard?

Mr. O'HARA. That was a theory to which I never subscribed.

Mr. HARRIS. That was the heart of it.

Going further along the line suggested by our distinguished friend from Kansas, what good reason is there for enacting daylight saving time anywhere?

Mr. O'HARA. That is an inquiry to which I also seek an answer.

Mr. REES. That is the point I was just making.

Mr. HARRIS. It might be argued that the purpose of it is to permit people who are working in business houses or in other jobs to leave their work earlier for recreation. I appreciate that situation.

Mr. O'HARA. I will say frankly that some of them do use the time for working in their gardens, and for recreation.

Mr. HARRIS. Could not the the business establishments in the District of Columbia just as well move up the hours at which the employees go to work?

Mr. O'HARA. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED of New York. I believe the Reorganization Act provides that no bill shall come to the floor unless it is reported out of committee when a quorum is present. As I understand the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, there was no meeting of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The point of order comes too late. It should have been made before debate started on the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I thought I was careful to explain in the course of my remarks how the bill got on the floor, and I am quite sure my good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA] will bear me out, that it was in the interest of expediting action, and because of the necessity that existed of making a determination in the event the railroads' schedules were to be reprinted. On account of those circumstances, we polled the committee. That is nothing new. I have been a member of the House District Committee for 15 years and have been its ranking Republican member for a long, long time before I became chairman. Ofttimes we had difficulty in getting a quorum present at a good many meetings, and for many, many years we have sometimes followed the practice of polling the committee on bills that we do not regard as too controversial. The fact of the matter is that there was a hearing on this bill in the Seventy-ninth Congress, and the hearings were available to everyone. We could have gone through the same motions all over again, but there was the time factor. If Congress is going to do it, then, of course, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and the Pennsylvania Railroad and the air lines and the others who have a stake in the matter, must be advised abundantly in advance.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA. May I say to my distinguished chairman that it is true quite often in bills of this kind where we have had hearings and have had the subject matter up in previous sessions, it is customary to merely poll the committee. And I will say further that it is no reflection either on the chairman of the committee or the committee as to the manner in which the bill comes on the floor of the House.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Exactly so, and I can assure the Membership of the House that it is not a common practice and certainly would be avoided where any major interest was involved.

With respect to the observations made about the farming interests, certainly I am not insensible to the farming interests in this bill. I come from a farming area myself and have served for many many years as a member of the subcommittee on agriculture appropriations.

Mr. REES. Do they have daylight-saving time in Illinois now?

Mr. DIRKSEN. They do in many communities.

Mr. REES. Now?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I assume they will have it this year as well and, of course, they have it in Chicago. The argument that has been made here can be made on the same ground against every metropolitan center in the United States that has daylight saving. They certainly peddle milk on the streets of Baltimore, and they have daylight-saving time. So, the farmers living in the adjoining area would have to get up earlier. They have daylight-saving time in Philadelphia, so the farmers living in the adjoining area would have to get up earlier. They have daylight saving in New York City so the farmers living in the milkshed area of that city would have to get up earlier. As a matter of fact, a good many of the farmers who deliver to both major milksheds here in Washington and Baltimore would not be affected particularly if we did or did not have daylight-saving time because they would still have to get up earlier. But, when all is said and done, it has been my observation, on the basis of what little farming I have done, that the farmer pretty well follows his own devices in the final analysis as to when he is going to get up. He may have a mind to get up at 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning, but that is a matter that he is going to determine pretty well for himself. Certainly, as a matter of practice, I am confident the farmer on the average does not get up as early in this day and age as he did in other years. I know a little something about this business of getting up at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning and getting ready to go out on a threshing rig. But in the last few years I have not observed that the practice is quite the same, and they do get up somewhat later.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he went threshing at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We would be tooling up at that hour. There were chores to be done before the threshing day began. I have had my share of milking, may I say, with my hands and not with a milking machine.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You never saw a threshing machine working before the sun came up.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is part of the day, may I say to my friend; it is just a part of the farm day. I have had a small share of it, and I know something of this business of getting up early. While I am not a professional farmer, I have been around farms a great deal, because most of my immediate family were engaged in good, hard agriculture ever since I can remember.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman knows, of course, that while the farmer can set his own time so far as getting up in the morning is concerned, the farmer cannot tell those men whom he hires to keep on working until 8 o'clock in the evening when the picture show in the adjoining town opens at 7 o'clock.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to my friend the gentleman from Minnesota that it is being done in so many of the metropolitan areas. So it does seem to me that it is only fair if the people of the Nation's Capital are so overwhelmingly in favor of it they are entitled at least to make a start on it. I want to say to the House it does not make much difference to me whether this is permanent legislation or not, but I do believe we are entitled to have it tried out.

So, as the general debate closes, I propose to offer an amendment to make this applicable only for the year 1947. After that time, if it does not work out in this area, then whatever the Congress may want to do about it in the spring of 1948 is something for the Congress to determine.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN:

On page 1, line 4, strike out the words "each year" and insert the words "the year 1947."

On line 6, strike out the words "each year" and insert the words "the year 1947."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, the amendment requires no belaboring. It was suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], and I am sure it meets with his approval.

I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN) there were—ayes 44, noes 86.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 210, not voting 98, as follows:

SAFEGUARDING ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE IN CERTAIN CASES

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Rules Committee, I call up House Resolution 105 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 4) to safeguard the admission of evidence in certain cases. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], and at this time I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of H. R. 4, which is a bill to safeguard the admission of evidence in certain criminal cases. It relates to the admission of statements made by persons accused of committing a crime.

This bill comes to the House by the unanimous vote of the Committee on the Judiciary. The rule was also unanimously reported by the Rules Committee.

I might state that this legislation is not new in this House for the reason that a similar bill was passed by this body in the Seventy-eighth Congress and again in the Seventy-ninth Congress. This legislation has had our approval on two previous occasions.

This is an open rule providing for 2 hours' general debate. I would like to make a brief statement as to what the bill provides. I will not go into the merits of the legislation because members of the Committee on the Judiciary will present a full explanation as to why this bill should be passed.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is made necessary on account of a certain decision handed down by the United States Supreme Court. The title of the case is McNabb et al. against United States, which was decided on March 1, 1943, and is reported in Three Hundred and Eighteenth United States Reports, page 332. In that case the Supreme Court decided that a confession or statement of a person apprehended for the commission of a crime could not be admitted in evidence if the same was taken by the officers prior to the time that the defendant had been arraigned.

Justice Frankfurter wrote the opinion and called attention to the fact that Congress, through the Criminal Code, has given explicit instructions to the United States marshals, their deputies, and other officers as to what their duties shall be on apprehending persons suspected of a crime. I quote from the decision and the following language is the basis for the conclusions reached by the Court:

Congress has explicitly commanded that—

And now Justice Frankfurter quotes the statute as found in the Eighteenth United States Code, paragraph 595—

It shall be the duty of the marshal, his deputy, or other officer, who may arrest a person charged with any crime or offense, to take the defendant before the nearest United States Commissioner or the nearest judicial officer having jurisdiction under existing laws for a hearing, commitment, or taking bail for trial.

Justice Frankfurter also cites the act of June 18, 1934, chapter 595, Forty-eighth Statutes 1008, Fifth United States Code, paragraph 300a, authorizing officers of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to make arrests, and calls particular attention to the requirement that "the person arrested shall be immediately taken before a committing officer."

In this particular case which was before the Court several brothers had been arrested for the crime of murder in the State of Tennessee. A Federal officer had been shot while endeavoring to apprehend these brothers for operating a still. The murder occurred at night. There was no evidence as to who had fired the fatal shot. One of the brothers confessed and implicated another brother. On the strength of these confessions the defendants were found guilty of second-degree murder.

Justice Frankfurter in this case held that the statements although made voluntarily, and after the defendants had been fully informed of their rights, were inadmissible in court to sustain these convictions solely for the reason that the defendants had not been arraigned prior to the time the statements were taken. These men were arrested late at night, I believe about 2 a. m., and were questioned for several hours before the statements were made.

During the debate on this bill cases will be called to your attention by members of the Judiciary Committee where miscarriages of justice have occurred because of the effect of this decision. It is therefore necessary for Congress to act in order that justice may be done in future cases. The bill contains only four lines and merely provides:

That failure to observe the requirement of law as to the time within which a person under arrest must be brought before a committing officer shall not render inadmissible any evidence otherwise admissible.

I wish to read a few more lines from the decision which I believe will give you a pretty clear picture of what the issue before us is. Justice Frankfurter said this:

In holding that the petitioners' admissions were improperly received in evidence against them, and that having been based on this evidence their convictions cannot stand, we confine ourselves to our limited function as the court of ultimate review of the standards formulated and applied by Federal courts in the trial of criminal cases. We are not concerned with law-enforcement practices except insofar as courts themselves become instruments of law enforcement. We hold only that a decent regard for the duty of courts as agencies of justice and custodians of liberty forbids that men should be convicted upon evidence secured under the circumstances revealed here.

In other words, the Court found that these statements could not stand to sustain these convictions under the interpretation the Court placed on the statutes I have quoted. I do not believe that Congress ever intended any such construction of the law. Of course we want to see defendants arraigned promptly, but, in my opinion, it is unreasonable to hold that the defendant has been deprived of any of his constitutional or statutory rights if at the solicitation of the arresting officers he voluntarily, and after being fully informed of his rights, decides to make a confession of the crime for which he has been arrested. It is up to Congress to express our intention clearly on this point, and that is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield.

Mr. FELLOWS. Was there a dissenting opinion?

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Justice Reed wrote a dissenting opinion.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr CHENOWETH. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. What is the test of a long-established line of decisions on the question of the confession of a crime, as long as no force or violence was used?

Mr. CHENOWETH. This decision overrules all of the decisions handed down prior to this time, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan. The trial courts have been embarrassed since the announcement of this decision and it is now very difficult to determine what statements are admissible. The court apparently was trying to say to the law enforcement officers of the country that "you must be more careful in dealing with those you have apprehended for committing a crime; you must have them arraigned regardless of the time of day or night they are arrested before you can take a statement from them." That is virtually what this decision says.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. The force and effect of the Supreme Court decision would be to deny to any police officer the opportunity to even interrogate any person he might arrest and whom he may accuse of crime?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I would say that would be the practical effect of the decision. He might question the defendant but any statement made would be inadmissible. It certainly has created a very embarrassing and distressing situation. Many cases could be cited where a flagrant violation has been permitted to go unpunished because the courts and the law enforcement officers were not permitted to carry out their usual duties. There should be no opposition to either the rule or the bill.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. I wonder if the Supreme Court cited any authority to back up the holding it handed down in this case other than their interpretation of the language that they were passing upon?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I may say that the basis of the opinion is the fact that Congress has instructed law-enforcement officers concerning their duties to see that defendants are arraigned promptly, and the court found in this case the officers had taken statements from the defendants before they were arraigned. For this reason the statements were inadmissible.

Mr. REDDEN. The officer before he may talk to the criminal must take him before a committing officer and have him committed or a hearing held, then he may talk to him, is that right?

Mr. CHENOWETH. Yes, that appears to be the theory of the court, which I contend is wrong and should be corrected.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. As a matter of fact, there was no authority cited by the justice who wrote the opinion because there was no authority holding kindred to what his opinion is in this case; is that correct?

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is right.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. In this case the gentleman mentioned that the matter had been before the House on two previous occasions. Why is it here the third time?

Mr. CHENOWETH. The other bills failed to pass the other body.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAHAM. The bill did pass the Senate, but it was caught in the deluge of bills that were not passed at the end of the session.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I stand corrected. The bill did pass the House on two different occasions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The statement was made here a minute ago about the passage of this bill. In other words, under the McNabb decision as it stands a police officer after arresting an individual cannot even interrogate him. That is not what that decision says. It says that until he has been arraigned the confession will not be allowed to be admitted in evidence. There would be nothing to keep him from questioning the prisoner during that period of time. All the McNabb decision says is that the individual's statement shall not be admitted into evidence if it was procured before he has been arraigned.

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is true. They can question him, but any statement taken at that time would not be admissible under the McNabb ruling. We are seeking to correct this ruling by this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. In this case the arresting officer, who was an alcohol prohibition agent, questioned him for a period of 14 to 16 hours?

Mr. CHENOWETH. Fourteen hours.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. They had ample time the next morning from 9 o'clock to 2 o'clock in the afternoon to have arraigned him?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I do not know what the circumstances were, whether there was an officer present before whom they could have arraigned him or not.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman think it is good policy upon the part of the Congress to pass a law because it does not agree with the opinion of the Supreme Court in a particular case? Does not the gentleman think that is going pretty far?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I may say to the gentleman it is unfortunate that the Congress is called upon to correct a mistake of the Supreme Court. However, this is not the first time we have been called upon to do that. It is becoming rather common. I do not intend to be critical of the Court, but I cannot understand why the Court reached such conclusions. It is the duty of Congress to act promptly to clarify the law, which has been misconstrued by the Court.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is it not the duty of the Supreme Court to construe the law as written by the Congress but not to make the law and when there is a wrong interpretation, is it not the duty of the Congress to correct the law so that it will clearly express the intent of the Congress?

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is correct.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, it seems to me that here is a decision that some Members of Congress do not agree with and I think, because some of the Members of Congress do not agree with this decision that is the reason we are bringing this legislation before the House. Now we are criticizing the Supreme Court; in fact, it was just brought out a minute ago that this defendant was held from 14 to 16 hours while they attempted to extort a confession from him. I do not know whether I want to say that the Supreme Court was wrong in this particular case or not, because I do not know, but there are many cases in which the police go too far in getting confessions. It seems to me if we pass this legislation it will be an encouragement to the arresting police officers to use almost any method to get admissions and confessions, and I would not be willing to go that far.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, is it not a fact that the trial court, and the jury hearing the case in Tennessee, and the Supreme Court of Tennessee, all held that this was a voluntary confession and that the man's constitutional rights were fully protected.

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is right. Let me read further from the decision and I think the basis for the same will be more clear. I quote:

> The circumstances in which the statements admitted in evidence against the petitioners were secured reveal a plain disregard of the duty enjoined by Congress upon Federal law officers.

As I mentioned before, that is the basis of this opinion. This is where the Court is wrong. Congress has never declared that statements taken before arraignment are inadmissible—this is the construction of the Court and entirely without foundation, in my opinion.

Let me read further:

> Freeman and Raymond McNabb were arrested in the middle of the night at their home. Instead of being brought before a United States commissioner or a judicial officer, as the law requires, in order to determine the sufficiency of the justification for their detention, they were put in a barren cell and kept there for 14 hours. For 2 days they were subjected to unremitting questioning by numerous officers. Benjamin's confession was secured by detaining him unlawfully and questioning him continuously for 5 or 6 hours. The McNabbs had to submit to all this without the aid of friends or the benefit of counsel. The record leaves no room for doubt that the questioning of the petitioners took place while they were in the custody of the arresting officers and before any order of commitment was made.

There are the grounds for the decision; namely, that the officers took these statements from the defendants before they were arraigned. Regardless of the other circumstances involved, the Court found that this was sufficient reason why the statements could not be admitted.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman think the Court had sufficient facts to rule that in this particular case the confession was forced?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I think the Court would have upheld the conviction had it not been for the fact that the statements were taken before the arraignment. That seems to be the basis of the decision. And of course any statement taken by officers from this time on is inadmissible unless the defendant has first been arraigned.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION. The Supreme Court there is relying on a situation that was not taken advantage of or claimed by the defendants or their counsel at the trial.

Mr. EBERHARTER. That is easily answered.

Mr. ROBSION. No; that is not easily answered. If it was obtained by duress or fraud, and so forth, they should have taken advantage of it in the lower court.

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is right.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. This pending bill is remedial legislation. This is not the only case where men guilty of crime have escaped punishment by reason of this ruling. There is one case where a man had committed burglaries all over the United States. He took the arresting officers not only to different places in Washington, but to other cities where he had committed burglaries and took them where he had hidden the loot, and in the face of all of those repeated voluntary confessions an acquittal was directed by the trial court. The test as to whether or not the confession is admissible in evidence has long been and should always be whether or not it was voluntarily made.

Mr. CHENOWETH. You are absolutely right. The test is that the statement must be voluntary and the defendant warned it will be used against him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. There are two pertinent quotations from the code in this connection. One the gentleman quoted a while ago, Eighteenth United States Code, page 595, to the effect that an arresting officer should immediately take the prisoner before a committing magistrate. The other will be found in Fifth United States Code, page 300–A, wherein they were giving the FBI additional authority. They also made it very plain that Congress intended having the law-enforcing agents of this country, when they made an arrest, take the man before a magistrate immediately. This case involved keeping a man from 2 o'clock until 9 o'clock the next morning, 6 or 7 hours. Then they brought the confession in. The gentleman here said that the just test is whether it was voluntary or involuntary. All of you who are lawyers know this: How much chance does a defendant, after being up all night and half the next day, have of coming in and then proving that it was not voluntary?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I appreciate the observation made by the gentleman. I think no Member of Congress wants to vote for legislation which would deprive a person of any of his constitutional rights. I think it is well established that a confession in order to be admissible must have been made voluntarily, the defendant must have been fully informed of his rights, and that he was not compelled to make any statement unless he so desired. He should be advised that his statement would be used against him at his trial. I am sure anyone who has had any experience in law enforcement has always been very careful to inform the defendant fully and advise him of his rights.

Mr. JENNINGS. If the gentleman will yield further, in this case the only people who could possibly have shot down this law enforcement officer were these moonshiners. They were the only people who had a motive for doing it. They were the only people there in the darkness of the graveyard.

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is my understanding of the case. There was no evidence to the contrary.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. Has not the test always been whether or not the accused made a confession freely, voluntarily, and without compulsion or inducement of any sort.

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is right. We do not want another test added, which is the effect of this decision.

Mr. REDDEN. Has it not been held from the time we have had courts in this country that if he made it under those conditions it was admissible to be used against him? If that is not true now by reason of this decision, then the tens of thousands that have been convicted upon such confessions are innocent under the law.

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is correct. All we are doing by this legislation is continuing the rule as it has been through all these years and as it has been uniformly followed by the courts.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. Has not every safeguard been placed around the accused by guaranteeing to him in the first place that if he makes a confession it is incumbent upon the court to determine whether or not the confession was voluntarily made?

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is right.

Mr. ELSTON. In the second place, even after the court finds a confession is admissible the jury may disregard it if it was made under compulsion.

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is a question of fact for the jury to determine.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. SNYDER. As I understand the McNabb case, the confession was not held inadmissible, but one of the steps which Congress has prescribed for the arraignment of prisoners, that is in taking the prisoner before a commissioner, had not been complied with.

Mr. CHENOWETH. It was held inadmissible because that step had not been taken prior to the time the statements were made.

Mr. SNYDER. The Supreme Court vitiated that conviction because that particular step had not been complied with and not because the confession was not taken properly?

Mr. CHENOWETH. You are correct.

Mr. SNYDER. Then this bill simply eliminates the necessity to arraign a prisoner, one step the Congress has heretofore prescribed?

Mr. CHENOWETH. We have never said that such a statement would be inadmissible. The Court admitted that Congress has not explicitly forbidden the use of evidence so procured. All we are doing by this legislation is to inform the law-enforcement officers that they can take a statement, which is admissible in court, before they arraign the prisoner, and surely no one will contend such authority should be denied.

Mr. SNYDER. A man can be convicted without even having a preliminary hearing?

Mr. CHENOWETH. No. That is not the question involved. I do say it is a serious impediment to the administration of justice in this country if officers are not permitted to take such statements.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. Since the Supreme Court has made this decision in the McNabb case, other courts have interpreted it to mean that confessions made before arraignment are not admissible.

Mr. CHENOWETH. That is the only position they can take. This is the law until clarified by an act of Congress. This is the issue before us today.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I have no requests for time on this side, Mr. Speaker. I know of no objection to the rule. I understand this bill has been passed by the House on two previous occasions. In the interest of saving time and with the understanding that the gentleman from Colorado has no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and suggest that the gentleman from Colorado move the previous question.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4) to safeguard the admission of evidence in certain cases.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4, with Mr. CASE of South Dakota in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill has been pretty well discussed under the rule. I might say to the gentleman from West Virginia, who made inquiry, that there are two words used in the general statutes concerning the time when those charged with crime must be arraigned. One word is "forthwith" and the other is "immediately." These words have to do with the procedure to which the gentleman from West Virginia has referred. The courts have interpreted the words "forthwith" and "immediately" in other statutes as meaning within a reasonable time. It is a question of fact in each case. Bear in mind that the jury always passes upon whether or not a confession was voluntarily given by the accused. The court also passes on that question. So I think a person accused of crime is, has been, and, I am sure, always will be, well protected under American law, as interpreted by the courts before the McNabb case. I think I am entirely within the bounds of factual information when I state that every law-enforcement agency in the United States, including the FBI, is urging this legislation. Most of these agencies appeared before the committee at the hearings and pointed out the handicap caused by the decision in the McNabb ruling. Extensive hearings have been held. I hold the printed hearings in my hand—142 pages. I am surprised that there is any opposition to this bill. It must be from misconception of what it does.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CELLER. The bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], a very able member of the Committee on the Judiciary, at all times looks after what he calls the underdog or the common man. He is very meticulous about that. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] agrees that a bill should come to the floor unanimously, I am sure there is very little cause for anyone else to object.

I cannot take any more time because I have yielded all of the time on this side. I simply want to repeat, this bill has a unanimous report. It has passed the House on two other occasions. It has passed the Senate but was lost in the shuffle in the closing days of the last session. It should be passed. I want to ask every Member of the House to read the committee report. Many reports are perfunctory. They do not bring to the Congress much information. This one is exceptional and I do not believe any Member, having read it, will question the reasons why this legislation should be enacted.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], to be yielded as he may see fit. He is the chairman of the subcommittee which considered the bill and will explain its provisions in detail.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in order that we may get all the facts in this case properly before us, I would like to give a short review and I would appreciate it if I be not interrupted until I have concluded my statement.

This case is known as McNabb against United States, reported in Three Hundred and Eighteen United States Reports 332. It grew out of what we call an illicit still case. The McNabbs lived about 12 miles from Chattanooga, Tenn., and they had arranged to sell some illicit liquor to several informers, who, in turn, informed the Alcohol Tax Unit of the proposed sale. Four officers accompanied the informers to the scene where the sale was to be consummated. They got out of the automobile and the informers drove off. The McNabbs met the informers and were in the act of transferring the illicit liquor when the Federal officers came up and one of them called out, "All right, boys. Federal officers."

I bring that to your attention at the start, that these men were apprised of the fact that these were officers of the law. In this connection, if you will take the trouble to read the case as reported in One Hundred and Twenty-third Federal (2) 848, where it was before the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Sixth Circuit, you will find that one of the men said, when he handed a shotgun to another, "Here comes the law. Pour it on them, boys. Pour it into them." So, with the statement on the part of the Federal officers, there was recognition on the part of the McNabbs that they were confronted by arresting officers. Therefore, we start off on the basis that each side knew the other.

The informers having left, the McNabbs fled into a cemetery. One of the officers, Leeper, heard a movement in the cemetery and went in. While using his flashlight he was shot, and the shot came from a shotgun, and he fell. Another officer rushed in and his light proved a target, and he was shot while he was dumping two cans of liquor. Later along that night three of the McNabbs were apprehended and taken to Chattanooga. They were not taken before any committing officer—a United States commissioner or a judge—nor were they arraigned at that time. The officers knew there were two other men implicated in this matter, one by the name of Emuil and one by the name of Barney. Those two men were subsequently acquitted by direction of the trial court.

At this stage it is interesting to realize this fact: That during the trial of these men the trial judge excluded the jury and heard the statements of the arresting officers as well as the defendants, for the purpose of ruling upon the admissibility of the confessions. After hearing the testimony on both sides, with the jury excluded, which is the proper practice in Federal courts, he recalled the jury and admitted these confessions and statements as voluntarily made.

Prior to this decision, the sole test of admissibility of statements made by persons accused of crime was laid down in the case of Wilson v. United States (?96 U. S. 318), that a confession must be free, voluntarily made without coercion or compulsion and without inducement. That has been the standard which we have accepted and gone on for years.

While three of the McNabbs were being held, a fourth McNabb came in late on Friday afternoon and stated that he understood that he was wanted, and surrendered himself to the local authorities, not to the Federal officers. The local authorities placed him in the county jail where he was held for some time. Then, later on, a fifth McNabb came in.

What I am illustrating here is the length of time between the original arrest and the time when the final man was in custody, which accounts almost entirely for the time these men were held incommunicado. They did not ask for attorneys. In the place where they were held there were no bunks, no beds. They lay on the floor. The men were called in a number of times, and finally one of the McNabbs admitted that he had fired the first shot but denied firing the second shot. He stated that the gun had been placed in his hands by one of the others. The court then directed the acquittal of two of the men. The three remaining defendants were convicted of murder in the second degree, and on this they took their appeal to the circuit court of appeals, which upheld the district court. The Supreme Court granted a certiorari, and the case came before that Court.

In my opinion, good law is set forth in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Reed, and I wish to quote from his opinion for a moment:

> Now the Court leaves undecided whether the present confessions are voluntary or involuntary and declares that the confession must be excluded, because, in addition to questioning the petitioners, the arresting officers failed promptly to take them before a committing magistrate.

Here is the nub of the whole case, right here:

> The Court finds a basis for the declaration of this new rule of evidence—

That is what you are confronted with, a new rule of evidence—> in its supervisory authority over the administration of criminal justice. I question whether this offers to the trial courts and the peace officers a rule of admissibility as clear as the test of the voluntary character of the confession.

There you have the whole case: A new rule of evidence.

What has happened? This is what occurred: This bill was prepared by the Attorney General, Hon. Tom Clark, and at his request we have it before us today. The statement was made before our committee that on an average 50 men a day are released, men who have made confessions and then set up the fact that they were not immediately taken before a committing magistrate and given a preliminary hearing and arraigned, with the result that all over the United States hardened criminals are being released. This, therefore, is not permanent legislation.

In an effort to follow the rulings laid down by the English courts on criminal procedure, where the judges have outlined a series of questions which will be addressed to a prisoner, an effort is being made by the American Bar Association in this country, as well as the Attorney General's Department and other organizations similar in character to the American Bar Association, to formulate a set of rules which will govern in cases of arrests of this type. This bill is intended to bridge the gap until that time arrives. That is what we are driving at here. This is merely a temporary emergency measure.

The next thing is that we have a uniform arrest act under consideration. Other bills have been prepared but have not yet been enacted into law.

As a consequence all of these forces are working toward the retention and detention of known criminals until an investigation can be completed.

The reason the Attorney General wants this bill that we are today asking for the enactment of is that crimes are no longer simple matters. You have heard me make this statement before. I have tried 299 murderers in my time. Many of those men, yes, dozens of them, would not have been convicted if we had been compelled to have immediately taken the prisoners before a committing magistrate prior to the time we could run down the other facts and actors entering into the case. The hands of the officers are tied, if the law remains as it is. Some question was raised here today that we were seeking to take from the Supreme Court the power to adjudicate; but the Supreme Court usurped the power and prerogative of the Congress to enact legislation and by judicial interpretation placed a new rule of evidence in effect which has burdened the arresting officers to the point where they are unable to carry on if this remains law. There is the whole matter in a nutshell.

In many of the types of crime we have to deal with today the alibis and the defense have been prepared in advance. I have tried this type many times where even records had been prepared a long while in advance in order to defeat the evidence offered. If this rule is to obtain and retain its force you can almost bid goodby to effective law enforcement in the United States. This matter was up in the Seventy-eighth Congress and it passed the House. It came up in the Seventy-ninth Congress and passed the House and Senate by a very large vote, but in the closing days of the Congress it was lost. It is back here again at the request of the Attorney General.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman made the statement that enforcement of the criminal laws might break down if the rule is continued as indicated by the Supreme Court opinion. The fact is this is only important in cases involving confessions?

Mr. GRAHAM. Correct.

Mr. COOLEY. Did the gentleman mean a moment ago that criminals had been released who had made confessions before being taken before a committing magistrate?

Mr. GRAHAM. I did.

Mr. COOLEY. They certainly would not have been released if the arresting officer had other substitutive evidence which justified the holding of the prisoner?

Mr. GRAHAM. The confession was ruled out.

Mr. COOLEY. Even though the confession may be ruled out, if they had additional evidence which would warrant the holding of the prisoner, he may still be held?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes; he can be held.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman will agree with me that it is not unreasonable to require arresting officers to take prisoners forthwith before a committing magistrate, because that is a constitutional right?

Mr. GRAHAM. Correct.

Mr. COOLEY. It is not the purpose of this legislation to weaken in any degree that constitutional right?

Mr. GRAHAM. Oh, no; rather to strengthen it.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I know the modesty of the gentleman will forbid him saying what I would like to say about the gentleman who is in the well of the House. He himself has been a very distinguished United States attorney and in his lifetime, as I recall, has tried something like 14,000 cases in the courts; is that correct?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is correct. I have handled about 38,000 altogether in all of my capacities as State district attorney, Deputy Attorney General of Pennsylvania, and United States Attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. I believe the gentleman will testify from experience that virtually all confessions are obtained before arraignment?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is correct.

Mr. ELSTON. After an accused has been arraigned and he secures counsel, counsel tells him not to talk and there are very few confessions then?

Mr. GRAHAM. Correct.

Mr. ELSTON. So that if the rule laid down by the Supreme Court is to continue, it will have the effect of virtually wiping out all confessions?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is true.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BRYSON].

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, this is substantially the same bill that has passed the House twice before, and I feel that it is not necessary to extend the discussion of a measure which has had the wholehearted support of this body on two previous occasions. This bill merely would write into law a rule which had been adhered to in our courts throughout our history—until the unfortunate decision of the Supreme Court in the McNabb case.

That decision set free a confessed murderer and established a rule or precedent which subsequently has been used by lower courts in freeing additional confessed criminals. At least two such cases have arisen in the District of Columbia. In one, a man confessed that he had broken into an apartment occupied by three girls and assaulted one of them, inflicting lacerations requiring 11 stitches. But he is now a free man, having been acquitted because of the Supreme Court's decision in the McNabb case. In another case, two men were convicted of housebreaking and larceny—after they had confessed and even reenacted the crime—but a higher court freed them on the basis of the Supreme Court's McNabb decision.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYSON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. In one of those cases I will ask the distinguished gentleman to state if it is not a fact that Judge Pine, of the District Court of the District of Columbia, stated, when he liberated the accused, that it was strictly a miscarriage of justice.

Mr. BRYSON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SPRINGER. And that was on account of the McNabb decision.

Mr. BRYSON. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYSON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Let me ask the gentleman this: In all of these cases that the gentleman is reciting, are we to understand that the law-enforcement officers had no evidence to go on other than these confessions which they had gotten out of these men while they were holding them incommunicado?

Mr. BRYSON. I would not know about the individual cases.

These are flagrant cases of miscarriage of justice, and many others have occurred and many others will occur in the future unless a law is enacted to stop up this technical loophole in the law.

The right of a prisoner to be promptly arraigned is granted him by law and that right should never be denied. When it is denied, those who have failed in carrying out their duty should be punished.

But prompt arraignment is one thing and the admission of evidence is another. Prompt arraignment does not add weight to a voluntary confession and, conversely, the failure to promptly arraign, in itself, cannot by any way of reasoning take any weight away from a confession which has been made freely, voluntarily, and without compulsion or inducement of any sort.

I can see no reasoning by which we can justify the release on society of confessed murderers and other criminals simply on the grounds that a law-enforcement officer was derelict in his duty, or through circumstances beyond his control, was unable to arraign his prisoner forthwith, as required by law.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], the author of the bill.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, the only reason I take any time at all is because I hate to see anyone in this audience cast a vote against this bill because of a misapprehension as to the actual facts. The misunderstanding grows out of the fact that in the McNabb case there were two arraignments, each of them, immediately. The raid of the still was made after midnight. At 8:30 the same morning, before many courts would have been open, those boys were in court and duly arraigned, and they pleaded guilty to the distilling charge. No one then knew who had fired the fatal shot; so no officer who had respect for his oath of office could have sworn that he had reasonable cause for believing and did believe that any particular man or men had committed the murder. So it was not until the next day that they had their first hint as to who pulled the triggers in the graveyard after the postmidnight still raid. Then one boy confessed his part in the killing of Sam Leefer, and implicated two of his brothers. Immediately thereafter these three paragons of virtue were arraigned on the charge of murder in the first degree, and they pleaded guilty.

So there were two arraignments, each of them immediate. But, of course, we at that time had four arraignment statutes. Now, because of the adoption of the uniform rules of procedure in criminal cases promulgated by the Supreme Court of the United States, the only requirement is that arraignment should be made "without unnecessary delay." What we complain of in the McNabb decision is that the Supreme Court states categorically that there was a failure of prompt arraignment, when just the reverse was true. Motion was made by the Solicitor General of the United States for a rehearing, and the sworn evidence and photostatic copy of the original record from a Chattanooga, Tenn., court, shows that this was a mistake, that far from having no prompt arraignment, there were two, and each of them immediate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. If this bill, of which I understand the gentleman from Alabama is the author, passes, may a confession still be held inadmissible if the delay in arraignment is used to force the confession?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes. I would not have any respect for a court that held otherwise. As our distinguished chairman, Mr. MICHENER, has so well said, that has been the law for 150 years. That is my next point. If I have disabused your minds of this type of misrepresentation about the fact of the arraignment, I will pass on to the real milk in the coconut, which is: Thank God the Supreme Court and every other agency of law in this country must bow to the Constitution of the United States! Thank God it is still supreme! The question that you are called upon to answer today, as you have already answered it twice before, is whether or not a decision which promulgates a rule of evidence unheard of before—unneeded for 150 years—shall take precedence over the Constitution of the United States? I quote from the opinion of Mr. Justice Frankfurter, "quite apart from the Constitution" and although "Congress has not explicitly forbidden the use of evidence so procured" the law is laid down by the ipsi dixit of the Court.

Bear in mind that the Solicitor General of the United States, in support of his application for rehearing, had shown indisputably by court records and affidavits that there had been prompt arraignment and commitment. We are simply coming back to the Constitution, which says, as everyone knows, that no man shall "be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself" under any circumstances, at any time. So, we simply say that the time when confession is made is not of the essence. The question is, and still will be, and has been ever since the Wilson case, whether or not the confession was "made freely, voluntarily, and without compulsion or inducement of any sort." If it was, it is admissible, no matter when it was made. If it was not free, then it is inadmissible, and that is all that this bill says in its 33 words—that no evidence that is otherwise admissible shall be rendered inadmissible because of the failure of an officer of the law to do his duty with regard to arraignment within a reasonable time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman has said that time is not of the essence. That being true, was this Congress kidding when on two occasions it said that a defendant shall be arraigned promptly? I take it by this bill you mean that he shall be arrested promptly, but be held several hours incommunicado until a confession is wrung out of him. Is that right?

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir; that is not only not right, but that is an assumption which is absolutely unwarranted not only by the facts of the McNabb case, but by every principle of fair play that should govern you in your debate. When the Committee on the Judiciary of this House, composed of 27 lawyers, men who are familiar with the courts as you are, come here both from the Republican and Democratic side, and recommend this bill for the third time, when this House has passed it twice and is going to pass it again today, and when the Rules Committee unanimously endorses it to you and recommends that the rule be granted, I say it is not a fair argument, with all due respect to the distinguished gentleman, that he should insinuate that any such motivating principle is in this case.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is that not the effect of the law if we pass this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman from New York. My answer is again, most emphatically, "No."

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION. While the law does provide that a prisoner shall be arraigned promptly or immediately or forthwith, there is nothing in the law anywhere or in any decision of our higher courts that I have ever read, except in the McNabb case, that provides that any confession, freely and voluntarily made, is incompetent or inadmissible in evidence.

Mr. HOBBS. The distinguished gentleman, who served so well in the Senate as well as in the House, has spoken the truth again. He is absolutely right, and he could have gone much further. He could have pointed out also that although that requirement was made, it was respected in this case, and although the lack of support in truth of the major premise of the decision was called to the attention of the Supreme Court, the majority denied rehearing, and in the Mitchell case said:

We adhere to that decision—

McNabb against United States—and to the views on which it was based.

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. REDDEN. This question has been passed upon by the Supreme Court of this Nation hundreds of times. I ask the gentleman if this is not the first time it has ever been held that a voluntary confession was not competent in evidence.

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir. That is right.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be so happy to yield to my distinguished chairman.

Mr. GRAHAM. On the question of the element of time, the gentleman will recall, no doubt, the Lisenba case, where the prisoners were held 12 days after questioning, and the Supreme Court upheld that confession.

Mr. HOBBS. Surely. The gentleman speaks truly, of course.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. As a matter of fact, there is no relationship whatever between the making of a confession and arraignment, because if a confession is improperly obtained and it was obtained within 5 minutes after the arrest, it is rejected.

Mr. HOBBS. Of course, sir, that is right.

Mr. ELSTON. And if on the other hand it is properly obtained it does not make any difference whether it was obtained before the arraignment or afterwards; it is admissible.

Mr. HOBBS. That is exactly right. And because a court in Tennessee rises to the majesty which should obtain in every court and says because this record of arraignment would disclose the fact that all three defendants pleaded guilty to murder in the first degree, we will delete that in order that we may be perfectly fair to the defendants, with the consent of the defendant's counsel, is that silence of the record under those circumstances to be taken as proof of no arraignment when just the reverse is true and established?

We have an estimate of 50 self-confessed criminals a day walking out of our courts because of this McNabb decision. They are walking out free men, at least for the time being, by nol pros or reversal, and those who won the general affirmative charge after their trial began are perfectly and permanently freed.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, as author of the bill I would like to have the gentleman answer one question.

Mr. HOBBS. I am always happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina to ask any question he may care to, whether I am the author of the bill or not.

Mr. COOLEY. So that it may be clearly understood, I understand from the gentleman it is not your purpose nor the purpose of this legislation to in any way impair the right that an accused should be taken forthwith before a committing magistrate.

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly not, sir. Not at all. We do not amend any of the arraignment statutes. We insist upon their observance.

My concluding plea is just this, that as you respect your oaths, see to it that the guilty are punished and not the innocent. The guilty men who fail to observe the law of arraignment are just as guilty as any other criminal and should be punished. But those who are punished now are the innocent members of society who see self-confessed criminals walking out, with license given to them by the McNabb decision to go and commit murder, or rape, or any other crime, if they should be smart enough to confess before arraignment.

The chairman of your Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], has recommended and urged that the report of this bill be read. Being in accord with him, I read it into the RECORD:

THE NEED FOR SUCH LEGISLATION

The Supreme Court of the United States handed down a decision in the case of McNabb v. United States (318 U. S. 332), on March 1, 1943. That decision established, without constitutional or legislative authority, a rule of evidence utterly new and variant from the standard set up by the Constitution of the United States in the Bill of Rights. In that part of the Bill of Rights known as the fifth amendment there is the familiar guaranty that no person shall "be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." Since the Bill of Rights became fully ratified as a part of the Constitution on December 15, 1791, this has been recognized as the supreme law of the land on this subject. Such recognition has been accorded by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and prior to the McNabb decision, it had become well settled that the sole test of admissibility of statements made by persons accused of crime while in custody was whether they were "made freely, voluntarily, and without compulsion or inducement of any sort" (Wilson v. United States (1896), 162 U. S. 613, 623; see also Lisenba v. California (1943), 314 U. S. 219, 239).

Whether an individual in custody had or had not been arraigned prior to the obtaining of a confession from him was never before considered a determining factor in considering its admissibility.

For the first time in legal history, in the McNabb case, the Supreme Court used section 595, title 18, of the United States Code as a factor in determining the admissibility of confessions. This section provided that it shall be the duty of the marshal * * * or other officer who may arrest a person charged with any crime or offense, "to take the defendant before the United States commissioner or the nearest judicial officer having jurisdiction under existing laws, for a hearing, commitment, or take bail for trial * * *."

Thus, the Supreme Court has substituted a rule or law of evidence, written and adopted by a majority of the Court, for and instead of the Constitution. The Constitution says that involuntary confessions must not be admitted as evidence in any criminal case. Therefore, by plain implication and on ample authority, voluntary confessions should be admitted as evidence. Yet, in the McNabb case, the Supreme Court says:

"Quite apart from the Constitution, therefore, we are constrained to hold that the evidence elicited from the petitioners in the circumstances disclosed here must be excluded. For in their treatment of the petitioners the arresting officers assumed functions which Congress has explicitly denied them."

The Supreme Court does not say that the confessions of the McNabbs were involuntary, but "quite apart from the Constitution," and although "Congress has not explicitly forbidden the use of evidence so procured," because the arresting officers failed to comply with the requirement that defendants should be promptly arraigned—no matter how voluntary the confessions may have been, no matter that the trial judge, jury, and the Supreme Court of Tennessee had held them to be voluntary, no matter that Congress had not forbidden, and no matter what the Constitution provides—the confessions were inadmissible as evidence.

"Mr. Justice Rutledge took no part in the consideration or decision of this case."

Mr. Justice Reed dissented, as follows:

"I find myself unable to agree with the opinion of the Court in this case. An officer of the United States was killed while in the performance of his duties. From the circumstances detailed in the Court's opinion, there was obvious reason to suspect that the petitioners here were implicated in firing the fatal shot from the dark. The arrests followed. As the guilty parties were known only to the McNabbs who took part in the assault at the burying ground, it was natural and proper that the officers would question them as to their actions.

"The cases just cited show that statements made while under interrogation may be used at the trial if it may fairly be said that the information was given voluntarily. A frank and free confession of crime by the culprit affords testimony of the highest credibility and of a character which may be verified easily. Equally frank responses to officers by innocent people arrested under misapprehension give the best basis for prompt discharge from custody. The realization of the convincing quality of a confession tempts officials to press suspects unduly for such statements. To guard accused persons against the danger of being forced to confess, the law admits confessions of guilt only when they are voluntarily made. While the connotation of voluntary is indefinite, it affords an understandable label under which can be readily classified the various acts of terrorism, promises, trickery, and threats which have led this and other courts to refuse admission as evidence to confessions. The cases cited in the Court's opinion show the broad coverage of this rule of law. Through it those coerced into confession have found a ready defense from injustice.

"Were the Court today saying merely that in its judgment the confessions of the McNabbs were not voluntary, there would be no occasion for this single protest. A notation of dissent would suffice. The opinion, however, does more. Involuntary confessions are not constitutionally admissible because violative of the provision of self-incrimination in the Bill of Rights. Now the Court leaves undecided whether the present confessions are voluntary or involuntary and declares that the confession must be excluded because in addition to questioning the petitioners, the arresting officers failed promptly to take them before a committing magistrate. The Court finds a basis for the declaration of this new rule of evidence in its supervisory authority over the administration of criminal justice. I question whether this offers to the trial courts and the peace officers a rule of admissibility as clear as the test of the voluntary character of the confession. I am opposed to broadening the possibilities of defendants escaping punishment by these more rigorous technical requirements in the administration of justice. If these confessions are otherwise voluntary, civilized standards, in my opinion, are not advanced by setting aside these judgments because of acts of omission which are not shown to have tended toward coercing the admissions.

"Our police officers occasionally overstep legal bounds. This record does not show when the petitioners were taken before a committing magistrate. No point was made of the failure to commit by defendant or counsel. No opportunity was given to the officers to explain. Objection to the introduction of the confession was made only on the ground that it was obtained through coercion. This was determined against the accused both by the Court, when it appraised the fact as to the voluntary character of the confession, preliminarily to determining the legal question of its admissibility, and by the jury. The Court saw and heard witnesses for the prosecution and the defense. The defendants did not take the stand before the jury. The uncontradicted evidence does not require a different conclusion. The officers of the Alcohol Tax Unit should not be disciplined by overturning this conviction."

It is most interesting to note, in connection with the McNabb decision, that no point was made by the defendants nor by their counsel of any failure on the part of the arresting officers to arraign the defendants promptly. The decision is grounded solely upon the assumption indulged by the Court that the petitioners had not been promptly arraigned. The record was silent on this most important point. The petitioners and their counsel did not claim that the petitioners had not been promptly arraigned. The truth is that the petitioners had been promptly arraigned. The prisoners were arrested early Thursday morning on the charge of operating an illicit still. They were properly and promptly arraigned and committed on that charge between 8:30 and 10:30 the same morning. During the raid on the distillery, or shortly thereafter, the murder had been committed in an adjacent cemetery in the darkness of night. No one had been seen, nor apprehended. There was no clue as to the identity of the murderer or murderers. There was a strong suspicion that the McNabbs who had been operating the illicit distillery, or some of them, were also guilty of the murder. However, there was no evidence sufficient to justify a committing magistrate in binding them over on the murder charge. So there was no arraignment on the murder charge until after three of them had confessed; but every question put to any one of the prisoners was put after they had been promptly arraigned, and committed.

Almost immediately after the decision in the McNabb case was handed down, the administration of justice in criminal courts was thrown into confusion because of the McNabb decision, and in case after case defendants were, solely because of the rule promulgated in the McNabb case, freed by orders of the courts nolle prossing, or reversing, or directing verdicts, in pending cases. Many of such cases are cited in the hearings on H. R. 3690, Seventy-eighth Congress, second session, pages 21 (cited by the author of the bill), 31, 32, 33 (cited by the Attorney General), and 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, and 60 (cited by members of the Metropolitan Police Department of Washington).

In one of these cases, Mitchell v. United States, the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia (138 Fed. 2d 426) reversed convictions and upon certiorari granted by the Supreme Court the decision of the court of appeals was reversed by the Supreme Court, April 24, 1944, although the Supreme Court said in part: "We adhere to that decision" (McNabb v. United States), "and to the views on which it was based."

The history of the Mitchell case is bad enough, but that of the Wilborn case is infinitely worse. While the convictions of Mitchell were reversed by the court of appeals, yet this reversal has now been reversed by the Supreme Court, so Mitchell may now be punished. In the Wilborn case, however, Judge Pine is quoted as having stated from the bench in the trial that, although his acquittal would constitute a "miscarriage of justice," nevertheless he must be acquitted because of the Supreme Court's decision in the McNabb case. So, Judge Pine directed a verdict of acquittal, and Wilborn walked out of the court a free man. The Constitution prohibits another trial, because a second trial would constitute double jeopardy, so he is as free and clear as anyone could be. What was his self-confessed crime? About 1 a. m. of March 18, 1943, he broke into the apartment occupied by three girls, where he assaulted one of them, inflicting lacerations requiring 11 stitches, though he did not complete the rape because of the screams of the other girls. He was arrested about 2 a. m. on the same night. About 4 a. m. he confessed. About 5 a. m., in the presence of the arresting officers and his victim, he reenacted the circumstances. About 11:30 of the same day he signed a written confession, and was arraigned about 3 o'clock that afternoon. But the McNabb decision held that no confession could be used as evidence if the self-confessed criminal had not been arraigned promptly, and the judge construed this to mean just that. So, Wilborn, not having been arraigned for several hours after he might have been, was freed by a reluctant jury, because of the court's direction, made solely because of the McNabb decision. Is this only a miscarriage of justice or is it a license to rape?

WHAT H. R. 4 WOULD DO

It would merely nullify the new rule of the McNabb decision.

It would declare that no such policy as that indicated in the McNabb decision underlies the laws Congress passed requiring prompt arraignment.

It would leave the law exactly as it was before the turmoil and confusion caused by the McNabb decision, and wipe out the attempt to bypass and ignore the Bill of Rights, restoring to the full the protective guaranty that no person shall "be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

MERELY A TEMPORARY EMERGENCY MEASURE

The bill H. R. 4 is not designed to be a complete nor permanent solution of the problems involved in arrest, detention, and interrogation of criminal suspects. These problems are many, varied, and important. They cry for adequate remedies—for full, painstaking study and solution.

All of us favor prompt arraignment. Failure to observe the legal requirement thereof should be punished. The punishment, however, should be inflicted upon the guilty—not the innocent. The arresting officers are the guilty when they fail to see to it that prisoners are promptly arraigned. The public—"We, the people"—are the innocent. Yet, under the McNabb decision only the law-abiding, innocent citizens, whose safety is jeopardized by turning self-confessed criminals loose, are punished.

A part of the solution should be the enactment into law of the requirement that all arresting officers be bonded, so that any failure on their part to observe the law would make them not only subject to suit, as they are now, but also able to respond in damages.

THE UNIFORM ARREST ACT

The Uniform Arrest Act, by Hon. Sam B. Warner, is a suggested solution that should have careful study.

The suggestion given by the Attorney General of the United States (see his tesimony in the hearings, pp. 35, 36, and 37) that the arraignment statutes should be made uniform and should have but one requirement as to time, to wit: "within a reasonable time," has been met by the adoption of the Rules of Criminal Procedure for the District Court of the United States, which have now unified the time requirements of several arraignment statutes into one rule requiring all arraignments to be made "without unnecessary delay."

As suggested in the McNabb decision, the English rules for the interrogation of prisoners while in custody prescribed by the judges of the King's Bench should also be studied diligently and constructively with a view to seeing how they may be adapted to the administration of the criminal law in the United States. As so adapted, similar rules should be made by law a part of the solution of this problem.

The bill of rights committee of the American Bar Association, under date of May 15, 1944, has furnished the subcommittee that held the hearings on H. R. 3690 with a splendid brief showing clearly and fully the need for protracted and indefatigable study of this whole problem and for the enactment into law of its proper solution. They very kindly offer the services of this committee in collaboration toward these objectives.

CONCLUSION

Therefore, it is manifest that this bill is but an emergency measure, the sole purpose of which is to stop immediately the wrecking of our law-enforcement machinery resulting from the McNabb decision.

The enactment of this bill would do this and give your Committee on the Judiciary time, without the pressure and penalty of suspended law enforcement, within which to study these delicate and difficult problems, and for the preparation of such a bill as may be then agreed upon.

Indorsement of the Attorney General:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1947.

Hon. EARL C. MICHENER,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is in response to your request for my views concerning the bill (H. R. 4) to safeguard the admission of evidence in certain cases.

This bill would provide simply that the failure to comply with the requirements of law as to the time within which a person under arrest must be brought before a committing officer shall not render inadmissible any evidence otherwise admissible.

Formerly, acts of Congress defined differently the time within which a prisoner must be brought before a committing magistrate. Rule 5 of the Rules of Criminal Procedure of the District Courts of the United States, however, has superseded all statutory provisions on this point and fixes a single standard. That rule provides that the person shall be taken before the nearest available commissioner or other nearby officer empowered to commit persons charged with crime "without unnecessary delay."

It is doubtful whether the full effects of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of McNabb v. United States (318 U. S. 332) have yet been felt. In that case, conviction of the defendants was reversed by the exclusion of a confession obtained on the ground that arresting officers failed promptly to take them before a committing magistrate. Involuntary confessions are inadmissible because in violation of the provision against self-incrimination in the bill of rights. The question as to whether a confession was voluntary or involuntary is always reviewable by the court, and when found to have been involuntary such a confession is properly excluded. In the McNabb case, however, the court did not decide whether the confessions were voluntary or involuntary but declared that the confessions were not admissible because the arresting officers failed promptly to take the accused before a committing magistrate (id. 349).

The decision in this case has arisen to plague and embarrass the prosecution in many instances, although the rule laid down therein was modified somewhat in United States v. Mitchell (322 U. S. 65). Adherence to the rule in the McNabb case by lower courts has resulted in the miscarriage of justice in a number of cases. The ruling in that case has been seized upon to set aside conviction based upon confessions properly obtained, and self-confessed offenders have been discharged as freemen merely because an arresting officer had failed to take the arrested person before a committing magistrate within the time allotted by law.

As an example, your attention is invited to the recent case of Carl Akowlsky v. The United States, decided December 16, 1946, in the United States Court of Appeals, District of Columbia. The facts briefly are as follows: A restaurant in the District of Columbia was broken into early in the morning of March 25, 1944, and a large quantity of whisky was stolen. Four days later, Akowlsky and two others were arrested between 3:30 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The prisoners were taken directly to police headquarters and booked on an open charge. No effort was made to arraign them until about 5 or 5:30 p. m. on the same day, when a telephone call to the United States Commissioner's office was unanswered. Akowlsky was questioned continuously until approximately midnight, when he made an oral confession of the crime which was reduced in writing between 1:45 and 2:45 a. m. of the next morning. The prisoner was then taken to the restaurant where he reenacted the crime. The court, in holding that the detention of the prisoner was illegal and that the incriminating statements were inadmissible as evidence, stated:

"The record discloses a series of occurrences specifically condemned by the Supreme Court. For the evidence shows that in taking the accused parties from the place of arrest to police headquarters both the United States Commissioner's office and the municipal court were bypassed. While we recognize that in many instances the circumstances may dictate that some delay ensues between arrest the commitment amounting to one, two, or many hours, such is not the case here. The Commissioner and several other committing magistrates before whom the accused might have been taken for a hearing had their offices on or near the axis connecting the place of arrest and the place of detention. It is only reasonable to conclude that the parties could have been transported to the office of one of these officials in less time than it took to get to police headquarters. It is furthermore both by law and practice true that application for hearing might have been made to any of these committing magistrates at any hour. It follows that the detention was inexcusable and illegal at the outset."

The purpose of the bill here under consideration is not intended to encourage delay in taking accused persons before committing magistrates, nor does it constitute an attempt to encroach upon the constitutional safeguard against self-incrimination. Enactment of the measure will leave unimpaired the rule that involuntary confessions are inadmissible, and it will detract nothing from the duty of the arresting officer to take the arrested person before the committing magistrate without unnecessary delay. The sole purpose of the bill is to leave voluntary confessions and otherwise admissible evidence unaffected by a failure to observe the requirement of law as to the time within which a person under arrest must be brought before a committing officer.

I have been advised by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this report.

Sincerely yours,

TOM C. CLARK,
Attorney General.

RECENT ILLUSTRATION

The lead editorial that appeared in the Washington Evening Star, in its issue of January 31, 1947, brings us up to date on the long story of ill effects of the McNabb decision rule on the administration of justice almost within sight of the marble palace in which the McNabb decision was handed down:

[From the Washington Star, January 31, 1947]

"M'NABB CASE AGAIN

"The McNabb case continues to hamper law-enforcement authorities in the District of Columbia. Latest of the many repercussions of the Supreme Court's much-debated opinion that prisoners must be arraigned immediately after their arrest has just occurred in district court. Two men who were convicted of housebreaking and larceny have been freed as a result of a ruling by the United States Court of Appeals that even a voluntary reenactment of a crime by a prisoner is of no value unless he was taken before a magistrate as soon as arrested.

"The new ruling was made in the case of Carl Akowlsky, who, with another man, was arrested about 4 p. m. on March 29, 1944, by police investigating the theft of a large quantity of whisky from a restaurant in southeast Washington. The men were taken direct to police headquarters and booked on an open charge. Police began to question the prisoners. About 5 or 5:30 p. m. the arresting officers telephoned the United States Commissioner's office, but received no answer to their ring. The questioning continued until about midnight, when, the court stated, Akowlsky made an oral confession to the robbery. This confession was reduced to writing and was agreed to by the second defendant.

"The court of appeals, in its decision, related that subsequent to the confession, the pair was taken to the restaurant, where they described to the police officers and the proprietor 'how they had entered the premises and pointed out correctly the place from which the whisky had been taken.' On the basis of the confession and the reenactment of the crime Akowlsky was convicted in district court. He appealed the verdict on the ground that the McNabb case ruled out not only the confession but the demonstration, since police had failed to arraign him before starting the questioning.

"What makes the latest interpretation of the McNabb ruling particularly disturbing to the police is the implicit contention of the appellate court that the officers should have taken the prisoners direct from the scene of arrest to the Commissioner's office or the municipal court, instead of to police headquarters. Under this theory police would have no opportunity to develop their evidence, check alibis, etc., before taking a prisoner before the magistrate to be charged. This restriction gravely hampers the police in carrying out their responsibilities to the public and gives the prisoner extraordinary advantage over the law-enforcement officer. There are times when the prompt arrest of a criminal known to be dangerous is essential to protect the public, yet it would be impracticable to arraign him without some measure of preliminary investigation.

"This is additional evidence of the need for enactment of the Hobbs bill, which would authorize the questioning of prisoners prior to arraignment and thus end the multiplying absurdities of the McNabb decision The bill has passed the House twice, but failed of enactment in the rush of closing Senate business. Congress will render an invaluable service to the cause of law enforcement by passing this important measure."

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, this proposed legislation has been very carefully explained. I do not think there is very much that has not yet been covered. All of us know, who have read the McNabb decision (318 U. S. 332) and who have gone through the bills and reports that heretofore have been presented to the House, all of which have passed the House, and I am certain you are entirely familiar with this situation. This is the third time this question has been presented to the House of Representatives and it is my hope that it will pass this body the third time when we vote upon it today.

Under the McNabb decision, and practically everyone is familiar with it at this time, the Court attempted by that decision to announce a new rule of evidence as to the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases under the fifth amendment of the Bill of Rights. All of us recall the provision contained therein which provides that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to become a witness against himself. That has become positive law in this country, and in interpreting how far we can go it has been the law, and it has been decided repeatedly, and there has been no decision to the contrary until the McNabb decision, that when an admission or a confession is "voluntarily made without compulsion or coercion, and without inducement," then that admission or confession could be used in evidence against the accused person. That has been the law throughout the years, and I am happy to know that my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma, recognizes and approves that as being the law.

But on the other hand, confessions and admissions which are involuntarily given—and it does not make any difference when the man was arraigned insofar as that confession is concerned—if it was involuntary then it does not make any difference when he makes the confession, whether it was before the arraignment or after the arraignment—that type of confession is not admissible and the courts will not permit that evidence to be admitted in the trial of a case. On the other hand, where the confession or admission is "voluntarily made," and the person has been advised regarding his rights as provided by law, and there has been no compulsion, coercion, or restraint of any kind asserted, then that confession likewise is admissible under the law regardless of when it is made. That has been the law throughout the years until this decision in the McNabb case.

The turning point in the McNabb case—and I was surprised when I read from that decision, and read from that part of the opinion which was written by Justice Frankfurter in which he says:

Quite apart from the Constitution, therefore, we are constrained to hold—

In other words, he goes so far as to say that regardless of the Constitution or the provisions of the Constitution—and we might say regardless of the decisions of the court of the several States, and the Supreme Court of the United States up to that time, they held contrary to the established rule, and the McNabb decision is predicated upon "the time when the confession is made" and as to whether there had been an arraignment at that time or whether there had been no arraignment. But in this particular case, as my distinguished colleague and friend from Alabama has stated, there had been an arraignment. This is confirmed by the decision of the circuit court of appeals which reviewed the decision of the district court, and that was brought forcibly to the attention of the Supreme Court of the United States. Regardless of the fact there had been an arraignment, and the court found there had been an arraignment and that the confessions made were absolutely voluntary, and thus coming wholly within the law, this anomalous decision is announced by that Court wherein it holds that the confessions made were inadmissible. This holding by the Supreme Court operated to liberate the murderers of one of our Federal agents who was attempting to arrest those who were engaged in the operation of an illicit still.

Let us reflect upon the results that have flowed from this decision in the McNabb case. There have been many cases, some of them in the District of Columbia—the Mitchell case is one—in which there has been an absolute miscarriage of justice. I want to call your attention to another case, the Wilborn case, which is one of the most notorious and vicious cases that has been called to my attention. In that case Justice Pine was forced to liberate a man who had admitted the commission of attempted rape where by his own admission he entered an apartment where three young girls were living, at an unusual hour in the nighttime; the accused was frightened away before he completed his criminal act; however a doctor was compelled to take 11 stitches to close up the wounds and lascerations he had inflicted upon one of these young ladies. Justice Pine said, "Although under the McNabb decision I am forced to dismiss this case, it is certainly a miscarriage of justice."

Throughout the country in various courts this decision in the McNabb case has operated to liberate and free criminals. As I recall the statistics which we have received, they show that at least 50 confessed criminals have been set free each day since the McNabb decision, and by reason of the new and novel rule promulgated by that unusual decision on the question of the admissibility of confessions in the trial of criminal cases.

Mr. Chairman, I hope when this vote comes that every Member of the House will stand up and take his position on this question. I hope the Constitution of the United States of America will be fully respected. I hope that all of us, as God-fearing men and as law-abiding citizens, will stand by the law as it has been written, as we have known it, and as it has been construed, and as it has been followed throughout the years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, it gives me no pleasure this afternoon, the first time I appear on this floor to make a talk, to be arrayed against all the distinguished gentlemen who compose the Judiciary Committee. I realize my disadvantage right there. I have the highest regard for all of them. I know that in their minds they are motivated by high motives; but I do not want to sit idly by this afternoon and vote on this thing without expressing my views.

Our Constitution, and the succeeding Congresses of this country, has always been very zealous in safeguarding the interests of the individuals of this country. Let us not make any mistake about what this McNabb case is all about. You know as well as I do that the reason the decision was handed down over there was to get away from the third degree in this country. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania "let the cat out of the bag" a minute ago when he said, "Why you know that a district attorney cannot get a confession out of a man after he has been advised by counsel." There is the nub of this thing.

Do you know that there was a case—I think it was Zerbst against Johnson—which held that every individual shall have the right to counsel at every stage of the proceeding. I do not know the McNabb boys; I do not know anything about them, or any of these other cases that you have cited. But I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania was eminently correct in his statement. Of course he was. When they take them and hold them for 12, 14, and 16 hours they come up with their confessions. If they promptly arraign them, as the Congress of these United States said that they should on two occasions, and as the Supreme Court said, they should have the right of counsel at every stage of the proceedings, they might not get that confession.

They say that our American law enforcement will break if the McNabb case stands. I submit to you that I do not believe for one minute that the Federal Bureau of Investigation or the Department of Justice over there under Tom Clark, with their fine body of law-enforcement officers, are going to let the criminals take over this country just because the McNabb decision stands.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. Does a prisoner remain in charge of the FBI after he is arraigned? As a matter of fact, after his arraignment the FBI has nothing more to do with him and therefore under the gentleman's argument, if it were to prevail, the FBI could never get a confession from any criminal, and their hands certainly would be tied.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. In answer to that let me say this: They are talking about criminals being let go because they cannot convict them as long as the McNabb case stands. All right. In these cases that they are talking about all they have had to go on is the confession which they got out of them before they arraigned them. But all I know is this, that the enforcement officers should go out and get their confessions instead of holding them incommunicado in the Federal building and holding them 12, 14, and 16 hours. All of you who have practiced law know these things. You know what they do. You have had them come to you, parents of people being held, and you go to the district attorney's office to question them and you find locked doors and you cannot get in there and question them, and finally out comes the district attorney or the alcohol tax officers, and they will open the door and they will say, "Mr. Attorney, you can come in now; we have gotten a confession."

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Is the gentleman aware that the Attorney General has recommended that this bill pass?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; I am aware of that, and I heard about it a minute ago. I will say this to you: You know what he is up against. In one or two of these cases some of his agents have not been able to get their evidence, and as long as the McNabb case prevails they cannot take them down somewhere—I am not saying this now against Tom Clark's boys, but I am saying it against some of the police officers of this country—as long as they cannot get them down in those rooms and "sweat them out under the white lights," they cannot get a confession. But I say to you that the American system of government was not founded on that practice, that the only way we are going to get justice in this country is by outlawing the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. We have this situation before us. We have two sections of our United States Code—18 U. S. C. 595 and 5 U. S. C. 300a—which says that when a man is arrested he should be taken before a committing magistrate, and that without too much delay or within a reasonable time. One thing we are trying to get around here today is this: As long as the McNabb case stands you are going to get prompt arraignments in this country. You pass this law here today and it will vitiate the McNabb decision; it is going to open the gates, and you are going to give the law-enforcement officers of this country a "blank check" to start their own third-degree methods, a thing we have not had for the past 3 years. This is not a simple bill; it looks simple. It is one of the most simple I have seen on the floor. But, you know you almost do not see it when you sit there, it is so inoccuous, so innocent. But do you think the United States Court wrote that decision over there for fun? They were trying to back up two sections of the law in this country that this Congress had passed in previous sessions.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I do not recall in my experience in the Congress or in the practice of law a matter as clear as this. Here some officials went out into the hills of Tennessee to arrest some fellows for moonshining. Then one of the moonshiners concealed in a graveyard in the darkness of the night fired upon a Federal officer and this faithful officer had no chance to defend himself. So you have moonshining and murder. These defendants then were taken before the proper officials and plead guilty to murder and to moonshining.

You read this record from one end to the other and there is no intimation that there was any coercion or force used in securing these confessions. If there ever was a confession proved to be voluntary and free from oppression, it was these confessions.

It grieves me very much to see the highest court in the land work around the Constitution, not uphold it, and establish a new rule of evidence that permitted these self-confessed moonshiners and murderers to go unwhipped of justice.

It does not mean the return of the third degree if you pass this bill. It means we return to the Constitution and the rule of evidence that has always prevailed in this country for 150 years until the McNabb case.

One of the justices writing a dissenting opinion declared that this undertakes to establish a new rule, and a vicious rule. Is it a vicious rule? Yes; any rule is a vicious rule in any court that permits moonshiners to add to their crime by killing an officer of the United States, and permit such men to go unwhipped of justice in this country.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. Not only has this rule of law prevailed ever since the adoption of the Constitution, it is a common-law rule which has prevailed for hundreds of years, even before we adopted the Constitution.

Mr. ROBSION. My able lawyer friend from Ohio is absolutely right.

This is a very short bill. All it provides is:

That failure to observe the requirement of law as to the time within which a person under arrest must be brought before a committing officer shall not render inadmissible any evidence otherwise admissible.

There is no third degree about that. It takes away no legal right of those charged or guilty of crime. It merely makes a voluntary confession admissible as evidence whether it was made by defendants before or after he is arraigned. The confessions in this case were voluntary and absolutely free of coercion. Neither the defendants nor their attorneys when these cases were tried made any such claim.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I am sure the gentleman is more familiar with the proceedings of that trial than I am because it has been some time since I have read it or taken any notice of it. Does the record show that they had offered other evidence or did they try to offer this without any supporting evidence?

Mr. ROBSION. Of course, there were circumstances and other supporting facts in the case. Yes, there was other evidence.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. There was positive evidence?

Mr. ROBSION. Of course there was other competent evidence.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. They had proof of the corpus delicti?

Mr. ROBSION. I do not know all the evidence that they had, but there was plenty. The jury convicted them and this was upheld by the court of appeals. But this is the point that disturbs me very much. It is most interesting to note that neither the defendants nor their counsel in the lower court claimed that these confessions were obtained by coercion, under duress. compulsion or third degree. The question was not raised. They appeared before the proper officers and pleaded guilty on both charges when arraigned. They made a confession which was enlarged later on by them, giving full details. I do not understand how the majority of our Supreme Court could say that any of the constitutional or legal rights of these defendants had been denied.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. I yield.

Mr. FOLGER. Would the gentleman suggest why, in his opinion, the Congress enacted the requirement that a speedy arraignment should be had and that the officers should produce the defendants before a committing magistrate or commissioner?

Mr. ROBSION. Perhaps you have in your mind that there was not an immediate arraignment. There was such an arraignment in both cases.

Mr. FOLGER. No; I am asking you why the Congress did that. Was it to protect a man, not McNabb particularly, but any man who is accused of a crime against the third-degree practices before being arraigned?

Mr. ROBSION. There is not the slightest hint in the record of the trial court of third degree. That has to do with the question of being taken before a committing magistrate or other proper officer for arraignment. But I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is no statute anywhere passed by Congress which says or even squints toward the proposition that a confession taken before arraignment or after arraignment, as long as it is free and voluntary, is not competent evidence. That is all this bill says. This bill means, if a confession is made at any time, voluntarily, before arraignment or after arraignment, the court can consider it as competent evidence. This bill does not disturb in the slightest the proposition that persons must be taken promptly and forthwith for arraignment. It means that a confession voluntarily made and free from coercion can be considered by the court and jury whenever made. That is the law now. Suppose an officer walks up to a fellow just after he has committed a crime and, of course, has not been yet arraigned, and the fellow says, "I committed the murder. I shot the man." According to the argument of some Members here this afternoon, that confession, although voluntary, could not be given in court. He could not be convicted under the McNabb ruling. One of the greatest shocks our law-enforcement officials ever received was the McNabb decision, and if we are going to hamper our public enforcement officers in that way and let them be killed and then turn the defendants loose on the public after they have voluntarily, freely, and without coercion confessed, then we might as well burn our courthouses and let the lawless element take the country.

Mr. Justice Reed stated in his dissenting opinion the Court declared a new rule. Congress did not do this. The Supreme Court and other courts are given too much to making laws. They can only interpret them. Now it is necessary to enact this bill to get our highest Court back to the Constitution.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] such time as he may desire.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

GREENLAND, ICELAND, AND THE PACIFIC AND CARIBBEAN ISLANDS

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, as I pointed out earlier in the day, I am today introducing resolutions which, if adopted by the Congress, will authorize the President to extend to Iceland in the name of the Congress and the American people, an invitation to become a State in the American Union; to open negotiations with Denmark for the purchase of Greenland; to open negotiations with Great Britain, France, and such other countries that may be involved for the purchase of all islands off the coast of continental United States, in the Caribbean Sea and Pacific Ocean that may be deemed essential to the defense of the United States, the Panama Canal Zone, and the Philippine Islands.

Further, my resolutions would direct negotiations looking toward the acquisition of all of the islands mandated to or owned by the Empire of Japan as the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War shall find essential to the maintenance of peace in the Pacific Ocean areas, an obligation which, by unwelcome circumstances, has become the prime responsibility of the United States.

But a hasty review of the public prints reveals that the time has arrived for affirmative action if American rights and responsibilities are to be respected and observed.

With Russia extending herself in all directions, and England and France clinging tenaciously to their respective empires—in the interest of their defense, they assert—are we to stand idly by as they divide amongst themselves all of the fruits of our joint sacrifices?

First, we receive the disquieting news that Russia is demanding that she be consulted in the administration of all international settlements regardless of what world areas might be affected; that the Dardanelles be placed in her trusteeship, that she be permitted to establish bases in the Spitzbergen Islands and weather stations in Iceland, and, presumably, in Greenland, too. Further revealing her interest in world areas into which she has never heretofore sought to intrude herself, it is said that she has occupied certain Danish islands in the Skagerrack and Kattegat and is demanding that the Kurile and other strategic islands be turned over to her as prizes of war, even though she did not contribute anything to their redemption.

As Russia prepares to expand herself all over the world, France and England tighten their grip upon their outlying possessions, their colonies and protectorates, all of which were saved to them by American arms, American valor, American sacrifice in lives, in materials, in resources, in money, all these beyond evaluation.

And as they cling to what they have and grasp for more and more, America, altruist in the extreme, stands calmly by, too proud to claim its just entitlements, too noble to insist on even a fraction of that which a grateful world of a few months ago would have lavished upon us with a generous hand—if we had but made our wishes known. That was when their vast holdings, their world position, their very existence, hung in the balance.

Now that the victory for which we strove with all our heart has been achieved, those who represent us in international councils, those in the palms of whose hands our destiny rests, seem to be impressed not at all with the bitter struggle for real estate, for military bases, for strategic placements, for control of the crossroads of the world that is going on among the other powers all over the world.

If we do not make our demands known before the last flicker of gratitude among our erstwhile allies dies out, we will be soon awakened from our idealistic dreams of a world of brotherly love to learn that we will have achieved in these days following the close of World War II the same unhappy position that it was ours to occupy after the smoke of the battles of World War I had cleared away.

As a specter of a World War III begins to take form, others look to their defenses while America treats only of the intangible things of the irrepressible spirit.

Are we, as war clouds lower, to again ask nothing in return for our sacrifice in two great wars; are we to profit not at all from the lessons learned at such a cost?

Are we, as Admiral King has stated, to be forever "fighting and building and winning and giving away—only to fight and build and win and give away again?"

Are our resources so great, our wealth so fabulous, the lives of our people so cheap, that we can go on generation after generation dissipating our resources, squandering our money in billions, sacrificing the lives of our youth in millions, all this in utter disregard of the practicalities that govern the thinking and control the activities of all of the other nations on this earth?

America must give thought to the ramparts we watch, not merely to the ramparts we once watched. It is time that we give some consideration to the ever avaricious outside world, to the problems that living with them present. Let us think of the future.

The adoption of my resolutions will make clear to the President, his administration, to the world, that America has a policy for an enduring peace, for the future as well as for the present, and that it is one that is based upon the open-eyed recognition of the responsibilities that have become ours. America is not only interested in the peace of the moment, but in its security in the future as well.

The islands of England and France off our coasts and in the Caribbean mean nothing to the defense of Europe; but they mean much to the defense of America should we become embroiled in another world conflict—and we should have them.

The islands of the Pacific mean nothing to the defense of the great Eurasian powers; but to America, upon which rests the burden of the maintenance of the peace in the Pacific, they mean everything—and America should have them.

Iceland and Greenland lie on the line of march of any marauding empire that might be bent on world conquest. In the face of an onslaught, Iceland would, standing by itself, be helpless. In any world war that might involve us they are indispensable to our and its defense. Their strategic value cannot longer be ignored.

Icelanders and Americans alike cannot fail to perceive the necessity of a partnership arrangement in mutual defense.

We have much to offer to Iceland—military protection of its homeland, dignity and freedom for its citizens, development of its harbors and natural resources, access to the best market in the world for its products.

By accepting American citizenship and statehood under our Constitution, self-government would be guaranteed to them in all matters essentially affecting home rule. By giving up only that which they are quite unable to successfully administer themselves in times of stress, they would acquire under the Constitution of the United States elements of freedom which they have never dared to lay claim to heretofore.

As a citizen of the United States and of the Republic of Iceland, an Icelander would acquire and hold in common with all other American citizens the personal protection of our Bill of Rights, the greatest guaranty of personal liberty and individual freedom ever achieved by mankind anywhere on this earth. In addition to these would come the blessings and security of our Federal system, a method of self-government which today commends the respect and admiration of the entire world.

When the Icelandic and American flags fly side by side then indeed, will tyrants tremble, dictators despair, freedom-loving people rejoice everywhere, for, as a consequence of the union of these two great peoples, one of the greatest temptations to would-be world conquerors to aggress against the weak people of the world will have been removed from their considerations.

But back and behind all these considerations lies, as it must lie, not only the military security of continental United States—our homeland—and of those who will aline themselves with us but the financial integrity of our country as well.

We were too proud to accept any of the spoils of victory of the war of 1917–19 as our allies and associated powers scrambled for and grabbed everything in sight. When the smoke of battle had cleared away—and a few years had rolled by—not only did good, old, kindly Uncle Sam find himself empty-handed but that his pals of World War I had, calling it by the high-sounding name of "loans," picked his pockets of billions of dollars, very little of which has ever been repaid.

That must not be permitted to happen again. As a means of preventing it, I arise to propose not loans, nor gifts, nor lend-lease, all discredited and unreal, but real-estate deals, transactions that will not be hanging fire for generations, causing, perhaps, unpleasant international controversies in the distant future but which shall be fully completed here and now, as the consideration passes.

What all this boils down to is that the time has come for the United States to claim something in return for the American dollars credits we are extending to more than a score of nations. Britain, Russia, China, and France, for example, are asking for—and some of them have already received—huge postwar loans to rebuild their devastated countrysides and with which to rehabilitate themselves industrially.

But since our experience in the past is that loans of this character are never repaid, another way of insuring ourselves against loss must be found. Extending loan credits which immediately become gifts is a poor way of protecting the American taxpayers' money.

Instead of again extending dollar credits and calling them loans when we know they will turn out to be gifts, why not make the transactions one for the purchase and sale of real estate at the very outset.

Why not acquire these strategic islands, islands of small value to the sellers but of the greatest importance to the defense of America and the performance of our part of the responsibility of maintaining the peace of the world.

This strikes me as common sense, and something which most Americans can agree on.

While Russia and Britain and other countries are everywhere extending themselves, are we going to be caught in the same old song and dance that followed World War I—namely, giving our money away and getting nothing in return?

These vast extension of credits—or loans or whatever they may be called—will not come back to us. In fact, they could only come back to us in one of two ways: either in the form of manufactured goods or raw materials of which we will have a surplus of our own, or in the form of gold, of which we already have a vast useless hoard stored, for want of a better place, under the ground in old Kentucky.

That means that—to be perfectly frank—it would be folly for us to permit the loans to be repaid even if the borrowers were able to satisfy their indebtedness, for the importation of billions of dollars of manufactured goods would only glut our market, close our factories and render millions of our fellow citizens jobless and an importation of billions of dollars in gold—which Russia, for example, can mine at $6 an ounce and which we would have to accept at $35 an ounce or go off the gold standard—would only mean more unwanted metal to store in the hills of Kentucky.

The time has come for us to face this issue realistically. It is about time we in the United States talked in the same realistic terms as those in Russia and France and Britain. There is only one thing we can get in return for our loans—that is, only one thing of real, practical value to us—and that is real estate. If we get that and nothing else, our millions, yes, our billions, would not be wasted.

Is there anybody who contends that the islands off our coasts, those owned by England and France, for example, are necessary to the defense of Europe? That is nonsense. There is no military or naval or air factor into which they could possibly be fitted.

If, by an unfortunate turn of events, our present-day allies should become our enemies of the future—as Japan and Italy became after fighting loyally at our side in World War I—these outlying possessions would become a distinct menace to our national security in their hands.

On the other hand, they are necessary to the defense of the United States. They are within a few hundred miles of us. They are outlying bastions of our continent. They should be and of right ought to be territory of the United States.

As for Iceland and Greenland, these are natural parts of our political and economic world. The Republic of Iceland, the people and Government of Greenland would sacrifice none of their liberties under our Constitution, and their citizens would enjoy the protection of our Bill of Rights. And in time of war they would have the protection of the most powerful nation on earth.

The future is before us. We can bungle it or profit by it. We can go on, as Admiral King once said, "fighting and building and giving away" or we can make our position, in a military and political sense, so impregnable in the world that our natural and innate altruism, our passionate and determined will for peace, will command a respect and wield an influence for permanent peace that will be lasting.

The choice is ours. Have we not the courage to make it, to declare the policy of the American people?

The State Department has been weak and vacillating to the point of timidity in respect to the questions now under discussion, fearing, it would seem, to offend a more aggressive power of the Eurasian continent, oblivious, if I mistake not, to the hopes and aspirations of the American people.

Is this not an appropriate time for the American people to declare themselves through their chosen representatives in this Congress assembled? Is it not high time that an American policy be laid down to the world that none will misunderstand?

Mr. Chairman, the adoption of my resolutions will accomplish no less than that.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, the resolution, House Resolution No. 4, reported to this House by the Judiciary Committee, provides that:

> Failure to observe the requirement of law as to the time within which a person under arrest must be brought before a committing officer shall not render inadmissible any evidence otherwise admissible.

The purpose of this measure is to restore the rule of law in force in this country for more than 150 years until it was stricken down and set aside by a majority opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States handed down in the case of McNabb v. United States (318 U. S., p. 332), on March 1, 1943. The rule of law set aside by the Supreme Court in this decision is this:

> Confessions of guilt by persons accused of crime while in custody of officers of the law made freely, voluntarily, and without compulsion or inducement of any sort are admissible in evidence against such persons on their trial for said offense. (Wilson v. U. S., decided 1896 by the Supreme Court of the United States, 162 U. S., pp. 613, 623; Lisenba v. California, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, 1943, 314 U. S., pp. 219, 239).

In the McNabb case five of the McNabbs were tried in the United States district court at Chattanooga, Tenn., on the charge of having shot and murdered from ambush a Federal officer named Leeper, who at the time, was in the discharge of his duty on the night of July 31, 1940. The twin brothers, Freeman and Raymond McNabb, and their cousin, Benjamin McNabb, were convicted by the jury and sentenced by the judge to a term of imprisonment for 45 years. This conviction of second degree murder was sustained by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

The Supreme Court of the United States granted the petition of these three McNabbs for certiorari and in an opinion by Mr. Justice Frankfurter the conviction of these three defendants was reversed and sent back to the United States district court for a new trial. The Supreme Court did not base its reversal of the case on the ground that the defendants' confessions were not freely and voluntarily made, it did not base its reversal of the case on the ground that these confessions were made as the result of compulsion or inducement of any sort. It did not put its opinion on the ground that any constitutional right of the defendants had been violated. It did not reverse the conviction on the ground that it was acting in obedience to any Federal statute requiring the exclusion of the confession of these defendants on the ground that the officers who arrested them did not take the defendants promptly before a committing magistrate. The Supreme Court did not find as a fact that the confessions of the defendants were not voluntary, and I now quote the exact language of the Supreme Court:

> Now the Court leaves undecided whether the present confessions are voluntary or involuntary and decrees that the confessions must be excluded because in addition to questioning the petitioners, the arresting officers failed promptly to take them before a committing magistrate. The Court finds a basis for the declaration of this new rule of evidence in its supervisory authority over the administration of criminal justice.

The language I have just quoted is the language of Mr. Justice Reed, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in setting forth the ground on which the majority of the Court reversed the conviction of these defendants who had murdered in the nighttime an officer of the Alcohol Tax Unit of the Bureau of Internal Revenue engaged in the performance of his official duties. The majority opinion of the Supreme Court in this case is judicial legislation.

The Congress of the United States had, prior to the commission of this murder, passed an act that provided:

> It shall be the duty of the marshal, his deputy, or other officer who may arrest a person charged with any crime or offense, to take the defendant before the nearest United States clerk or the nearest judicial official having jurisdiction under existing laws for a hearing, commitment, or take bail for crime.

But Congress never provided in any of the laws for the taking of a person charged with crime immediately before a committing officer after his arrest, that the failure of the arresting officer to promptly, forthwith, or immediately take the prisoner before a committing magistrate should render inadmissible in evidence against the accused a confession made by such accused person.

As a result of this decision of the Supreme Court in the McNabb case, when the McNabbs were tried the second time on the charge of killing the officer, Leeper, from ambush, their confessions, of course, were not admitted in evidence against them, and they escaped with a light sentence for the lack of positive evidence that they fired the shots which killed Leeper and wounded one of his associate officers.

These McNabbs lived some 12 miles from Chattanooga and were notorious moonshiners.

On the afternoon of Wednesday, July 31, 1940, information was received by the officers of the Chattanooga Alcoholic Tax Unit that these defendants were planning to sell whisky that night on which Federal taxes had not been paid. The officers made plans to arrest the McNabbs while they were actually engaged in their illegal sale of this untaxed whisky. That night four United States revenue officers, accompanied by the Government's informers, drove to the McNabb settlement. When they approached the place where the sale of whisky was to be made, the officers got out of the car; the informers drove on and met five of the McNabbs, three brothers and two of their cousins. The five McNabbs and the informers proceeded to a spot near the McNabb cemetery where the liquor was hidden. While cans containing whisky were being loaded into the car, one of the informers flashed a prearranged signal to the officers, who thereupon ran toward the McNabbs. One of the officers called out, "All right, boys; Federal officers." The McNabbs took flight.

The officers then began to empty the whisky from the cans. The officers heard noises coming from the direction of the cemetery. Shortly a large rock landed at their feet. The officer, Leeper, ran into the cemetery. Looking about with his flashlight, he discovered no one; but noticing a couple of whisky cans, he began to pour out their contents. The other officers, upon hearing a shot, ran into the cemetery, where they found Leeper on the ground, fatally wounded. A few minutes later, about 10 o'clock, he died, without having identified his assailant. A second shot slightly wounded another officer.

Three or four hours later Federal officers went to the home of Freeman, Raymond, and Emuil McNabb and arrested them. Benjamin McNabb came to the office of the Federal officers in Chattanooga on the following morning and voluntarily surrendered.

Mr. Justice Frankfurter in his opinion stressed the fact that these defendants who were convicted for the murder of Leeper had lived in the settlement all their lives, had not gone beyond the fourth grade in school; and that two of them had not been farther from home than Jasper, the county seat of Marion County, although they lived within 12 miles of a city of 200,000 population, Chattanooga, and had frequently been there.

This allusion of the Supreme Court to the extent of the travels of the defendants and their lack of a high school or a college degree introduces a new element of defense on behalf of those charged with crime. There is no pretense and no ground for assuming that these defendants did not know the nature of their act and that the act was wrong.

They were sufficiently skilled in the way of the world to know that it was against the law to manufacture and sell untaxed whisky. The fact that they had it hidden close to the family graveyard and that they made the sale in the night time; and they they were armed and that they were desperate and lawless enough in their resentment at having been detected and seeing their merchandise poured out on the ground, they shot and killed the officer, Leeper, and wounded one of his associates and fled, is conclusive in the light of their voluntary confessions that they had deliberately embraced and were following a lawless occupation and were prepared to take human life in the prosecution of it.

When the admissibility of the confessions of these defendants came before the trial court, as was proper, the trial judge sent the jury out of the court room and heard the testimony of the defendants and the officers to whom they confessed. Upon this full hearing of the officers who testified to the confessions and upon the testimony of the defendants, the court decided that the confessions were admissible; that they were freely and voluntarily made by the defendants and without compulsion or inducements of any sort. The jury was then called back into the court room and the officers were permitted to testify not only to the confessions but to the fact that they saw these men up there that night. These defendants were there at the place where the whisky was being delivered. They were there where the murder was committed. Under the facts of the case they were the only persons there except the informers and the Federal officers. These defendants were the only persons who had an opportunity to commit the murder. They were the only persons who had a motive to commit the murder.

These defendants did not take the witness stand upon the trial of the case, upon their trial for murder with which they were charged and which they had confessed.

And there can be just one reason why they did not take the witness stand. While their failure to testify in their own defense before the jury could not be alluded to in argument by the Government attorneys, yet we all know as lawyers and as men of common sense that the only reason of these defendants, especially where there were three of them, for not taking the witness stand is the fact that they were guilty. Their guilt was so thoroughly established by their confessions that they knew, and their lawyers must have known, that it would not do them any good to take the witness stand. And, of course, nobody in his right senses expects a criminal lawyer undertaking to do the best he can for his guilty clients to in any way aid the prosecution in establishing their guilt.

In reversing the conviction of these defendants the Supreme Court did not place its action upon any Federal statute forbidding the admission of the confessions of the defendants. It did not place its action upon any constitutional ground nor upon any question made in the trial court or in the United States circuit court of appeals, but upon the ground that "the Court finds a basis for the declaration of this rule of evidence in its supervisory authority over the administration of criminal justice."

The Supreme Court did not base its reversal of the conviction of these defendants upon the Constitution, because no constitutional question was involved. It did not base it upon any prior decisions of the Court nor upon any statute. Its decision is an innovation of the law.

No court had ever before held that when it had been determined in the trial court that a confession was voluntarily and freely given without coercion or constraint that such a confession was not admissible in evidence.

Not only this but out of that abundant precaution which the law cherishes for the person accused of crime the trial court submitted to the jury the question of whether their confessions were freely and voluntarily made.

What has been the result of this holding of the Supreme Court of the United States in the McNabb case?

Under this decision hundreds of men guilty of murder, burglary, robbery, and rape have gone scot free. A reading of the opinion of Mr. Justice Frankfurter in this case makes inescapable the conclusion that this holding discloses but little concern for the protection of officers charged with enforcement of the law and less for the lives, persons, and protection of the victims of the horde of criminals who both by day and night wage relentless warfare against the decent people of this country.

By this decision a band of outlaws went virtually free for a cowardly and brutal murder. This decision withdraws the protection of the law from officers who are sworn to enforce it. It withdraws the protection of the law from the victims of burglaries, robberies, assassinations, and rape, and extends the protection of the law to those who commit these burglaries, robberies, murders, and rapes.

The Congress never intended that if an arresting officer failed to take promptly his prisoner before a magistrate for arraignment that a voluntary confession made by the prisoner should be inadmissible in evidence against him.

To establish the facts upon which the crime may be punished is of primary importance. In the first place, there would be no arrest if robbery, burglary, rape, or murder had not been committed. When such a crime has been attempted or committed, and a suspect has been arrested the task of the officers is to establish the facts, make a speedy investigation, before the evidence is lost or destroyed. This is all-important in the effort of the law-enforcement officers to bring the criminal to a speedy trial and to make certain his conviction.

Those who commit crimes often have confederates. They may be members of a criminal gang. If, instead of making an investigation of the facts in an effort to establish the guilt of the criminal, he is rushed to a criminal lawyer before he can be questioned, the criminal lawyer may tell the criminal to keep his mouth shut, the evidence may be destroyed.

The person robbed, the helpless victim of a rape, or a murder has no warning that he or she is to suffer at the hands of a criminal. In most instances such victim has no one to assist him or her. Mr. Justice Frankfurter apparently proceeded upon the theory in his opinion that the law is more concerned for the criminal than for his victim; for his escape rather than for his punishment. This opinion strikes a blow for crime unprecedented in our history.

Why do men voluntarily confess? There is but one reason for such a confession and that is an overwhelming sense of guilt on the part of the criminal.

Crimes are planned by their perpetrators. The victim has no chance to plan a defense. The victim has no advance notice of the intention of his or her assailant. Such a victim ordinarily is alone in the night, helpless, and unable to resist the armed assailant in the darkness. The victim cannot see or recognize the criminal.

Law-enforcement officers know where criminals reside. They know the criminals. They know their associates and hang-outs. They are trained in the apprehension of criminals and in the detection of crime. This is why they are able so often to track down and capture the guilty. What is the purpose of criminal law? I conceive it to be to protect the law-abiding, innocent, decent, helpless members of society. Justice to the guilty is mercy to the innocent. No one need be worried with the thought that any innocent person is going to be punished. The safeguards thrown around the person of a criminal are ample for his protection when he is apprehended and put on trial. He is presumed to be innocent. In the light of my experience and observation, I am prepared to assert, without the fear of successful contradiction that this presumption of a person's innocence is a violent presumption, contrary to human experience and common sense. In the next place, a person accused of crime must be found guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. And in addition to this, in most States a person charged with a capital offense has as many as 15 preemptory challenges. This means he or his attorney may tell as many as 15 citizens called as jurors to stand aside for no other reasons than that the defendant or his lawyer feels that such person would be in favor of enforcing the law.

Mr. Chairman, this unprecedented rule of evidence announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in the McNabb case should be outlawed. It has afforded a broad avenue of escape under which thousands of criminals who have confessed their guilt have been enabled to have their confessions excluded from the evidence against them and to go unwhipped of justice.

The testimony heard by the Committee on the Judiciary showed without contradiction that the opinion of the Supreme Court in the McNabb case is one of the greatest handicaps that has ever confronted law-enforcement officers.

In the case of United States against Mitchell, the Attorney General of the United States, Francis Biddle, testified before the Committee on the Judiciary to the following facts:

On October 12, 1942, a police officer found in a jewelry store a pair of cuff links answering the description of links stolen some months before from a Washington home. The jeweler's records indicated that they had been purchased the day after the burglary in question from a person giving the name and address of the defendant. This clue led the officers to call at the defendant's home where they talked with him. The same evening, after the cuff links had been identified by their owner, two officers went to the defendant's home and asked him to go with them to the precinct station for questioning. The defendant without being formally arrested accompanied the officers willingly, and upon arrival at the station they told the defendant "that they knew what he had done, that he did not have to say anything," but that "all they wanted to know was who had worked with him." Thereupon the defendant, according to the testimony of the police, "freely admitted" that he had stolen the cuff links in question as well as other property. The entire confession was given within a few minutes after the defendant's arrival at the station house. At the same time the defendant gave the officers express permission to go to his home and obtain the other property that he confessed to having stolen, telling them where it was. Pursuant to this consent the officers went to his home and found the property in question. Thereafter the defendant was held for 8 days without arraignment.

His detention for this period of time was, however, explained by the fact that the officers had recovered from the defendant Mitchell's home property that he had stolen in more than 30 Washington housebreakings and that the defendant was cooperating with the police and the victims in identifying this property pursuant to his expressed desire to assist the police in investigating the various housebreakings in which he was involved. The defendant was not mistreated during his detention, but, on the contrary was shown every possible courtesy and was on occasions visited by his mother and others. It is true that the defendant testified that he had been subjected to violence and denied making the statements to which the Attorney General referred, which were oral, not written. But the court found that he had not been mistreated nor subjected to any violence.

On these facts the district court held the confession made immediately upon Mitchell's arrival at the police station admissible and the defendant Mitchell was convicted. The court of appeals reversed this conviction not on the ground that Mitchell's confession was not voluntary but reversed the conviction on the ground that he was not promptly taken before the committing magistrate. This reversal was in obedience to the rule announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in the McNabb case.

Another case referred to by Attorney General Biddle in his testimony was the case of United States against Wilburn in the District Court of the District of Columbia. These are the facts:

Wilburn, a 17-year-old Negro, had attacked one girl at about 7 a. m. on March 17, 1943, and another girl at about 1 a. m., on March 18, 1943. He was arrested at about 2 a. m. on the same night of March 18 and made a verbal confession of the second attack at about 4 a. m. At about 5 a. m., in the presence of the complaining witness, he reenacted the circumstances of the second attack. He signed a written confession of both crimes at about 11:30 a. m. on March 18, and was arraigned before the juvenile court at about 3 p. m. the same day. In the first case he was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape and was sentenced to imprisonment of from 6 to 9 years. However, Judge Letts, on July 2, 1943, granted a new trial because of the admission in evidence of the written confession. Thereafter, because of the difficulty of proving the case without use of the confession, Wilburn was allowed to plead guilty to simple assault and received a sentence of 1 year. In the second case, Judge Pine, on November 15, 1943, directed a verdict of acquittal, ruling that the Government could not even introduce testimony to the fact of the oral confession at 4 a. m., or the reenactment of the crime at about 5 a. m.

Scores of other cases were cited in which men charged with murder, with rape, with robbery, with burglary, were arrested and confessed their guilt and afterward were freed by the courts of the country in obedience to the rule of evidence declared by the Supreme Court in the McNabb case. Each and every one of these crimes in which the criminals escaped punishment is a reason for the enactment of the bill in this case.

The maudlin, muddled sympathy with and protection of criminals in this country demands the enactment of the pending measure.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CARROLL].

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to commend the very splendid statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON]. He has shown great courage in presenting his viewpoint in the face of major opposition. But it is just such a spirit as his that makes our Constitution live and breathe.

As a practical matter, I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma, we are all aware that pursuing modern day police methods not a great deal of attention is devoted to the strict legal concept of giving those charged or suspected of a crime the full protection and measure of their constitutional rights. We all know that the people are placed in jail before a warrant of arrest is issued, that they are held incommunicado for days, that their family may not know where they are, that in many, many instances they are denied the privilege of legal counsel pending investigation. I do not defend this procedure. I state it as a fact, as being the now acceptable police practice in the major cities of this Nation. Of course, the purpose of this is to extract a confession from the suspect before he has had an opportunity to confer with others or to receive legal advice. Much can be said on both sides of this question. I am, however, reminded that the courts always retain the power to determine whether or not confessions obtained under the circumstances of the McNabb case are voluntary or involuntary. It is not for this purpose, however, that I address the Members of this House; that I speak upon this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct the Members' attention to a possible constitutional question on which I should like to have some enlightenment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I state that I thoroughly agree with my friend in his expressions about the courage of the gentleman from Oklahoma for speaking as his conscience dictates. It took real courage and I admire, as the gentleman has so ably expressed it, the gentleman from Oklahoma for the courage which he has displayed in speaking as his conscience dictates.

Mr. CARROLL. Of course, I agree with the gentleman. I should like to direct a question to the chairman of the committee and I should like an answer. There are 27 lawyers on that committee, many of whom have great ability.

In the case of McNabb et al. v. United States (318 U. S. 332) the defendants charge a violation of their constitutional rights, to wit, fifth amendment. The Supreme Court, replying, states on page 339:

> It is true, as the petitioners assert, that a conviction in the Federal courts, the foundation of which is evidence obtained in disregard of liberties deemed fundamental by the Constitution, cannot stand.

This point occurs to me. If the Supreme Court states there has been a denial of a fundamental constitutional right in receiving evidence such as is indicated in the McNabb case, how can this Congress by legislative enactment heal that constitutional breach? Is this an encroachment by this legislative body into the field of the judiciary? Is this not a legislative invasion of a judicial function?

In another portion of the McNabb decision, page 340, it states:

> Judicial supervision of the administration of criminal justice in the Federal courts implies the duty of establishing and maintaining civilized standards of procedure and evidence.

And, again, on page 341:

> The principles governing the admissibility of evidence in Federal criminal trials have not been restricted, therefore, to those derived solely from the Constitution. In the exercise of its supervisory authority over the administration of criminal justice in the Federal courts, see Nardone v. United States (308 U. S. 338, 341-342), this Court has, from the very beginning of its history, formulated rules of evidence to be applied in Federal criminal prosecutions. * * * And in formulating such rules of evidence for Federal criminal trials the Court has been guided by considerations of justice not limited to the strict canons of evidentiary relevance. Quite apart from the Constitution, therefore, we are constrained to hold that the evidence elicited from the petitioners in the circumstances disclosed here must be excluded.

Does the Supreme Court mean to imply that since the beginning of the history of this Nation it has formulated these rules of evidence and, if so, can Congress legally assign itself the task of changing that rule by legislative enactment?

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, is the gentleman suggesting that we ought to abdicate our legislative power in favor of the Supreme Court?

Mr. CARROLL. The gentleman is not suggesting anything. I am asking a question of the Chairman. I have not made up my mind as to how I shall vote on this, and I am presenting this question to the Chairman. If we have the power we ought to act. The question I raise is: Do we have the legislative power to invade the judiciary? I do not know.

Mr. HALE. It is my impression that this is a legislative body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. CARROLL. Another point in this connection is this: In the dissenting opinion I note that Justice Reed also mentions this same point. As I have said to you, I have no convictions; I am not against this bill, but I should like to take a minute of my time to ask the chairman of the committee: Have you fully considered this matter?

Mr. GRAHAM. May I suggest that the gentleman from Alabama answer the gentleman.

Mr. HOBBS. I certainly will appreciate the opportunity, and I quote from the report:

> The Supreme Court does not say that the confessions of the McNabbs were involuntary but "quite apart from the Constitution," and although "Congress has not explicitly forbidden the use of evidence so procured."

So by plain implication the Supreme Court itself answers the gentleman's question by saying that if Congress had explicitly forbidden, they would respectfully bow to the legislative mandate.

Mr. CARROLL. That was considered by the 27 lawyers in the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes.

Mr. CARROLL. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to preface my remarks by giving the information which may be gratuitous that I propose to vote for this bill, but in doing so I must suppress an inclination I have toward the feeling that as a lawyer I can hardly sustain that action. The must, if not altogether, insistence that this bill be debated, has been a retrial of a case they call the McNabb case. I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that in our disappointment arising almost to the point of resentment and disgust with respect to the outcome in the McNabb case, we are about to surrender our long-time notions and ideas and convictions with respect to legal trials under the Constitutions of our several States and the United States of America.

I am not talking about the McNabb case, I am not talking about any case, but I am talking about the fundamental principles of law that have obtained since the Bill of Rights was embodied as a part of the Constitution. I look with a little bit of pride upon my own State's action in refusing to subscribe to the Constitution until the Bill of Rights was included. They relate to personal things, to the fortunes and the lives of men, not speaking in material vein.

I am afraid that in our resentment at the ultimate results of the case against the McNabbs, based upon our assumption that the confessions were voluntary and were not obtained by third-degree methods—and that is all we know about it, but that I do not wish to discuss—we propose as lawyers and lawmakers to deny the efficacy of that which we have lived by for 150 years, that a man charged with crime is presumed to be innocent, and that that presumption of innocense follows him through every stage of the trial; that it is better that a guilty man go unpunished than that an innocent man be punished for something of which he is not gulity; and that a man shall not be compelled to testify against himself, and in that is embodied and included the guarantee that confessions shall not be wrung from him at a time when he has not an equal opportunity to defend himself against the agents of the law.

I am going to vote for this bill, but I do hope that no officer of the United States of America or any State in the Union will conclude that we are putting off the time of arraignment sufficiently long to give him an opportunity to wring confessions from men who may be innocent though charged with crime.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all those who have spoken on the bill today be permitted to revise and extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TWYMAN] is recognized for 25 minutes.

THE PALESTINE SITUATION

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Speaker, on two occasions the Members of the House of Representatives of the Eightieth Congress have been addressed on the situation in Palestine. Very fittingly one of these speeches was made by a Democrat and one was made by a Republican. However, both speeches were made by Jewish Members and both came from the city of New York.

I think it is very fitting that I, a Member from the Midwest, a non-Jew, a gentile and an active Christian, should address the House on this very timely subject.

My interest in the Palestine situation is not of a short period. I have been interested in the Palestine situation to a greater or less degree for a period of over 20 years. Before leaving Chicago to take my oath as a Member of this body, I requested the leading members of Jewry in Chicago to sit down with me and discuss the Palestine situation.

The first contact I made upon arriving in Washington was with the Speaker of the House and expressed my desire to speak on the Palestine question. I had hoped that this might be my maiden speech before the House but I held off hoping that it might not be necessary. The time has arrived, however, when I feel that I must express myself.

The Members of Congress should know, and I presume they do, the terms under which Palestine comes under control of Great Britain. For those who do not know, I merely wish to state that a declaration was made by Lord Balfour to Baron Rothschild giving assurance that Palestine would become a Jewish homeland. As a result of this declaration, the Jews of Europe and of the world rallied to the Allied cause in World War I and contributed greatly to the resultant victory. Later, Palestine was placed under the control of Great Britain under a mandate given by the League of Nations. This mandate did not provide that Palestine was to become a British colony, but nevertheless Great Britain saw fit to transfer the administration of Palestine from the Foreign Office to the Colonial Office.

Great Britain has failed to solve the Palestine problem. The cruel, ruthless methods carried out by its military have been of no avail in bringing about peace for which all mankind yearns. I rise to condemn the present British regime in Palestine which mocks those very ideals in whose name the American people fought side by side with Britain and the Allied Powers. Great Britain has descended to employ its Navy and its Army divisions in military operations against defenseless men, women, and children who have lived with death for more than a decade and who ask only the elementary human rights of life, work, and home. I do not believe that the British Government's military action against the Jewish refugees and the Jews of Palestine are designated to preserve "law and order." Had Britain chosen to fulfill its obligations under the Balfour Declarations and the mandate, which would have made possible the free entry into and the settlement of Jews in Palestine as guaranteed by these documents, it would long ago have established peace in the Holy Land. Britain's methods of violence have only produced violence. The Jews of Palestine, like the Minutemen of the American Revolution, are resisting British tyranny in Palestine in order to defend their internationally guaranteed rights to continue the upbuilding of the Jewish national home. The British Labor Government has brought lawlessness to Palestine by imposing a policy declared illegal by representatives of the civilized world, speaking through the Mandates Commission of the League of Nations. I feel certain that if the causes of this violence were removed, it would cease.

The last proposed solution to the Palestine problem that Britain offered has been rejected by Jews and Arabs alike. The solution was contained in a second edition of the ill-conceived Morrison-Grady plan, which called for the creation of a Jewish ghetto in Palestine and which our Government rejected. The latest British plan was in fact a new embodiment of the principles of the White Paper of 1939, cast in a fresh mold, but tending to the same end: to cramp Jewish development within severely restricted areas; to limit Jewish immigration so as to freeze the Jews as a permanent minority of one-third of the total population, and to hold out to the Arabs the prospects of ultimate domination in a preponderantly Arab state. Under the terms of the latest British plan, Jews would have no control over their immigration into Palestine or over settlement on the land. They would have no right to govern themselves as was envisaged by the Balfour Declaration which promised the establishment of a Jewish homeland.

Having failed to persuade either the Arabs or the Jews to accept its proposal, Foreign Secretary Bevin has, in desperation, announced to the world that he would throw the whole matter into the laps of the United Nations. By this token, Britain acknowledges its inability to deal forthrightly with the problem, which it could have solved if it had chosen to be guided by principles of equity and justice.

Mr. Bevin says the Palestine mandate is unworkable. The fact is that the mandatory government has done everything in its power in the last 10 years to make the mandate unworkable by spiking it and doing nothing to foster it. A generation has passed since the nations of the world resolved to end for all time Jewish national homelessness and to reestablish Jewish nationhood. They entrusted the British Government with this great task, but the guardian of the trust proved unfaithful to its trust and sought to frustrate its fulfillment.

It is easily recognized by all that great delay must follow if the solution of the Palestine question becomes a matter for discussion before the United Nations. This is not the first delaying device that Britain has employed to make impossible an adequate solution of the Palestine problem. You will recall that a year and a half ago, President Truman directed a request to Great Britain to permit the immediate entry of 100,000 displaced Jews into Palestine and renewed this request in 1946 on Yom Kippur, Day of Atonement, the holiest day of the Jewish year. These Jews were to be taken out of the displaced persons camps in the American and British zones and given the opportunity to settle in the Holy Land, Britain's only response to this request was a proposal for the creation of another commission. After some months of inquiry, that commission produced a unanimous endorsement of President Truman's original request. Though Britain had committed itself, by partnership, in the commission, to an acceptance of its recommendations, it found excuses for its failure to implement them.

The London Conference which came to a dismal collapse with the issuance of the revised Morrison-Grady plan, rejected by both Arabs and Jews, now leaves the way open for further delay until the United Nations can come to an ultimate agreement on what is to become of the promises which Britain had made to the Jewish people. There will be delay and more delay. The displaced Jews in the American and British zones, whose numbers have now grown to 225,000 will become more and more despondent. These people must not be left in Europe where the poison of Hitlerism has made it impossible for them to live as free men and women.

What is to happen in the interim until the final decision is reached by the United Nations? Britain, as the mandatory power and trustee, is under obligation until a final solution is reached by the United Nations, to fulfill the terms of the Balfour Declaration and the mandate and the Anglo-American Convention of 1924. These terms demand free entry of Jews into their homeland, their settlement upon the land, and the fullest opportunity for economic and cultural development. How can we expect the peoples of the world to have faith in the United Nations if one of its leading proponents falls down on its own pledge? Nothing new is asked of Britain. All that is asked of Britain is that it fulfill its pledges until the problem is solved by the United Nations. In fulfillment of its pledges, at least 100,000 Jews must, along the lines indicated by President Truman, be permitted to enter immediately into Palestine and be given the opportunity to buy land there—rights which were denied to them under the illegal White Paper of 1939. In effect, the interim policy must call for the abolition of the White Paper with all its restrictions and discriminations which it imposed upon the Jewish people in Palestine.

As one of the leading members of the United Nations, the United States, through President Truman, Secretary Marshall and the congressional leaders of both Houses and parties, must assume the initiative and take the lead in insisting that England carry out this interim policy until a definite arrangement can be arrived at. I must point out that our Government is a party to this responsibility. We are a party to the Palestine mandate. We have a convention which was entered into with Britain which sought to secure to the Jewish people the promise of nationhood.

I want to call your attention also to the fact that Britain's failure to permit the displaced persons in the American zones to enter Palestine has imposed an extraordinary financial burden on the United States. Indeed, the American forces in the occupied zones have carried graciously this burden, from which England should have released us long ago. Every American can, indeed, be proud of the magnificently generous manner in which our American forces have carried out their responsibilities to all displaced persons, but the time has come for us to say to Britain, "You can no longer expect us to bear the load which your resistance to immigation to Palestine imposes, in addition to the load which a collapsed British economy has placed upon us."

Right now the American people are very conscious of the heavy load of taxation. Wives and mothers of American soldiers serving in Europe would like to see their men returned home. The men themselves would like to return to more gainful occupations. Presently there is no solution of these problems, but there would be, if progressive steps were taken to reduce the number of Jews held in Europe against their will by permitting them to enter Palestine.

Within a few weeks the Secretary of State will be going to Moscow to meet with other ministers of the great powers. We know that our Secretary of State will have a most impelling task. Many matters will come up, but I respectfully suggest to him that, if there is any possibility of bringing up the burning question of the displaced people now in the German area, he should take the lead in bringing about a solution which would enable the hundreds of thousands of Jews who are now, to all intents and purposes, incarcerated in this area, to go to Palestine, to which the overwhelming majority desire to go.

Great Britain, as a signatory to that treaty, should be required to agree that Palestine must be opened to those Jews who desire to live among their own people in the land of their fathers.

Both the War and the Navy Departments have expressed their readiness to make possible the transportation of the displaced Jews from the occupied zones to Palestine. As a matter of fact, it seems to me that we have the right to ask Great Britain, before we even sit down to write the German peace treaty, to permit the transfer of the Jews from the displacement centers, to begin at once. Every competent authority on the situation in Germany including General McNarney have recommended that, in the best interests of peace, it is necessary that those Jews ought to be permitted to go to Palestine.

The question arises, What role will America play in the United Nations when the Palestine problem is brought before it? There can only be one answer to this question. The United States recognizes only one solution, namely that which calls for the establishment of a national Jewish homeland in Palestine.

This solution must be based upon three cardinal principles:

First. The free entry of Jews into their homeland.

Second. Fullest opportunity of economic development, particularly as envisaged by the Lowdermilk plan for a Jordan Valley Authority.

Third. The status of sovereignty, of a free and independent Jewish nation, to be achieved through statehood and symbolized by a seat in the United Nations.

As long ago as 1922, by joint congressional resolution, and again in 1924 in the Anglo-American Convention on Palestine, the United States reiterated its position on the question of a national homeland for the Jewish people in Palestine. As late as December 1945, Congress, in a concurrent resolution, reaffirmed its traditional American policy for the right of the Jewish people to a national home in Palestine as expressed in the Balfour Declaration. I urge that the American representatives in the United Nations be instructed to insist upon the right of the Jewish people to a Jewish commonwealth. Our country, which is wedded to the practice of justice for all peoples, great or small, powerful or weak, will not fail the Jewish people. A solution embodying America's traditional policy of support of Jewish national aspirations would provide an additional impetus to world peace and stability and would advance the principles to which America stands committed in the world.

I call upon the Members of Congress to give their attention to the Palestine situation. I urge them to learn all about this most important subject and give their time, energy, and support toward working out constructive measures to open the doors of Palestine to Jewish mass immigration and colonization and bring about the earliest transformation of that country into a free and democratic Jewish commonwealth. All powers of our Government must be exerted toward the immediate fulfillment of that policy to which America is so deeply committed.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TWYMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Does the gentleman believe that if Britain had fulfilled its obligations under the mandate to bring about a full settlement of Jews on the land of Palestine and refrained from these iniquitous restrictions on land sales we would have a condition of tranquility instead of a condition of completely despairing violence in Palestine today?

Mr. TWYMAN. I believe that. I furthermore feel that, if the people in Palestine, Jews and Arabs alike, were left to work out their own solution of the relationship between them, friendship and peace would be the result.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TWYMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I think the gentleman has made a very valuable contribution to the problem, a very vexatious problem, indeed; and I think we are all grateful to the gentleman for his very forthright and very sympathetic consideration of this subject.

Mr. TWYMAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TWYMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BUSBEY. I would like to say to my colleague from Illinois that during the Seventy-eighth Congress when the Palestine resolution was before the House, I tried to talk with a great many of my colleagues at that time, and I could find no opposition whatever among the Members of Congress. The only opposition I found was the fact that the then Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, and the then Secretary of War, Mr. Henry L. Stimson, testified before the Senate committee against the Palestine resolution, evidently at the request of the administration.

Mr. TWYMAN. This is not the only thing that challenges our imagination with reference to the administration and the State Department. Let us hope that by our interest here in the House we may encourage others in the State Department to do what they should have done a long time ago.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in my speech this morning I may include some excerpts from statements by the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and other veterans' organizations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is recognized for 35 minutes.

BRITAIN'S FAILURE IN PALESTINE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I would that the Members who are not in the Chamber at this time will take the trouble to read the address that has just been delivered by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois. I think they would profit thereby, and would learn a little more about this problem of Jewish homelessness and the desire of the displaced persons who are of Jewish extraction now in the occupied areas of Germany, who would like to go to Palestine, and be relieved of all their troubles.

The shameful and shocking record of Britain's administration of its mandate over Palestine is not the common knowledge it should be. Palestine is not an abstraction like some unapplied mathematical formula. In Palestine we are concerned with living people whose pattern of political life had been set by international covenant and then upset by tenacious, unrelenting grip of the appointed trustee—Great Britain.

One would be led to believe by the behavior of Britain that Palestine is her own vassal state to be dealt with without regard to the obligations and responsibilities she had assumed with the granting to her by the League of Nations of the mandate over Palestine.

In the settlement following World War I, the issues were clearly cut and clearly met. The Allies promised independence to the Arabs in certain provinces of the Turkish Empire which up to that time was in complete domination of the Arabian world and Palestine was set aside as a country for the Jewish national home. Keep in mind that Palestine was specifically exempt for the purpose set forth by the Balfour Declaration, "to facilitate the establishment in Palestine of a Jewish homeland." This was definitely agreed to by King Emir Feisal, representative of the Arab peoples at the Peace Conference.

The promises to the Arab people have been kept scrupulously. Even Trans-Jordan, once part of the Palestine mandate, was thrown in for good measure. But the solemn pledge of a Jewish national homeland in Palestine was breached again and again by the power entrusted with its fulfillment. Seven independent Arab states exist today with representation on the United Nations and other international councils. Their area extends over 1,000,000 square miles. Of all the class A mandates established by the League of Nations, a class A mandate being one that is directed toward self-government, only Palestine's independence is unfulfilled. There are the independent sovereignties of Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, and Trans-Jordan, four of the five mandated territories. Four have received and achieved independence, but not Palestine, the fifth of the mandated territories. This tiny bit of land of 10,000 square miles is now the scene of frustration and tugging interests, where human and moral values struggle with the demands of power politics, oil, military defenses, and the British cry of external security.

In 1939 the British promulgated the Palestine white paper, which has been adverted to by my distinguished colleague from Illinois, which drastically restricted land purchases by the Jews of Palestine soil and limited to a mere trickle the immigration of Jews into the Holy Land after 1944. Today the gates of Palestine are practically closed.

It is interesting to note that the delegates to the International Refugee Conference at Evian, France, were seated around a table and the question was asked, where were the displaced persons to go. That was in 1938, when the Jews were feeling the scourge of Hitler's fiendishness and sadism. The first man to be asked that question at the International Refugee Conference at Evian, France, in 1938, was the representative from the Dominion of Australia, and he significantly stated the following. I give it in haec verba:

We in Australia have no racial problem, thank God, and we don't intend to have one started.

That very terse but tragic observation was reechoed all around the table of 52 delegates. Nobody wanted to take the Jews who were seeking to get out of Hitler's clutches. Six million of them died. The conclusion is inescapable that there is no place where the Jew is wanted, let us admit it, save Palestine, and now the gates of Palestine are closed.

After 5 years, 1944, after totaling 75,000 entries, further immigration would be dependent upon Arab consent. The reasoning behind this infamous maneuver was quite obvious. Then, as now, the Arab leaders used threats and blackmail to throw their support and their oil to the highest bidder. It was relatively simple for the British to seize this pretext of Arab opposition and turn it to her own uses:

We are helpless—

Britain told the world—

we cannot do other than appease the Arabs and then stay in Palestine to maintain law and order.

Meanwhile, thousands upon thousands of Jews perished under Hitler's rule. No place would accept them and the gates of Palestine were sealed by British perfidy. Boatloads of escaping Jews sank off the shores of Palestine while the British colonial administration followed the policy of the British Foreign Office. Thus, the land which by international covenant signed by 52 nations of the League of Nations and subsequently by the United States by separate treaty, was to be a national homeland for the Jews was opened to everybody but the Jews. And at a time, too, when every civilized country professed their horror at the tragedy that had befallen the defenseless Jews.

The peace brought with it for a while the beginning of new hopes for the little countries and for minority peoples. The Labor government came into power in Great Britain as standard bearers for a new liberalism in Europe. The Jews in Palestine and the Jews who had witnessed the massacre of their kin and who had themselves survived, reviewed the record of the Labor Party and its stated, and restated, policy on Palestine, and were jubilant. Surely now deliverance was at hand. In 1940 the Labor Party conference declared:

That in order to remove the root cause of Jewish suffering and to insure the existence and free development of the Jewish people, international assistance should be given for the continued growth of the Jewish national home in Palestine by immigration and settlement. The London conference of 1942 reaffirmed "its determination that in the new international order after the war Jews shall enjoy civil, religious, and economic equality with all other citizens, and that international assistance shall be given to promote by immigration and settlement the Jewish national home in Palestine."

The Labor Party conference of 1943 stated in its resolution:

That victory must insure for the Jews full civil, political, economic equality, and their national rights. It reaffirms the traditional policy of the British Labor Party in favor of building Palestine as the Jewish national home.

In 1944 the Palestine problem formed a special chapter in the NXX document known as the International Postwar Settlement, proposed by the national executive and introduced by the present Prime Minister, Mr. Attlee. It received 8 months' deliberation by the party. It must be kept in mind, too, that at the time the 1944 Palestine policy was adopted the Labor Party was not in opposition, but a fully responsible partner in the coalition government. The Labor Party, in other words, were in a position to know, and did know, all the pertinent facts. I read a part of the Palestine chapter as written by the Labor Party in 1944:

But there is surely neither hope nor meaning in a Jewish national home unless we are prepared to let Jews, if they wish, enter this tiny land in such numbers as to become a majority. There was a strong case for this before the war. There is an irresistible case now after the unspeakable atrocities of the cold and calculated plan to kill all Jews in Europe.

In 1945 the national executive of the Labor Party published this resolution:

The committee reaffirms the policy accepted by the annual conference in December 1944 on Palestine. It therefore calls upon the British Government to remove the present unjustifiable barriers on immigration and to announce without delay proposals for the future of Palestine in which it has the full sympathy and support of the American and Russian Governments.

Those are the words of the Labor Party on record. But the words of record are far, far removed from the deeds of record. No sooner had the Labor Party come into power than there came a complete reversal of attitude, policy, and direction. Jews, who after months and months of the long, long trek following the beacon of Palestine, found not the dignity, not the hope of beginning life anew, but the barbed wire of concentration camps on the island of Cyprus. Illegal searches and seizures on the part of the British colonial administration became the order of the day. Imprisonments without trial, withdrawal of the right of peaceful assembly, daily curfews became part of the routine of Palestine life.

It is little wonder, therefore, that the bitterness and frustration in Palestine reached the breaking point. The Jews who had redeemed the soil of Palestine, made of it a center of science and cultivation in the Middle East, Jews who died of disease in clearing the marshes and planting the life-sustaining trees, Jews who had contributed more than their allotted share to the Allied war effort were all forgotten. It is little wonder then that they asked, "Why?" And again, "Why?".

The English proposed and the United States acceded to an Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry. That committee recommended the immediate admission of 100,000 displaced Jews into Palestine. The Eisenhower report and the Harrison report, both undertaken at the request of President Truman revealed the dire need of the displaced Jew for Palestine. But again there followed delay. It would seem that the British by every possible device sought to postpone an equitable solution. Twice they offered what they knew would be unacceptable federalization plans for Palestine, but turned down the proposal of a carefully worked out, reasonable plan for partition offered by the Jewish agency for Palestine.

Now, the British in transparent insincerity offer submission of the Palestine problem to the General Assembly of the United Nations. Past and present experiences have taught us to be wary. The farcial ending of the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry, if nothing else—and there is far more evidence—leads us to conclude that this is another British dodge and stall for time. Reference to the General Assembly will lead to reference to the Trusteeship Committee of the United Nations where Britain can, if she so wills, exercise a right of veto. Approval of the old mandatory power is essential before the appointment of a new mandatory power can be made.

We must, at this point, ask ourselves: Shall the United States which since 1922 has reaffirmed its policy of favoring the establishment of the national Jewish homeland in Palestine permit the United Nations to serve the purpose of British imperialist interests in the Middle East? Keep in mind that the United States has openly and continuously reiterated this policy—the establishment of a Jewish national homeland in Palestine—not only by separate treaty with Great Britain, but through congressional resolutions and declared Executive proclamations by various Presidents of these United States, beginning with President Wilson and following through to President Truman. It has been repeated in the political platforms of the two major parties and has been the subject of numerous congressional debates.

Now the opportunity presents itself concretely to the United States Government to stand by its policy in the Palestine issue when it arises before the United Nations. By its great moral strength, by the force of its present leadership in world affairs, the United States can prevent in this instance the United Nations from becoming merely a sounding board for British interests. By direct interest and guidance, the United States can throw its great weight on the side of the equities, sustained as it is by the existence of recognized international documents and international and national commitments that favor the establishment in Palestine of a Jewish national home. It is up to the United States to prevent another farce and to avert the tragedy that must follow in the wake of British political machinations to continue her control in Palestine with regard to corresponding responsibilities.

And again, if the approach in the United Nations is to be a sincere one, then direct representation to the Jews of Palestine must be allowed. The Arabs as I have pointed out above, already have such representation. Britain has her own vote and those of her dominions.

Britain will have in the hollow of her hand all of the Arab votes, the votes of Canada and British South Africa, New Zealand and Australia, and very likely the votes of Belgium, Holland, and Denmark, because of the economic connection between those three latter nations.

The Jews of Palestine who constitute over a third of the population of Palestine and who have specific and special international status as conferred upon them by the League of Nations mandate, have no such representation. Most certainly the contention cannot be made that they are not interested parties.

I believe, too, that if the United Nations is to act as a court of equity, then Britain must come into that court with clean hands. To do so, Britain must abrogate at once the Palestine white paper of 1939 which was, and is, in direct contravention to the purposes of the man-British must cease to pervert the purdate of the League of Nations. The mandates commission of the League of Nations declared at its outset that in so promulgating this white paper, the British were acting unilaterally in breaching an international covenant and, therefore, rested on no lega' foundation. The poses of the mandate. Otherwise, she brings with her submission of the Palestine issue to the United Nations the evidence of her betrayal of a trust and stands self-accused by her own record of complete misadministration of the mandate which in good faith was placed into her hands.

The question is still open. Will the United States permit Great Britain to use the instrument of the United Nations, fashioned, we hope, to secure our peace, as a cloak to hide her ill-becoming practices in Palestine? To permit Britain to do so would weaken tragically the basic structure of the United Nations. Or will the United States stand firmly and independently behind its own declared policy on Palestine?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. REEVES] is recognized for 15 minutes.

JOINT INCOME-TAX RETURNS

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Speaker, on February 6, 1947, I introduced in the House H. R. 1759, entitled "A bill granting to married persons living in non-community-property States who file joint returns the same income-tax treatment as if they lived in community-property States." The bill reads as follows:

"(2) Joint return: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the aggregate surtax net income of the husband and wife a surtax determined—

"(C) by reducing the amount ascertained under subparagraph (B) by 5 percent thereof.

"(3) Surtax table: The table referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) is as follows:"

STANDARD DEDUCTION

SEC. 2. Section 23 (aa) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the optional standard deduction for individuals) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) Allowance: In the case of an individual, at his election a standard deduction as follows:

"(A) Separate return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: Except in the case of a joint return by husband and wife, if the adjusted gross income is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $500.

"(B) Joint return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, if the aggregate adjusted gross income of the husband and wife is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $1,000 or an amount equal to 10 percent of such aggregate adjusted gross income, whichever is the lesser.

"(C) Adjusted gross income less than $5,000: If the adjusted gross income is less than $5,000, the standard deduction shall be an amount equal to 10 percent of the adjusted gross income upon the basis of which the tax applicable to the adjusted gross income of the taxpayer is determined under the tax table provided in section 400."

TAXABLE YEARS TO WHICH APPLICABLE

SEC. 3. The amendments made by this act shall be applicable only with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946.

It has come to my attention that on February 19 the senior Senator from Maryland, Mr. TYDINGS, introduced in the Senate a bill, S. 649, which is in all respects identical with H. R. 1759.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal income-tax laws do not have equal application throughout the United States. In nine States—Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas, and Washington—the so-called community-property law is in effect, with the result that many citizens of those States pay substantially less in Federal income taxes than do citizens of other States upon identical income. Eighteen percent of the population of the United States and, according to the latest available figures, one-sixth of all Federal income taxpayers reside in these nine States.

Whenever the net taxable income of a citizen of a community-property State—whose wife has no income—amounts to as much as $3,000, his Federal income tax is less than that paid by a citizen of a non-community-property State whose domestic and financial situation is precisely the same. This anomaly derives from the community-property concept that income accruing during marriage is the product of the joint endeavors of the husband and wife. Each of them, for example, is considered to have a vested one-half interest in the husband's earnings, and each is entitled to report his one-half separately for income-tax purposes. Thus, for illustration, if the husband's earnings are $6,000 per year and there is no other family income, the husband reports $3,000 and the wife reports the remaining $3,000 for income-tax purposes. If the husband earns $6,000 and the wife, also employed, earns $2,000, so that their total joint earnings are $8,000, each of them reports $4,000 for income-tax purposes.

The tax advantage is immediately apparent. Substantial savings result from the fact that lower surtax rates apply to the divided income. In the first of the two cases assumed, and on the further assumption that there are no minor dependents, the income-tax liability is as follows, if in a non-community-property State:

Income	$6,000.00
Personal exemptions	1,000.00
Standard deduction	500.00
Net taxable income	4,500.00
Total tax	921.50

But in a community-property State each would report $3,000 for a tax—taken from the tax table—of $427, or a total tax for both of $854. In other words, as a practical matter, the Federal income tax on a $6,000 income in a community-property State is $67.50 less than it is in a non-community-property State on the same income.

The disparity increases progressively with increases in the size of the income, as indicated in the following table:

Comparison of tax liabilities of married couples (with no dependents) in community property and noncommunity property States

Net income before exemption	Total tax on married couples		Tax saving in community property States	Tax saving in community-property States as a percentage of tax liability in non-community-property States
	Non-community-property State (only 1 spouse has income)	Community-property State (income divided equally between spouses)
$10,000	$2,185	$1,843	$342	15.7
$15,000	4,047	3,154	893	22.1
$25,000	9,082	6,460	2,622	28.9
$50,000	24,795	18,725	6,070	24.5
$100,000	63,128	50,274	12,854	20.4

For the 10-year period from 1937 through 1946 the tax savings of residents of community-property States who are married and have incomes of $5,000 or more amount to impressive totals. For example, in the 10-year period this favored group of taxpayers have enjoyed the aggregate tax savings over taxpayers similarly situated in non-community-property States as shown in the following table:

TABLE NO. 2.—Aggregate tax savings of married couples (with no dependents) in community-property States in the income years 1937 through 1946 [1]

Combined net income before exemption:	Aggregate amount of tax savings
$5,000	$320
$10,000	2,864
$25,000	20,633
$50,000	53,144
$100,000	132,187

[1] Tax for non-community-property States is computed on the assumption that only one spouse has income, and in community-property States that income and exemptions are divided equally between the spouses.

Both of the foregoing tables are taken from material prepared by Stanley S. Surrey, tax legislative counsel, Treasury Department.

During the 10-year period a married resident of Texas, or any other community-property State, and earning $5,000 per year, has paid $320 less in Federal income taxes than a married man living in Missouri, or in any other non-community-property State, with exactly the same income. When it is considered that on a $50,000 income the 10-year savings are $53,144, and on a $100,000 income the 10-year savings are $132,187, it is not difficult to understand why the non-community-property States are deeply concerned about the flight of capital and wealth to the community-property States. It is important to note that during only a portion of the 10-year period used were the present steep surtaxes in effect; during a 10-year period at the present rates the savings and tax advantage enjoyed by taxpayers in the community-property States would be correspondingly much greater.

It is not surprising that there is Nation-wide complaint at this radical discrimination in favor of taxpayers in the community-property States. In all fairness, how can the Congress permit this inequality to continue? The whole tax structure ought to be reexamined and modified to eliminate it and to rectify any other existing inequities.

For purposes of this discussion perhaps the most vivid illustration of the tax disparity would be found in a comparison of the income-tax liability of two Members of this House, one from a community-property State and the other from a non-community-property State; each with only one dependent—his wife—and neither with any income except his congressional salary. Let us first consider Congressman A, who represents a district in 1 of the 39 non-community-property States. His tax computation is approximately as follows:

Salary	$12,500
Exemptions	−1,000
Standard deduction	−500
Taxable income	11,000
Income tax	2,869

Congressman B, from a community-property State, figures his income tax in this manner:

Self:

Divided income	$6,250.00
Exemption	−500.00
Standard deduction	−500.00
Taxable income	5,250.00
Income tax	1,106.75

Wife:

Divided income	$6,250.00
Exemption	−500.00
Standard deduction	−500.00
Taxable income	5,250.00
Income tax	1,106.75

Total income tax for self and wife, $2,213.50.

In other words, the Member from the non-community-property State pays $655.50 more per year in Federal-income taxes on his congressional salary than does his colleague from a community-property State.

It was largely as a matter of self-protection that Oklahoma adopted the community-property system in 1945, and the Bureau of Internal Revenue now accepts separate returns, representing a per capita division of income, from husbands and wives who reside in that State. There is ample authority for the statement that Oklahoma made the change solely for tax considerations. See address of Stanley S. Surrey, tax legislative counsel, Treasury Department, June 4, 1946, as reported in Taxes, the tax magazine, volume 24, No. 10, page 982, October 1946; also Community Property Law in Oklahoma, by Frank Eagin and Charles Everett Eagin (1940); Midwest Printing Co., Tulsa, Okla., chapter 10, section 92.

Attracted by Oklahoma's successful conversion to the community-property system with its substantial Federal income tax savings, at least five other State legislatures—in Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, and Wyoming—are considering legislation designed to adopt the community-property system. Undoubtedly many other States will take this action to prevent the flight of capital to community-property States and to prevent citizens of substantial income from removing their legal residences to community-property States.

The alternative, of course, is legislation by the Congress which will equalize the Federal income tax liabilities of residents of non-community-property States with those of residents of community-property States. No other course is open, since it has long been held that the Federal Government cannot deny to a husband and wife, who are citizens of a community-property State, the right to divide their income per capita and file separate income-tax returns. Such a provision was stricken out of a revenue bill introduced in the Sixty-seventh Congress—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 61, part 6, pages 5909–5922, October 1, 1921—on the strength of an opinion by the Attorney General—Treasury Decision No. 3138, March 3, 1921.

On April 2, 1945, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Oregon Legislature addressed a memorial on the subject to the governors of the other 38 non-community-property States, urging that action be taken to induce Congress to enact legislation placing Federal income tax payers of non-community-property States on a parity with those of community-property States. The memorial in question so excellently states the problem that I include it. It reads as follows:

Senate Joint Memorial 3

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully urge and petition as follows:

Whereas the 40 common-law States are placed at a distinct competitive disadvantage with the community-property States under the now existing Federal personal-income-tax laws; and

Whereas this disadvantage is reflected in the reluctance of business enterprises to establish themselves and carry on their business in common-law States due to the fact that they seek places for doing business which are advantageous to their officers, employees, and stockholders; and

Whereas this disadvantage to common-law States is reflected in the fact that citizens and residents of such States domicile themselves in community-property States after retiring from the activities which created their taxable wealth; and

Whereas in this regard many persons while engaged in active business in common-law States establish their residence in adjacent community-propety States in order to obtain the advantages of income taxes, with the result that the common-law States likewise lose inheritance taxes, and in many instances lose all or a portion of the business; and

Whereas in equity the Federal personal-income taxes should be borne equally by all residents of all States, thereby creating economic equality between the States; and

Whereas it is in accordance with the tenets of sound tax theory and a sound marital status between husband and wife to permit the determination of net income of husband and wife as is now done in community-property States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives jointly concurring therein), That we, your memorialists, the Forty-third Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, do hereby respectfully suggest, urge, and petition the legislative assemblies of the aforesaid common-law property States in session assembled, to take such appropriate action and to memorialize the Congress to remove the aforesaid disadvantages and to enact legislation to accomplish this purpose; and be it further

Resolved, That we request, petition, and urge the Congress of the United States to enact such Federal legislation as will place Federal personal-income taxpayers of common-law States on a parity with those of community-property States; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon transmit copies of this memorial to the Oregon Senators in Congress, the Honorable GUY CORDON and the Honorable WAYNE L. MORSE, and Representatives in Congress, the Honorable JAMES W. MOTT, the Honorable LOWELL STOCKMAN, the Honorable HOMER D. ANGELL, and the Honorable HARRIS ELLSWORTH, and to the governors of each of the common-law States.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REEVES. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. I first want to compliment the gentleman from Missouri on having submitted to the House a proposal to deal with this important question, and to further commend him for the study he has made of this subject matter. It certainly goes without saying that it is extremely inconsistent that individual incomes should be taxed different amounts because the individuals happen to live in different States. I think it is very important that the subject matter be dealt with here in the United States Congress rather than to permit the various States to adopt or pass laws providing for community property rights, because there are problems involved under community laws other than the question of the division of individual income for tax purposes. I am glad to have the gentleman's explanation. I think he is doing a good job in bringing it to the floor of the House, and I trust the Members will read his remarks carefully and will go into this question of providing Federal legislation in place of letting the States deal with the problem.

Mr. REEVES. I am grateful to the gentleman for his contribution. It goes without saying that I agree completely with his remarks on the subject.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REEVES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Is the question which the able gentleman is discussing a Federal question or is it a State question; in other words, can a State pass a law through its legislature to remedy the discrimination which the gentleman has so clearly pointed out, or it is a matter for the Federal Government to deal with through the Congress?

Mr. REEVES. It is my opinion that it is a matter which only the Federal Government can settle satisfactorily. I should probably say to the gentleman that the only way in which a State which is now a non-community-property State can protect itself in this situation is to convert itself to a community-property State. There are some obvious disadvantages to that action which I shall undertake to point out as I go along.

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REEVES. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DORN. Is it not a fact that your whole Federal income-tax law needs simplifying, and is it not a fact that it seems like every time they draw up a Federal law here in Washington they get so-called experts that make it so complicated that the common people, the everyday man in the street, cannot understand what it is all about?

Mr. REEVES. The gentleman is entirely correct; and I think that one of the most constructive things this Congress could do in the way of tax legislation would be to adopt a method of computation which could be understood by the ordinary individual. I think that is especially true in view of the fact that the income-tax laws now reach much lower levels of income than they ever have before.

The Legislature of South Dakota, on January 27, 1947, memorialized the Congress to the same effect, and I understand that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is interested in H. R. 1759.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. I am interested in this matter and the State Legislature of South Dakota has adopted a resolution urging that the Congress act upon it. I desire now to commend the gentleman from Missouri for taking hold of this proposition. He has shown courage in tackling it and he has shown ability in his discussion on the subject.

I may say that during the past year I mentioned to the Governor of South Dakota the inequitable treatment which our Federal income-tax laws impose upon the citizens of the non-community-property States, I suggested that South Dakota might well consider enactment of a community-property law in line with what the State of Oklahoma has done. During the current session of the State legislature, such a bill was introduced by the Honorable Charles Bruett. The objection has been made to State action, however, on the ground that a certain amount of confusion in handling of property might result and that it should not be necessary for States singly to adopt laws to correct an injustice perpetrated by a Federal practice.

With that argument I can find no fault. The Federal Government should act.

One of the canons of income taxation, certainly, is that there should be no discrimination as between persons of like income in like circumstances. The present situation violates the spirit of equity if not the letter.

Recently I asked the legislative counsel of the House to prepare an appropriate bill for me that would remedy this situation. I was informed that such a bill had just been written for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. REEVES]. I was very happy to go to him and say that I would defer to him and do whatever I could to secure enactment of his meritorious measure, H. R. 1759.

The gentleman from Missouri deserves the thanks of the country for bringing this matter to a head. The State Legislature of my State of South Dakota has passed a concurrent resolution endorsing this proposition, as the gentleman, has stated, and with the permission of the gentleman and the House, I will insert that resolution at this point:

(The matter referred to follows:)

Senate Concurrent Resolution 4

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to give like privileges to income-tax payers resident in noncommunity property States as are being enjoyed by residents of community property States

Whereas an inequality exists between citizens and residents of the several States of the United States, in that residents of 9 States having community property laws are privileged to divide incomes between husband and wife for income-tax purposes, thereby reducing the income taxes required to be paid by said residents, which privilege is being denied to the residents of 41 States not having community property laws; and

Whereas by reason of the premises legal privileges are enjoyed by a minority of the citizens of the United States of America, solely determined by residence, which are not permitted to all the citizens of the United States; and

Whereas it is within the power of the Congress of the United States of America to correct such inequality by adopting suitable and appropriate legislation therefor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of South Dakota in its thirtieth regular session assembled respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States of America that suitable and appropriate legislation be enacted permitting division of income between husband and wife for income-tax purposes by the citizens and residents of all of the States of the United States: be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be dispatched to United States Senators CHAN GURNEY and HARLAN J. BUSHFIELD, to Congressmen FRANCIS CASE and KARL E. MUNDT, and to United States Senator EUGENE D. MILLIKIN and to Congressman HAROLD KNUTSON.

SIOUX K. GRIGSBY,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

NIELS P. JENSEN,
Secretary of the Senate.

G. W. MILLS,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

W. J. MATSON,
Clerk of the House.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Speaker, the American Bar Association has likewise interested itself in the problem. At its national meeting in November 1946 it adopted a resolution urging amendment of the Federal income-tax laws to permit the division of income between husbands and wives, and to provide that the tax on a joint return should be twice the tax computed on one-half of the aggregate net income.

Mr. Speaker, H. R. 1759 accomplishes exactly that result. It provides that in case of a joint return by a husband and wife the surtax shall be calculated upon one-half their aggregate surtax net income and then multiplied by two. The standard 5-percent reduction is retained. The result is exactly the same as though each spouse separately reported one-half the aggregate income for income-tax purposes. Since in separate returns each spouse would be entitled to a standard deduction of $500 or 10 percent, whichever is the lesser, upon adjusted gross income of $5,000 or more, provision is made for a standard deduction, in the case of a joint return of aggregate adjusted gross income of $5,000 or more, of $1,000 or 10 percent, whichever is the lesser.

I urge that careful consideration be given to H. R. 1759 by the Congress. Before any action is taken looking to the reduction of income taxes, the entire tax structure should be adjusted to eliminate the substantial inequities and inequalities in the application of the tax laws to the two classes of states. While H. R. 1759 is intended to be a tax equalization measure and not a tax relief measure, its enactment would make applicable to residents of noncommunity property States the lower surtax rates now enjoyed exclusively by residents of the nine community property States.

H. R. 1759 makes no distinction between earned and investment income, or between income from property acquired prior to and income from property acquired during marriage. All income of husband and wife from whatever sources may be aggregated for purposes of the joint return. This is substantially the rule now applicable to Texas taxpayers. In the remaining community-property States all earned income is reported on a community-property basis, but the rule varies with respect to income from investments. Accordingly, in the interest of simplicity, it was considered desirable to authorize income from all sources to be included in the joint return. In addition, there is further simplification in that neither spouse is obliged to file an additional separate return as to income not derived from community sources.

Inevitably the question arises as to the reduction in the tax revenues of the Federal Government which would result from enactment of this measure. Mr. Surrey, whose position with the Treasury Department lends considerable weight to his views, has stated that it would involve, at present rates, "a decrease in revenue of a little less than a billion dollars." Such a decrease can be absorbed in the constructive economies planned by this Congress. I urge that action be taken to amend the income-tax laws at this session, since the National Budgets in future years may be so closely figured and balanced as to preclude the change at a later date.

Moreover, if the Congress fails to take action the several States may achieve the same result by voluntarily adopting the community-property system. As I have already said, at least five additional States are already considering legislation to that effect. If 5 or 10 or 20 more States by law accept the community-property basis, as they very well may in the present circumstances, Federal income-tax revenues will drop anyway, as a result. And, in addition, the development of divided estates will eventually have an adverse effect upon Federal revenues from gift and estate taxes. Why should the Congress, by inaction on this subject, compel the States to adopt the community-property principle in self-defense, and with virtually the same effect on Federal revenues as the enactment of H. R. 1759 would have?

Congress should not, in my opinion, take any course which would compel wholesale conversion by the States to a community-property basis. The entire concept of community property is foreign to the common law, which obtains generally throughout the Nation. It originated in the United States with French and Spanish settlers, and probably survived because of its peculiar adaptability to frontier and pioneer life in some sections. Radical differences respecting property ownership, estates, and the like would create untold confusion and difficulties if widespread adoption of the community-property system were made compulsory by the income-tax policies of the Federal Government. The rights of creditors would be substantially affected, for example; the rules of probate, inheritance of estates, property rights in divorce cases, and many ordinary commercial practices would undergo basic changes. Evidently, the State of Oregon found the community-property law not adapted to her needs, for after adopting it in 1943—Laws of Oregon, 1943, chapter 440—she repealed it in 1945—chapters 270, 340, 389.

I am satisfied that the enactment of H. R. 1759 or a substantially identical measure would result in abandonment of community-property legislation by the States now considering it. Certainly, these States and other should not be obliged to make a radical and basic change in their property laws merely to escape the unequal burden placed upon them by this discriminatory application of the Federal income-tax laws.

Mr. Speaker, in these few minutes I have endeavored to acquaint the House with the unequal application of the Federal income-tax laws resulting from the recognition accorded to the community-property system of nine States and to demonstrate the need for a change in the existing income-tax laws and the kind of change which should be made. I do not understand that there is opposition to H. R. 1759. Certainly, its enactment is of considerable interest and importance to the taxpayers of the 39 non-community-property States, including my own State of Missouri. It merits the careful consideration and active support of every Member of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain tables, a memorial, and the text of H. R. 1759.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] is recognized for 10 minutes.

LOYALTY STANDARDS AND THE PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, some days after November 5 the President appointed a Commission to draw up standards on employee loyalty. It is to be welcomed. The United States Chamber of Commerce has issued a special report on Communists within the Government with practical suggestions on this question.

May I call the attention of the Members of the House to this document which has been distributed to all Members and which merits the most careful study. Communists Within the Government was published as a public service by the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Included in this work is an analysis of the significance of Communist Party membership as far as it affects Government employees, the operation of the Communist patronage machine, an analysis of various court decisions affecting Communist employees, the various obstacles in the way of ridding the Government of pro-Communist infiltration. This is followed by 17 specific proposals, which I shall list briefly herewith:

First. The question of loyalty should be the sine qua non of Government employment, at all times, regardless of the status of the employee.

Second. Responsibility for staff loyalty to be placed upon all department and section heads as well as upon the Civil Service Commission. The FBI should be authorized to make recommendations based upon its files, in regard to employees with records showing doubtful loyalty.

Third. Loyalty records should be centralized.

Fourth. Investigations should be conducted and evaluated by specially trained personnel.

Fifth. Communist front organizations should be clearly defined and listed.

Sixth. Civil-service rules rendering previous loyalty investigations innocuous, should be revised.

Seventh. All loyalty investigations, hearings, and so forth, should be conducted under clear and precise standards as to what constitutes Communist Party membership, submission to its discipline, what is meant by a fellow traveler, and so forth.

Eighth. Security regulations should be drafted in order to make more efficient the care of files and documents, with proper penalties for violations.

Ninth. All employees should be fingerprinted and photographed.

Tenth. The application form should be improved to include information regarding parents' names, former addresses, use of aliases, service for a foreign power, and so forth.

Eleventh. Falsification of material records in the application form should be punishable by discharge and prosecution.

Twelfth. Persons removed on grounds of loyalty from one agency should not be reemployable by the Government.

Thirteenth. Congressional committee staffs should be subject to the same loyalty checks to which all Government employees are subject.

Fourteenth. Efforts should be made to locate and liquidate centers of pro-Communist patronage.

Fifteenth. Adequate funds should be provided for loyalty investigations.

Sixteenth. A sound public opinion should be stimulated in reference to what the Government is seeking to do in its loyalty investigation activity.

Seventeenth. The Civil Service Commission should be assisted by a special advisory board consisting of labor, business, and legal representatives.

May I specially urge a careful consideration of the specific proposals in this document by both the Civil Service Committee of the House and the Committee on Un-American Activities so that proper legislation along these lines may be enacted as speedily as possible.

The President's Commission to draw up standards in connection with loyalty investigations, created as a result of severe criticism of present practices, has not yet reported. It is high time this Commission acted in order that existing conditions may be speedily remedied.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], chairman of the Committee on Civil Service, who has done such excellent work along this line.

Mr. REES. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Michigan. My information is that the President's committee, which was appointed sometime in November to study and report on this problem, was expected to file a report on the 1st of February and had the time extended to the 20th of February. I am also advised that a report was submitted to the President a few days ago. Together with the gentleman who has the floor, the distinguished Member from Michigan, I, too, am anxiously awaiting the report of that committee. I am informed that the President has just released a statement in which, among other things, he has directed the various Government agencies to dismiss all incompetent persons from the pay rolls of the Government.

Mr. DONDERO. I do not think that goes to the heart of the trouble. A person can be incompetent without being a Communist. A Communist might be the most competent person, but also the most dangerous person to have in our Government employ.

Mr. REES. I was going to follow up my statement with the observation that it certainly is the duty of every agency, without the necessity of a request or a demand by the President, to dismiss every incompetent person from his agency. With reference to the gentleman's statement concerning disloyal persons who should be removed from the pay rolls, may I say that I have made a request of the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission to furnish our committee with the names of individuals whose loyalties have been questioned and who are still on the pay roll of the Government or when removed from service. We hope to examine the files and find out just what the situation is with respect to those persons whose loyalties have been questioned and who remained on the pay rolls of our Government after adverse reports were made in such cases.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman will not alone have the sympathy but also the moral support of every loyal American in the United States in his splendid efforts to rid the Government of those who are within the Government and who would destroy us if they could.

Mr. REES. May I express my deep appreciation for the efforts of the gentleman from Michigan in dealing with this important problem?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at that point where I interrogated the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. REEVES] during the course of his remarks I may insert Senate Concurrent Resolution 4 adopted by the Legislature of South Dakota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE] is recognized for 15 minutes.

IRELAND MUST BE UNIFIED

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, in designing the fabric of postwar peace, one of the problems which must be solved is that tense situation which has resulted from the partitioning of Ireland.

We have given our moral and political support—deservedly so—to other peoples who wish to throw off the yoke of imperialism and win through to freedom and sovereign statehood.

We can do no less for the Irish people, remembering that 14 Presidents of these United States stemmed from that liberty-loving stock.

In line with this, I earnestly recommend that we, the Congress, go on record as favoring the union of Ulster with Eire. We have already worked side by side with the British on a joint commission to explore the problem of Palestine. As a result of this investigation, we have arrived at conclusions which are a step forward toward the solution to this issue.

I propose that we make the same approach to the Irish question.

Great Britain is beginning to feel the burdens of empire. In Palestine, India, and elsewhere, she is trying to find solutions through geographical compromise instead of reconciling the divergent viewpoints within the problem. But dividing a people and splitting the territorial integrity of their country is a temporary expedient which confers a dubious freedom. It is a patchwork which will not hold. Protecting minority rights by erecting new barriers between people who should be together is no solution. Instead, it breeds antagonisms, sharply defined by artificial boundaries.

If Britain, by some stretch of the imagination, had controlled our country through the last century, she would probably have settled the issue between the States, by separating the North from the South, or by giving dominion status to the North, while keeping the South.

Happily, we, as a sovereign people, learned to reconcile our differences and thereby strengthen our unity.

That is what the Irish people want to do. They need every help and encouragement in doing it in a manner that will save them from the terrible cost of civil strife. For the people of Ulster, or the six northeastern counties of Ireland are, by their own will, united to Britain. The problem involves Eire, Ulster, Great Britain, and, through justice and sentiment, ourselves.

The British find themselves in a difficult situation. Where, years before, they forced their way into Ireland, they would now like to retire gracefully, if they could. But the Free State wants complete severance while Ulster wants to stay with Britain. The latter is perplexed, and Ireland is divided against itself.

The Irish have long memories. Those in the Free State will not soon forget the cruel sufferings they endured at the hands of the invaders. Whatever moves the present-day British make—whether they are right or wrong as viewed objectively—will be regarded with suspicion by the people of Southern Ireland. To them, Britain wil never be able to live down the sins which were committed in the past. In this strained atmosphere, negotiations between the two is virtually impossible.

The United States, particularly during the past hundred years, became the haven for so many oppressed Irishmen, that their descendants have become a leading element in our population. Our consistent support of human freedom, as exemplified by our recent and voluntary grant of complete independence to the people of the Philippines, has won for us the faith and confidence of subject peoples everywhere. By a strange irony, in the war just ended, our service men and women—many of whom were of Irish descent—fought side by side with the British to defeat the greatest threat of tyranny that the world has ever known.

Because of these and other factors, we are in an excellent position to help mediate the Irish question. We have earned the trust of all the parties concerned.

Even with this favorable approach, however, the problem is not an easy one to solve.

Wher the Irish Free State—the larger part of Ireland, lying to the south—was created by the British Parliament in 1922, a majority of Ulstermen—the north—wanted to retain union with Britain. Northern Ireland was offered any safeguard that would satisfy her when home rule was being discussed. She rejected these. In the opinion of northern Irishmen, this was justified by subsequent events. The first change of premiership in the Irish Free State wiped out all the safeguards inserted into the treaty and northern Ireland feels that this bears out her suspicions. The northerner is not merely divided from the southerner by religion, and, as he has been told, by racial origin, but by economic differences as well. The north is industrial, is noted for its shipbuilding and its manufacture of linens. The south, at present, is largely agricultural, although it is making strenuous efforts to develop industries. Both sections have in mind the prosperity of their country, but the one is politically unionist and the other is as vigorously separatist. Economically the north cultivates the closest relations with her nearest neighbor and best customer—Britain—while the south wants self-sufficiency.

On the other hand, the objectives of Eire—the Irish Free State—are clearly projected in the declaration of independence proclaimed by the Dail Eireann on January 21, 1919, from which I quote in part:

> Whereas the Irish people is by right a free people; and
> Whereas, for 700 years, the Irish people have never ceased to repudiate and have repeatedly protested in arms against foreign usurpation; and
>
> Whereas English rule in this country is, and has been, based upon force and fraud and maintained by military occupation against the declared will of the people; and
> Whereas the Irish people is resolved to secure and maintain its complete independence; * * *
>
> We solemnly declare foreign government in Ireland to be an invasion of our national right which we will never tolerate, and we demand the evacuation of our country by the English garrison; * * *
> In the name of the Irish people we humbly commit our destiny to Almighty God, who gave our fathers the courage and determination to persevere through centuries of a ruthless tyranny, and strong in the justice of the cause which they have handed down to us, we ask His divine blessing on this, the last stage of the struggle which we have pledged ourselves to carry through to freedom.

Under the new constitution—effective December 29, 1937—its provisions apply to the whole of Ireland but stipulates that, pending the reintegration of the national territory, the laws enacted by the Parliament established by the constitution shall have the same area and extent of application as those of the Irish Free State.

Prime Minister Eamon deValera contends that, so long as Eire is economically dependent on Britain for essential raw materials and manufactured goods, it cannot be politically free.

While this economic tension continues between Eire and Britain, there is little hope of bringing back into Eire the alienated six counties of Ulster. Common-sense principles of geography and economics—Ireland and Britain being but a few score miles apart—cannot be ignored. Both countries serve as natural markets for each other. Inevitably they must come to see that it is to their mutual interest to engage in reciprocal trade, rather than use trade barriers as a weapon of economic war.

The Irish, both in the Catholic south and the Protestant north, are faithful to their respective religions and this is a sensitive point of difference. Many, many years of suspicion, bitterness, and violence have accentuated this tension. But this is an issue by no means confined to Ireland. It is found in the Indian and Palestinian problems. All of Ireland, however, is Christian and there is no language barrier separating the people of that country. I venture to say, in view of these facts, that a reconciliation is possible on this score. Strong guarantees of religious freedom in the Constitution, implemented by the fellowship of inter-faith councils, can develop an atmosphere of democratic tolerance.

Unilateral action never solves any political problem. To correct the unnatural partition of Ireland, I suggest that we promote a series of conferences between representatives of Eire, Ulster, Great Britain, and the United States. Only by working together on this problem, airing grievances both real and fancied, and listening to all sides of the question, can an area of understanding be reached.

Hundreds of years ago, the Irish were one people. They had cultivated a civilization greater than that of larger and more powerful nations on the continent. That was before foreign aggression trespassed on their peace, levied cruel tributes on the people, and split their unity.

This ancient wrong must be remedied. It is just and proper that our Nation, which enunciated "the four freedoms," should encourage this fundamental one. We should use our good offices to bring the two parts of Ireland together again.

I have sketched some of the realities which must be faced, because it is only by facing them that we can make progress toward a solution.

The United States, by virtue of its leadership in the cause of human liberty, and its reputation for fair play, is in a position to help heal this old wound.

As cosponsor of the joint resolution favoring the reintegration of Ulster with Eire, so that Ireland's original unity may be redeemed, I ask the Members of this House to give it their fullest support.

Furthermore, I believe that we should press for the admission of Eire to the company of the United Nations. Her passionate love of freedom, unwavering through centuries of oppression, is needed in the councils which are shaping the destiny of that one world which must be built on the foundations of freedom with responsibility.

An old friend will appreciate our championship of her just claim.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'KONSKI] is recognized for 45 minutes.

STATE DEPARTMENT'S STUPID BLUNDERS IN ARGENTINE RELATIONS

Mr. O'KONSKI. Mr. Speaker, now that little by little the double-dealing and double-crossing policies of our State Department are being revealed, it is the moral duty of every Member of Congress to closely scrutinize the stupid conduct of our State Department the past 6 years in Argentine affairs. We should prepare to the end that such gross stupidity will not be repeated.

During the war, behind the State Department's iron curtain, it was impossible for American citizens—even Members of Congress—to get a glimpse of what was really going on in our shameful meddling in Argentine affairs. Our State Department's blunder in Argentine affairs was the most stupid and arrogant blunder in our Nation's history.

Argentina has been the victim of the most outrageous smear campaign during the past 6 years. Argentina was the most lied about country in our Nation's press and by responsible United States Government officials. All this at the instigation and direction of our State Department.

The thing that stands out most in our State Department's conduct with Argentina is the patience exerted by the Government of Argentina and its people in taking the abuse that was heaped upon them without any rhyme or reason. It must be said to the credit of the Argentine Government and its people that they certainly must have wanted harmonious relations with the United States to take what they did.

Mr. Speaker, as Members of Congress we owe it to ourselves and for Western Hemisphere solidarity to scrutinize these gigantic stupid blunders. At this point in the RECORD I wish to insert my remarks, which bring up through 1944 our State Department's shameful conduct in Argentine affairs. I hope that Members of Congress will read these remarks and get the background.

Within a few days I will address this Congress on what transpired after 1944. But to get the background in this message, I go through 1944. If you are concerned about this matter through 1944, I wish to warn that after that time our State Department's stupidity is even more serious.

It is time that this Congress and the people of America published a Blue Book about our State Department and lift the ghastly iron curtain behind which it operates. It should be publicized the world over that the attitude of our State Department toward Argentina does in no way reflect the attitude of the American people. The American people want friendly relations with its friend—the Argentine. With this as an introduction, let us proceed to the relation of events through 1944.

The Argentine question became a veritable cause célèbre during the months before the conclusion of hostilities and has continued its turbulent way down to the present time. An avalanche of tendentious interpretations and speculation has obscured the issue and distorted the facts. There are several definite stages in the evolution of the Argentine problem. There is the internal one, with reference to the type of regime set up under Pedro Ramirez, Edelmiro Farrell, and President Juan Domingo Perón. There is the war period, during which the tugging and heaving had to do primarily with active collaboration by the Buenos Aires government with the United Nations, and there is the later period, in which we still find ourselves, when the role and place of Argentina in inter-American life is the fundamental issue.

The present speech deals with the course of events up to the end of 1944, with reference mainly to the period during which Mr. Cordell Hull guided the destinies of American foreign policy. The later epoch under Stettinius and Spruille Braden constitutes a prolongation of this era and deserves treatment apart. I intend to expose the utter stupidity of the latter at a later date soon.

The New York Times, in an editorial comment of July 28, 1944, just after Secretary Hull's assertion that the Argentine Government was a danger to the United States during the war, opined that "probably no government, except in a declaration of war, has attacked another with greater severity." The New York World-Telegram, reflecting the same point of view, stated that the United States' declaration was the most violent conceivable short of war.

It is not entirely improper to examine the record of the tumultuous months of 1944, which shows the tone and temper of our policy. We have been forced, as a government, to shift about. We refused recognition to Edelmiro Farrell for a long time; we closed the door on negotiations; we denounced first, but then capitulated at Mexico City and later at San Francisco. We published the famous Blue Book with the apparent motivation of discrediting Perón, and he was promptly elected to the Argentine Presidency, which he has occupied since June 4 of this year. The wavering and weaving that has distinguished American policy toward Argentina cannot be the source of any great satisfaction to the American people.

During the period in which Mr. Hull was Secretary of State we performed what was one of the most extraordinary steps in modern diplomatic history: of refusing even to admit that the Argentine case was a legitimate topic of conversation with the Argentine Government. Secretary Hull, in his declarations of July 26 and September 7 of 1944, closed the door on negotiations. The matter seemed settled. Argentina must change her government or we would not deal with her. The unprecedented nature of this attitude is evident. We were not at war with Argentina, yet we dealt with that Republic in terms which were more severe and uncompromising than those used with Germany or Japan prior to the actual outbreak of hostilities.

We were technically at peace with Germany in 1940 when the Under Secretary of State, Mr. Sumner Welles, visited Europe to talk personally with Adolf Hitler and other German leaders. Certainly, he did not go with the thought of accomplishing anything to deter the German leader from his course, but with the idea that all doors to some conceivable understanding should not be closed. Japanese-American relations were definitely at the breaking point when Kurusu and Nomura entered upon conversations with the Department of State. We knew where we stood and the bellicosity of Japan could admit of no doubt, yet we were willing to receive a Japanese mission. But with Argentina there could be no compromise, no dealings, no negotiations. We were adamant in refusing to have anything to do with that Government until our wishes were fulfilled and Farrell and his cabinet were thrown out of power.

The Buenos Aires daily, La Prensa, which is a first-class newspaper and was definitely pro-Allied, commented editorially on this aspect of the problem on September 8, 1944. Referring first to the statement of Prime Minister Churchill in the House of Commons on August 2, 1944, in which he censured Argentine isolation, this daily speaks of the tone of Mr. Churchill's statement as "measured and respectful." It contrasts this expression with the "unmercifully severe tone" employed by Mr. Hull in his denunciation of September 7 in which he branded Argentina as a focus of Nazi-fascism. The paper's criticism of the Secretary of State was not for what he said as much as for what it implied. It recognized the right of the statesman to launch accusations in a press conference, but it did criticize the fact that this had become the only channel through which the Department of State was speaking on the matter. The procedure followed by the Secretary of State put the whole thing outside the normal procedure. In a matter as serious as this, the Buenos Aires daily expressed the hope that other and less virulent ways might be found for discussing this problem. The Associated Press comment, which appeared in the press all over Latin America, on the American declarations of July 26 said that "the accusation against Argentina is without precedent in its frankness and violence."

Every step taken by Argentina after the conference of Foreign Ministers in Rio de Janeiro was followed by a sharply worded denunciation from Washington. A curious and not unfruitful study might be made of the rising tone of these statements, which reached a climax in the utterances of September 7, 1944. The ascending order of these statements might be charted as follows: first, Argentina did not fulfill the obligations of Rio de Janeiro and consequently was not cooperating with the other American nations. Then, when the break with the Axis was made by most of the republics, Argentina's failure to act constituted the new bone of contention. When Argentina did break with the Axis in January of 1944, the Argentine Government refused, it was alleged, to expel Axis agents and suffered their presence there to the detriment of the rest of the hemisphere. The whole thing reached a frenzy after Farrell replaced Ramirez. His government was accused of Fascist inclinations and of being a threat to all of the hemisphere during the period of the war and the charge was added that Argentina was a permanent menace to America because of its Nazi-Fascism.

Every concession made by Argentina toward greater cooperation with the United Nations was followed by a new form of condemnation. When, toward the end of October 1944, the Buenos Aires government announced that no newspapers of totalitarian tendency would be allowed to continue publication, the Department of State released a broadside against the danger of Argentine armaments, asserting that Argentina was exerting every effort to create a powerful armed force. Instead of stating that the decision of President Farrell and his cabinet to suppress the obstreperous pro-Axis press represented a considerable gain toward collaboration, we chose to ignore the whole thing and concentrate attention on some other phase—as though we were seeking to keep the fire going no matter how much effort was made to extinguish it. We continued the same policy at the time of the break with the Axis. For months we had protested and argued to get the Argentine to break with Germany and Japan. Chile had taken many months to get around to doing the same thing, but, once she had made the break, no difficulties were raised against receiving her into the good graces of the rest of the American republics. When Argentina did break her relations with the Nazis, instead of claiming a diplomatic triumph, we merely discovered some other point on which to concentrate and kept right on beating the Argentine Government.

One of the basic reasons, so it is said, for not recognizing Gen. Edelmiro Farrell was that Argentina had not cooperated with the United Nations but had, on the contrary, given aid and succor to the enemy. This contention was fundamental and ought to be examined critically. But there are several separate items which can be cited to demonstrate the degree to which Argentina actually cooperated with the American republics first and with the United Nations in general. These may be considered as the measures designed to aid the Allied cause or to carry out specific resolutions adopted at the Rio de Janeiro conference.

While it may be contended that Argentina delayed far too long in breaking with the Axis, the fact remains that she finally did so. If we are to hold it eternally against Argentina that she did not break with the Axis on the evening of December 7, 1941, then we might consider keeping perpetually alive memories of the Russo-German pact of 1939 as a source of criticism of our Soviet ally, or throw in Turkey's face her tardiness in doing something about the war. Bygones have to be bygones in international living, else we would spend all of our time constructing new quarrels on the basis of ancient episodes. The fact is that on January 26, 1944, Argentina broke relations with Germany and Japan and declared her relations with France, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Rumania interrupted.

Argentina had been unwilling to take this step until she decided in her own good way to do so. American readers might bear in mind that Argentina and the Argentine people are among the most nationalistically minded in South America and are inordinately proud of their own achievements and the degree of sovereignty which they have attained. As Foreign Minister Peluffo stated in his address of July 26, 1944, Argentine foreign policy is her own, to be dictated by no one. Argentina did not believe at Rio de Janeiro that a break with the Axis should necessarily be automatic. Each nation was to determine its own policy on the basis of the most rigid respect for sovereignty. Argentina is economically powerful, dependent more on Europe than on the United States, far removed geographically from the United States, and possessed of an overweening sense of national dignity and self-determination. These sentiments came into play when there was talk of immediate and uniform action on the part of all of the American states in the face of an aggression against one of them. Argentina preferred to take this crucial step when she was ready to do so, and no amount of pressure from outside would change this will.

A second tangible step taken by Argentina was the suspension of all radio, telegraphic, and telephone communications with the Axis countries. This resolution dated January 27, 1944, fulfilled, incidentally, Resolution 40 of the Rio de Janiero Conference. One of the first decrees of the new government, back in June 1943 (decree 75 of June 10, 1943) was to suspend all cipher communications or the use of code messages to Germany or Japan. Argentina was suspected of harboring innumerable Axis spies. As a matter of fact, the Argentine Government clamped down on this type of activity from the beginning and continued to root out spies with laudable diligence and persistence. On November 3, 1942, the American embassy denounced the existence of a spy ring in Argentina. The government proceeded at once to arrest those discovered and bring them to trial.

The German naval attaché was expelled because of his implication in this unsavory business. Specific groups of spies have been arrested and their activities broken up. Among the first were the Becker, Seidlitz, Langer, and Harnish groups with important ramifications. The running down of spies as they cropped up was a continuing affair. New espionage activities, discovered in December 1943 and January 1944, were suppressed. On August 24, 1944, three important Germans were arrested for sending information abroad through clandestine channels regarding Allied shipping.

Axis news agencies and press services were immediately closed down upon the breaking of relations. These included the Transocean, DNB, Domei, and the Servicio Informativo Americano of Genoa, in charge of one Piero Porro. All of these agencies were put out of business. The Argentine policy was particularly diligent in unearthing clandestine radio stations, a number of which were known to exist. Their suppression was immediate. The espionage group of which Johann Sigrid Becker was the ring leader had such a radio station in Senator Moron Street in the suburb of Bella Vista, which was broken up and its apparatus confiscated. By the decree of November 10, 1943, over 2 months prior to the break in relations, the German sailors on the Graf Spee were interned, six camps being set up for this purpose. Argentina cooperated with other governments in the matter of coordinating activities for the suspension of espionage and participated in a conference on methods and procedures in this field.

As soon as the decision was taken to break with the Axis, the Argentine Government took immediate steps for the transfer abroad of the diplomats and other functionaries whose presence was no longer grata. On January 27, 1944, the preliminary steps were taken to expel from Argentina all of these diplomatic agents. Within 5 months, in spite of the difficulties of obtaining safe conduct, transportation, and the like, these diplomats had left Argentina. Other American Republics took infinitely more time to arrange for the departure of these undesirables. Axis agents accused of espionage, of whom there was a goodly number, were maintained incommunicado during this entire period. The Axis diplomats left on the Rio Jachal and the Cabo de Buena Esperanza. The Rio Jachal, incidentally, was the best vessel of the Argentine merchant fleet and was taken out of ordinary commercial service solely for the purpose of deporting the Axis personnel. It represented a considerable economic loss to Argentina, and if the Argentine Government had been desirous of retaining in its territory these representatives of European totalitarianism, a postponement undoubtedly could have been arranged. Moreover, if the Argentine Government were as cynical about its alleged noncooperation as is asserted, it might have taken singular delight in offering hospitality to the German diplomatic agents whom it sent away within a few months after the break.

One of the most important single acts of cooperation, however, was the granting of nonbelligerency status to the United States and to all the American Republics which were at war with the Axis. On December 9, 1941, within 48 hours of Pearl Harbor, the Argentine Government announced that, in its relations with the United States, the latter power would be treated as a nonbelligerent. It was a fiction, of course, but an important one, since it meant that American warships could enter Argentine ports for an indefinite period and that American planes could use Argentine airfields and, in general, enjoy the facilities which Argentina could provide. Under international law, a belligerent vessel is allowed a maximum of 48 hours in a neutral harbor, even if its condition demands repairs. If it delays beyond that time, it is subject to internment. When Brazil entered the war, Argentina promptly declared that country's status to be the same as that of the United States. And we should note that this step with reference to the United States was taken before the Rio de Janeiro conference. After Argentina broke with the Axis, all of the American countries were declared nonbelligerent. The significance of this determination can hardly be overemphasized. It is a definite and tangible form of active assistance to the American Republics and very particularly to the United States. If Argentina had been bent on maintaining an absolute neutrality or, worse yet, if she were bent on aiding the Axis, as it is stated, this decree would be senseless and illogical.

Not only did Argentina expel those citizens of the Axis who were deemed undesirable, but on January 28, 1944, she issued a decree forbidding the extension of visas to nationals of the Axis countries or of Axis origin, even if they ostensibly bore another nationality. This was devised to avoid the admission to Argentine territory of persons from the Axis countries or those who might, under guise of another nationality, serve Axis interests.

An even more important form of aid to the United Nations was the supplying of foodstuffs and strategic materials to the United States, Great Britain, and the other American Republics, many of which found themselves in dire need as a result of the suspension of much of the normal transportation on which they depended.

This collaboration took various forms. Some of these measures were in conformity with resolutions of the Rio conference. Resolution 3, for instance, provides for appropriate exports to other American countries. Prior to the conference, Argentina signed an agreement with the United States in which it obligated itself to sell its exportable tungsten exclusively to the United States. The United States thus received the benefit of Argentine tungsten, as well as certain oils necessary for the war, whose exportation has constituted a serious sacrifice for the Argentine people. In conformity with Resolution 4 of the Rio conference on economic and financial matters, the Argentine Government authorized a national tanker to carry oil between Brazilian ports to solve the acute shortage of combustibles in that Republic. The petroleum resources of Argentina were limited, constituting perhaps about half of what is necessary for local consumption. Nevertheless, at the instigation of the United States, she agreed to supply the needs of Uruguay and Paraguay in return for the necessary drilling material. Late in 1943, at the urgent request of Brazil, whose southern states were in dire need and had wheat reserves for only 2 or 3 weeks, Argentina ordered the immediate embarkation of cereals to the port of Santos, even though it meant diverting two vessels of the fleet already obligated for service elsewhere. Even more important was the collaboration of Argentina in the extreme food shortage in Rio de Janeiro and other Brazilian cities during September of 1944, when the Brazilian Government begged Argentina for relief from this crisis. The Argentine Government authorized the immediate shipment of 5,000 tons of meat to Brazil.

The most curious commentary on this economic cooperation and the way in which economics and politics sometimes function miles apart is the announcement concerning Argentine wheat imports into the United States, contained in an Associated Press dispatch of July 27, 1944, the day after the Peluffo speech caused such a furor. The Department of Agriculture in Washington announced that before the end of September 1944 the United States would import 10,000,000 bushels of Argentine corn for its own use and that of several other American countries. Mr. Wallace MacMonnies, of the Food Administration, announced that these shipments would also serve the needs of Venezuela and Mexico, both of which were short of corn. It was indicated that in the distribution Mexico might receive 240,000 bushels and Puerto Rico, 300,000 bushels. The statement closed with the following words, "Argentine corn will help feed the coastal areas of the United States." It is noteworthy, first, that the United States did not refuse to trade with Argentina in spite of the talk of sanctions, and, secondly, that a restriction of Argentine commerce would unquestionably have affected most seriously the food situation of many of the other Latin-American countries.

Most readers have not considered the economic importance of Argentina as an exporting nation. Her influence in the southern part of South America flows from the fact that her export trade is vital to the surrounding republics. Argentine meat, wheat, and similar products are indispensable for the actual existence of Paraguay, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Chile. Brazil has come to depend more and more on importations from Argentina and, for the first time in history, far-away Mexico is developing a thriving trade with Argentina, with vessels of the merchant fleet flying the Argentine flag putting in every month in Tampico, Vera Cruz, and Acapulco. El Universal Gráfico, of Mexico City, under date of November 2, 1944, reported gleefully that "The problem of the scarcity of wheat, which no amount of effort by the authorities has solved, will be largely overcome by the arrival within a few days of thousands of tons from Argentina." Instead of a cessation of trade through alleged political antipathy, the contrary was taking place, especially with countries heretofore outside the immediate economic orbit of Argentina. This was done in spite of the statement of Minister Ezequel Padilla in Habana in October of that year that Mexico was already applying sanctions against Argentina. As has been indicated, the surrounding countries depend on Argentina to such a degree that an Uruguayan economist has observed half seriously and half facetiously that if Argentine tourists ceased to frequent the beaches around Montevideo, the Urguayan people would starve to death.

Resolution 4 of the Rio conference dealt with transportation. Argentina fulfilled this agreement to the letter. All Argentine vessels, and there were about 40 in the Flota Mercante del Estado, were mobilized for the movement of materials of interest to the United States. No Argentine vessels went to Europe nor was there any trade whatever by means of national boats with any other part of the world except South and North America. Argentine trade with Europe depended entirely on Spanish, British, Greek, and other vessels. Seventy-five percent of all merchant tonnage was assigned exclusively to the United States and 25 percent to the other American republics. The vessels of the Argentine fleet which plied between Buenos Aires and American ports, especially New Orleans, carried only what was assigned to them by the War Shipping Board. On their return to Buenos Aires, they transported only what the American Government authorized them to take. It should be mentioned that in spite of the tirades directed against the political set-up in Buenos Aires, commerce continued on its merry way and the Argentine vessels leaving New Orleans were by no means empty, nor were those which arrived from this so-called Fascist-minded nation. Argentina improved rail communication with the neighboring countries to facilitate the transportation of vital foodstuffs. At Argentine expense, rail lines with Bolivia and Chile were increased. The Transandine over the Uspallata Pass was revamped and a new road by way of Socompa built to connect with Antofagasta. In Bolivia, work took place on the railroad from Tacuiba on the Argentine frontier to Santa Cruz. The Ferrocarriels del Estado, the Argentine national railways, made every sacrifice to carry food to countries which could otherwise not provide for their people.

On January 27, 1944, the Argentine Government suspended completely all financial and commercial relations with the Axis Powers and with territories controlled by them. Resolution 5 of the Rio conference provided in its two parts for effective steps toward the suspension of such relations and means for preventing any form of commercial advantage in the Americas through subterfuge or chicanery of one sort or another.

Decree No. 1875 of January 27 suspended all such relations. Long before this, Argentina had already embarked on the road to the severance of commercial ties with the Axis. On April 18, 1940—Decree 60569—the transfer of funds to Norway and Denmark was forbidden. On May 6, 1940—decree 61707—the same restriction was placed on Belgium, Holland, and Luxemburg. In July 1940—decree 67305—a complete restriction was placed on the transfer of all funds abroad. On December 19, 1941, 12 days after Pearl Harbor, all direct or indirect commercial operations were curtailed between Argentina and Japan. A series of decrees followed to prevent reexportation or any procedure the purpose of which was to violate the definite restriction. The second part of the resolution deals with Axis firms or interests within the American republics. On January 9, 1942—Decree 110790—provision was made for the strictest supervision of all commercial transactions by persons of Axis nationality. Various provisions were included to make it impossible for them to do business outside Argentina or to transfer funds of any description abroad. A second decree—110791—provided for the transfer to such areas as the Government might deem fit of persons attempting to violate these regulations. Another resolution of May 2, 1942, tightened the whole system up further.

The number of German firms whose activities were curtailed or entirely eliminated was considerable. The Argentine Government did not allow Axis business houses to flourish untrammeled. As a matter of fact there was practically no conceivable way to communicate between Argentina and Europe except the thin trickle of neutral vessels which plied back and forth, all of which functioned with navicerts granted by Great Britain. In order to control funds and deposits a decree of June 15, 1943, provided that persons having dealings with non-American nations or carrying accounts must make full information about them available to the Banco Central. Further decrees imposed severe penalties for those carrying on commercial transactions which might be detrimental to continental security. As a result of this law, 13 firms passed under direct Government control.

Argentina has been accused of taking full advantage of the business opportunities provided by the war. The statement has been made that the contribution of Argentina has been merely good business and bigger profits and that consequently it would be absurd to speak of sacrifice. In this same way firms which obtained war contracts or responded to the impetus given American business generally might all be accused of simply making money out of the war. Argentina prospered because she was so placed, with large surpluses of food, as to be able to do business where others could not. But there is another side to this story and one that ought to be widely known.

Argentina did not merely sell merchandise and pocket the profits; she was generous in the gifts she made to the devastated countries of Europe. Great Britain, as the purchasing agent of the United Nations in Argentina, has taken vast amounts of meat and other foodstuffs. All profits were retained to Argentina's credit in London to cover payments of such exportations as Britain might make. As these were small during the war, Argentina held in London a balance of some 62,000,000 pounds sterling. The importance of this exportation of food to England could hardly be overestimated. The British people lived on Argentine meat and, parenthetically, thousands of American troops in the British Isles might have been in a bad way were it not for the constant flow of Argentine food, which became, in due time, lend-lease in reverse to benefit American fighting men. Argentina made outright gifts of huge food stores to the devastated nations. Her Government placed 150,000 tons at the disposal of the International Wheat Board. Through the International Red Cross 50,000 tons of wheat were shipped to Greece in April 1944. On June 7, immediately after the occupation of Rome, the Argentine Government extended a credit of 5,000,000 pesos for the feeding and sanitation of Rome. On August 24, 1944, the Argentine Government offered the people of France, as a gift, 100,000 tons of wheat and 5,000 tons of meat. Prior to these substantial gifts to Greece, France, and Rome, Argentina had provided large amounts of basic foodstuffs for Finland and Norway. Not one cent was received for any of these materials nor did this activity represent in any respect whatever a commercial transaction. The actual arrangements for getting the food over were made through London and outside the UNRRA. This fact provides an interesting commentary in the whole policy of the United States toward Argentina, which, in spite of what may be said of British cooperation, is merely forcing Argentina more and more into British arms.

The last of these 15 points which show the cooperation of Argentina with the Allied Powers was the attitude of Argentina toward the occupied countries—a policy which reveals eloquently the absence of any sympathy for the Axis and much less for an active effort to aid the common enemy. Argentina carried out the Rio Resolution 38 in the nonrecognition of territories taken by force, by recognizing the Danish Legation in Buenos Aires as the legitimate government of Denmark when the chief of this diplomatic mission declared himself independent of Copenhagen. The same was done in the case of Norway, Holland, Belgium, Yugoslavia, and Greece, all of whose exiled governments received full Argentine recognition. Argentina was, moreover, the only American republic which recognized the state of war between reconquered Italy and Germany after the capitulation and the proclamation of the puppet government of northern Italy. Argentina was the only Latin-American state to establish relations with the government of Victor Emmanuel upon restoration of a free Italy.

The second fundamental question that is raised regarding the Argentine regime is whether it was in reality the Nazi-Fascist arrangement it has been accused of being.

An objective observer must fit the crisis of June 1943 and the rise of the military power since that date into the general background of both Argentine history and the broad experience of all Latin America. Military dictatorship has a long and dishonorable tradition in that part of the world. Since the dawn of independence caudillos and those dubbed euphemistically liberators, regenerators, and deliverers have more often than not sprung from the ranks of the army. The army has been the sesame to politics and to high position. The military clique has developed into a standard institution. The rank of general is almost as necessary to admittance to political life as is the doctorate in the United States if one aspires to teach in an institution of higher learning. Argentina, like the rest of Latin America, experienced its era of dictatorship, of anarchy, and of rule by the man on horseback. During the first part of the last century, until 1863, this state of affairs was virtually endemic in Argentina. But after the middle of the century this Republic snapped out of the chronic civil war and made vast progress toward political and economic stability. The events which led to the latest military uprising are too complex to permit analysis here. Suffice it to say that the military had not disappeared and that, in the hour of crisis, this element came forward to lead the nation out of the wilderness.

The Farrell regime was strictly military. Its leaders were army officers. They were blessed—or condemned—as the case may be, by the military mentality, which obviously has its limitations. Their vision of the world and of man was not the most ample. They reflected the powerful nationalism of their country and their almost blatant pride in her achievements. They partook of the arrogance which is not entirely absent from the Argentine character. But to say that they are dominated by a Nazi mentality, or bowed to the ideology of Mussolini, is far from correct. It would be more accurate to say that they conceived of administration very much in terms of the barracks and of the mission of their country to be complete self-determination, dependence on no one, and as much isolationism as is reasonably possible. Military rule does not make fascism. In Latin America military rule is simply the rule by the strong and the powerful, minus all such complexities and subtleties as a program or creed. The Argentine dictatorship possessed very few of the indispensable attributes of nazism or fascism. It is just plain military dictatorship à la latino-américaine, unmixed with Nazi-Fascist complications.

The regime presided over by Gen. Edelmiro Farrell and supported by his fellow officers was an executive government, since the congress no longer functioned. Political parties were left in a state of suspended animation, at least for the time being. No other features existed, however, that would conjure up in the mind of anyone the externals and much less the essence of Nazi-fascism.

There was no single party with the mechanism of the National Sozialistische Partei; there was certainly little taint of racism to be found anywhere. There was no element of totalitarianism in the structure of the state or of the constitution, since the regular republican constitution was not touched in a single line of its text. The government of General Farrell declared over and over again that it was a transitory phase and would abandon office in the near future. There was no systematic affront to the dignity of the human person. The ordinary Argentine citizen was not strait-jacketed into a rigid system in which he became a mere automaton and pawn of the state. There was no attempt to create mysticism along the lines of the Rosenberg effusions.

We can analyze this phase of the existing regime from various points of view. First of all, the Farrell government maintained respect for the constitution and for the national courts. In a recent article which appeared generally in the Latin-American press, Rafael Ordorica, of the Associated Press, writing from La Paz, Bolivia, says: "President Gualberto Villarroel has obtained the recognition of all the American republics, Great Britain and the rest of the United Nations. This is the principal difference between his regime and that of Edelmiro Farrell in Argentina. Another difference is that in Buenos Aires, the military government, powerful as it is, functions within the framework of the constitution and the restrictions imposed on extra-constitutional acts."

In the second place, the judiciary was left intact with its faculties unimpaired. An example of the independence of this branch of the government is the fact that, in a case involving a British corporation which the military government wished to expropriate—the Companiá Primitiva de Gas—the supreme court declared the proposed expropriation unconstitutional and the military government was forced to back down. One of the essential features of the totalitarian set-up on the other side of the water was the complete concentration of all authority in the executive branch.

It is well to reflect on the difference between this state of things and that in Brazil, where the Vargas dictatorship was infinitely more rigorous than the Argentine. In 1937, Getulio Vargas promulgated a completely revised constitution, eliminating virtually all autonomy on the part of the states and creating what is known officially as the Estado Novo, that is, the new order. The restrictions on the press, on freedom of expression and the like, were infinitely stricter in Brazil than in Argentina. If we were entirely consistent and logical, our anti-totalitarian ire would have been less concentrated on Argentina and would include perhaps other Latin-American nations whose regimes have been every bit as dictatorial as the Argentine and in some cases much more so.

A good index of the character of a regime is the expression to which it gives voice regarding its intention, temper, and goals. The Argentine regime was depicted as violently bellicose. From time to time the press informed us that its avowed purpose was the conquest of the neighboring states and the realization of a long pent-up desire for Lebensraum. What were the facts as far as we can perceive them?

Over and over again, the Argentine leaders reiterated the absence of any imperialist intentions. Perón, in press declarations, emphasized a greater degree of self-sufficiency as the national goal. General Farrell in his speech of July 19, 1944, stated bluntly: "I promise no hostile act or aggression against any country." Chilean military men have been given full opportunity to visit Argentine military establishments in Patagonia, from which Argentine imperialists would supposedly launch the attack on the neighboring country. Gen. Jacinto Ochoa Rios, of Chile, director of the war factories of that Republic, visited Argentina a few months later with full facilities for inspecting similar establishments in the latter Republic. The accusation that Argentina was seeking to increase its armed strength through the development of war industries was entirely true. Argentina has received no benefits from lend-lease. Every other American republic has been modernizing and mechanizing its army with the aid of the United States. Brazil, Uruguay, and Chile have been the recipients of this assistance, which is transforming their armed force into an up-to-date organization. For what purpose? For the protection of the Hemisphere, it is said. Can we expect Argentina, deprived of all such aid, to do nothing about placing her navy and army on a somewhat comparable basis? Can we expect the Argentine Government to stand by while Brazil is turned into an armed camp and take no steps, even the modest ones of which she is capable, in the direction of improving her national defense?

Let it be borne in mind, too, the history of aggression in South America—of expansionism, if you will—is not on the Argentine side. No nation has had a more pacific development. The latest international war involving directly vital Argentine interests was waged against Brazil in 1823, with Uruguay as the bone of contention. The War of the Triple Alliance in which Barteleme Mitre led the Argentine forces against Paraguay at the side of Brazil and Uruguay, was not provoked by Argentina but began as a Brazilian-Paraguayan quarrel over Uruguay. Argentina entered after the Paraguayan President, Francesco López, invaded the Province of Corrientes. The record of Brazil as an expansionist power is stronger than that of Argentina. Look at the map and observe that Brazil occupies half of the South American continent. Her territorial expansion has included territories taken from Paraguay and Bolivia and frequent intervention in the affairs of Uruguay. The tradition of a nation is of primary importance in judging the temper of her people. The Argentine people have a long and honorable record for abstinence from international disputes and for the peaceful settlement of those that have arisen such, for example, as the boundary controversy with Chile.

On September 30, 1944, General Farrell spoke over a nation-wide hook-up to the Argentine people. One significant passage in this address merits quotation, to give some hint of the ideology behind the present regime:

> The spiritual content of our national unity is based on the universal culture to which we all belong as members of the Western world. In this government's program, religious values hold an extremely high place. The Revolution has sought to interpret faithfully the traditional sentiments of the people and has translated into action those evidences of faith which distinguished civilized communities from totalitarian paganism.

The speech was for local consumption only and indicates that, for one thing, the Farrell regime was very far from professing the anti-Christian, anti-occidental concepts which were inherent in Nazism. There was no note of official anti-Semitism in the program of the Argentine government. Buenos Aires possesses a large Jewish population and no small number of the most distinguished of Argentine men of letters are of Jewish extraction. There is anti-Semitism in the form of attacks and calumnies in certain publications such as Clarinada. This is no index, however, of the official position any more than the existence of the propaganda of the Silver Shirts in the United States or of the Ku Klux Klan in its day reflected the official attitude of the United States toward the Jews. One positive proof of how far the Farrell regime was from professing anti-Semitism was to be found in the resignation of Baldrich, former minister of Public Instruction, who was suspected of pro-Axis sentiments and his replacement by Rómule Echeverri Boneo who authorized, among other things, that Jewish children in the state-supported schools should be free to attend all of the religious exercises of their faith without such absence being counted against them.

The idea that Argentina would serve as refuge for Nazi leaders was exploited day after day in the American press. No amount of denial on the part of the responsible Argentine officials made any perceptible difference. The assumption was simply made that, of course, once the Reich collapsed, Hitler and his henchmen would take up a bucolic existence in one of the Argentine provinces. Argentine declarations on this point were categorical. On September 5, 1944, the Argentine chargé d'affaires in Washington disclaimed any intention on the part of his Government of offering a sanctuary to war criminals. On September 28, of that year, the Argentine Embassy in London, on direct instructions from the Government in Buenos Aires, stated flatly that no refuge would be given for Axis criminals. The statement added more importantly still that the Argentine Government would deny all opportunity for the investment of Axis capital or the acquisition of property by Axis citizens. We accepted the similar statements of Sweden, Switzerland, Portugal, and Spain, but assumed that the Argentine Government was not stating its real intentions when it declared so categorically that the Republic would offer no asylum to fleeing Nazis.

The gradual emancipation of the press after the first impact of the military movement was clear. Freedom of the press constitutes, we are told, another essential condition of democracy as against totalitarianism. If Argentina were Nazi-Fascist, then we would expect to find a completely curtailed and muzzled press, with no latitude whatever in presenting anything but the unilateral interpretation of what is going on. On August 9, 1944, all restrictions were lifted on the national press, with a very few exceptions. Foreign press news was free to be sent abroad. On October 17, all foreign language newspapers of pro-Axis tendency were suppressed, notably the Deutsch La Plata Zeitung, and the Mattino d'Italia. One of the main accusations against Argentina was that it allowed the publication of newspapers of open and avowed hostility to the Allied cause. Until the recent suppression, that was true. There was considerable latitude for criticism of the United Nations and papers, such as El Cabildo La Fronda and others, exploited this to the maximum degree. This charge, however, is weak from one angle. In other American Republics there are papers, great and small, which continued to flourish, and their governments were not called to task for allowing them to survive even though they are openly anti-United Nations. The Mexican Government, for example, was never asked to suppress such newspapers as Omega and El Hombre Libre which were completely antidemocratic. No one asked that the Diaria de la Marina be proscribed in Habana because of its vigorous support of Franco Spain.

An examination of the leading Argentine papers is an interesting study in just how free they really were. I have gone over issues of La Nación and La Prensa for many weeks during the summer and early autumn months of 1944. One of the extraordinary features of this press was that it published in full the text and commentaries from the United States, denunciatory of its own government. Editorial comments from New York and Washington, the full statements of the Secretary of State, and the press reactions from all of the other American Republics were quoted in toto. A casual selection can be made to substantiate this point. La Nación reproduced, on July 28, 1944, for instance, a vitriolic article by Dr. Juan Andres Ramírez, published in El Plata, of Montevideo, in which there was a more than liberal sprinkling of the terms "traitor," "Nazi-Fascist," "prototalitarian," and the like. It quoted in full an article by Jacinto Fombona in El Nacional, of Caracas, urging sanctions against the Argentine despots and usurpers. It quoted an editorial from the Longview (Wash.) Daily News, describing the will to conquer of the Argentine Government. No matter how violent the reactions abroad, the Argentine newspapers gave their thousands of readers a full and complete picture. There was no coloring, no playing down, no attempt to put the best interpretation on a denunciation. The Buenos Aires newspaper published the war bulletin of all the powers, exactly as does the New York Times. Anti-Communist as the regime supposedly was, the bulletins from Moscow were given the same attention as all the rest. There was nothing in the news items or editorial comment to indicate any restriction on this score. Moreover, the great Argentine newspapers have felt free to comment editorially on acts of the Government and to raise points in criticism regarding matters in which they are in disagreement.

Did organized labor support the government or was it forced underground? Some labor elements were unquestionably opposed to the regime. The more leftist of the groups, especially those of the socialistic persuasion, opposed it. On the other hand, vast numbers of organized labor manifested a strong support of the Farrell ménage. Late in July 1944 this labor section demonstrated its solidarity in a series of meetings held all over the Republic and in giant parades in the city of Buenos Aires. The position of labor in supporting General Farrell was summarized under four points: First, international policy as in line with commitments; second, self-determination and complete sovereignty of Argentina; third, the efforts to attain economic independence and, fourth, a rejection of the implication of pro-Nazi activity. This declaration was subscribed to by an enormous number of labor unions and affiliated bodies. It would be impossible to list them all. A few may be selected and their Spanish names given to avoid any suspicion of juggling: Confederación Nacional de Trabajo; Union Ferroviaria; La Fraternidad; Asociación de Obreros cerveceros; Asociación de personal de Hospitales; Sindicato Obrero de la Industria del Calzado; Federación de Obreros Portuarios Obreros de la Construcción. This is a mere sampling to indicate the wide variety of labor organizations involved. The more recent election of Gen. Juan Perón has revealed the extraordinary support of Argentine labor.

The attitude of the United States has been one of uninterrupted and unconcealed hostility to the Argentine Government with a constant application of the worst kind of needling and irritants. What has been the reason for this? What has this country expected to get out of the antagonism to Argentina? Has the rest of Latin America been strongly behind us in the effort to ostracize and isolate Argentina? These are fundamental questions which any American citizen sincerely interested in preserving the tremendous good of the good-neighbor policy achieved over the past 10 years must seek to answer. The bold assertion that Argentina is a danger to our security, a menace to our institutions, and a cancer on the body politic of Latin America simply does not stand criticism. However bad we may think its government is, there are several other American republics with governments which reek to high heaven and with whom we are on terms of bosom friendship. We had no objection to the automatic Hernández Martinez of El Salvador who in years past had no compunctions in mowing down thousands of workingmen for the sole reason that they opposed his tactics and methods. We supported Juan Vincente Gomez for years on end in Venezuela, and Machado in Cuba, whose regime was literally unspeakable. And yet we suddenly get very squeamish over the Argentine regime and go off in a temper every time that Government takes a step which we interpret as unfriendly to us.

There have been only four conceivable reasons why the United States has put the heat on Argentina over these years. Those reasons are as follows: First, to force Argentina to declare war on the Axis; second, to force the Argentine people to change their government by revolution and put one in office pleasing to us; third, to oust the military and replace them with civilians; and fourth, to admit unrestricted United States domination in the economic life of Argentina, which, by implication means the ousting of British and other European interests.

The first of these reasons collapses of its own weight. If we were following the policy of threats and epithets to get Argentina to declare war, then in all good logic we ought to have quit when she did so. The second question is more important. Have we invited the Argentine people to throw their government out by force? Everything pointed clearly to this since our Department of State proclaimed that it would not treat with the wicked men in Buenos Aires until such a time as the composition of the Argentine Government changed. If this is not an overt invitation to revolution, it would be difficult to find one anywhere. And the most grievous aspect of the thing is that we were butting in on the domestic affairs of another people in the most obvious, direct, and outrageous manner. It was nothing but a clear-cut violation of the concept of de facto government and nonintervention in the domestic affairs of another people.

Mr. Sumner Welles, in his able and illuminating articles, has scotched this conception. The use of intervention is a dangerous weapon and usually works in exactly the opposite way to the one intended. It fortifies the Government against which it is directed; it arouses the national pride of the people, and obliges them, for good or for ill, to support that Government, so that they cannot give into foreign pressure. We have strengthened the Argentine Government by every declaration that has emanated from Washington. We did everything in our power to assure the perpetuity of the Farrell regime and probably accomplished the incredible result of making that regime actually popular. We applied the most utterly inadequate method for obtaining results that could be conceived and we got exactly what we might expect: The antagonism of the Argentine, the bitter resentment of its people, and the fear and not too well concealed anxiety of the rest of Latin America. Pressure politics, high-handed treatment, threats of economic extinction and nonrecognition—these are the time-honored methods of the strong against the weak, of the imperialist against the nation seeking to preserve its national integrity. Where are the sacrosanct declarations of Montevideo and of the conferences since then? Where is the rigid respect for the self-determination of another state, even if it chooses to elect the worst kind of government? If we have been seeking merely to convert the Argentine Government from military rule to the civil, our policy has no leg to stand on. Half of the Latin-American States are under military rule and if we start getting sanctimonious about army officers, we shall have to break with a dozen Latin-American States: Paraguay, Brazil, Dominican Republic, Honduras, Salvador, Guatemala, Nicaragua, and Mexico itself.

The last of the four reasons bears the stamp of being a real one. The United States has given considerable hints it would welcome the ousting of alien economic interests in Argentina. Under the surface there can be no doubt of the tugging and pulling of American and British commercial interests in that country. It may be that we are fundamentally interested in keeping the Western Hemisphere nice and clean for American trade with no poachers allowed.

Argentina is powerful economically. Her whole economic life is geared to Europe. She enjoys prosperity and produces food not only in abundance for her own people but in vast quantities for exportation. She stands on her own feet commercially and here, precisely, is the rub. In this connection it is well to observe the attitude of the rest of Latin America on these matters. The idea that the 19 Latin-American nations besides Argentina were for sanctions, nonrecognition, and general pressure is not borne out by the facts. There has been no unanimity on the fundamental point of nonrecognition of Farrell. Four South American republics maintained full and perfectly normal relations with Argentina during the time we refused to recognize her: Chile, Paraguay, Bolivia, and Ecuador. In many of the other cases, while formal recognition was not extended, the Argentine diplomatic mission enjoyed all of the privileges and prerogatives normally extended to recognized countries. Mexico was a case in point. Leftist as Mexico is supposed to be, the Argentine Chargé d'Affaires suffered no restriction in his official contracts with the Mexican Government and was on the lists for every function and for all of the relations which were customarily carried out with the chief of a foreign mission. The Argentine embassy in Brazil was on exactly the same basis. There was none of the rigid nonrelationship which prevailed in Washington, in which the Chargé d'Affaires of Argentina could not communicate officially with the Department of State but did so through the medium of another embassy.

Moreover, country after country in Latin America offered their good offices to iron out the kinks in American-Argentine relations. If they were bent merely on securing the overthrow of the Farrell group this certainly would not be the procedure to follow. The countries which undertook in some form or another to mediate or to obtain an understanding were Mexico, Peru, Brazil, the Dominican Republic, Colombia, and Ecuador. The last country made three separate gestures toward this end. President Trujillo proposed the offices of the smaller republics of the West Indies and Central America for this purpose. They were promptly and abruptly slapped down by an indignant Washington. None of these gestures received any consideration whatever.

Why did Latin America continue to try to bridge the gap between the United States and Argentina? For the simple reason that the state of affairs was intolerable and the uneasiness among all of them steadily growing. Let us note a specific point. The Hull declaration of July 26, 1944, on the danger of Argentina in time of war was supported by official declaration from exactly 6 of the 19 republics: Guatemala, Salvador, Peru, Cuba, Colombia, and Venezuela. The Hull declaration of September 7, of the same year, which condemned Argentina as a focus of danger for all times was supported by official statements from exactly none of the other American Republics. Did this not indicate a perfect meeting of minds?

Evidences of cordiality and even warmth between Argentina and the other republics were by no means lacking. On August 25, 1944, for example, the Uruguayan national holiday, President Amézaga of that country exchanged with Edelmiro Farrell, the most cordial of felicitations, distinguished by the unaccustomed personal emotion contained in these ordinarily rigid official communications. Farrell on this occasion repeated his oft-stated intention of never violating Uruguayan independence. Brazil and Argentina carried on a surreptitious flirtation for many months. O Journal of Rio under date of July 28, 1944, praised in effusive terms the peace and good relations with Argentina. The same paper in two striking editorials spoke in undeniably cordial terms of the need for rapprochement with Argentina. Later in the year a delegation of Brazilian newspapermen, invited officially by the Argentine Government, visited Buenos Aires. They were from Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo, and Uruguayana on the Argentine-Brazilian frontier—evidence perhaps that Argentina was not on the verge of pulling a Sudeten irredentist stunt on the unsuspecting Brazilians. This delegation provoked an outburst of camaraderie from the Argentine press and Government. The delegation presented the Argentine President with an Argentine flag, made and embroidered in Brazil. A trivial incident, perhaps? But tremendously significant as an indication of the way the wind blows.

Argentine-Chilean relations in the economic field have boomed and flourished. In August of 1944, the Instituto de Economía of Chile, a government organization, urged the development of a wide program of importation of Argentine meats. This did not smack of economic sanctions. La Nacion, of Buenos Aires, in an editorial of August 5, 1944, expressed satisfaction in the increasing economic ties with Chile and pointed out the extraordinary welcome given Argentine capital in the copper and iron mines of the neighboring country. It would be impossible to cite, within the scope of this article, the numerous expressions of the Latin-American press favorable to Argentina. In Mexico City, where official statements and the press generally have not gone overboard for Argentina, one of the most distinguished and independent of Mexican writers, Salvador Noro, who could not conceivably be accused of fascism, fifth columnism, or falangism, wrote in his column in Novedades—September 30 and October 10, 1944—regarding Argentina. He noted the growing downward trend in the good-neighbor policy and spoke of Secretary Hull as "deplorably and irritably violent with reference to Argentina." If one reflects on the fact that the Mexican press is extremely hesitant to make even the slightest criticism of this Nation's foreign policy, the importance of these comments is even more striking.

We turn to the British reaction. Here, I suspect, is the essence of the whole question. How did British opinion react to the American policy? The British press was full of comment and most of it never reached the American reader. Some of it was nothing short of startling and ought to be known in this country. The general trend was to fight shy of any anti-Argentina commitments for two basic reasons: British capital investment in that republic, and British consumption of Argentine food, without which the population of the United Kingdom would have been, to put it very mildly, in an extremely tight spot.

The British press and responsible journals look at the question candidly and concluded that it was best to let it alone. The idea of sanctions certainly aroused no glee on the other side of the water. In a wire to the New York Times from London, dated July 28, 1944, it was stated that—

> The suggestions made by some correspondents in Washington that Great Britain might apply economic sanctions are considered with incredulity in London financial and trade circles.

The Sunday Observer, in July 1944, noted that—

> Great Britain should be prudent in the matter of sanctions since it depends much more on the Argentine than does the United States.

The Southampton Journal, of August 5, 1944, spoke out quite frankly:

> If the United States Department of State had wished to fortify the position of the Argentine Government, its accusations could not have been better timed. It is hard to see Washington's intentions. From the Argentine point of view, the basic question is the respect for national sovereignty and the right of a people to decide freely its own conduct. This is one of the principles which has determined entrance into this war.

The Economist of London, in August 1944, spoke out:

> The United States and England are mutually suspicious of each other. England suspects imperialism; the United States suspects exclusion from the Argentine market.

The same journal extended its comments further:

> The simplest arguments against sanctions is that they would fortify Farrell. Moreover, an economic war would cause more harm to the United Nations than to Argentina. Argentine hides and meat, without mentioning other articles, are vital to Great Britain. It is doubtful that restrictions would bring Argentina to her knees, since she has reserves and can wait until the not distant end of the war in Europe, when the hungry nations of the ravished continent will look to her ample stocks of food.

The pungency and potency of this argument can escape no one. This sedate journal concluded by saying that—

The United Nations should not single out Argentina when economic war has not been waged on Sweden, Switzerland, Portugal, Ireland, or Turkey. Great Britain is no longer in a position to break carelessly with Argentina.

The number of quotations could be multiplied ad infinitum. It is plain that the British press did not consider that the application of economic sanctions would immediately produce the exit of the Fascists from office.

The New York Post editorialized on July 28, 1944, that "if we cease business with Argentina we seal the destiny of the Farrell regime and provoke its downfall. The Argentine people in their disillusionment will expel the Fascists." This is far from the truth. We could cut off every bit of commerce with Argentina: we could clamp down every sanction about which we have any knowledge; we could exclude every dollar from flowing to Buenos Aires, and the net result would not be strangulation. We do not dominate the economy of Argentina. We cannot take measures of a drastic kind which would prove effective unless we actually blockade Argentine waters and cut off her shipping with the rest of the world. We cannot actually force Argentina to make a change, short of war And certainly no American in his right mind contemplates such an alternative.

If one analyzes the structure of Argentine economy it is clear that if sanctions were to be effective they will have to be applied by a group of about nine powers, the combination of which under the present circumstances is just about impossible. These states are Uruguay, Paraguay, Brazil, Bolivia, and Chile in South America, with the United States, Great Britain, Spain, and Sweden outside South America.

A brief table on the status of Argentine foreign trade will illustrate the point graphically:

EXPORTS

[Millions of pesos]

Period	British Empire	United States	Brazil	Other American countries	Sweden
1937-39	577	221	86	62	30
1941	553	562	83	138	16
1942	689	492	102	220	72
1943	894	498	138	323	60

IMPORTS

1937-39	371	284	51	90	27
1941	314	370	123	169	22
1942	264	329	190	142	81
1943	222	150	169	123	83

These figures speak for themselves. They show the tremendous exports to the United Kingdom in a steady increase between 1937 and 1943. They show a goodly increase of exports to the United States which are much heavier than the imports. The proponents of sanctions would have to explain just how they are going to hurt Argentina by cutting off trade when in 1943, the United States imported 498,000,000 pesos of Argentine products and Argentina imported exactly 150,000,000 pesos of American goods. Notice, too, the increase in trade to Brazil and the other American republics; from 62,000,000 in the case of the latter in 1937-39, to 323,000,000 in 1943. The figures for imports show an equally healthy increase.

Let us reflect on the fact that Argentina held in 1944 a favorable balance of nearly 400,000,000 pesos with Great Britain and then speculate on how far the British were willing to go in putting on the screws. Argentina has become more and more industrialized and has found it possible to curtail substantially her imports of manufactured products. For example, the country imported 146,000 tons of textiles in 1939, while in 1943 the amount was 63,000 tons. Iron products in the same 2 years dropped from 693,000 tons to 76,000. Rubber goods from 14,000 to 1,000. The production figures on industry show that between 1935 and 1943, Argentine manufacturing increased over a hundred percent. The total production figures for 1935, in millions of pesos was 3,330 while in 1943 it had increased to 7,800. To show how important this industrial activity became, one may contrast it with the production in agriculture and cattle raising, which in 1943 were 1,600 and 1,750, respectively. All this adds up to one thing: that Argentina made vast strides in self-sufficiency during the years since the commencement of the war in Europe and that there can be no question of starving into submission the 15,000,000 Argentine citizens.

The story of agitated and tightened Argentine-American relations does not end with the close of 1944. Recognition came reluctantly after that. Accusations of Nazi influence continued, culminating in the Blue Book. General Perón became the favored target of attack and diatribe. The United States showed up badly in the long run. The examination of the Argentine case is indispensable if the full story of inter-American relations is to be understood. Aside from all that has been said regarding the conduct of the Farrell regime and what could be said regarding Perón and the new government, there is still the highly important question of whether this policy of pressure and frontal attack produced the results that were planned. We could assume, for the sake of argument, that the Argentine government in the past few years has been every bit as bad as it has been depicted; the fact remains that nothing that we tried produced the result that we professed to achieve. It is not merely question of fact, but of tactics and techniques. The story of what happened since the revolution of June 1943 can lead only to one conclusion: that somehow, in some form, we have set inter-American relations back a long, long time.

I wish to extend to Richard Pattee, and the University Press, Notre Dame, Ind., credit and thanks for supplying me the material for this insertion.
